

No

PERIODICAL

ML5
.M85

U.60

1919

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2022 with funding from Boston Public Library

July 9, 1920
7047 230 Vol. 60 M

No.
911

Price
4d.

THE

MUSICAL TIMES

FOUNDED 1844

JANUARY 1, 1919.

SPENCER PIANOS

GRANDS ▽ UPRIGHTS ▽ PLAYERS

Sole Agents

MURDOCH MURDOCH & CO

Piano & Player Piano Experts

461 & 463 OXFORD STREET

And at: BRIGHTON · PORTSMOUTH · SOUTHAMPTON
FOLKESTONE · DOVER · CHATHAM
BIRMINGHAM · CAMBRIDGE

THAT AWKWARD CORNER.

WE DO AWAY WITH THIS.

THE PUBLIC, as a rule, are told by the Advertiser that he has something good to sell

THE PUBLIC have told US, most emphatically, that WE have something good to sell in the

“NEW PATENT THREE COMPARTMENT TOP LID FOR GRAND PIANOS.

We have already converted over 600 grand pianos with this new device.

Kindly send for Booklet giving particulars.

OLD STYLE.

ARCHIBALD RAMSDEN

LTD.

PRACTICE ROOMS

NEW ADDRESS:

CECILIAN HOUSE.

PIANOS

ALSO 12, Park Row,
LEEDS.

• 65 Wigmore Street •

• LONDON W.1.

FOUNDED

1837.

AGENTS

THROUGHOUT

THE WORLD.

GRANDS-UPRIGHTS.

AWARDS

for Good

Tone:

LONDON - - - 185

PARIS - - - 186

LIMA - - - 187

CHRISTCHURCH, N.Z. 188

LONDON - - - 188

PLAYER-PIANOS

SHOWROOMS:

ALLISON PIANO FACTORY, LEIGHTON ROAD, KENTISH TOWN, LONDON, N.W.-5

ESTEY ORGANS ESTEY PIANOS

ONLY ONE GRADE OF EACH.
THE HIGHEST POSSIBLE.

Largest Stock of Organs in the World.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE. CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.

Estey Organ Co.

- 12 -

RATHBONE PLACE,

OXFORD STREET,

LONDON, W.

(JUST PUBLISHED.)

NO. 1,
ENGLISH FINGERING.

HEMY'S

NO. 2,
CONTINENTAL FINGERING.

SCALE & ARPEGGIO MANUAL

A SUPPLEMENTARY COURSE TO

HEMY'S ROYAL MODERN

PIANOFORTE TUTOR

WITH EXTENDED FIVE-FINGER EXERCISES AND ILLUSTRATIVE MELODIC STUDIES.

EDITED BY

G. H. CLUTSAM.

PRICE -2s 6d- NET.

WAR PRICE, 3s. NET.

METZLER & Co. (1909) Ltd., 42, GT. MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W.-1.

(ESTABLISHED 1788.)

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

FOUNDED IN 1844.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH.

No. 911.—Vol. 60.

Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage.

JANUARY 1, 1919.

Price 4d.; Postage 1½d.

Annual Subscription, Post-free, 5s.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus.D.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 4, AT 2.30 P.M.

MESSIAH - - - - - HANDEL.

MISS CARRIE TUBB.
MISS PHYLLIS LETT.
MR. BEN DAVIES.
MR. NORMAN ALLIN.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 1, AT 2.30 P.M.

THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS - ELGAR.

MADAME KIRKBY LUNN.
MR. GERVASE ELWES.
MR. FREDERICK RANALOW.

Full Chorus and Orchestra.

At the Organ: Mr. H. L. BALFOUR.

Prices: Stalls, 8s. 6d.; Arena, 7s.; Balcony, 4s. 9d. and 3s.;
Gallery, 1s. 3d.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

LENT TERM begins Monday, January 6th.

Entrance Examination, Friday, January 3rd, at 2.

Fortnightly Concert, January 18th, at 3.

Lectures by Dr. H. W. Richards, January 22nd and 29th, at 3.30.

A Junior Department is now open.

Prospectus can be obtained on application.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams—"Initiative, Southkens," Telephone—"1160, Western."
London."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Honorary Secretary: M. MUIR MACKENZIE, Esq.

The EASTER TERM commences on Monday, January 6th, 1919.

Entrance Examination: January 2nd, 1919.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age.
Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from The Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND
(Founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.) For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Sec.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD OF THE R.A.M. AND R.C.M. FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Examinations in Theory held in March and November at all Centres.
In Practical Subjects in March-April at all Centres, and in the London district and certain Provincial Centres in November-December also.
Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February
5th, 1919.

SCHOOL EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, January 29th, 1919 (or, with extra fee, February 6th).

Theory papers set in Examinations of past years (Local Centre or School) can be obtained on application. Price 6d. per set, per year, post-free.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at the
R.A.M. or R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from—

JAMES MUIR, Secretary,

14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

Telegrams: "Associa, London."

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

PRINCIPAL LONDON RONALD.

NEW TERM BEGINS MONDAY, JANUARY 13TH.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £7 17s. 6d. and £10 10s., comprising principal and secondary Subjects, Harmony, Sight-
Singing, and / or Orchestra.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local Schools
Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Victoria Embankment, E.C.4.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £30. Special fee for Organ Course, £20, and for Wind Instrument Course, £15.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BRUMA.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

CHRISTMAS ORATORIO (BACH).

Parts IV., V., and VI. will be SUNG at St. ANNE'S, SOHO, W.1., with full Orchestra and Organ, on SATURDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 11, 1919, at 4 p.m. Tickets may be had by sending stamped addressed envelope (½d.) to The Rector of the Church, 28, Soho Square, W.1.

ADVANCE IN PRICES.

With the exception of folio songs, all the Novello
publications were increased in price on January 1, 1918, but the charges have not been altered in the advertisement columns.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Lessons.
Full Orchestral Class, Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras,
Opera, Ensemble, Elocution, Choral, and Harmony, &c., Classes.
Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

UNIVERSITY OF DURHAM.

Examinations for degrees in Music are held as follows: Matriculation, January, July, and October; First Mus. B., March and September; Mus. B. and Mus. D., September only.

For particulars, apply Secretary of Examinations, University Offices, Durham. Copies of former Examination Papers, 1s. 6d. per set.

THE BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY.

Offices: 19, Berners Street, W.-1.

FOR THE FOSTERING OF BRITISH MUSIC.

Membership open to all music-lovers.

Patron: The Rt. Hon. A. J. BALFOUR.

President: THE LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.

Director: A. EAGLEFIELD HULL, Mus. Doc. OXON.

Committee of Management:

Mr. Adrian C. Boulton
Mr. W. W. Cobbett
Mr. Alvin Langdon Coburn
Sir Edward E. Cooper
Mr. W. R. Davies
Mr. Edward J. Dent

Rev. E. H. Fellowes, Mus. Doc.
Col. W. Johnson Galloway
Mr. H. Cart de Lafontaine
Mrs. W. Lee Mathews
Mr. G. Bernard Shaw
Major Geoffrey Toye
W. R. DAVIES, Treasurer.

Particulars from the Acting-Secretary, A. Eaglefield Hull, Mus. Doc. OXON., 19, Berners Street, W.-1.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLIMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.-2

Founder and Director: MR. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, Concerts, &c. Telephone Paddington, 5990. Sec., E. B. GOLDING.

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH MUSICIANS.

FOUNDED 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI.
Victoria, Cap. cxxxi., § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.D.,
DEAN OF DURHAM.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.), LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.), FELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London and at approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

JANUARY 16, 1919, 4 P.M.—Lecture, "The Future of the Organist," by Dr. J. G. Cooper, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., F.I.G.C.M.

COMPETITIONS, 1919.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best ANDANTE for the Organ, and a SHORT ANTHEM with Treble Solo.

BRONZE MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, DOUBLE CHANT,
and KVRIE.

Organists (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Vacant
Appointments.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of Dr. LEWIS, Warden,
158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W.-11.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal
Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique:
How it feels to Sing." 3s. 6d. each, post 3s. 10d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referer.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y.

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—Gentlewoman.

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—Eastern Morning News.

"Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald.

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury.

"Is an acknowledged authority."—"Western Morning News."

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H.
Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W.-1

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION.

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.A.M.
DR. ARTHUR S. HOLLOWAY, Mus. Doc. OXON.; F.R.C.O.
DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.
G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Violin,
Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held in London and at over 400 Local Centres throughout the United Kingdom in APRIL. Last day of entry, March 15.

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, may be had on application to the Secretary.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate
(A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, July, and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A. Mus.
L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L. Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship
(F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented, either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date. For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.

Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 3870.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE.

SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor.. .. Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A.

SESSION 1917-1918.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 24 to December 22); WINTER TERM (January 21 to April 13);
SUMMER TERM (April 15 to June 29).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra,
Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC, LONDON

(Under the direction of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.)

INCORPORATED 1891.

158, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W.-11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.
Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc., Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.
Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.M.
Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.

Rev. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. OXON.

Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects, including the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M., F.V.C.M., also for the Teachers'
Professional Diploma in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and December.

Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition.

Local Secretaries required for towns not represented.

Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint; and all other Subjects connected with the culture of Music.

SPECIAL CINEMA COURSES in Orchestral, Piano, and Organ-
Playing.

All communications to be addressed to The Secretary, Registered
Office, 11, Burleigh Street, Strand, W.C.-2

COMPOSERS.

THE BOARD OF ASSOCIATED COMPOSERS.

President: SUMMERS BROWN.

J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. Bac., F.R.A.M., Director of Revisions.

Composers are assured of receiving the highest professional skill for revision and completion of their works ready for publication. Address,
The Secretary, 38, Bedford Street, Strand, W.C.-2.

TE DEUM IN F. MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC
DIMITTIS IN F. 3d. each. By A. Toase, Novello & Co., Ltd.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

FOUNDED IN THE YEAR 1844

JANUARY TO DECEMBER, 1919

VOLUME LX.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED
160, WARDOUR STREET, W. 1
NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

—
1919

2713

	Page
Child, William. The National Welsh Eisteddfod (See 477, 553)...	472
Welsh Hymns and Hymn-
Singing	525
'Clique' in Italy, The By Claude Trevor	678
Clavier Toccatas of Bach, The By Sydney Grew	17, 106, 160, 206
Colles, H. C. Elgar's Quintet for Pianoforte and Strings (Op. 84)	596
Concerning Cuts. By Alfred Kalisch	669
Concert Programme, The By Arthur T. Froggatt (See 62, 110)...	35, 111
Cooper, Sir Edward E.	585
Cumberland, Gerald. Before Breakfast Music	528
Czecho-Slovak Festival, The By Rosa Newmarch (See 186, 393)	334
Debussy as Critic: A Concert of Spanish Music	605
Dédout de Séverac. By Leigh Henry	341
Eighteenth and the Early Nineteenth Century in English Music, The By F. A. Hadland	219, 285, 349, 414
Eisteddfod and the Modern Spirit, The By Alfred Kalisch	477

	Page		Page		Page
Elgar's String Quartet (see 282) ...	336	Music of the Czecho-Slovaks, The By		OBITUARY.
— Quintet for Pianoforte and		Rosa Newmarch ...	552	Adcock, John ...	169
Strings (Op. 84). By H. C. Colles	596	Musicians' Bookshelf, The By		Andreef, W. W. ...	235
Erik Satie's 'Parade.' By Norman		'Feste' (see 'Reviews').
Peterkin ...	426	Musicians' Company, The ...	586	Baker, H. J. ...	629
Evans, Edwin. Modern British		Musicians of Charles II., The By		Beaumont, Henry ...	555
Composers (see 297) ...	10	C. Edgar Thomas ...	539	Behnke, Mrs. Emil... ..	118
— I. Frank Bridge (see 233)... ..	55	National Welsh Eisteddfod, The By		Boosey, Arthur ...	698
— II. Arnold Bax ...	103, 154	William Child (see 477, 553) ...	472	Brenet, Michel ...	74
— III. Benjamin Dale (see 297) ...	201	Nationality in Music. By Arthur L.		Brouill, Mlle. Bertha ...	698
— IV. Eugène Goossens ...	265, 329	Salmon ...	668	Bruin, Wilfrid ...	368
— V. John Ireland ...	394, 457	New Direction in Spanish Music, The
— VI. Gustav Holst (see 590) 524, 588,	657	By Leigh Henry (see 555, 698) 401, 465		Clarke, Reginald ...	423
— The Russian Ballet at the		New Form of Choral Composition, A		Curwen, Mrs. Ursula ...	26
Empire ...	695	By S. Royle Shore ...	279, 403
'Feste,' The Musician's Bookshelf		New Light on Early Tudor Composers.		Devers, William J. ...	299
(see 'Reviews').		By W. H. Grattan Flood.
Few Words about the British Music		I. William Newark; II. David Burton;		Ellis, W. A. ...	74
Society, A. By A. Eaglefield Hull (see		III. William Cornish ...	607	Eyers, Henry R. ...	120
138, 248, 371, 638, 694, 714) ...	71	— IV. William Crane ...	682	Eyre, Alfred J. (see 692) ...	629
Flood, W. H. Grattan. New Light on		New York Symphony Orchestra (see 608)	393
early Tudor Composers: I. William		Newman, Ernest. Departure from		Ford, Ernest ...	368
Newark; II. David Burton; III.		Birmingham. By W. Beeson ...	215
William Cornish ...	606	Newmarch, Rosa. The Czecho-Slovak		Goodwin, Robert Felix ...	698
— IV. William Crane ...	682	Festival (see 186) ...	334, 393	Griffin, William ...	629
Froggatt, Arthur T. The Concert		— The Music of the Czecho-
Programme (see 62, 110) ...	35, 111	Slovaks ...	592	Hammerstein, Oscar ...	494
		— A Slovak Music-Drama ...	661	Hill, John Richards ...	74
		Our Seventy-fifth Anniversary ...	265	Holloway, Dr. Arthur Stephen ...	299
				Hoyle, James ...	74
				Hudson, Lieut. Eli ...	74
Grace, Harvey. Rheinberger's Organ
Sonatas ...	610, 674	Peterkin, Norman. Erik Satie's		Law, Mary ...	235
Great Artist, A (G. Francesco Malipiero).		'Parade' ...	426	Leoncavallo, Ruggiero ...	494
By G. Jean-Aubry ...	13	Position of Weber, The By Herbert		Lloyd, Charles Harford ...	74
Grew, Sydney. Walt Whitman (born		Antcliffe ...	496	Luard Selby, Bertram ...	621
May 31, 1819) ...	283	Pressing Need, A. By Robert T. White	24
— Birmingham and Music... ..	344	Programme Music: Its Limitations and		Mahaffy, Rev. Sir John Pentland ...	299
— The Clavier Toccatas of		Abuse. By Arthur L. Salmon ...	464	Mottino, Francesco... ..	377
Bach... ..	17, 106, 160, 206	Pulver, Jeffrey. Music in England
— The Third Period of César		during the first half of the Sixteenth		O'Leary, Arthur (see 170) ...	169, 235
Frank ...	462	Century ...	411, 534
		Queenstown Cathedral By W. Wooding		Parker, W. Frye (see 170) ...	169
Hadland, F. A. The Eighteenth and		Starmer (see 622) ...	521	Patti, Adelina (see 713) ...	603
early Nineteenth Century in English		Question of Festivals: The A Plea for		Petherick, Horace William ...	169
Music ...	219, 285, 349, 414	Continuance. By Herman Klein		Pierce, Miss M. ...	299
Hands across the Atlantic... ..	393	(see 119) ...	63
Henry, Leigh. Igor Stravinsky (see 28,				Rogers, Brendan J. ...	629
238, 367, 422, 493, 554) ...	268	Racster, Elizabeth Olga. Music in
— Déodat De Séverac ...	340	South Africa ...	495	Saunders, John ...	629
— The New Direction in Spanish		Registers. By Agnes J. Larkcom ...	211	Schirmer, Rudolf E. ...	555
Music (see 555, 698) ...	401, 465	Relations of Music and Poetry, The		Scott-Gatty, Sir Alfred ...	74
— The Humour of Stravinsky ...	670	By Arthur L. Salmon ...	530	Shedlock, John South ...	74
Hull, A. Eaglefield. A Few Words about		Rheinberger's Organ Sonatas. By		Sherratt, W. M. ...	494
the British Music Society (see 138, 248,		Harvey Grace ...	610, 674	Streatfield, Richard Alexander ...	118
371, 638, 694, 714) ...	71	Right Perspective for Beethoven, The Humour of Stravinsky, The By Leigh		By W. Wright Roberts (see 156, 209,		Taylor, John William ...	423
Henry ...	671	230, 272, 299) ...	205	Taylor, Prof. Franklin ...	235
		Roberts, W. Wright. The Right Perspective
Imperial Choir in Hyde Park, The (see		for Beethoven (see 156, 209, 230,		Walsh, Peter P. ...	555
73, 248) ...	351	272, 299) ...	205	Wilson, Christopher (see 248) ...	169
Italy's Vocal Tradition. By E. Herbert		Rosing: An Impression. By Edward		Wilson, Madame Hilda ...	26
Cesari ...	500	Lewis ...	165	Wood, Dr. D. J. ...	555
		Royle-Shore, S. A New Form of Choral		Woodforde-Finden, Amy ...	169
Jean-Aubry, G. A Great Artist: G.		Composition ...	279, 403
Francesco Malipiero ...	13	Rules of Combined Counterpoint, The
		By George J. Bennett ...	216, 275
Kalisch, Alfred. Concerning Cuts ...	669	Russian Ballet at the Empire. By — The Eisteddfod and the		Edwin Evans ...	695
Modern Spirit ...	477	Salmon, Arthur L. Programme Music:
Klein, Herman. The Question of		Its Limitations and Abuse ...	464	Aberystwyth University. Prof. Walford
Festivals: A Plea for Continuance		— The Relations of Music and		Davies on 'The Musical Outlook' ...	347
(see 119) ...	63	Poetry ...	530	Abstract Programme Music ...	113
— Adelina Patti, 1843-1919 (see 713)	603	— Nationality in Music ...	668	Advance in Prices ...	153
		Slovak Music-Drama, A. By Rosa		Akeroyd Symphony Concerts (see 418)... ..	368
Larkcom, Agnes. Registers ...	211	Newmarch ...	661	Alhambra Season, The (see 426) ...	412
Leoncavallo, Ruggiero. By F. Bonavia	476	Some Musical Advertisements. By C.		Allen, Dr. H. P. Royal College of
Lewis, Edward. Rosing: An Impression	165	Edgar Thomas ...	480	Music Appointment ...	37
Local Composer, The By Herbert		Thomas ...	390	Analytical Programme, The (Mr. Paul
Antcliffe ...	33	Starmer, W. W. Bells ...	225, 497	Howard) ...	471
Lord Mayor-Elect as Musician, The ...	585	— Queenstown Cathedral (see 622)	521	Anecdotes ...	113, 674
		Stravinsky, Igor. By Leigh Henry		Anniversary, Our Seventy-fifth ...	265
		(see 128, 238, 367, 422, 493, 554)... ..	268	Answers to Correspondents 91, 138, 186,
				313, 502
Modern British Composers. By Edwin		Third Period of César Frank, The By		Armstrong, Mr. Frank. The Mechanical
Evans (see 297) ...	10	Sydney Grew ...	462	Organ in an orchestral rôle ...	277
— I. Frank Bridge (see 233) ...	55	Thomas, C. Edgar. Some Musical		Associated Board. Awards ...	313
— II. Arnold Bax ...	103, 154	Signs ...	300	— Annual Meeting ...	429
— III. Benjamin Dale (see 297) ...	201	— Some Musical Advertisements	480
— IV. Eugène Goossens ...	265, 329	— The Musicians of Charles II.	539	Barrett, Francis E. Opera in London 305,
— V. John Ireland ...	394, 457	Trevor, Claude. The 'Claque' in		369, 425, 498, 557, 699
— VI. Gustav Holst (see 590) 524, 588,	657	Italy ...	678	Beeson, W. Ernest Newman's De-
		Walt Whitman (born May 31, 1819).		parture from Birmingham ...	215
More about the Concert Programme.		By Sydney Grew... ..	283	Beethoven Festival at Queen's Hall 313, 371
By Arthur T. Froggatt (see 35, 62, 110)	111	Welsh Hymns and Hymn-Singing. By		Bennett, Mr. Arnold. 'The Roll Call' 112
Music during the War ...	9	William Child ...	536	Bibby, Mr. E. H. ...	43
Music in England during the first half		White, Robert T. A Pressing Need ...	24	Big Drum versus Cold Shoulder ...	29 of the Sixteenth Century. By		Williams, C. F. Abdy. An Ancient		Birmingham Festival Choral Society:
Jeffrey Pulver ...	411, 534	Song... ..	478	Sir Henry Wood as Musical Director	423
Music in Ruhlleben Camp. By Edgar L.				Bishenden, Mr. C. J. Memorial to ...	91
Bainton ...	72			Borough Organist's Camp Entertain-
Music in South Africa. By Elizabeth				ments at Dover ...	660
Olga Racster ...	495			Bridge, Sir Frederick. Retirement
				from Westminster Abbey ...	81

	Page		Page		Page
Bridge, Sir Frederick 'A Westminster Pilgrim' (see 153) ...	113, 220, 373	Heseltine, Mr. Philip. On the Modern Spirit in Music ...	303	Musical Opinion Handbooks of Church Music ...	113
— Dinner to ...	137, 222	History of English Music, A ...	278	— 500th number ...	313
— Presentation ...	225	Newly published ...	278	Musician in the Provinces, A ...	34
Bristol Gleemen, The ...	502	Hoby, Lieut. Charles. Appointment ...	714	Musicalian, The . New Musical Journal ...	347
British Music in Holland ...	82	Holbrook, Mr. Josef. Five Recitals ...	539	Musician's Bookshelf. By 'Feste' (see 'Reviews').
British Music Society (see 71) ...	138, 248, 371, 437, 566, 638, 604, 714	Howell, Miss Dorothy. Symphonic Poem, 'Lamia' (see 557, 624) ...	538	Musicians' Company. Dr. W. G. Alcock and Mr. Charles Macpherson ...	138, 278
— Blackheath Branch ...	437, 638, 714	Imperial Choir, The ...	73, 248, 350	Musicians' Gift, The Y.M.C.A. ...	36, 67, 83, 119, 164, 178, 237, 277, 300, 369, 424, 456, 556
British Regimental Marches ...	91	Incorporated Society of Musicians (Midland Branch). Lecture by Mr. Sydney Grew ...	233	National Carol League ...	637
Brown, Mr. James Walter ...	186	Interludes 15, 61, 108, 156, 208, 272, 338, 397, 469, 531, 601, 665	665	Naylor, Dr. E. W. Lectures ...	630
Buck, Dr. Address at Royal College of Organists ...	458	— Musical Appreciation and Development ...	15	Newman, Mr. On the League of Arts ...	163, 213
Bunnett, Dr. E. Testimonial ...	241	— Concert audiences and Encores: Performers and Critics ...	61	— Departure from Birmingham ...	215
Button, H. Elliot. Musical Puzzle ...	21	— Mr. Froggatt and 'The Concert Programme' (see 35, 110) ...	62	Northern Polytechnic Institute ...	565
— Schumann's Barring ...	226	— Applause ...	108	— 'Nothing extenuated.' By Gerald Lumberand ...	136
Cardiff Music Club ...	712	— Symphonies, Detached Movements ...	157	Novello Choir, The ...	34
Carl Rosa (see 'London Concerts' and 'Opera').		— Composers' Intentions (see 205) ...	209	O'Donnell, Mr. B. Walton. A Service Band Conductor ...	408
Carnegie United Kingdom Trust ...	313, 714	— On Beethoven (see 156, 205, 234, 299) ...	272	O'Donnell, Mr. S. P. G. Appointment ...	630
Catterall Quartet. Prize Competition ...	416	— Handel's Libretti (see 402) ...	339	Old Italian Music (see 372, 437) ...	430
Chamber Music for Amateurs (see 698) ...	559, 631, 701	— Purcell ...	397	Opera in England and on the Continent: A Comparison by an Overseas Man ...	437
Chappell & Co. Prize for light Orchestral Suites ...	186	— Humour in Music ...	409	Opera in London. By Francis E. Barrett ...	305, 369, 425, 458, 557, 699
— Presentation to Mr. William Boosey ...	501	— Old and New Music ...	532	— (see also London and Suburban Opera).
Children's Concerts Society, The ...	555	— The prima donna fetish ...	601	Opera, the Finest? ...	277
Choral Music at the Peace Celebrations ...	424	— Music and Commercialism ...	665	Oratorio versus Drama ...	278
Choral Notes and News ...	701	Kalisch, Mr. Alfred. Bard at Welsh Eisteddfod ...	472	Organists, New Qualifications for ...	674
Choral Societies and the Coming Season ...	559	— London Concerts ...	624, 625	Our Seventy-fifth Anniversary ...	265
Church Choir in Mesopotamia, A ...	114	— Elgar's New Violoncello Concerto ...	693	Oxford Degree, An. Dr. Vaughan Williams (see 373) ...	430
Classical Concert Society ...	132	— and Mr. Percy Colson. Commission by the Royal Carl Rosa Company ...	608	Paderewski, President ...	67
Clifford, Mr. Julian. Tone Poem 'Lights Out' ...	621	Karg-Elert, Sigfrid. 'Twelve Impressions' ...	17	Palestrina, a re-discovered autograph score of 'Il Cidice 59' ...	371
Coates, Mr. Albert ...	304	Kingston, Jamaica ...	502	Parker, Louis N. On 'Provincial Memories' ...	34
Coates, Mr. John ...	413	Kitson, Dr. C. H. Appointment ...	43	Parry, Sir Hubert, and the Poet Laureate ...	36
Cobbett, Mr. W. W. Chamber Music Competition ...	279	Knowles, Capt. Charles ...	309	— Memorial ...	219
Coming Season, 1919-20, The ...	629	Langdale, Mr. Bernard ...	702	— Work in Belgium ...	312
Competitions. Mr. W. W. Cobbett ...	279	League of Arts ...	21, 248, 286	'Parsifal': A New English Version ...	673
— Messrs. Hawkes & Son ...	373	— and Mr. Newman ...	163, 164, 213	Patron's Fund: The A New Development ...	277, 674
— Catterall Quartet ...	416	Leeds College of Music. Twenty-fifth Anniversary ...	377	Peterborough, Music in ...	637
— A £1,000 Song ...	496	Littleton, Mr. Augustus. Musicians' Company ...	278	Philharmonic Choir, The ...	472, 701
Criticism with a Knobkerry ...	163	London Concert Society ...	21	— String Quartet ...	713
Czecho-Slovak Festival, A (see 334) ...	186, 393	London County Council Victory Celebrations ...	425	Pitcher, Mr. R. J. Lecture-demonstration on the Techniquer ...	183, 249
— Legationj ...	236	Londonoderry Philharmonic Society ...	74	Political Music ...	67
Davies, Dr. E. Harold. Appointment ...	245	Mackinlay, Mr. Sterling. Light Opera Revivals ...	713	Programme 'Howlers' ...	674
— Dr. Walford. On 'The Musical Outlook' ...	347	McNaught, The late Dr. W. G. Memorial Fund ...	34	Pulver, Mr. Jeffrey. On 'Viol and Violin in Merrie England' ...	637
Drury Lane. 'The Daughter of Madame Angot' ...	425	Macpherson, Charles. Mus. Doc. Degree ...	373	Queen's Hall. Promenade Concerts Novelties ...	402, 432, 498, 557
Dumfries Choral and Orchestral Union, The ...	24	Masonic Peace Festival ...	416	— Symphony Orchestra. A matter of proportion ...	68
Edwards, Dr. H. J. 'Hymn of Victory and Peace' ...	630	Matthay, Mr. Tobias. Lecture ...	378	Recital Programmes. Organ Novelties ...	68
Elgar, Sir Edward. 'Falstaff' ...	20	Mental Processes in Music ...	76	Restaurant Music ...	304
— 'For the Fallen' ...	21	Messenger, M. New light Opera, M. Beaucaire ...	186	Richards, Dr. H. W. Lectures ...	81
— 'The Elgar' Cricket Club ...	68	Metropolitan Academy of Music, The ...	185, 430	Richmond Peace Festivities ...	502
— Violin Sonata (see 179, 245) ...	71, 163	Midland Competition Festival, The ...	530	Roberts, Dr. Varley. Retirement ...	84
— New Chamber Music (see 336) ...	282	More 'Novel' Music ...	402	Rogan, Major Mackenzie. Retirement ...	423
— Brass Band Arrangements of Symphonies ...	539	Morrison, M. T. Appointment ...	636	Royal Academy of Music ...	37, 81, 120, 170, 372, 428, 630, 700
— First Symphony ...	608, 666	Music at the Festival Conference on Creative Peace ...	558	— The 'Edward and Anne Seguin' Scholarship ...	81
— At the Opera House, Dudley ...	674	Music Club, The. Dinner to Sir Frederick Bridge ...	137, 222	— Reception to Mr. B. J. Dale and Mr. F. Keel ...	81
English Folk and Carol Choir ...	702	Music for Peace Celebrations ...	216	— Presentation Portrait of the late Stanley Hawley ...	428
— Song. Mr. John Coates ...	413	Music in London Working Girls' Clubs ...	373	Royal Choral Society. The Coming Season ...	629
— Song and Dance ...	129	Music Salvage Society, A ...	340	— New Year's Concert ...	674
English-made Violins ...	120	Musical Association Papers: 'Provincial Memories.' By Louis N. Parker ...	34	Royal College of Music Magazine. Sir Hubert Parry number ...	138
Ennis, Dr. J. Matthew ...	245	— 'Mental Processes in Music.' By Mr. J. Swinburne ...	76	— Commemoration Concerts ...	429
Evans, Edwin. The Russians at the Alhambra ...	286	— 'The Point of Perfection in 16th Century Notation.' By Miss Townsend Warner ...	167	— Special Course for Teachers of Music in Secondary Schools ...	559
Evans, Harry. Memorial ...	164	— 'John Merbecke and his Music.' By Dr. R. R. Terry (see 297) ...	232	— Patron's Fund ...	277, 674
Festival of the Sons of the Clergy ...	234	— 'Music Libraries and Catalogues.' By Mr. W. Barclay Squire ...	302	— Appointment of Dr. H. F. Allen ...	37, 701
Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge, The ...	378	— 'The Modern Spirit in Music.' By Mr. Philip Heseltine ...	303	Royal College of Organists. Diplomas ...	488
German Music ...	370	— 'Sir Hubert Parry.' By Sir W. H. Hadow ...	427	Royal Naval School of Music ...	630
Glasgow Opheus Choir ...	91, 345	— 'Russian Church Music.' By Mr. A. M. Henderson ...	702	Royal Philharmonic Society ...	502
Glastonbury Festival School, The (see 553, 561) ...	186, 371, 422, 534	Matter ...	68	— Syllabus ...	598
Goldsmiths' College, New Cross ...	246	Musical Criticism: the Things that Musical Journals: The Chesterian ; Scottish Musical Magazine (see 347, 539, 559) ...	402	Russians at the Alhambra, The ...	286
Green, Capt. B. S. Retirement ...	543, 713			St. Dunstan's Hostel ...	186
Grew, Mr. Sydney. 'The Musical Mind in England' ...	233			St. George's Glee Union ...	120
Guildhall School of Music. Awards ...	502			Sackbut's Preliminary Blast, The ...	278
Hadow, Sir W. H. On Sir Hubert Parry ...	427			Santley, Sir Charles. 85th Birthday ...	138
Hammersmith Sunday Concert Society ...	539			School Music Review ...	313
Harcourt, Mr. Ernest. 'Messiah' Concert. Erratum ...	402			Schumann's Barring. By H. Elliot Button ...	226
Harding, Dr. H. A. ...	249
Harris, Dr. W. H. 'The Hound of Heaven' ...	138
Harriss, Dr. Charles. Imperial Choir ...	73, 248, 350
Hawkes & Son. Prizes for Instrumental Pieces ...	373
Henderson, Mr. A. M. On Russian Church Music ...	702

	Page		Page		Page
Scott, Mr. Charles Kennedy. The Phil- harmonic Choir	472, 701	Mlle. Marcelle Soulage. * 'Suite in C minor	90	New Light on the Origin of 'Missa de Angelis.' By H. V. Hughes (see 696)	487
Self-determination all Round	163	Milan	90, 246, 376, 501, 566, 713	Queenstown Cathedral (see 622)	521
Service Band Conductor, A. Mr. B. Walton O'Donnell	409	Scala. * 'Urania,' by Alberto Favara	90	Roper, Mr. Stanley. Appointment	663
Sharp, Mr. Cecil. Lecture	272	by Ponchielli	246	Royal College of Organists	488
Sixty Years Ago 83, 120, 177, 235, 300, 368, 423, 495, 556, 629, 698		Prof. Romagnoli	376	Visit to an Old Organ. By Sidney W Harvey	613
Somerville's, Mr. R., New Opera, Antoine'	369	Teatro del Popolo	376, 566	Winter School of Church Music, A. By Maurice F. Bell	68
South London Choral Association Jubilee	186	Carcano. Parcell's 'The Spite- ful Lovers'	377	SPECIAL SERVICES, MISCELLANEOUS, ETC.
South London Philharmonic Society 249, 702		Boito's 'Nerone'	377, 713	Aberystwyth. Tabernacle Choral Society	231
South London Society of Organists	638	Opera Composers and New Light	377	Allt, Mr. Wilfrid Greenhouse Recitals	362
Southport Corporation Military Band... ..	433	* Maestro Lamberto Laudì, 'Il Pergolesi'	501	Anderson, Mr. W. R. Resignation	362
Sowerbutts, Lieut. J. Albert	43, 112	Zandonai's 'La via della Finestra'	566	Appointments 24, 71, 114, 167, 232, 294, 363, 418, 490, 552, 624, 693
Special Course for Teachers of Music in Secondary Schools, The	552	Dal Verme Theatre Opera Season	566	Ball, Mr. George Thalben Appoint- ment... ..	362
Squire, Mr. W. Barclay. On Music Libraries and Catalogues	302	Monte Carlo. List of Operas—new and revived	247	Bennett, Dr. George J. Recitals	113, 362
Stewart, Dr. H. Campbell. Magdalen College, Oxford	495	Mottino, Francesco	377	Betteridge, Master Leslie... ..	362
Strolling Players' Amateur Orchestral Society	423	Neville, Arthur	247	Boyle, Mr. Malcolm C. Appointment Brighton Parish Church	293
Summer School of Church Music	43	Ostend. * 'The Triumph of Progress,' by Clerici	566	Bullock, Dr. Ernest Appointment	623
Swinburne, Mr. J. 'Mental Processes in Music'	76	Paris	89, 312	Choat, Mr. G. B. Presentation... ..	70
Teachers of Music in Secondary Schools	695	Patti, Adelina (see 603)	713	Choir-Trainers' League	231
Terry, Dr. R. R. 'John Merbecke and his Music' (see 297)	232	Pièrre, Gabriel. * Variations en Ut Mineur	712	Church Music Society	551
Three Choirs Festival, The	116	Puccini. New Trilogy: 'Il Tabarro,' 'Suor Angelica,' 'Gianni Schicchi'	137	Collie, Mr. Norman. Recitals	362
To Our Readers	657	Ravel, Maurice. * 'Le Tombeau de Couperin'	712	Collingwood, Mr. W. Bertram Presentation	293
Tokyo, A Concert Hall at	82	Robinson, Miss Marie	90	Cook, Mr. E. T. 'Musicians' Gift' Recital	166
Training School for Teachers	91	Rome	43, 137, 247, 377, 436	Cooke, Mr. Clifton. Musical Lectures Crediton. New Organ as War Memorial 166	70
Trinity College of Music. Awards	498	Constanzi Theatre Novel- ties	43, 137	Darke, Mr. Harold	113, 544
Trowbridge, Devizes, and District Organists' Association	22, 248	Puccini's * New Trilogy	137	Booklet of a Hundred Organ Recitals	231
Verdi's 'Falstaff'	177	Philharmonic Society's 'Tchaikovsky' Concert	138	Mus. Doc. Degree	623
Vocal Therapy	248	Bossi's * 'Joan of Arc'	247	Davidson, Mr. Isaac Recital	166
Warner, Miss Townsend, on 'The Point of Perfection in 16th Century Notation'	167	The Augusteum	138, 247, 377	Davies, Dr. Walford	362
Wedding Marches	472	The Basilica Choirs	436	Dobson, Mr. C. E. Blyton	623
Williams, Mr. C. à Becket. Lecture... ..	378	Roussel, Albert. 'The Poem of the Forest'	90	Dublin, Christ Church Cathedral	166
Williams, Ralph Vaughan. Mus. Doc. Degree	373, 430	Salonica, British Music in	311	Edinburgh Society of Organists... ..	22
Wilson, Christopher	169, 248	Scharres, M.	712	Egg, Mr. Arthur Recitals	231
Woking Musical Festival	91, 178	Schmitt, Florent	89	Ely Cathedral	362
Wood, Mr. T. Appointment	495	Société Nationale de Musique: M. Gabriel Faure's * 'Impromptu,' and * 'A Lady in the Tower'	90	Exeter Cathedral, New Organist	623
Wood, Sir Henry Birmingham Festi- val Choral Society's Musical Direction	423	Spalding, Albert. Violin Recital	247	Eyre, Alfred James Memorial to (see 629)	692
MUSICAL NOTES FROM ABROAD.
* First Performance.
Anseau, M.	712	Tetrazzini	377	Gateshead. Bensham Road Wesleyan Church, Reopening of Organ	231
Attal, Dario	246	Théâtre Musical du Vieux Colombier	90	Gloucester Cathedral Organ	692
Bathori, Madame Jane	90	Toscanini	501	Goldsbrough, Mr. Arnold Appointment Grace, Mr. Harvey Lecture Recital 623	623
Boito, 'Nerone'	377, 713	Turin. Teatro Regio	501	Gray, Dr. Alan. Recitals	113, 288
Bossi, Marco Enrico. * 'Joan of Arc'	436	Vaurs, M.	712	Gregorian Association 49th Anniversary at St. Paul's Cathedral	362
Brussels	501, 712	Verona... ..	566	Halifax Place Chapel, Nottingham	23, 70
Brugman's 'L'Invasion'	712	CHURCH AND ORGAN MUSIC.
Cairo. Mr. Frederick Kitchener's Recital (see 249)	313	ARTICLES.
Music for Soldiers at	249	Bands in Church. Some Practical Hints. By Ulric Daubeny	415	Hamer, Mr. Alban Recital—Modern British Music	692
Cartaglia, Lydia	377	Bell, Maurice F. A Winter School of Church Music	68	Harris, Mr. William H. Appointment Harrison, Julius Harvest Cantata, First performance	288
Casella, Alfred. * 'Pagine de guerra' Chicago. Eleventh Annual Festival of the Chicago North Shore Festival Association	338	Buck, Dr. Address at Royal College of Organists	488	Hirst, Mr. Isaac Presentation... ..	623
Colonne-Lamoureux Concerts	89	Church Music: The Use of Bands. By Ulric Daubeny	287	Ilkley Parish Church	70
Comitato Nazionale	91	Daubeny, Ulric. Church Music: The Use of Bands	287	King's College. Memorial Service	231
Constantinople. Musical Competition Festival	435	Bands in Church: Some Practical Hints	415	Professorship of Ecclesiastical Music	231
d'Aleandrowska, Luba	246	Ecclesiastical Music	360	Leamington, St. Paul's	186
Dieppe Musical Festival	311	Friedländer, Mr. Arthur M. The Music of the Synagogue	360	Lincoln Cathedral	69, 113, 362
Ferrero, Willy	377	Harris, Clement Antrobus. James Watt as Organ Builder	544	LONDON AND SUBURBS:—
Filippone-Siniscalchi, Tina	138	Harvey, Sidney W. A Visit to an Old Organ	618	Crouch End, Park Chapel	70
Genova. People's Theatre	566	Hughes, H. V. New Light on the Origin of 'Missa de Angelis' (see 696)	487	St. Bride's, Fleet Street. Memorial Service	231
Gigli, Beniamino	247	James Watt as Organ Builder. By Clement Antrobus Harris	544	St. George's-in-the-East	70
Gilbert, Henry F. Comic Overture on Nigger Themes	248	Lloyd, Charles Harford	621	St. John's, Red Lion Square	23, 186, 652
Great Collection of Italian Music (see 430)	437	Macpherson, Dr. Charles. Thanksgiving Te Deum	416	St. Margaret's, Westminster	623
Gui, Vittorio	138	Manual 32-ft. Stops, &c.	21	St. Martin-in-the-Fields. Hymn Lec- ture Practice	551
Jongen, Joseph * 'Crépuscule au lac Ogwen'	712			Hymn Festival	623
Kitchener, Mr. Frederick. Recital at Cairo (see 249)	313			St. Mary's, Primrose Hill	23
Livorno. International Artistic Fête	566			St. Michael's, Cornhill	113
				St. Paul's Cathedral	234, 417
				St. Stephen's Walbrook. Recitals	623
				Southwark Cathedral	113, 166, 236, 692
				Plainsong Association	417
				Temple Church. Memorial Service... ..	166
				Mr. George Thalben Ball	362
				Westminster Chapel, Buckingham Gate	362

	Page		Page		Page
London Coliseum, Solo Boys ...	166	Harris, Clement Antrobus 'The Story of British Music' ...	352	Bridge, Frank Three Improvisations for the left-hand ...	365
— Sunday School Choir ...	166	Hayward, F. H., and Arnold Freeman 'The Spiritual Foundations of Reconstruction: A plea for New Educational Methods' (see 422) ...	360	Button, H. Elliot Masterpieces: Simplified Transcriptions ...	365
Lydbrook Parish Church ...	502	Henschel, Sir George 'Musings and Memories of a Musician' ...	118	Fletcher, Percy E. Valse Lyrique ...	627
Magdalen College, Oxford ...	362	Hill, Miss Cecilia 'Stone Walls' ...	534	Gardiner, H. Balfour 'The Joyful Homecoming' ...	627
Mather, Mr. Frank H. Recital Programme ...	113	Jean-Aubry, G. 'French Music of To-day' ...	118	German, Edward 'Theme and Six Diversions' ...	627
Meale, Mr. J. A. Mid-day Recitals ...	692	'Life of Liza Lehmann, The' by Herself ...	621	Goossens, Eugène 'Kaleidoscope': 'Four Conceits' ...	117
Middlesbrough, West End Wesleyan Church ...	22	Mason, Daniel Gregory 'Contemporary Composers' ...	352	Grovez, Gabriel 'Pièces de Clavessin de l'Ecole Française' ...	552
National Institute for the Blind. Recitals ...	69	Musical Directory for 1919, The ...	169	Jongen, Joseph 'Pages Intimes' ...	552
Newcastle Cathedral. Recitals ...	113	Musical Quarterly , The ...	118, 254	Livens, Leo 'The Moorlands' Suite ...	117
Norwich, Unthank Road Baptist Church ...	623	Newman, Mr. Ernest 'A Musical Motley' ...	619	Salazar, Adolfo Three Preludes ...	552
Oldroyd, Dr. George Appointment ...	293	Nicholson, Sydney H. 'Church Music' ...	118	Scarlatti - Tommasini. The 'Good-humoured Ladies' ...	627
Organ Music Overseas ...	79, 231, 418	Proceedings of the Musical Association's Forty-fourth Session, 1917-18 ...	407	Scott, Cyril 'Caprice Chinois' ...	295
Organists' Benevolent League ...	293	Read, F. J. 'First Principles of Music' 'Rejoice Greatly: How to Organize Public Ceremonies' ...	366	— 'In the Forest' ...	245
Peterborough Cathedral ...	293	Reminiscences of Henry Coward ...	168	— First Bagatelle (Pastoral No. 1) ...	627
Plainsong Festival ...	417	Scholes, Percy A. 'The Listener's Guide to Music' ...	352	Shaw, Martin British Marches for Schools ...	117
Poppstone, Mr. S. Maurice Recitals ...	362	— 'Introduction to British Music' ...	542	Williams, C. à Becket 'Hampton Court' Suite ...	295
Pullein, Mr. John Recital Programme ...	22	Sharp, Cecil J. 'Introduction to the English Country Dance' ...	552	Williams, John Gerrard Three Miniatures ...	552
Queenstown Cathedral ...	521, 623	Smyth, Ethel. 'Impressions that Remained' ...	680	SONGS.
Recitals 23, 70, 113, 167, 231, 293, 362, 418, 489, 551, 623, 692		Terry, Charles Sanford 'Bach's Chorals' ...	73	Austin, Harold 'In the Woods' ...	552
Richardson, Miss Frances Recital Programme ...	22	'Voices,' No. 5 ...	408	Bantook, Granville 'From the Tomb of an unknown Woman' ...	118
Riding, Mr. Henry Recital ...	293	White, Ernest G. 'Voice Beautiful in Speech and Song, The: A Consideration of the Capabilities of the Vocal Cords and their Work in the Art of Tone Production' ...	294	— 'Adrift' ...	294
Roberts, Mr. D. E. Appointment ...	692	Workman, T. E. 'The Four Tests: a Touchstone for Teachers and Lovers of Music' ...	621	Bridge, Frank 'Adoration' ...	117
Romford, St. Edward's Parish Church — Dedication Festival ...	362	SACRED CHORAL MUSIC.		— 'Come to me in my dreams' ...	117
Rowley, Mr. Christopher E. Resignation ...	623	Bennett, J. Lionel 'In Royal Robes of Splendour' ...	168	— 'Fair Daffodils' ...	490
St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich ...	362	Foster, Myles B. 'O Thou Sword of the Lord' ...	168	— 'Love went a-riding' ...	117
St. James's Church, Hope, Manchester. Reopening of Organ ...	166	Gray, Alan 'Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis' ...	364	— 'Mantle of Blue' ...	490
St. John's Church, St. Leonard's-on-Sea	70	Keynes, Theo. Requiem Mass ...	364	— 'So early in the morning' ...	117
St. Martin's, Birmingham. Festival Service Music ...	692	Lloyd, Charles H. 'Awaked from Sleep' ...	168	— 'Strew no more red roses' ...	117
Sellars, Mr. Gatty South American Tour ...	70	Macpherson, Charles 'Sing unto God' ...	364	— 'Thy hand in mine' ...	117
Shaw, Mr. Geoffrey ...	113	Nicholson, Sydney H. Solemn Te Deum ...	364	Burleigh, H. T. 'In the great Somewhere' ...	552
Sons of the Clergy. 265th Festival ...	234	Smart, Henry Te Deum Laudamus ...	364	Dale, B. J. 'O Mistress mine' ...	490
Southampton, All Saints'. Musical Recitals ...	415	West, John E. 'I will extol my God' ...	294	— 'Come away, Death' ...	490
Stephenson, Mr. Edwin Recitals ...	623	Wilson, Archibald W. 'O Light Everlasting' ...	168	Derry, Bromley. 'The Raiders' ...	626
Stewart, Mr. Haldane Campbell Appointment ...	362	RIVERS, W. P. 'Rule, Britannia' ...	168	Fletcher, Percy E. 'Hark! hark! my soul' ...	168
Strong, Mr. David Resignation ...	166	OPGAN MUSIC.		German, Edward. 'It was a lover and his lass' ...	627
Surplice, Master Alwyn ...	288	Ropartz, J. Guy 'Trois Méditations' ...	363	Hamilton, Janet 'With rue my heart is laden' ...	294
Sutton Coldfield Congregational Church	231	Ross, W. G. Gandete ...	363	— 'On Bredon Hill' ...	294
Swan, Mr. F. E. Presentation ...	166	Sowerbutts, J. A. Fantasy in A — Carillon in A flat ...	627	— 'The Cherry Tree': 'By Wenlock Town': 'Rest at Mid-day' ...	364
Timson, Mr. Jesse Retirement ...	623	Twenty Short and Easy Pieces by Various Composers ...	490	Handel, Recit. and Air, 'Where shall I fly?' ...	364
Tootell, Mr. G. Recitals ...	70	VIOLIN MUSIC.		Ireland, John 'Blind' ...	117
Toronto University. Recitals ...	231	Bridge, Frank 'Souvenir' ...	117	— 'Blow out, you bugles' ...	117
Trowbridge, Devizes, and District Organists' Association ...	22, 248	Newton, Ernest Eight Easy Melodies ...	117	— 'Earth's Call' ...	117
Vines, Charles James Memorial to ...	23	PIANOFORTE MUSIC.		— 'Heart's desire' ...	117
Waddy, Mr. Reginald Recital ...	692	Austin, Ernest Stella Mary Dances ...	365	— 'I have twelve oxen' ...	117
Wassell, Mr. Richard Recitals ...	544	Baynton-Power, H. Various Pieces ...	365	— 'Mother and Child' ...	117
West Middlesex Plainsong Guild ...	166	Bowen, York Suite for Pianoforte Duets ...	491	— 'Spring Sorrow' ...	117
Williamstown Male Choir ...	70	BRIDGE, FRANK 'Three Improvisations for the left-hand' ...	365	— 'The Adoration' ...	552
Woking, Woodham Church ...	435	Button, H. Elliot Masterpieces: Simplified Transcriptions ...	365	— 'The Cost' ...	117
York Minster Choir School ...	623	Fletcher, Percy E. Valse Lyrique ...	627	— 'The Rat' ...	652
ORGAN SPECIFICATION.		Gardiner, H. Balfour 'The Joyful Homecoming' ...	627	— 'The Sacred Flame' ...	117
The Framlingham Organ ...	619	German, Edward 'Theme and Six Diversions' ...	627	Parry, C. H. H. 'After tumult, rest' ...	168
REVIEWS (CLASSIFIED).		Goossens, Eugène 'Kaleidoscope': 'Four Conceits' ...	117	Peterkin, Norman 'Beata Solitude' ...	364
MUSICAL LITERATURE, INSTRUCTION BOOKS, ETC.		Grovez, Gabriel 'Pièces de Clavessin de l'Ecole Française' ...	552	Ronald, Landon. 'Songs of Springtime' ...	117
Barber, Cecil 'Sandbag Ballads' ...	408	Jongen, Joseph 'Pages Intimes' ...	552	Ross, W. G. 'A Daffodil Wedding' ...	626
Bridge, Sir Frederick 'A Westminster Pilgrim' (see 153) ...	220	Livens, Leo 'The Moorlands' Suite ...	117	Scott, Cyril 'Oracle' ...	294
British Music Society (see 71, 138, 248, 371, 638, 664, 714) ...	407	Salazar, Adolfo Three Preludes ...	552	— 'Sea-Fret' ...	294
— Bulletins. No. 2; No. 3 ...	295, 371	Scarlatti - Tommasini. The 'Good-humoured Ladies' ...	627	— 'Time o' Day' and 'Old Loves' ...	552
Burgess, Mr. Francis 'The Rudiments of Plain-Chant' ...	542	Scott, Cyril 'Caprice Chinois' ...	295	Sharp, Cecil J. Fifteen Capstan Chanteys ...	490
Coward, Henry Reminiscences of ...	168	— 'In the Forest' ...	245	— Eighteen Pulling Chanteys ...	490
Cumberland, Gerald 'Set down in Malice: A Book of Reminiscence' ...	74	— First Bagatelle (Pastoral No. 1) ...	627	— Nine Ballads ...	490
Folk-Song Society's Journal ...	408	Shaw, Martin British Marches for Schools ...	117	— Folk-Songs of English Origin collected in the Appalachian Mountains ...	626
Fowles, Ernest 'Harmony in Piano-forte-Study' ...	26	Williams, C. à Becket 'Hampton Court' Suite ...	295	Shaw, Geoffrey 'Roundabouts and Swings' ...	117
Gardner, George 'Worship and Music: Suggestions for Clergy and Choirmasters' ...	118	Williams, John Gerrard Three Miniatures ...	552	— Martin 'Refrain (of One in a Far Country)' ...	117
Guilbert, Yvette 'How to Sing a Song' ...	406	SONGS.		— Martin and Geoffrey 'The Motherland Song-Book' ...	490
Gurney, Ivor 'War's Embers' ...	408	Austin, Harold 'In the Woods' ...	552

	Page
Stanford, Sir Charles 'St. Andrew's Land' ...	117
— 'Wales for ever' ...	117
— 'The Fair Hills of Ireland' ...	294
— 'Songs of a Roving Celt' ...	626
Steggall, Reginald 'Four Shakespeare Songs' ...	626
Toye, Francis 'Portsmouth Hard' ...	552
Walker, Leonard J. 'My life is like a garden' ...	490
Warlock, Peter 'As ever I saw' ...	626
— 'My Gostly Fader' ...	626
— 'The Bayley berith the bell away' ...	626

CORRESPONDENCE.

Alto Voice, The ...	697
Appeal for a National Opera House, An (see 186, 371, 422, 534) ...	553
Arab Influence on Spanish Music (see 401, 465) ...	555, 698
Barring and Rhythmic Accent ...	295, 368
Beethoven and Changing Values ...	234
— as a Song Composer ...	231
— (see 156, 205, 209, 234) ...	208
Beethoven's Scheme of Orchestration... ..	234
British Music and Patriotism ...	492, 554
British Music Society's New Catalogue ...	492
Chamber Music for Amateurs (see 559, 631, 701) ...	698
Chance for New Native Works, A (see 368) ...	418
Common Basis of Criticism, A ...	75
Dale, Benjamin Sonata (see 201) ...	297
Double Pedal Passage in Bach ...	367
Fair play for the Professional ...	366, 418
Five-Manual Organs ...	367
Godowsky and British Music ...	555
Gramophone as an Aid to Musical Appreciation ...	492, 554, 696
Information wanted ...	494
Italy's Vocal Tradition (see 500) ...	628
Merbecke (see 232) ...	297
Merbeber and his Executors ...	554, 628
Mistaken Pronunciation (see 243) ...	298
Modern British Composers (see 55) ...	233, 297
Music Degrees, &c., in the Army in France. By Correspondence Course ...	76
Music in Capetown... ..	493, 697
Music Teachers and University Degrees ...	697
Musical Street Cry, A ...	494
Nasal Resonance ...	26
— Vocal Unanimity and Singing Technique ...	296, 367
National Bisteddfod, The (see 472) ...	553
New Education Act, 1918, The ...	234
Newman, Mr., and Scriabin ...	627
Obscure Work of Balfe's, An ...	75, 119
Oratorio Choir at Westminster Abbey (see 468, 627) ...	491
Organ Pedal Technique ...	75
Organ Recital Programmes ...	367
Purcell's Anthems (see 397) ...	491
— Sonatas (see 397)... ..	491
Question of Festivals: A Plea for their Continuance (see 63) ...	119
Royal Society of Musicians of Great Britain, The ...	298
Samuel, Mr. Harold, and Bach's 'Thirty Variations' (see 128) ...	160
Sanskrit Literature (see 590) ...	698
Songs of the Hebrides ...	75
Stravinsky and his Critics (see 128, 238, 268) ...	367, 422, 493, 554
The 'Missa De Angelis' (see 486) ...	696
'The Spiritual Foundations of Reconstruction' (see 360) ...	422
Wanted, Books on Music... ..	169
Westminster Abbey Special Choir (see 468, 491) ...	627
When to Applaud ...	119, 234

LONDON AND SUBURBAN CONCERTS, OPERA, ETC.

* First production.

† First performance in London.

Abraham, Miss Edith ...	372
Addy, Miss Loë ...	129
Æolian Hall ...	37, 83, 128, 129, 179, 373, 431
Albert Hall ...	128, 179, 238, 366, 425, 557, 625
Alexandra Palace Choral Society ...	125, 235, 431
Allied Quartet ...	37, 179
— * Phantasy for Viola and Piano-forte (York Bowen) ...	37
Alsace-Lorraine Musical Festival ...	373
Ansell, Miss Joyce... ..	373
Armstrong, Mr. Frank ...	305
Ashburton Choir and Orchestra. Purcell Concert ...	595
Ashton, Mr. Algernon, 'Toy Symphony' ...	238
Bach Choir, The ...	236
Barnett, Miss Emma ...	431
Baxendale, Miss Christabel ...	180
Beethoven Festival, The ...	371
Bellini, Miss Beatrice ...	129
Benham, Mr. Victor ...	37, 84
Bidder, Miss Helen ...	129
Bohemian Quartet ...	694
Bowen, Mr. York ...	625
Brella, Mlle. Evelynne ...	129
British Music Society (see 'Miscellaneous') ...
British Symphony Orchestra ...	557
Brook, Miss Dorothy ...	129
Busoni... ..	625, 694
Butt, Madame Clara ...	179, 625
Calvé, Madame ...	83
Carl Rosa (see 'Opera').
Catterall String Quartet, The ...	306
Central Hall, Westminster ...	238, 373
— Ballad Concerts ...	625
Chilton-Griffin, Miss ...	373
Classical Concert Society ...	132, 179, 238, 694
Coates, Mr. John ...	179
Coleman, Mr. Joseph ...	129
Cortôt, M. ...	179, 373, 694
Covent Garden (see 'Opera').
Croydon Philharmonic Society ...	377
Czecho-Slovak Festival ...	186
d'Alvarez, Madame... ..	306
d'Aranyi, Miss Jelly ...	694
Dare, Miss Marie ...	373
Davey, Mr. Murray ...	128
Davies, Miss Fanny ...	373, 694
Davies, Dr. Walford. * Suite 'Peter Pan' ...	431
De Lara, Isidore ...	128, 372, 431, 432
Desmond, Miss Astra ...	306
Donald, Madame ...	372
Drury Lane (see 'Opera').
Dulwich Philharmonic Society ...	701
Dunn, Mr. John ...	372
Ealing Philharmonic Society ...	180
Eisdell, Mr. Hubert ...	305
Elgar. * Sonata for Violin and Piano-forte (see 71, 163, 238) ...	179
— New Chamber Music ...	282
— * New Violoncello Concerto (see 'Articles') ...	693
Ellinger, Madame Desirée ...	694
Etherington-Smith, Miss ...	373
Ferguson, Mr. George ...	431
Field, Mr. Harry ...	129
Fielden, Mr. T. P. ...	431
Foster, Miss Muriel ...	179, 238
Friskin, Mr. James. New Sonata in A minor ...	373
— Miss Kate, and Ditto ...	373
Gilbert and Sullivan (see 'Opera').
Goldsmith, Miss Katie ...	373
Goodson, Miss Katharine ...	128
Greene, Mr. Plunket ...	128, 238
Guerra, M. Edgardo ...	306
Guest, Miss Helen ...	625
Haley, Miss Olga ...	37
Harmonic Trio ...	37, 179
Harrison, Miss Beatrice ...	83, 238, 306
Harrison, Miss Margaret ...	37, 83, 179
Hess, Miss Myra ...	128, 625
Heyner, Mr. Herbert ...	372
Imperial Choir, The ...	249, 351
Jansz, Miss Evelyn ...	129
Johnston-Douglas, Mr. ...	373

Kalisch, Alfred. London Concerts ...	624, 693
Kelly, Lieut.-Commander F. S. Tribute to the Memory of ...	305
Kennedy-Fraser, Mrs. and Miss... ..	179
Kimpton's, Miss Gwynne, Ladies' Orchestra ...	129
Kinsey String Quartet ...	373
Lambert, Miss Murray ...	37, 179, 306
Lamond, Mr. Frederic ...	128, 306, 625
Layton, Mrs. Mary. Students' Concert ...	497
Léon, M. Mischa ...	625
L'Hoest, M. Lenobe. Viola Recital ...	306
London Chamber Concert Society ...
— Piano-forte Quintet (Suk) ...	128, 306, 372, 695
— 'Le Tombeau de Couperin' (Ravel) ...	694
London County Council Victory Celebrations ...	425
London String Quartet ...	128, 179, 306, 373, 431, 432
— * Revised Version of Delius's Quartet ...	128
— String Quartet in C (Norman O'Neill) ...	372
London Sunday School Choir, The ...	238
London Symphony Orchestra ...	179, 430, 629
— Elgar's New Violoncello Concerto ...	693
London Trio... ..	83, 179, 306
— New Piano-forte Trio (Stanford) ...	83
Lotus Ladies' Orchestra ...	238
Mackinlay, Mr. Sterling. Light Opera Revivals ...	713
Mackinnon, Miss Lilius ...	180, 238, 432, 694
Mathews, Mr. Appleby ...	431
Melba, Madame ...	306, 625, 694
Meredith, Mrs. Margaret. The At-one-ment ...	306
Moger, Miss Gladys ...	305, 431
Moisewitsch ...	128, 305, 431, 625, 594
Lorley Hall, Students' Concert at ...	378
Munro, Miss Jessie... ..	431
Murdoch, Mr. William ...	238, 306
Newman, Mr. Robert. Annual Concert ...	37
Old Italian Music. Series of Concerts (see 430, 437) ...	372
Opera. Beecham Season at Drury Lane ...	170, 235, 425
— Carl Rosa, * 'Antoine' (Mr. R. Somerville's) ...	557, 369
— Gilbert and Sullivan ...	369, 700
— New English, * 'Pro Patria' ...	557
— Royal Opera, Covent Garden ...	305, 369, 425, 498, 699
Oriana Madrigal Society, The ...	236
Otscharkoff, M. New Orchestra ...	373
Parisotti, Miss Sylvia ...	129
Pergolesi's 'La Serva Padrona,' Revival of ...	129
Philharmonic Quartet (see 128, 180, 237, 713):
— Irish Elegy (Arnold Bax) ...	128
— MS. Quartet, 'Auld Lang Syne' (Holbrooke) ...	238
— † New Quartet (Scontino) ...	237
— New String Quartet (Cyril Scott) ...	128
— Piano-forte Quintet (Eugène Goossens) ...	237
— Quintet (Cyril Scott) ...	372, 432
— * Three New Pieces (Stravinsky) (see 268, 367, 422, 493, 554) ...	128, 238
— Visit to France ...	713
Phillipowsky, M. Ivan ...	432
Pinner Choral Society ...	313
Pitich, M. Georges ...	431
Powell, Mr. Lloyd ...	694
'Pro Patria,' New English Opera ...	557
Queen's Hall:
— Beethoven Festival ...	313, 371
— Berlioz's Fantasia ...	694
— Casella, Alfred, Suite, 'La Couvent sur l'Eau' (see 694) ...	557, 624
— Chappell Ballad Concerts ...	625, 37, 83, 128, 179, 371
— Golestan, Stan 'Rhapsodie Roumaine' ...	557
— Hadley, Henry 'The Culprit Fay' ...	624
— Malipiero, Francesco 'Impressione dal vero' (Part II.) ...	557
— — 'Ditrambo Tragico' ...	625
— † Moussorgsky. Four 'Chansons Enfantines' ...	498
— * New Suite (William Boyce) ...	236
— Pratella, F. Balella. Three War Dances ...	557
— Promenade Concerts ...	498, 557
— — Novelties ...	624
— Respighi. 'Fontane di Roma' ...	694
— Schmitt, Florent. 'Rêves' ...	624
— — Rhapsodie Viennoise ...	694

	Page		Page		Page
Queen's Hall (contd.):—		Tetrazzini	625, 694	Harrogate	312, 621
Sunday Concerts	625	Trinity College of Music	238	Hastings	708
Symphony Concerts	83, 128, 179, 236, 625, 694	Tyrer, Mr. Anderson	694	Hexham	312
*Tcherepnin. Quartet for Four Horns	624	Verne, Miss Adela	85	Huddersfield... ..	185, 264
BRITISH WORKS.
Bax, Arnold Scherzo... ..	557	Whitfield, Mr. Ernest	129	Johannesburg	70
*Carr, Howard 'The Jovial Huntsmen'	624	Wigmore Hall 37, 83, 128, 179, 238, 306, 372		Leeds	88, 135, 184, 245, 636, 711
Coates, Eric Suite, 'Summer Days'	624	Wilson, Mr. Stewart	694	— 'Hymn to the Night' (Ernest Austin)	185
d'Erlanger. Sursum Corda	557	PROVINCIAL AND COLONIAL CONCERTS, ETC.
*Dunhill, Thomas Dance Suite	557	* First Production.
Elgar. First Symphony (see 'Articles').		† First Performance in Great Britain.
*Gardiner, H. Balfour 'The Joyful Homecoming'	498	Aberdeen	246, 369	— * 'Four Conceits' (Eugène Goossens)	40
*Goossens, Eugène Prelude	557	Armagh Cathedral. Memorial Tablet to Dr. Osborne Marks	311	— * 'Amy Robsart' (Isidore de Lara)	242
Heath, J. R. Orchestral Rhapsody, 'The Slopes of Kaimactchaleon'	624	Ashton-under-Lyne... ..	246	— Pianoforte Concerto in C sharp minor (Tcherepnin)	242
*Howell, Dorothy 'Lamia' (see 538, 624)	557	Bangor (North Wales)	313	— † 'Stella Maris' (Alfred de Keyser)	243
*Quilter, Roger 'Children's Overture'	557	Belfast... ..	38, 180, 703	Londonberry Philharmonic Society	74
†Smith, David Stanley. 'Prince Hal'	498	Birmingham 84, 129, 180, 239, 306, 373, 432, 560, 631, 703		Long Eaton Co-operative Choir	186
Quilter, Mr. Roger (see 557)	238	— * 'The Hound of Heaven' (Dr. W. W. Harris)	138	Manchester 41, 87, 134, 183, 243, 310, 376, 434, 564, 635, 709
Recitals, Various	129, 179, 238, 306, 372, 431, 625	— * 'Balkan Sketch' (J. R. Heath)	631	— Sir Thomas Beecham's Opera Scheme	41, 87
Reed, Mr. W. H. *Elgar's New Violin Concerto	179	— Scheme for Permanent Orchestra	373, 432	— *Lord Berners's 'Chinoiserie,' 'Valse Sentimentale,' 'Kasatchok'	183
Rivarde, M. Achille	694	Bishop Auckland	631	— * 'La Wally' (Catalini) (see 298)	243
Rosenbloom, Mr. Sydney... ..	306	Bournemouth 38, 85, 130, 181, 240, 307, 374, 432, 560, 632, 704		— New work for Harp and Strings (Julius Harrison)	376
Rosing, M. Vladimir	37, 83	— Fantastic Miniatures (Bagrinovsky)	240	— Mr. Tom Burke's Scheme to found Scholarship of £500 a year	636
Rosowsky, Miss Lola	83	— Fragments Symphoniques (Juliette Folville)	240	Newcastle	183, 244, 310, 710
Royal Academy of Music 37, 120, 170, 238, 372, 428, 700		— *Overture 'To the Fallen' (F. King Hall)	307	— The British Music Society	138
Royal Choral Society	84, 128, 179, 629	— Fantasia, 'Virgil' (H. Orsmond Anderson)	307	— *Pianoforte Quartet (Alfred Wall)	244
— Mozart's 'Requiem'	179	Bradford	89, 135, 185, 711	North Staffs	702
Royal College of Music	180, 238, 429, 701	Brenwood	246	Norwich	42, 134, 246, 312, 701
Royal Philharmonic Society 37, 128, 178, 236, 305, 372, 502		Bristol 38, 131, 181, 240, 307, 374, 433, 561, 632, 705		— *Harvest Cantata (Julius Harrison)	623
— Elgar's 'Falstaff'	37	— * 'The Miracle' (Reginald Somerville)	632	Nottingham	183, 244, 565, 711
— *Delius's New Violin Concerto	128	Buxton	438	Oxford	43, 184, 435
— *German, Edward. New Orchestral Work (Theme and Six Divisions)... ..	236	Cambridge	86, 181, 308, 433, 629	Perth	630
— Debussy's Fantaisie	694	— 'For the Fallen' (Dr. Rootham)	80, 181	Peterborough	308, 637
— Holbooke, 'Ulalume'	694	Cape town	246, 628	Peterhead	85, 246
— Holst, Gustav 'The Planets' Suite	178	Cheltenham	566, 702	Plymouth	39, 131, 181, 241
Salmond, Miss Foster	431	Colne Orchestra, The	186, 705	Portsmouth	702
Sammons, Mr. Albert	306	Cornwall 39, 131, 181, 241, 308, 375, 433, 499, 562, 633, 705		Potteries Choral Society	186
Samuel, Mr. Harold (see 169)	128, 431	Coventry	312	Pretoria, S. Africa	185
Scott, Mr. Cyril *New String Quartet	128	Craven Arms	312	Sheffield	88, 135, 184, 244, 565, 636, 711
— * 'Idyllic Phantasy'	306	Devon 39, 131, 181, 241, 308, 375, 433, 499, 562, 633, 705		— *Nocturne and Rondo (Frank H. Shera)	636
Shapiro Orchestra	431	Dublin	311, 434, 499, 562, 634, 707	Southend	248, 702
Sharpe, Mr. Cedric	432	— Feis Ceoil... ..	311	Stirling	438
Shaw, Mr. Martin	129, 238	Dundee	131	Stockport	246, 630, 702
Small, Miss Winifred, and Miss Katharine Doubleday	129	Dunedin, New Zealand	246, 438	Stonehaven	246
Society of Women Musicians	129	East Cowes. *Orchestral Suite (C. à Becket Williams)... ..	249	Stratford	438
South London Philharmonic Society 249, 702		Edinburgh	86, 132, 241, 634, 707	Suffolk	312
South Place Concerts, The	37	Exeter	131	Vancouver	246
South West Choral Society	501	Felixstowe	566	Ventnor	91
Southern Syncopated Orchestra, The	498	Glasgow	86, 133, 182, 242, 309, 563, 707	Whitwell (Derbyshire)	438
Stanford, Sir Charles New Works:—		— Orpheus Choir	91	Windsor	378, 701
* 'A Song of Agincourt' (for Orchestra)	238	Glastonbury (see 'Miscellaneous')	186	Winnipeg	246
*Irish Concertino (for Violin and Cello)	37	Halifax	89, 185, 245	Woking	90, 636
*New Pianoforte Trio	83	Hanley	240	Yorkshire	88, 135, 184, 245, 636, 711
*New String Quartet	180
†Pianoforte Concerto	305
*Violin Sonata	305
Steinway Hall	125, 180, 373
Strolling Players' Orchestra	129, 423
Stroud, Mr. Gregory	373
Suggia, Madame Guilhermina	129, 626

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

JANUARY 1, 1919.

MUSIC DURING THE WAR.

On August 4, 1914, most of us anticipated a short war, with an almost entire cessation of musical activities on the part of the belligerents. We have had instead a long war, and, in this country at all events, an unprecedented amount of music-making. That a great proportion of the music thus made should be of an inferior quality was inevitable. Earnest musicians may regret the fact: they will be better employed in recognising and taking advantage of the condition of things it implies. We do not expect to develop a taste for fine literature in a youth frankly indifferent to printed matter of any kind. On the other hand, however, the reader of trash to-day may next year be drawing up his own pet list of the hundred best books, and making a good job of it, too.

Of the thousands of folk who during the war have found comfort and distraction in music, the majority have partaken of the inferior type merely because it happened to be the most get-at-able, and because it made the least demand on brain and pocket. It is the first step that counts: these crowds are now incipient musicians, just as our novelette reader is an embryo book-lover. The development in both cases is largely a matter of opportunity and direction.

Our art, then, is this much to the good,—its recreative and consoling powers are by way of being recognized by the public.

As may be expected, official appreciation is much less emphatic, but we may at least congratulate ourselves on the fact that the wet blanket of 1914 has been gradually dried and warmed, until 1918 finds it a not uncomfortable garment. At its worst, the Government attitude is now one of benevolent neutrality.

What are the chief points that strike us in a glance over the past four years? First we note great activity in chamber-music circles. How far this was due to a revival of interest in chamber music proper,—that is, music made by friends or members of a family,—we do not know. Air-raids, travelling restrictions, and a hundred other causes compelled, or at least induced, many people to take the daring step of spending their evenings at home. This discovery of the home led naturally enough to the discovery of books and music as recreations giving a great deal of pleasure at little cost. The demand for cheap reprints of good literature, and for solo and concerted music of all kinds, signifies a growth of appreciation that can hardly fail to be of enormous importance in the immediate future. Even musicians have had their horizon widened, a taste for the more intimate forms of the art having been developed in many who formerly responded to nothing less than the opulent and highly-coloured appeal of the orchestra.

The second point that claims our attention is the popularity of opera. While due credit must go to Sir Thomas Beecham and others, we think that the presence in our midst of so many foreign and colonial friends must have had not a little to do with the increased interest in a form of art that has never so far appealed much to the average Englishman. But perhaps, after all, the most vital factor has been our singers' rapid advance in operatic technique, thanks to which we have at last had fine performances in the vernacular.

Thirdly, we have seen an unlooked-for activity on the part of our native composers. There were such good grounds for anticipating very little in the way of novelties, that the steady stream of chamber-music, songs, and works for solo instruments has been perhaps the greatest musical surprise of the war. Any fairly regular attendant at London concert-halls during the past year will bear witness to the fine quality of this unexpected output.

The fact that so much of this new music is cast in the shorter forms, and is free in character, suggests a comparison with the remarkable outpouring of lyrical poetry that has been one of the literary features of the past few years. We probably owe both to the war, though the connection is of course more obvious in the case of the poetry.

Choral and orchestral concerts have on the whole showed a decline in standard, both in regard to choice of music and its performance. War conditions interfere little with a soloist's powers; indeed it is conceivable that, temperamentally, some performers may even thrive under them. But choirs and orchestras are so obviously at a disadvantage that we are surprised to find some musicians regarding this decline with pessimistic head-shakings. Surely our feeling should rather be surprise that choirs and bands have kept going at all. For example, how many of us anticipated that the Competition Festival Movement and the Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts would have survived four-and-a-half years of war?

On the whole, then, the position of music, both actual and potential, appears to be stronger to-day than at the beginning of the war. There are still a few difficult months ahead, but if we read the signs aright, the Autumn of 1919 will witness an amount of musical activity such as this country has never seen.

A word should be said of the large sums of money raised for war charities by means of musical performances. These have ranged from concerts in our largest halls down to organ recitals in village churches. Certainly in this respect, as well as in such kindred activities as entertaining the forces, both in camp and hospital, the musical profession has answered the needs of the hour in a whole-hearted manner of which it may well be proud, and for which the community is, we believe, not ungrateful.

MODERN BRITISH COMPOSERS.

BY EDWIN EVANS.

(INTRODUCTORY ARTICLE.)

[The following is collated from articles written for publication abroad in connection with the Ministry of Information. The originals appeared in Spa, and Denmark.—ED., M.T.]

Musicians of to-day are gradually making the discovery that, after a prolonged period of relative sterility, England has become within a generation or two, one of the most copious contributors to contemporary music. Not only does she possess a larger number than at any time in her history of composers whose works are at least of sufficient strength to stand the sea-passage to other countries, but the works themselves, viewed in the aggregate, represent in an extraordinary completeness the complicated tangle of currents and cross-currents by which music is agitated in our day. Every conceivable movement is represented. Even the reactionary elements are producing music which allegiance to tradition does not entirely deprive of individuality. Nationalism, in all the various forms it has assumed from Russia to Spain, has its talented exponents, and the yet more recent tendencies of modern music are well to the fore. It would in fact be possible to illustrate an essay on all these various movements with examples taken solely from the works of British composers. It is perhaps this variety of outlook which is the most significant feature of this outburst of activity, for it denotes a hunger for self-expression the absence of which was the cause of the former stagnation, and this desire in turn is evidence of a fundamentally new spirit,—a new attitude towards music and its functions.

To understand what has happened it is necessary to have some acquaintance not only with English history but also with English psychology. It is unfortunately true that, after having produced music during the polyphonic period which can still challenge comparison with that of any other country, and after having laid the foundations of a modern tradition in the age of Purcell, England suffered her music to be overshadowed by the invasion of Handel, and subsequently by the debilitating influence of Mendelssohn. It is, however, not sufficient to attribute the successive domination of Handel and Mendelssohn to the influence of the Hanoverian Court and the Prince Consort. Handel appeared on the scene when the sturdiness of his music made it an acceptable vehicle for a well-defined and widely prevalent sentiment. Mendelssohn thrived upon the sentimentality which, in the earlier part of the 19th century, afforded psychological relief from the process of industrialisation which was then at its height. At the same time the characteristic reticence of the Englishman stood in the way of his finding a more national mode of expression, and his mistrust of his own judgment in artistic matters made him shy of acclaiming music that did not come before him bearing the stamp of Continental approval. Even in our day it was not until a choral work by Elgar had provoked enthusiasm in Germany that he was adequately honoured in his own country.

There had meanwhile grown in English organ-lofts a tradition of uninspired pedestrian musicianship which it would be absurd to attribute to the influence of any great master, native or foreign. This tradition in itself makes it unprofitable to inquire into the causes of the period of musical stagnation, memories of which continue to retard the wider appreciation to which British music of to-day has proved itself entitled. Least of all is it expedient to connect that stagnation—now happily an episode of the past—with causes which a more vigorous musical life would have speedily removed. The bad tradition persisted because the English chose to tolerate it. It is now moribund because that section of the English community which has a living interest in music has plainly intimated that it will be tolerated no longer.

That is the change of attitude that has taken place in this generation. The Englishman is still slow to form an artistic judgment, but he has gained sufficient confidence to work out his salvation in music, and he is doing so with a rapidity which is astonishing. As in France, this modern renaissance has coincided with the birth of a new social spirit, the effects of which have already proved far-reaching. There is in all countries alike a disposition to regard music as something apart from life, but history has often revealed in it a kind of psychological barometer. The forces which find expression in musical activities are intrinsically related to those which move even the least musical section of a people. For instance, the gulf which separates French music of to-day from that which found favour under the Second Empire is none other than the gulf which separates the France of 1914 from the France of 1870.

The tenacity with which certain features which can be traced back to the tradition of the German classics still maintain their hold upon a section of British music is due to coincidences which are in themselves superficial and misleading. Lyrical phrases of the type which abounds in the German romantics lend themselves to the expression of sentiments which are widely different, and it is as easy to misread the significance of their survival in English music as it is to misread their relation to modern Germany. These lyrical phrases possessed just sufficient resemblance to the native conception of lyrical sentiment to make them acceptable until the reawakening of the national consciousness of music, the first effect of which was to reassert the value of the indigenous type. Thus we still find contemporary composers of merit using melodic outlines recalling those of the German lied, whilst others, like Vaughan Williams, are fashioning phrases such as any Englishman knows by instinct to be of indigenous growth. In the end it is undoubtedly the latter type which will prevail, but the struggle is rendered arduous by the strong hold which the other owes to its superficial adequacy. Of their respective merits there cannot be the slightest doubt. Though the composers in both instances may be thoroughly sincere in their work, it is at present only the national type that succeeds in conveying abroad the conviction of sincerity. This is natural when a musical nation uses its own idiom, and the fact could be proved again and again by the experience of other countries. It is not surprising that success should come first in forms of music which, even though mainly instrumental, are based upon lyrical needs, especially as the wealth of English literature points to very strong lyrical leanings. But the national expression does not stop here. There are other elements in the English character so strongly national that they perforce remained silent so long as the prevailing idiom was imported. To mention only one, the characteristic vitality of English humour could not find voice in what was virtually a foreign language, and it was absent from music of the highest class, finding an outlet only in the lighter forms of musical entertainment, where the classical standard could not be rigidly enforced. Now that the idiom has become emancipated, this feature is beginning to assert itself, and it would not be surprising if it eventually gained the widest appreciation elsewhere; for, whilst his emotions are those of our common humanity, the Englishman's humour is a thing apart, appealing to foreigners with all the charm of the exotic.

At the same time one must naturally expect a progressive estrangement from the processes of logical thematic development established by the German classics. The impatience of mere logic which has so frequently asserted itself in English life was bound to show itself in music so soon as the latter began to emancipate itself from imported traditions. An Englishman addressing his own countrymen will always meet with a more ready response to a plain and direct statement than to a logical dissertation, and expediency will always recommend itself in preference to academic argument. In the degree that music resumes its function of reflecting the national life, this characteristic will become more apparent, but, even now, clever symphonic developments of the standard type are to be sought mainly in the works of composers who are least identified with the reawakening of the national spirit. There are, of course, exceptions, but these prove the rule. Directness of purpose, a sentiment that occasionally savours of the ingenuous, combined with a reticence that frequently causes it to be misunderstood abroad, an open-air vigour, and a latent sense of fun, not often disclosed but seldom far distant, these are the features that one may expect to find in representative modern British music. At its very dawn they are easily discernible in the works of Elgar, notably in the 'Enigma Variations' and in the 'Cockaigne' Overture, and they are constantly recurring in the music of to-day. A very characteristic combination of them is to be found, for instance, in John Ireland's Sonata in A minor for violin and pianoforte, which is of very recent date.

To anyone not in sympathy with the paradoxical result of this blend, the Finale of Ireland's Sonata would appear out of keeping with the remainder of the work, which is of earnest character, but the capacity for fun under serious conditions is the very heart of the paradox and the key to many apparent inconsistencies.

It was in the great days of the Elizabethan drama that the English profile first detached itself completely from the background of conflicting influences which furnished the foundations of English character. There we find high tragedy and low comedy flourishing cheek by jowl in an intimacy that is, to say the least, unfamiliar in any other literature. It presents as true a picture of the Englishman to-day as it did three centuries ago. In the worst days of the war nothing proved so disconcerting to Continental observers of the British soldier as his capacity to indulge in 'blague' under the most appalling conditions, and his fondness for singing doggerel at moments of emotional tension.

The variety of the recent native musical output defies all classification. The critic is compelled to fall back upon dates, and even these do not help him very far. On a chronological basis one would speak first of the forerunners of the movement, now generally classed as academics, such as Stanford, Parry, and Mackenzie. Then one would proceed to its dawn, which opens with Elgar and brings forward the names of William Wallace, Ethel Smyth, Granville Bantock, closing perhaps with J. B. McEwen, a gifted and prolific writer of chamber music. Delius represents the more cosmopolitan aspect of this section. Then follows the amazingly productive phase of composers born since 1870. Before composers of this group succeeded in overcoming the inertia of public opinion, or, what was worse, the atmosphere of mild, patronising approval in which they were to win their spurs, the signs of unrest which had long been visible began to assert themselves with increased violence. There was, for instance, a growing impatience among the younger men with the intense reverence in which Brahms was officially held—a reverence that has no counterpart in Europe outside of the German-speaking countries. To some English students this reverence has proved far more destructive of individuality than the wave of Wagnerism which passed over England in common with the entire musical world. Even to-day one can point to gifted composers who are still only in the convalescent stage. But the standard of revolt was raised in the citadel itself, that is to say, in the institution where the cult of Brahms was at its highest, and several of whose former pupils are now among the most independent of the outstanding figures in English music. At their head one would place Vaughan Williams (born 1872), whose works contain in an exceptional degree elements which have come to be regarded as characteristically English. This composer's name furnishes the occasion for the mention of two undercurrents in the present situation which are likely to exert an influence upon its future development, though they are perhaps less important than some enthusiasts imagine.

The first of these currents is that which has set strongly in the direction of folk-song. The part which the traditional melodies of a country may come to play in strengthening the characteristic quality of its music scarcely admits of question, especially in the light of Russian experience, but it lends itself very easily to exaggeration. Even in Russia, at the time of the great Nationalist composers, it was not invariably the case that those of them who gave the most attention to folk-song in the end produced the strongest music, or even the music on which the Russian character was most deeply impressed. Yet, on the other hand, the probabilities are in favour of there being some biological affinity between the characteristics of a race and the melodic idiom which has proved the fittest to survive among it. Even more probable is the suggestion that the melodic idiom which grew, so to speak, with the language itself, is the most suitable vehicle for that language in song. That may, in fact, be taken as demonstrated by the best modern English songs which, even when their structure is eclectic, often contain indisputable idiomatic phrases in the vocal part. Perhaps the most striking illustrations of this will be met with in the settings of the collection of poems by A. E. Housman, entitled 'A Shropshire Lad.' In these the poet has studiously given the preference to words of purely English origin and avoided those of Latin derivation. It is a striking fact that the most satisfactory songs based on these poems are by composers associated with the folk-song movement, such as Vaughan Williams and the late George Butterworth. But to deduce a fixed principle from such evidence would be a highly dangerous proceeding. Apart from the Celtic regions, which have their own music, the English countryside is singularly rich in traditional melody, and the revival of interest in these tunes has unquestionably had considerable influence on the younger groups of composers. Few of them, however, have actually used folk-song in their music. The mission of old tunes has been rather to remind them what a truly English tune sounds like rather than to relieve them from the necessity for making tunes. It is thus by somewhat indirect methods that the composers have reached a more intimate mode of expression. Whatever the means there is now a sufficiency of music of the highest class to prove that the end has been attained.

The other movement is that of the 'restorationists,' who seek to revive the glories of the past for the purpose of establishing continuity of tradition. Even English musicians need to be reminded sometimes of these glories, of which the best-informed Continental musicographers, who have accepted without question the heresy that England has no music, are generally in ignorance. It is a common experience to be met with scepticism when mentioning them, but no student has ever approached this music and remained unconverted. Its revival is therefore to be encouraged, both as an expression of the national spirit and for the sake of the works themselves. But whether the modern British composers can derive practical benefit from its study is more problematical. In any case it could be only from the spirit that animates them, not from any external quality of workmanship; and surely it is better that life itself should impart its spirit to art! We see here a marked analogy with events in France. The cult of Rameau and his predecessors is a feature of the French renaissance in music, and critics vie with one another in proving the continuity of the French tradition from his day to ours; but it would be difficult to show that any French composer is directly indebted to the study of Rameau for any special quality in his work.

Both these sections of musical opinion look to the remote past for guidance. At the opposite wing of the progressive movement is that section which is frankly and unreservedly modern in its outlook. But there is far less importance to be attached to this apparent divergence of method than to the one feature which is common to all progressive musicians in England: the desire to break with the immediate past, its pedantic outlook and its subservience to foreign influence. It is this desire that underlies the active, almost feverish productivity of the present generation of English musicians, which has already yielded such important results. A new tradition is not established in a day. There are inherited beliefs that are tenacious of life, and there is also the inevitable tendency to substitute new foreign influences for old, which is merely a change of masters, but the movement towards complete emancipation has gathered so much momentum during the last twenty years that already now an Englishman may look upon contemporary music and feel that his contribution to it is not unworthy of his aspirations. There is a veritable army of composers, born since 1870, some of whom have failed to sustain the promise of their early works, whilst others have matured more slowly but with greater sureness. It is here that the variety of outlook becomes more pronounced. It would, for instance, be difficult to discover any common ground between the music of John Ireland and that of Cyril Scott, both of whom were born in 1879, and have an equal right to be considered as representative of the modern movement. The same year saw also the birth of Frank Bridge, whose spacious technique provides a facility for reconciling divergent methods, in which respect his rôle in English music presents some analogy to that of Florent Schmitt in France. In Balfour Gardiner's popular 'Shepherd Fennel's Dance,' and in Percy Grainger's treatment of folk-songs, we have the English sense of fun coming to the surface in one of its aspects, whilst another shows itself in a more subdued form in those of York Bowen, and Benjamin Dale's romanticism, expressed in choicest phrases, attaches itself to the older tradition. In Arnold Bax we have a wonderfully fanciful imagination with a preference for the dreaminess of the Celtic twilight, and a fondness for the 'little folk,' the legendary fairies. Even in the very youngest of our composers the essential variety of outlook is maintained. On the one hand, Herbert Howells is working his way through youthful, classical predilections towards an English idiom which has much affinity with memories of those remote days when there were English classics, and on the other hand Eugène Goossens (who is English despite his foreign extraction) is falling into line with those modern composers whom sedate musical opinion regards as extremists. This does not, however, prevent him from revealing a very individual outlook.

It is safe to say that never in her history has England been so rich in composers of unquestioned talent as she is to-day. The list is formidable, and though only a fanatic would claim that the unprecedented output of the last few years is wholly of enduring quality, the critic who is also a historian knows well the significance of such periods of travail, and hails with increasing delight the appearance of every work of outstanding merit, such as are constantly coming forward in the England of to-day. A special feature, due to the ease with which the English absorb fresh elements, is the occasional occurrence of un-English names in this list of composers. The case of Frederick Delius is not typical; although of English birth his associations with the Continent are of the closest, and he is to be classed rather with that cosmopolitan society which was so characteristic of Europe in general on the eve of war. But Gustav von Holst furnishes a complete illustration. His family migrated from the Baltic Provinces to England more than a century ago, and each generation has contracted English marriages, so that the name is practically the only vestige remaining of his foreign origin. Curiously enough he is one of the composers who have been happiest in their treatment of the folk-song idiom, both in his choral settings and in orchestral rhapsodies. The latest instance is that already quoted of Eugène Goossens, a more 'recent' Englishman so far as date is concerned, but nevertheless an entirely English personality, and admitted as such both at home and abroad, as, for instance in an article which that excellent Italian critic, Guido M. Gatti, contributed to the January-February number last year of La Critica Musicale (Florence). With this composer, who is still in his early twenties, we reach the youngest elements in modern British music and, simultaneously, the point where the production of this interesting movement has assumed such importance as to make it of far more than national interest.

Here it may not be out of place to utter a word of advice to propagandists.

In presenting modern British works to other than English audiences a wise discrimination is necessary, for their very variety makes it impossible that all of them would meet with appreciation from the same audiences. A programme of English music which would meet with approval in Amsterdam or Zurich might quite conceivably be rejected in Paris or Madrid, and the converse is equally true. This difference of the psychology of the musical audience in various countries is too often lost sight of by enthusiastic pioneers of new works. A little while before the war we had a striking example of it in the case of an excellent musician, born in Scotland of French parents, but domiciled in Germany, and adhering to the traditions of the German classics. A concerto of his was performed at about the same time in Paris and London. In Paris, its length and ponderous mode of expression caused it to be almost refused a hearing; in London, its sound musicianship met with appreciation. Both audiences were right in their judgments of its qualities and defects. It was their respective psychology which tipped the scale in opposite directions. It is to be hoped that when the best products of the present musical activity in England find their way to the musical centres of the Continent, as they inevitably must in due course, the mistake will not be made of irritating alert audiences with a conservatism for which they have scant appreciation, or, still more, antagonising audiences accustomed to the more considered forms of musical utterance by giving them music of the eminently spontaneous type that, side by side with the other, is forcing its way to the front in this vigorous and interesting reawakening of England.

In succeeding articles the writer will endeavour to deal with some of the more significant of British composers of to-day.

(To be continued.)

A GREAT ARTIST :

G. FRANCESCO MALIPIERO.

By G. JEAN-AUBRY.

For him who loves art and makes of it the constant nourishment of his mind and soul, I do not think that there is any greater joy than that of discovering a new personality, a truly original temperament. Those people are to be pitied whose critical sense has succeeded in weakening the faculty of admiration, as are also those whose facile admiration, knowing no control, finds vent in extravagant praise. Admiration is one of the most beautiful sentiments of which men are capable, but it must be used in conjunction with a full sense of responsibility and with a determination not to cheapen it by ill-considered employment.

I have for long been blamed for my enthusiasms, while my aversions were passed over. It has been said that I wrote praise but not criticism. This was said as far back as fifteen years ago, when I praised Debussy and Ravel, and more recently when I praised Severac and Roussel, and later still when I wrote favourably of the Spanish music of Albeniz and Manuel de Falla, of the poetry of Ruben Dario, of the sculpture of Rodin or of Mestrovitch, and of many others who were then unknown. 'Dogs bark and the caravan passes,' says the Arab proverb, but perhaps after all the barking of dogs unconsciously hastens the speed of the caravan.

There is much truth in the sceptical saying of one of our young French friends, 'In art there are no forerunners, there are only reactionaries.' There are certain artists who are the living conscience of their epoch, and whose word or art at once reaches a small minority, and there is the immense majority who, if one may risk a solecism, only make up their minds to understand when the whole world has understood.

If I say that there is to-day in Italy a young man of thirty-six whom I do not know, whom I have never seen, and whom I regard as one of the most remarkable composers of his generation, a young man from whom may be expected not merely interesting works but works of the first order, and who, from what we know of him, reveals an indisputable personality, there will be those who will reproach me for my incurable optimism, as they did when I wrote of Debussy, Ravel, Falla, or Stravinsky. Which were right: the detractors or myself? Let us proceed.

G. Francesco Malipiero was born at Venice in 1882. He first worked with Enrico Bossi, the present director of the Conservatoire of Sainte Cecile at Rome. After having passed some time in Germany, he returned to Italy and began to study alone, examining in turn the old Italian works, modern French works, the Russian music of Moussorgsky and Stravinsky, and the researches of the young Hungarian musicians. Like all those who possess a real and strong personality, he has no fear of its being lessened by contact with new works or influences.

He wrote first of all works like 'Sinfonia degli Eroi,' composed in 1905, performed at Vienna in 1912, and which he has since destroyed and disowned.

Since 1905 and up to the present Malipiero has composed nearly twenty pieces of various forms and character, showing at once the fertility and variety of his mind and the sureness of his technique; symphony, chamber music, songs, opera, have all been used to express his ideas and feelings under different aspects.

Of these works, there are several which are unpublished and will remain so by the wish of their author, whose development has been particularly rapid during the course of the last few years. I do not know whether we shall ever be able to hear the Quartet, written between 1907 and 1911, or his first operas. Malipiero is a better judge than we can be of those works by which he wishes to be known in the future, and this intransigence with regard to his early works is justified by the quality of those which he has published.

It was towards 1910 that the personality of the young artist began clearly to stand out. Last year, his 'Sinfonia del Silenzio e della Morte' was performed in France, a work which would do honour to more than one composer of the time, but which appears to us now only as a youthful composition in comparison with his present works.

There are certain artistic natures which reveal themselves almost in their first expressions. Maurice Ravel is recognised even in the 'Menuet Antique.' There are others who develop but slowly; others again who take long to grope their way, and who finally reveal themselves suddenly. If a comparison be made between the Sonata for Violoncello and Pianoforte (1907) and the 'Poemi Asolani' (1916) or 'Keepsake' (1918), Malipiero appears at once to take his place in the latter group.

Already in the 'Poemetti Lunari,' which date from 1909 to 1910, there appear certain essential characteristics of his inspiration. A particular atmosphere is observable in these short pieces for the pianoforte, and the contrasts of his nature are seen in all their attractiveness. In the first two of these 'poemetti' there can be seen all the suppleness of which this young genius is capable. The first is grave and religious, the second full of an exquisite grace and very Venetian in tone. In the fourth the nimble spirit evokes the dialogue of marionettes in moonlight, but by a simple augmentation the dialogue soon attains an amplitude which endows with humanity what seemed at first merely the conversation of puppets. The sixth of the 'poemetti' shows how a modern musician may be thoroughly Italian without falling into banality. The melodic phrasing of this piece is impregnated with a facile charm which in other hands would degenerate into commonplace inflections, but never does Malipiero run the risk of this criticism. If he approaches it, he always manages to avoid it. Although the composer considers the 'Poemetti Lunari' a mere début, his taste and technique are already evident.

The evolution of Malipiero has revealed itself without éclat, logically and profoundly. His nature has become more and more concentrated. His tendencies direct him unceasingly towards an economy of means which leaves nothing to chance but which gives no impression of painful restraint. His personality is attractive in its combination of ardour and abandon, of austerity and grace, of feeling and reason.

I do not know where one can meet amongst the music of the last ten years a page of a more direct, immediate, and refined charm than the first of the 'Preludi Autunnal,' in which the shadow of Chopin seems to wander through the Tuscan landscape, nor where can be found a more personal and more simply moving page than 'I Partenti' in the 'Poemi Asolani.'

In his three last sets for the pianoforte—'Barlumi' (Lights), 'Poemi Asolani,' and 'Maschere che passano'—Malipiero is in full possession of his means of expression. Since the production of Ravel's works there has probably been nothing written for the pianoforte which deserves more attention. I do not think that anyone has yet achieved a page of such singular and profound accent as that of 'Notte dei Morti' in the 'Poemi Asolani.'

Malipiero's music is in no sense systematic, being given neither to exasperating harmonics nor to repeated rhythmic singularities. It utilises the newest or the oldest forms according to the necessities of feeling. Turn by turn the melody is light, frail, or concentrated. It is not by astonishing that the art of Malipiero charms, and the devotees of grace at any price will not find what they want; but by a kind of almost insensible penetration he captures us as it were by a moral obsession. Sometimes in his music there is something as painfully confusing as a dream, at first indistinct, but gradually revealing the vestiges of our memories or of our hesitating intuitions.

An ardent nature such as Malipiero's could very easily find in the resources of the orchestra, with its most recent complexities and latest harmonic innovations, the means of vigorously expressing and colouring his sentiments, but his art is in conflict with his ego. With him, as with the greatest artists, there is a constant struggle between his mind and the élan of his physical nature. The Italian critic Guido M. Gatti clearly perceived this when he described Malipiero as 'the classic ideal of a restless, romantic spirit.'* Indeed, he has a soul as ardent as that of Schumann or of Chopin, which however seeks to express itself by a means as concentrated and as terse as the music of Monteverdi.

In essence, Malipiero's personality is made up of this conflict. It is noticeable in comparing his works and in examining their secret structure; for, like every true work of art, each of his inspirations gives a sensation of liberty. The conflict is centred in the roots of the work, the flower thus giving an impression of mingled joy and bitterness.

Malipiero's work does not possess any nightmare qualities. There is nothing Baudelairean in him in the defective sense that has been applied to this term. On the other hand, I sometimes see in him something similar to Baudelaire's art in the struggle of the latter between classicism of expression and romanticism of nature, and in his desire to condense his ideas as much as possible in order to attain a form in which words possess their full force.

Of necessity it is the same characteristics which are to be found in Malipiero's songs, but with less constraint. With the exception of three melodies set to the words of Gabriel d'Annunzio, the 'Sonnets des Fées,' the songs of this composer up to the present are all written to French words. If the 'Cinq Mélodies,' with the exception of 'L'Archer' are not very characteristic works, on the other hand the three melodies from 'Keepsake'—'Light,' 'Song,' and 'Stream'—show the same faculty for expressing emotion simply and deeply: 'Song' with its natural accent of the melody, and 'Stream' for the evocation of torpor that is produced in so remarkable a manner by its accompaniment, are excellent proofs of Malipiero's art.

Striking as are his pianoforte works and the last collection of songs, it is, above all, towards the orchestra that Malipiero is naturally inclined. His art is essentially symphonic. He has a taste for new sonorities, and he knows how to utilise the timbres of the orchestra with a cleverness which has no equal except in Ravel or Stravinsky amongst the composers of his generation. He has neither the violence of the Russians nor the grace of the French, but an ardour held in check a passion which is never exhausted, rising in long and simple flights, sprung from a deep and sincere emotion.

The same inclination towards a greater simplicity is to be found in his orchestral works. Little by little the cutting down of all that is superfluous becomes more drastic. However, his early works contained nothing complex or heavy, neither as regards their orchestration nor the number of instruments. There is nothing clearer or more simple than the writing and the elements of the two Suites 'Impressioni del Vero' (Impressions from Nature),* but both the one and the other show the progress that has been made towards that economy of means which seems to be the mark of the artistry of the Latin races in their noblest works.

In the first series of the 'Impressioni del Vero,' Malipiero pictures three birds—Il capinero, Il picchio, Il chiu—their characteristics and their surroundings, not by the usual procedure of imitative music, but by the suggestion of a poet who reflects the play and the sinuous grace of nature. This is done with a charm, a delicacy, a lightness of touch to which no one can remain insensible. In the second series—'I Cipressi e il Vento,' 'Colloquio de Campane,' and 'Baldoria compestre'—the framework is larger, and human emotion is portrayed with still more penetration.

The poetry which impregnates 'I Cipressi e il Vento' is of a profoundly real and human quality, and is at the same time so dreamlike that it seems, like its subject, more of heaven than of earth, while its appeal as moving as life itself. Malipiero never employs the direct procedure of imitation; he suggests by the atmosphere which creates the reality of his subject.

There remains to mention 'Armenia,' a little orchestral suite on Armenian popular themes, and two works for the orchestra, 'Pause del Silenzio' and 'Ditirambo tragico.' The latter, which have not yet been performed, mark another phase in the evolution of the composer.

He has also written for the lyric theatre 'Elen e Fuldano,' an opera in three Acts (1907-09) which he has since destroyed; 'Canossa,' a one-Act tragedy (1911); 'Sogno di un tramonto di autunno' (1913), a tragic poem founded on one of d'Annunzio's lyrics; and more recently two works of a new character. The first, 'Sette Canzoni,' is a very short opera comprising seven episodes which unfold themselves during the singing of seven songs, all action being undertaken by mimes. Malipiero has himself written the libretto of this work, and the songs are old Italian airs which are to be found in his symphonic conceptions. The other work, 'Pantea,' which the composer calls a 'symphonic mimo-drama,' is written for a dancer, a chorus, an invisible baritone voice, and an orchestra.

Judging from what I already know of the work of Malipiero, I await his new compositions with a lively impatience that is not often experienced in a lifetime. Why should I hide my haste to hear the 'Sette Canzoni,' of which a friend wrote to me as follows after having had the good fortune to hear them in Rome: 'I wish you could have heard the "Sette Canzoni"; he is just finishing the orchestration. Since Moussorgsky, no such music has been written; it has a power, an originality, a beauty of line really without example in modern music.' The man who wrote these words is himself a calm and discerning critic who has studied old Italian music with a penetration and taste which have made his work valuable. His letter caused me no surprise; it made me still more impatient to hear the works of this young artist.

Francesco Malipiero will ere long be recognised as one of the leading composers of the present time. It is pleasing to me to reflect that I shall have been among the first to greet him as an outstanding figure of a new Italy, and to perceive in his works the touching and profound revelations of a great artist.

Interludes.

A few days ago I heard a distinguished musician lamenting that music had received a set-back during the war. He based his assertion on the fact that choirs and orchestras had shown a falling off in technical and other respects. I found myself wondering, first, what else could be expected, and second, whether the set-back is of a kind to worry us much. Clearly it was inevitable, and quite as clearly it is only of a temporary nature. But to any who fail to find comfort in this, I suggest that we may fairly set down on the credit side the increased appeal of the best music brought about by the tapping of a new public through the many admirable musical activities in camps, hospitals, and factories. To what extent this new musical public can be retained on demobilization must depend largely upon concert-givers and conductors of choral societies and orchestras. No one who has had any considerable experience of camp and hospital concerts during the past four years can have failed to note the pleasure the best music has given in the most unexpected quarters. You may question the word 'unexpected,' pointing out that in an army so huge and representative the proportion of educated musicians must of course be pretty much the same as in the civilian population. That is true, but we must remember that the average camp audience is of an omnium gatherum character rarely met with in a concert hall, and therefore musicians have formed only a small part of it. The great majority of hearers have been men to whom fine music well performed was something of a novelty.

* One of these, the first, has been performed in London during the last series of Promenade Concerts. It is to be hoped that we shall have an opportunity of hearing it again, and of making an acquaintance with the second set.

Apart from the concerts, a great deal of educative influence must have been exercised by the sprinkling of musicians in the ranks. The pianoforte in the rest-hut has not been used solely for ragtime or sentimental ballads: Bach and Beethoven, Schumann and Chopin, have spoken through it, and delivered their message to many new ears. [As I write this, the December Music Student comes to hand, containing, very much to the point, a short article by Mr. Frederick Dawson, who has been giving recitals in hospitals and Y.M.C.A. huts since the war began. Mr. Dawson's experience of the Army's appreciation of the best music may be regarded as typical.]

If musicians in the Army have given, they have also received—the gain has not been all on one side. I have heard more than one admit that their views on the art have been considerably widened by their Army experience. They have come to enjoy a great deal that they had hitherto despised. For example, the swing and rhythm of the best music-hall tunes have not been lost on them. This appreciation of the most vital quality in an important section of popular music is likely to influence some of our younger composers, and the influence will be all for good. So much of the best music has found its way via Queen's Hall to the Coliseum and other great places of popular entertainment, that some return is due. There is piquancy in the idea of St. Martin's Lane and Piccadilly Circus showing Langham Place a thing or two, but there is probability as well.

However, the important point for the moment is this: many thousands of people, for the first time in their lives, have come to realise something at least of the power and appeal of good music. How is this appreciation to be retained and developed?

So far as London is concerned, I believe that much can be done by decentralization. At present too many concerts are given in a tiny area in the West-End, and too few in the suburbs.

Private Smith has now something of a musical palate: how far will he be able to satisfy it on leaving the Army? He lives in such savage and remote districts as Harringay, or Balham, or Wormwood Scrubbs, or Woolwich, where the natives have entertainments of most kinds within easy reach, but very little in the way of first-rate music. Can you see ex-Private Smith making frequent journeys to the little musical preserve round Oxford Circus? The most he will do is to come to an occasional Promenade concert, which attracts him because it is cheap, free-and-easy, and places no embargo on his tobacco or glass of beer.

Meanwhile there are excellent halls in his neighbourhood, well-adapted for concert purposes, but used chiefly for meetings and dances. When our recitalists are wise they will give up some of their performances in half-filled concert-rooms in the West-End, and play and sing to full ones in the East, and at other unfashionable points of the compass. It needs only a little enterprise on the part of artist and agent.

Our leading recitalists find it well worth their while to go touring among provincial towns with populations of 20,000 and upwards. They seem to be unaware that outer London consists of a conglomeration of huge towns, only a very tiny proportion of whose inhabitants ever come to Central London for recreation. Why should they? They have excellent local theatres at which most of the best performers—especially of the variety type—can be seen frequently and inexpensively. Some of the suburban cinemas are second to none, and show real enterprise in the matter of incidental music. There are free libraries everywhere, and some districts have admirable museums and picture-galleries.

The one field that so far has scarcely been touched is the purely musical one,—for it must be remembered that the performances of local orchestral and choral societies, however good, are too infrequent to supply what is needed. Something has been done here and there in the way of a brief series of subscription concerts,—the December Musical Times contained particulars of such a series at Streatham,—but obviously the proper publicity and organization can as a rule be obtained only by agents and others experienced in such work.

Given first-rate talent, tactfully-chosen programmes (not too 'precious' or 'highbrow'), plenty of seats at popular prices, and (possibly) permission to smoke, Mr. Smith will be delighted to indulge his newly-acquired appetite.

But we must not consider the Smiths only. Every suburb contains many hundreds of music-lovers who would welcome the opportunity for hearing a fine orchestra or concert-party if they could do so by taking a walk or a short 'bus or tram-ride. What very few of them will undertake is the journey to central London. Many of them work there all day. Attendance at an evening concert involves a double journey, or waiting about after business hours. One may be very fond of music, and yet be excused from frequent attendance at concerts under such conditions. In this and in other respects the way to the concert-hall must be made as easy and attractive as that to the cinema and variety show. I am a mere musician, and therefore dare not attempt to give advice to those who have the management of concerts; but were I a hard-headed business man, I should feel inclined to ask such questions as:

1. Why do concert-halls contain such a small proportion of cheap seats? Some of us have wondered for years past why it is possible to go to Queen's Hall, for example, and see time after time the handful of seats at the back of the area chockfull and the stalls and circle half empty.
2. Seeing that, so far as the ear is concerned, the worst seats are the first half-dozen rows of stalls, why should not the price of these be lowered? Similarly, when a gallery runs round three sides of the hall, why should not the ends near the platform be made cheap seats?
3. Why is there such an absurd disparity between the purchasing power of a shilling at the concert-hall and a music-hall? At the former I sit pipeless, and with knees cramped, through a couple of hours of almost entirely serious music. At the latter I take my ease, pipe in mouth, hearing and seeing a series of performers, mostly first-class, and usually a fine blend of grave and gay. There may be good reasons for making me pay more for the duller and less comfortable of the two experiences, but they are not apparent.
4. If I attend Queen's Hall on an evening in August I am allowed—even encouraged—to smoke. Going to the same hall to hear pretty much the same music in November, my pipe must remain in my pocket. Why? Judging from the size of the audiences at some of the Promenade Concerts, no one seems to have been kept away because of my blowing a cloud. On the other hand, a good many were induced to come because of the prospect of blowing one themselves. There is surely no reason why smoking should not be allowed at instrumental concerts, even if only after the interval. Vocal recitals are of course on a different footing in this respect.

The above questions, remember, are what I should be tempted to ask if I were a business man. Being merely a musician, I don't ask them. I fall to dreaming instead, and see a fine concert-hall, not standing in a backwater as our West-End halls do, but planted down in the very centre of the theatre districts, cheek-by-jowl with the palatial Hipposeum. There is a concert every evening, the prices of admission are the same as those at the Hipposeum, smoking is allowed, and refreshments at reasonable prices are easily obtainable. The programmes contain first-rate music with a sprinkling of light items. Good humorous singing is a regular feature.*

The seating is comfortable, and ample space is allowed for passing to and from one's place. The programmes cost, not sixpence or a shilling, but twopence. The best music does not suffer from the free and easy atmosphere. Chorus-singing is freely indulged in. Every concert contains at least one well-known song, pitched in a comfortable key, in which the audience joins. Occasionally a pot-pourri of well-known songs is played, with the words printed on the programme. The conductor takes charge of the whole hall, and the audience becomes an impromptu choral society, rough and ready but very much alive, with stimulating results to all concerned. A dream? Yes, but not more wild to-day than the idea of the Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts a quarter of a century ago, or such an enterprise as the present Shakespeare season at the 'Old Vic.' When my dream is realised, we shall have merely a first-rate music-hall, with music as the main attraction instead of as an 'extra turn.'

The English admirers of Sigfrid Karg-Elert have been wondering what that brilliant composer has been doing during the war. A friend who has just returned from durance in Germany brings me back some compositions of Karg-Elert produced since the outbreak of hostilities, and therefore unknown in this country. They are a set of 'Twelve Impressions' for harmonium. I find some passages of real beauty in them, but also a confirmation of the doubts some of us had begun to feel a few years ago as to Karg-Elert's staying-power. I still believe that his best organ works are among the finest ever written. But the later examples had begun to show signs of mannerism and eccentricity, and these Impressions on the whole mark a further decline. The titles appear in German, French, and English, and the translations of some of them are odd. So many modern composers base their work on pet scales and intervals that the title of No. 5—'A solar second'—suggests that Karg-Elert is about to give us something new in the way of a brace of adjacent notes; but it merely represents 'Eine Sonnenskunde' after it has survived the French 'Une seconde de soleil.'

The palm for ugliness must go to No. 11, 'The nightmare' ('Die Nachtmar'; 'L'Alpe à la nuit'). This is headed with a couplet by J. O. Bierbaum:

... Lieg stille und lausche im schweigenden Raum;
Dich umschleiert kein Schlaf, dich tröstet kein Traum . . .

This particular nightmare is fortunately more brief than the real article is wont to be. Of its twenty-one uncomfortable bars I quote the three last:

monströs. f

pp pp pp

(arpa. tenuto.)

rasch, wie zerstiebend. die Tasten kaum berührend.

Probably the composer means to depict purely mental phenomena, but this extract suggests some at least of the physical results of dietetic indiscretions. How can we take his advice and 'lieg stille' during such uncomfortable happenings as those hinted at in the above, especially in the second bar? FESTE.

THE CLAVIER TOCCATAS OF BACH.

BY SYDNEY GREW.

Apart from its position as an organ piece, the Toccata has been very generally discredited. It has been looked upon either as one of a group of characterless forms which—more or less individually indistinguishable—appeared in the dawn of instrumental music, at its worst a fortuitous meandering over the keys, at its best only a brilliant show-piece; or it has been looked upon as rather an indeterminate étude, a study convenient for the development of finger-technique and staying-power.

The post-1750 Toccata has not been unjustifiably discredited. It has not been wrongly regarded. Notwithstanding the mental clarity of post-Bach composers, their energy of expression and occasional romantic ardour, the Toccata from Pietro Domenico Paradies (1710-92) through Muzio Clementi (1752-1832) and Francesco Pollini (1763-1846) to Robert Schumann (1810-56) was little more than a technical provision for students or a concert-piece for virtuosi. But as things seem to me the pre-1750 Toccata has been quite wrongly regarded. It was a very different creation from the post-1750. Long before Bach had lifted it to the position it holds in organ music it had been proved by thoughtful musicians a most useful type of clavier music; more than useful, absolutely essential. And simultaneously with Bach's establishing it as one of the greatest of organ forms, it was developed by the same composer into a complete and characteristic clavier form, used by him extensively, and left as the most fluid and adaptable of clavier forms, the best of all means of expressing that quasi-extemporaneous thought which (all things considered)

* At West-End concert-halls a comic song would be regarded as which of course saves the situation. A song by Gilbert and Sullivan, or would be taboo, though nobody has ever given a reason why.

sacrilege unless it were of the operatic buffo type, sung in Italian, Monckton and Caryll, with funnier words and music at least as good is perhaps the most precious human quality in art and at the same time the one perfect medium for the carrying out of those experiments and searchings for novelty that can never cease in a phase of art until the phase become a dead phase. The pre-1750 Toccata to my mind has been unjustifiably discredited. Its significance has been misunderstood. Its value as an accomplished fact has been incorrectly gauged. At the end of the long line of Clavier Toccatas from Claudio Merulo (1533-1604) to Johann Sebastian Bach (1685-1750), the Toccata for clavier was no barren, disjointed show-piece. Its path had run into no cul-de-sac. Rather it was an organic structure of the utmost freedom and diversity, the parent of several works of great artistic value and poetic warmth, and a means of emotional expression not only in advance of its age but in advance of the age immediately following.

The object of the present article is to demonstrate this, and to draw the attention of students to the five great Clavier Toccatas of Bach—the works in G minor, D minor, E minor, F sharp minor, and C minor respectively.

I.

Stating the matter briefly, the direct evolutionary purpose of the Clavier Toccata was three-fold: first, to determine and develop the true idiom of keyboard music, both composing and performing; secondly, to free music from the restrictive power of dance-rhythms on the one hand and from the obstructive influence of the 'strict' style on the other; and thirdly, to poetize the art. This purpose the Toccata successfully achieved in all three aspects,—with regard to the third, over-successfully for the Toccata itself, seeing that by the time the Toccata was perfected in the hands of Bach it had become too subtly poetic in nature and too independent in form for the next generation, whence it languished into non-existence, only the name surviving, and that in a direction totally foreign to the original. It is no exaggeration to say (speaking of course in the broadest terms) that out of the Toccata came the incalculably important achievement of the poetizing of the Fugue, i.e., of making the Fugue a vehicle to carry poetic thought and warm human emotion.

There is no need in a general study of the Clavier Toccata to consider the idiom of keyboard music. That is a matter well within general knowledge. A musician who has observed such a series of pieces as the 'Fantasia of four Parts' of Orlando Gibbons (1583-1625), the 'Golden Sonata' of Henry Purcell (1658-95), the French Suites and Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue of Bach, the 'Sonatas' of Domenico Scarlatti (1683-1757), and the diverse pieces of the Beethoven and Romantic Schools, is sufficiently aware of the history and general principles of keyboard music to note for himself the technical situation of the Bach Clavier Toccata. I therefore remove the matter from the scope of my remarks.

*Nor is there need to spend time (other than in passing) over the matter of the obscure and confused origins of the Toccata. One stands to lose rather than gain in taking up the various Sonatas, Ricercatas, Fantasias, Capriccios, Canzonas, Concertos, Fugues, and what not, which with the first Toccatas filled the nonage of instrumental music; for a dry and insidious dust has settled on their remains, a dust which (judging by the tastes of antiquaries) has power to blunt the artistic perceptions of the student. So far as understanding and appreciating the Clavier Toccatas of Bach is concerned, we may let that dust lie practically undisturbed, finding in Bach himself all we need in the way of specimen antiques or originals, both among his immature, experimental, and nondescript works and among his master-examples of perfected form. A student may study with artistic pleasure such a group of works as the Canzonas in F major, G minor, and C major of Girolamo Frescobaldi (1583-1644); the Canzona in C of Johann Caspar Kerll (1628-93); the Canzonetta in G of Dietrich Buxtehude (1637-1707); the Toccatas in D minor and A minor of Johann Jacob Froberger (c. 1605-67); the Toccata 'tutta de salti' in C of J. C. Kerll; the Toccata in A of Henry Purcell (once published in Germany—not by a musician, surely?—as a work of Bach); and for example of the more serious pre-Bach clavier Fugue, the Fugue in F minor of Alessandro Scarlatti (1659-1725), all of which, accessible in British or foreign editions, help materially in grasping the significance of Bach's works with the Clavier Toccata. Or ignoring these, a student may take up side by side with Bach's Toccatas one of the following groups: (1.) The Canzona for organ in D minor (the most finished specimen of the form in existence); the Clavier Sonata in D minor (arranged by Bach from the Violin Sonata in A minor) of which the 'thema' is particularly instructive with regard to the Toccata Fugue; the magnificently representative 'French Overture' in B minor; the large work in A minor that comprises a Prelude in free Concerto form and a Fugue à la gigue on this subject; the D minor Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue; the Fantasia in C minor in shape of a Suite movement; the Italian Concerto; and for Fugues the A minor and C sharp numbers of the first book of the 'Forty-Eight.' These are masterpieces which in their respective forms represent the level of achievement reached by the Toccatas. Or, (2.) The following examples of hybrid forms in which certain Toccata elements are associated with elements belonging correctly to other forms: the early Fantasia in A minor; the curious Fantasia in G minor which has for second section a movement in D minor, 16/32 time; the youthful Sonata which has for Finale a theme imitative of the clucking of a hen; the Sonata in A minor from Reinken; the Capriccio in E 'in honour of Johann Christoph Bach'; the work in E flat made up of a Prelude, Fugue, and Finale in Suite form, 3/8 time; and the two Fugues from Albinoni, A major and B minor. The pieces in this second group take the student into Bach's workshop and laboratory. They are little known. Several are only curiosities, a few are true works of art; all are good material in a study like the present, and may be handled without fear of stirring up the dust that lies on so many of the elementary creations dating from 1600 to 1700.

II.

The most apparent artistic quality of the five great Clavier Toccatas of Bach (G minor, D minor, E minor, F sharp minor, and C minor), or rather of the last four of them, is the poetic energy with which they are filled. This energy is magnificent. It drives each piece into an inner coherence as clear and indubitable as the unity of mood and character that make a Shakespeare play what it is. It fills each piece with a strong individuality and enables each piece to stand unsupported by any but the slightest dependence on conventional musical form. It shows us that each Toccata is evolved out of continuous thought, that it is in the modern Franckian sense spiritually 'cyclic'; whence we are enabled to perceive yet once again how Bach reached ahead and incorporated into his art what was afterwards to become a chief characteristic of modern music.

Energy and individuality always were essential in the Toccata. Sluggishness and formalism never found a place in its constitution. Sometimes the energy became a mere tonal energy, a vigorous playing with the common physical powers of music; and very often the individuality became a youthful indulgence in the pleasures of liberty, an uncontrolled exploiting of freedom and licence. Toccata energy became emotional in the hands of Froberger, and Toccata freedom of form became a noble assertion of the value and desirability of independence and originality in the hands of Buxtehude, Johann Pachelbel (1653-1706), and other immediate forerunners of Bach. From his D minor Toccata onwards, Bach completely spiritualised the form. He converted its characteristic energy into pure poetry; and turning the full power of his genius upon the matter of its freedom from arbitrary rules of form, he so developed that aspect of its nature as to produce five works which, for variety of structure as much as for individuality of mood, 'are surpassed among his clavier works only by the rarest masterpieces,—yet not surpassed even by the rarest masterpieces in respect of sheer unification of shape and content, all the result of that curious poetic energy which I feel to be the most apparent, as it is the most valuable, quality of the five works, particularly the E minor, the F sharp minor, and the C minor.

The cyclic character of the Bach Clavier Toccatas is shown by several of their formal features. These however are of little value in so delicate a matter. 'Facts' as to form are merely material. They tell us little of the soul of the art. It is better to employ artistic commonsense, which tells us that no piece of real art can exist independently of all prescribed rules of form (rules like those that held together such other forms as the Suite, the Concerto, the Fugue, and in later times the Symphony in the greater way of music as the March in the smaller), unless it is based on some compact, unified, essentially poetic thought. Artistic commonsense tells us also that on the other hand no piece of art can be truly vital that does thus depend chiefly on set, conventional rules. It tells us—what experience teaches—that the first 18th century Symphonies, for instance, were not only not poetic or cyclic but as 'strophic' in the way of the Symphony as a ballad is in the way of the Ballad. They had no prime and fundamental soul-mood running through them, suggesting the path they must follow, filling every part with warm life, and holding them together so steadily that we can reduce them in our minds each to the one central point or feeling which, germinating originally in the composer's mind, expanded artistically and caused the work to be. These Symphonies were set repeats of something readily convenient. The second part of their opening movements came along in strophic response to the first part, and if the composer had interfered with 'custom' he would not have known just what to do and the work would have tumbled all to pieces. Commonsense tells us that the same was the case with the Italian Concertos, strict Fugues, Dance Suites, and the rest of pre-Bach music. These all went by order,—with the benefit to smaller men that by adhering to prescription decent and profitable work might be managed, but with the loss to art that no vital or permanent work could be so achieved. A great man, a Bach, could and did work when he willed it from the starting-place of established rule, with for result examples of never-dying art. I suppose that Bach was as versatile and successful in the domain of the 'strict' Fugue as Shakespeare was in the still more narrow and difficult field of the Sonnet. At times indeed even Bach and Shakespeare must have leaned willingly on the convenience of 'rule' and found in it when so mooded a help and rest; for not even those mighty adventurers could work for ever in the unknown and (so far as custom makes things solid) insubstantial world of the fancy. Bach was not always as the Chromatic Fantasia found him, nor Shakespeare as the fairy-work of 'Midsummer Night's Dream' and 'The Tempest.' The one needed at times the graceful certainty of Suite-form, and the other the clear-cut line of historical drama; which but makes their work the more wonderful in those directions (as for instance these Clavier Toccatas) where poetic energy alone held them. The Clavier Toccatas are entirely wonderful. They exist independently of set form. They satisfy serious students of to-day, two full centuries after they were written and at a time when the artistic soul cannot tolerate what is not pure, good, and sincere in art. They were allowed to survive by a great man as the record of some of his most extended efforts. They were the manifestation in part of certain musical and emotional qualities which run through all that was not 'occasional' in his work. All things considered, it is surely not straining artistic commonsense to say that the Toccatas are poetic works pure and simple, that they are the expression each individually of single emotional movements in the composer's mind, and that they are in consequence exclusively cyclic.

Whatever else the Bach Clavier Toccatas may be, to my understanding of things they are an embodiment of the true spirit of their age. The great defining and expanding of emotionality which took place in Germany during the century following the Thirty Years' War (1650-1750) compelled art to afford scope for the expressing of that emotionality. Music was only partially ready to afford the scope demanded. As far back as the beginning of the 16th century, music had rejected the pure classic serenity of Palestrina; but by 1700 it had achieved nothing better in opera than the mechanical da capo Aria, and in chamber-music the rapidly conventionalizing Concerto and Violin Sonata. Despite a certain loosening of 'art-music' into melody, clavier music half-way through the century (1650-1700) was still centred on strict fugues (cold and formal things), and suites of dance-movements that rarely idealized themselves into rapture. The spirit of the age—of course the real spirit, the spirit that animated the greater souls, not the spirit that occupied the barren minds of the frivolous mass of the folk—the real spirit of the age rejected these things. Organ music had become grand and noble. In the hands of Georg Böhm (1661-1734), and Johann Pachelbel (1653-1706) it had become relatively expressive. But organ music was not enough. It was restricted to religious sentiment, and in any case it was too impersonal and too inconvenient of access for that intimate communing in art which makes lyric poetry more precious than dramatic, and brings the pianoforte more close to the heart than any other instrument. This greater spirit of the age demanded of art that artistic intellectuality should be more passionately searching; that emotionality should be wider, deeper, and less circumscribed; that forms should be untrammelled by arbitrary law and capricious 'artistic' custom. It required that art should give exercise to the limbs of the soul, that art itself should stand more exquisitely poised, balanced by a human sweetness and understanding, that it should be ceaselessly daring. Above all, the spirit required that art should abolish mere doctrinaire skill and opinionativeness. (The average man has always found in art too much narrow 'professional' conceit and academic pride.) The true musical spirit of the age, which in the end became Bach's spirit, filling the whole of the second half of this century (1700-50), demanded that into music should be brought the many touches of simplicity and spontaneity which well up so continuously in the heart of adequately natured people. It wanted to find in music rhapsodic outbursts, the energy which expresses itself in large and unstudied activity, the full conception of things that leads to lofty gesticulation, deep feeling, pathos, consolation, the intense yearning that invents recitative so pregnant with meaning that it seems to be taking music almost to the threshold of speech, insistent earnestness that clings to its material (I am thinking of the semiquaver motive that fills so much of Bach's music) until it has wrought from the idea at work the last drop of its heart's blood. The great musical spirit of the age satisfied its demands and requirements. Bach gave himself what he wanted. As in those days the Fugue was the pivot of all music, he perfected the Fugue. He made the strict Fugue warm with modern warmth while still as pure as Palestrina. By way of our five Clavier Toccatas he made the free Fugue what Shakespeare had made the non-tragic drama, bringing into interdependent cyclic association with that once barren force—as Shakespeare brought into the range of the drama familiar songs and sayings and topical allusions—all the wealth of pleasant human things which we call 'poetry.' In these neglected clavier pieces Bach caught and imprisoned the elusive. He effected what Browning in 'Charles Avison' cries out for art to effect (namely, to 'give momentary feeling permanence,' to 'run mercury into a mould like lead!'), for after two hundred years his soul lives here in his Toccatas, and the Toccatas remain alive with the soul of art (most mercurial of stuff) for the watchful and responsive student. Bach did not publish these Toccatas. Too true to the spirit of their age, they were not—to quote Bach's words relative to the Suites—'for the delight of amateurs.' Satisfied as usual with his work, he let the results go at that. Into five of the minor keys he uses so frequently for his thoughtful contemplation, grave brooding, passionate resolving of problems, and long flights of serene joy, and with regard only for the fit elucidation of the poetic idea at the back of his mind, he has fixed here some of his most characteristic thoughts; and fixed them by the reverse of a careless unstudied process, since the Toccatas, for all their quasi-extemporaneous character, are not mere rhapsodisings, but the outcome of twenty years of labour, the simplest (the D minor) existing in two equally complete forms. In these five works (the debonaire G minor; the happy D minor, too busy with primal spirits to trouble about its length; the pure, gravely sweet E minor; the impassioned, most rarely intimate F sharp minor; and—fitting crown to the series—the buoyant yet gentle C minor, in which the Toccata is subtilized until it becomes all spirit, and music itself leaves the ground entirely), in these five Toccatas for Clavier Bach reveals some of his noblest attributes, beyond which there is little of more value in man's nature to be revealed. The works have waited for recognition for two centuries. They have waited without loss of virtue, rather with gain, for the world till recently was not fully worthy of them. Perhaps even now it is not fully worthy of them, for the world is rather a material place. But artists none the less should be worthy of them; and there is no reason why we should not spread them about the new world which we understand is about to be created. They satisfied one great post-bellum generation. They may satisfy another, since they represent certain aspects of the Universal and Permanent: in saying which I venture the appearance of uncritical enthusiasm in the knowledge that no exaggeration so arising can be nearly as uncritical as the attitude which for two centuries has resulted in a general but undeserved discredit.

(To be continued.)

Occasional Notes.

ELGAR'S 'FALSTAFF' at the Philharmonic concert on December 5 made a deep impression. It also set a good many of us asking why such a splendid work had not been played in London since Mr. Landon Ronald produced it at a concert of the New Symphony Orchestra five years ago—November 3, 1913, to be exact—following with a second performance a few days later? There seems to have been general agreement as to its being Elgar at his very best, so the critics cannot be blamed for its neglect. The music strikes us as being not only fine, but attractive as well. We do not recall a purely instrumental work richer in variety, more skilful in characterization, and, above all, more human in its appeal. That a composition which, both from its subject and its own qualities, might be expected to appeal strongly to English audiences should have been neglected for so long, is the best of answers to those who say the English composer has no cause for complaint. 'Falstaff' is only one of a good number of works that are overlooked for no other reason, apparently, than their nationality. How often do we hear Elgar's 'Froissart,' 'In the South,' the Introduction and Allegro for strings, or the 'Pomp and Circumstance' Marches other than the one in D? (No. 2, in A minor, was played on December 5, and proved to be most attractive.) The 'Enigma' Variations are played perhaps thrice during each London season, and the two Symphonies even less. Many other works will occur to the reader as suffering from like treatment—e.g., Bantock's 'Pierrot of the Minute,' Vaughan Williams's 'London' Symphony and 'Norfolk' Rhapsody, to name only three. Stanford's latest Pianoforte Concerto was successfully produced in America four years ago, and London is to hear it for the first time in April, 1919. Butterworth's 'Shropshire Lad' Rhapsody would probably be still on the shelf to which it was relegated before the war but for the composer's death in action. It would be easy to make a long list of such cases.

BIG DRUM VERSUS COLD SHOULDER.

We are not sure that native music is likely to gain much from a raging, tearing propaganda. It is good enough to take care of itself if given fair play. Fair play would mean the inclusion of a due proportion of unfamiliar British music in the average programme. Concerts of novelties are a mistake; the public has little curiosity in regard to new music. It flocks in crowds when it knows that old and tried battle horses will be led forth and put through their familiar paces. This being so, we suggest that the new steeds should be given a chance to show their mettle on the same occasions. The 'Fifth Symphony' worshipper will not stay away because 'Falstaff' is on the programme ; having been drawn there to do his usual homage, he might easily be induced to see that there has been some fairly decent music written since Beethoven's day. The fact is, there are two musical publics, the curious and incurious. When orchestral programmes are framed with this fact borne in mind, concert audiences will be larger, and native music will need no boosting. So long, however, as the British composer gets the cold shoulder, he and his backers have a right to reply with the big drum.

Since the above was written we hear of a scheme likely to give us orchestral programmes of a more varied and interesting character than we usually get at present. A new organization, the London Concert Society, is making itself responsible for a yearly series of first-class orchestral concerts, a feature of which will be the inclusion of a fair proportion of novelties, both British and foreign. The Society wisely realises the importance of persistency in a crusade of this kind, and is laying its plans to break down apathy by siege rather than by storm. The London Symphony Orchestra will play, and Mr. Hamilton Harty will conduct. With this fine band, under the baton one so catholic in taste and alert in direction, there can be no doubt as to the excellence of the performances. As to the programmes, the almost entire absence of box-office considerations should ensure schemes of the very best, which should in the long run mean the most popular. We wish the Society all the success it deserves, and meanwhile, it is 'up to' the public.

The 'League of National Music and Pageantry' has decided to change its name to 'League of the Arts for National and Civic Ceremony.' The new title has been adopted in order to avoid misconception.

"THE PENDULUM."

H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

Church and Organ Music.

MANUAL 32-FT. STOPS, ETC.

Lieut.-Col. Dixon writes as follows concerning Manual 32-ft.:

I am sure that all lovers of the organ will have been grateful to Mr. E. Graham Dunstan for his able, interesting, and well-nigh exhaustive article, which gives evidence of a considerable amount of historical research, thereby rendering it the more valuable. In the remarks I am about to make, I simply desire to give a few supplementary details.

The bass of the Manual 32-ft. on the Ely organ, which goes through, is made up of the stopped 32-ft. pipes from the old Pedal organ, the treble being added to complete the manual compass. In addition it is used on the Pedal organ in 32-ft. and 16-ft. pitches. The Great organ also contains a Quint 5½-ft. and two mixtures of five ranks as at Liverpool Cathedral. Their composition is, however, somewhat different. The first contains the harmonic intervals of 10, 17, 19, 21, 22, while the second is bolder in tone and on the lines of Schulze's famous five-rank mixture at Armley. It consists of pure fifths and octaves, its components in the

The word 'pageantry' seems to have led many people to anticipate a revival of pageantry of the type of which we had an overdose a few years ago. The League has no such intentions. Although it hopes eventually to make use of a certain amount of spectacular art, it will at present confine its activities to music. Dr. Robert T. White's article on page 24 contains convincing arguments of the need for such an organization.

The numerous British Choral Societies 'FOR THE who have performed Elgar's 'For the FALLEN.' Fallen' will be interested to hear that the work is to be sung shortly at Shanghai.

The performance will take place at the Union Church, with a chorus of fifty, accompanied by strings, organ, and drums. Mr. R. C. Young will conduct.

In these busy days there is little doing in the way of musical puzzles of the type over which the industrious Kerl, Fux, Marpurg, and others spent so much time. Their composition, moreover, needs an amount of detachment that few of us are able to command. Mr. H. Elliot Button, however, recently succeeded in becoming lost to the world for the length of time necessary for the production of the curiosity printed below. It will be seen that the tenor sings the treble part backward, and that both alto and bass read the same either way. The last straw is arrived at by holding the copy before a looking-glass, when we find the result is still harmonious, if we bear in mind that the accidentals in the first and last bars appear on the wrong sides of the notes to which they belong. With or without the mirror, the result is far more musical than such freaks have a right to be. On the whole, we have never seen so much ingenuity expended on a musical puzzle. The composer, we are glad to say, is going on as well as can be expected.

bass being 15, 19, 22, 26, 29. The pipes of the octave ranks have 2/7th mouths and those of the fifths 1/4 mouths. Now with regard to St. Nicholas, Whitehaven. The 32-ft. Quintaton on the Great (tenor C, metal throughout) is a remarkable register. The pipes are bearded, and give prominent overtones. The stop blends well in combination, and materially enriches the ensemble, particularly in the treble. It is also useful in special combinations for solo effects. The most noteworthy feature of the instrument as a whole, apart from the fine build-up due to the unusual completeness of the harmonic structure, is the wealth and variety of the flue work. There are no vain repetitions. It was the first of a fine series of important instruments built on modern lines which have emanated from the Durham firm. Unfortunately the Church being non-resonant gives no assistance to the organ tone. The arrangement of manuals, as noted in Mr. Dunstan's article, with the Great organ the lowest, the Swell in the middle, and the Solo and Tuba clavier at the top, though logical in the absence of a separate Choir manual, is not one to be followed, as it is impossible to have the Tuba or any other stop on the Solo organ playable below the Great organ keys. This is sometimes required in order to bring out a melody by thumbing. The ordinary four-manual instrument has of course a similar shortcoming where the Solo to Choir coupler is absent, as is usually the case. Mr. Graham Dunstan will be interested to know that the previous Snetzler organ, which had undergone reconstruction by Hill, and Gray & Davison, was again re-modelled by Messrs. Harrison for St. Michael's Church, Arlecdon. The following is the specification: Pedal organ, sub-bass 16-ft., open wood 16-ft., Great to Pedal, Swell to Pedal. Great organ: Double Diapason 16-ft., Stopped Diapason 8-ft., Open Diapason 8-ft., Principal 4-ft., Twelfth 2½-ft., Fifteenth 2-ft., Swell to Great. Swell Organ: Contra-Keraulophon 16-ft., Voix Celeste 8-ft., Open Diapason 8-ft., Flute 4-ft., Mixture three ranks, Viole 8-ft. Except the Viole, which was new, the whole of the pipe work was from the old Snetzler instrument, of which everything that was worth preserving (including the chimneyed Stopped Diapason) was carefully retained. The metal of the old pipes, however, is of very low grade, being over 80 per cent. lead. Though the reconstructed instrument contains no reed, it is remarkably effective in its new surroundings. If Mr. Dunstan visits West Cumberland, he should certainly see this organ, as well as its modern successor at St. Nicholas, Whitehaven. Two other instruments of note in the district would also well merit his attention. There is the fine three-manual Willis at St. Bees Priory Church, now nearly twenty years old, but nevertheless distinguished among other things for the wealth and splendour of its reed stops, of which there are ten out of a total of thirty-six. The other is the remarkable organ at St. James's Church, Whitehaven, by Norman & Beard. It is designed on multum in parvo lines, and contains but twenty-three speaking stops, including five splendid reeds, two of which are of 16-ft. pitch. Considering the very limited number of speaking stops, the grandeur of effect, variety of tone-colour, and resources generally, are probably unequalled. Unfortunately the building in which it stands is most unsympathetic.

To return to the subject of 32-ft. stops: it is certainly curious that in the design of the Liverpool Cathedral instrument the Manual 32-ft. should be entirely absent. The ostensible reason given for this omission was that it would remove the distinction of the Pedal organ from being an octave lower than the manual. This is scarcely convincing, as the logical outcome of such reasoning would be the complete exclusion of the Manual Double from all instruments where the Pedal organ did not contain a stop of 32-ft. pitch. Apart altogether from the question of completeness of tonal design, the 32-ft. stop on the manuals imparts a dignity and richness, especially in the treble, which are attainable by no other means. No one would suggest adding an independent 32-ft. stop running through the manuals in this case, as it would be sheer waste. A 32-ft. open on the Great could, however, have been provided on a grand scale by borrowing the Contra-Violone on the Pedal and completing the treble compass. Its use as a pedal stop would in no way have been interfered with as, when used in full combinations on the Great, it would have been amply covered by the wealth of 32-ft. tone on the Pedal whether the 64-ft. stops had been actually present or not. A 32-ft. stop of this character would moreover fit in well with the 2/7th mouthed Diapason work, and would have materially enriched the flue work ensemble of the Great organ generally. Mutatis mutandis, the enclosed Contra-Ophicleide 32-ft. might have been similarly employed to complete the reed family of the solo organ. It is interesting to note that the pedal 32-ft. reed at St. Mary Redcliff, Bristol, is enclosed in the manual swell chamber, where it gives a striking grandeur in the pedal bass to the full swell.

To Mr. Dunstan's list of organs containing a stop of 64-ft. pitch on the Pedal, should be added the Colston Hall, Bristol, which includes a Gravitone 64-ft. The front of the transept division of the organ at Worcester Cathedral exhibits some, at any rate, of the lower pipes of the Pedal double open metal 32-ft. The 32-ft. open metal at Carlisle Cathedral still forms the West front as Willis left it.

I have just been able to glance through Mr. Arthur E. Teggins' interesting article. I think his proposal that the word 'manual' should be used to represent 'organ' (where more than one department is played from the same keyboard) would but add to the existing confusion. Moreover, the use of the word 'clavier' for manual keyboard would not help matters, as that term includes the Pedal, which organ itself is occasionally subdivided. The word 'clavier' is a general term, and is applicable to any keyboard whether played by hands or feet, consequently the word 'manual' should be retained to indicate the specific keyboard played by the hands in contradistinction to the Pedal keyboard itself. The tendency nowadays is to subdivide the different manual organs into various departments without much regard to the actual manuals themselves. I suggest therefore the word 'division' or 'department' should be used where necessary to indicate this, the manuals themselves being represented by numbers if considered desirable. The word 'organ' would perhaps be permissible, but even that might cause confusion. I certainly agree with Mr. Teggins as to the needless multiplication of manual claviers. The fifth manual is never necessary. Many four-manuals would actually gain in resources and effect if the same amount of material had been utilised in the construction of a well-planned three-manual organ. Still more three-manuals would have made better two-manual instruments. To make matters worse the Pedal is often starved. No Church organ of less than about fifty speaking stops need have more than three manuals, but ought before all things to have an adequate Pedal. The restriction as to manual keyboards need not mean the abolition of these departments or any loss in resources, but rather the reverse. It would, however, imply a more efficient system of control. As Mr. Teggins justly points out, Mr. Casson has indicated 'a more excellent way.'

These notes have of necessity been made at random, but I hope they may nevertheless prove of interest.

GEORGE DIXON
(Lieut.-Colonel.)

Some excellent items were included in a miscellaneous recital at West End Wesleyan Church, Middlesbrough, on November 24. Miss Frances Richardson played Beethoven's Violin Sonata in A, R. G. Thompson's 'Longing,' and Stanford's Cavatina and Scherzino, and two old English pieces—John Collet's Largo Cantabile, and Robert Valentine's Allegro Vivace; Miss Edith Groat sang 'Hear ye, Israel,' and songs by Noel Johnson, Liddle, Ashford, and Sanderson, the rest of the programme consisting of anthems by the choir, and organ solos by Mr. Horace Walker, who played Parry's Preludes on 'Martyrdom' and 'Rockingham,' the Largo from 'From the New World' Symphony, and MacDowell's 'Maestoso.' On Sunday, February 23, a choir festival will take place, when 'Samson' will be sung.

At a meeting of the Edinburgh Society of Organists in St. George's U. F. Church on November 23, Mr. John Pulletin, of St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow, gave a recital, when he played the following programme:

Sonata in C major	Rheinberger
Pastorale	César Franck
Choral Preludes—
'Martyrs'	Harvey Grace
St. Peter (MS.) and
Tallis's Canon (MS.)	John Pulletin
St. Mary (MS.)	Ernest Farrar
Rockingham, and
Croft's 135th	C. H. H. Parry
Pastorale	Bach
Improvisation—Caprice	Joseph Jørgen
Prelude—'The Blessed Damozel'	Debussy
Andante in D major	Hollins
March—Finale from Suite No. 2	Boettmann

The quarterly meeting of the Trowbridge, Devizes, and District Organists' Association was held at Holy Trinity Girls' School, Trowbridge, on December 7, when, before a good attendance, the Rev. W. H. Weekes, of Devizes, read a paper on 'The Archbishops' Committee's Report from the Organist's point of view.' Mr. Weekes treated the subject in a very able manner, and the paper was full of interest. A very helpful discussion showed that many were in favour of mixed choirs on account of the difficulty in obtaining choir-boys, and of the reading of the service unless the clergy were capable of intoning. During the evening the company adjourned to Holy Trinity Church, where an impromptu organ recital was given by several of the members.

At St. John's, Red Lion Square, W.C., on November 7, the Bishop of Stepney dedicated a new organ case to the memory of Charles James Vines, the first and for forty years organist of the church. The case is of oak enriched with gold, and was designed by Mr. Cecil Hare and executed by Mr. Robinson, of Red Lion Street, Holborn. The front pipes in the towers are the basses of the Great Contra Viola, with the spotted metal Large Open in the flats between. We reproduce below a photograph of this handsome piece of work:

On January 5, the fourth annual recital of English carols will take place at St. Mary's Church, Primrose Hill, N.W. (Chalk Farm Tube), when the Church choir will unite with the English Folk and Carol Choir, under the direction of Mr. Martin Shaw. Evensong (without sermon) will be sung at 6.15, and the recital will begin at 7. The carols will include specimens dating from the 13th century to the present time. The collection, as before, will be given to St. Dunstan's Hostel for Blinded Soldiers and Sailors.

At Brighton Parish Church, on December 10, an anthem and organ recital was given by Mr. Chastey Hector and the choir. The choral items were Walmisley's 'From all that dwell below the skies,' Foster's 'O for a closer walk,' and Elgar's 'The Fourth of August,' this being the first performance of Elgar's work at Brighton. Mr. Hector's solos included Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor, and Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' March No. 1.

Choir Festival Services were held at Halifax Place Chapel, Nottingham, on November 17, when 'Judas Maccabæus' was given under the direction of Mr. E. M. Barber, with Driver C. E. B. Dobson as organist.

Well-known organists are giving recitals at St. John's, Red Lion Square, on Thursdays, at 1-10. The organ is a very effective instrument, a rebuild by Noterman. The original construction was by Lewis.

ORGAN RECITALS.

Mr. Alfred Bentley, St. Oswald's, Guiseley—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Choral with Variations, Smart; Meditation Elegie, Borowski; Toccata, Widor.

Mr. Allan Brown, Clapton Park Congregational Church—Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Mélodie in E, Rachmaninoff; Scherzo, Purcell Mansfield; Fugue in G minor, Bach. At Queen's Road Wesleyan Church, Peckham—Overture in C, Hollins; Pastorale in F, Lemare; Fugue in C minor, Reubke; Allegro from 'Cuckoo and Nightingale' Concerto.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—'The Storm,' Lemmens; Two Studies, Schumann; Prelude in G minor, Holbrooke; Choral Preludes on 'Ye boundless realms of joy,' and 'Eventide,' Parry; Recit. and Allegro Vivace (Sonata No. 1), Mendelssohn.

Mr. Wilfrid Greenhouse Allt, St. John the Evangelist, Edinburgh (ten recitals)—Sonata No. 1, Guilmant; Idyll No. 6, Gray; Air in F sharp minor, S. Wesley; Poetic Variations, Hull; Choral Prelude on 'Dundee,' Parry; Pièce Héroïque, Franck; Chant de Mai, Jongen; Adagio, Saint-Saëns; Choral Prelude on 'St. Ann,' Parry; Idyll No. 2, Gray; 'Pæan,' Harwood; Angelus, Massenet; Scherzo, Wolstenholme; Marche Héroïque, Saint-Saëns; Festal Prelude, Rowley; Pastorale, Recitative, and Chorale, Karg-Elert; Finale in E flat, Guilmant; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Villanella, Ireland; Finale (Sonata No. 7), Guilmant.

Mr. Arthur G. Colborn, Stapleton Parish Church, Bristol (living American composers)—Processional March, Ralph Kinder; Liebeslied, C. Wakefield Cadman; Sortie, J. H. Rogers; Impromptu, Parker; Menuetto, A. L. Barnes; Festal March, E. R. Kroeger.

Mr. Henry Hackett, Parish Church, Burton-on-Trent (three recitals)—Sonata No. 5, Guilmant; Pastorale, Hackett; March in D, Best; Concert Fugue in G, P. Mansfield; Toccata and Fugue in C, Bach.

Sergeant W. Wilson Foster, Holy Trinity, Guildford—Fugue on BACH, Schumann; Cantilène, Wolstenholme; Choral No. 1, Franck; Nocturne, Bonnet; Overture in C minor, Hollins.

Driver C. E. B. Dobson, Central Mission, Nottingham (four recitals)—Près de la mer, Arensky; Allegro ben marcato, Frank Bridge; Funeral March, Mackenzie; Prelude and Angel's Farewell, Elgar; Funeral Music, Tallis; Air with Variations, Lyons; Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Concert Toccata, Holloway; Pastoral Romance, Douglas.

Mr. Edwin Stephenson, St. Margaret's, Westminster (six recitals)—Choral Preludes Nos. 1 and 2, Brahms; Lament, Grace; Pastorale, Roger-Ducasse; Meditation and Marche Pontificale (Symphony No. 1), Widor; Toccata on 'Pange Lingua,' Bairnstow; Fantasie in E flat, Saint-Saëns; Slumber Song, Yarrow; Epinikion, Rootham; Fugue, 'Ad nos,' Liszt; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Franck; first movement, Sonata No. 1, Reger; Sonata No. 5, Guilmant; Fugue in A flat minor, Brahms; Scherzo (Symphony No. 2), Lemare; Three Pieces, Pierré; Sonata No. 1, Borowski.

Mr. F. J. Tarris, Christ Church, Newgate Street, E.C.—March on a theme of Handel, Guilmant; Andante Cantabile, Rea; Prelude and Fugue in C, Bach; Postlude in D, Stuart-Archer.

Miss Charlotte Gorst, Christ Church, Bala—Spring Song, Hollins; Marche Solennelle, Mailly; Marche Religieuse, Chauvet.

Mr. J. C. Dunlop, St. Michael and All Angels', Northampton—Impromptu No. 1, Coleridge-Taylor; Prelude 'Melcombe,' Parry; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann.

Mr. H. Percy Richardson, St. Chad's, Far Headingley—Fantasia and Fugue in G, Parry; Idyll, 'The Sea,' Arnold Smith; Sonata Erioca, Stanford; Lament, Grace; Toccata Prelude, Bairnstow; Capriccio, Ireland.

Corpl. F. E. Wilson, Holy Trinity, Eastbourne—Overture in C, Hollins; 'Pomp and Circumstance'; Allegro Cantabile (Symphony No. 5), Widor; Offertoire on Two Christmas Themes, Guilmant.

Mr. Bertram T. P. Hollins, Beckenham Congregational Church—Sonata in C sharp minor, Harwood; Caprice, Guilmant; Festival March, Smart.

Mr. William Faulkes, Parish Church, Wigan—Concert Overture in A, Mailland; Adagio (Symphony No. 3), Saint-Saëns; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Chanson Nuptiale and Fantasia on old Christmas carols, Faulkes; Pastorale in C, Boëllmann; Marche Heroïque, Dubois.

Dr. Alan Gray, Trinity College, Cambridge (two recitals)—Sonata No. 6, Rheinberger; Meditation and Fantasia, Alan Gray; Prelude, De Séverac; Prelude and Pastorale, Hillemacher; Fantasia, Boëllmann; Epilogue, Grace; Chanson d'Automne, Jongen; Preludes on 'St. Cross' and 'Dundee,' Parry.

Mr. Herbert Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool (three recitals)—Overture in D, Smart; 'St. Francis preaching to the birds,' Liszt; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Overture to 'The Bartered Bride'; Variations de Concert and 'Elves,' Bonnet; Toccata (Symphony No. 5), Widor; Finale (Symphony No. 5), Doordik; Processional March, Sullivan; Gavotta from Overture in D, Bach; Prelude on 'St. Thomas,' Parry.

Mr. John Pullein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Sonata No. 2, Mendelssohn; Pastorale, Bach; Ave Maria d'Arcadelt, Liszt; Lament, Grace; Festival March, Bossi.

Mr. Fred. Gostelow, Luton Parish Church—Allegro non troppo from Sonata in F minor, Rheinberger; Symphony in E minor, Holloway; Concert Scherzo, Turner; 'Pomp and Circumstance.'

Mr. F. Hubert Belton, Holy Trinity, Upper Tooting—Sonata No. 1, Borowski; Allegretto in E flat, Wolstenholme; Concerto No. 2, Handel; Requiem Aeternam, Harwood; Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn.

Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary Abchurch—'Pomp and Circumstance'; Canzonet, Elliot; Triumphal March, Guilmant. At St. Mary-the-Virgin, Aldermanbury—Introduction and Fugue, Hewlett; Irish Air, Grainger; Finale to Advent Sonata, Pearce.

Mr. G. W. Douglas, Christ Church, Bradford—Overture in C minor, Fricker; Allegro Cantabile, Symphony No. 5, Widor; Marche Héroïque, Saint-Saëns.

Rev. E. C. Monk, St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Carcroft—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Fantasia and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Andante from Sonata, Boyce; March in G, Smart.

Dr. Caradog Roberts, Tyldesley Wesleyan Church (two recitals)—Overture, 'Semiramide'; 'Finlandia'; Largo from 'From the New World' Symphony; Finale Sonata No. 2), and Cantilène Pastorale, Guilmant.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (four recitals)—Sonata in E flat minor, Rheinberger; Pastorale in F, Chaminade; Grand Cœur in D, Guilmant; Air with Variations in A, Hesse; Finale in E, Schumann; Overture in C, Adams; Bridal March from 'The Birds,' Parry; Sonata da Camera, Peace.

APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. John Ivey, organist and director of music at Marlborough College.

Mr. Henry Brentnall, organist and choirmaster, St. Multose Parish Church, Kinsale, Co. Cork.

The Dumfries Choral and Orchestral Union has an interesting series of six concerts arranged for the present season: two orchestral, two choral, and two devoted to chamber music. On December 4, the Catterall Quartet played Frank Bridge's 'Irish' Melody, Wolf's 'Italian' Serenade, and Quartets by Glinka (F major) and Debussy. Mrs. Ian Hopkins sang songs by Mallinson, Bagrinovsky, Ambroise Thomas, and Paul Vidal. There was a large and appreciative audience.

A PRESSING NEED.

BY ROBERT T. WHITE.

Stocktaking, not invariably a pleasant task, is nevertheless a salutary one. Suitable opportunities in the sphere of social, moral, and intellectual activity are not frequent, but in time of war and the period immediately following, the question of results forces itself into prominence, and the conclusions to which we are forced to arrive do not always correspond with expectations.

During the past forty years or so we have spent a huge sum of public money in providing musical education for the masses, and have secured the devoted services of teachers and organizers who with some show of reason can review their work and pronounce it good. They enthusiastically combat any statement that England is not a musical nation, and point to the growth of choral and orchestral societies, competition festivals, classical concerts and so forth. But just now has come a unique opportunity for deciding how far music has permeated the national life, and unfortunately the verdict passed by any unprejudiced observer must be that in a most vital sense England is about the least musical of civilised nations. We are all taught to believe that music, if it possesses any æsthetic value at all, is a potent vehicle for the expression of emotion. Seldom in the history of nations have there been occasions when such intense emotions have struggled for expression as during the past few weeks; yet, taking the country as a whole, the part played by music has been pitifully meagre. Proofs of this statement would be quite superfluous.

Surely those of us who have spent our energies on behalf of musical education must have received the shock of our lives in finding that apparently our work has been futile. 'Apparently' only, because it is not true that individually Englishmen are immune to the influence of music, but rather, that the art as a vital factor in social and communal life has not flourished amongst us. Here and there, especially in Wales and certain other districts, the communal spirit has been exploited, but elsewhere the masses are quite indifferent. Whose fault is it? The answer is difficult to give, and it really does not matter much now. However, it is possible to state a few causes contributing to the débâcle. Firstly, those who are regarded as the leaders of the musical profession have with a few significant exceptions taken a very narrow view of the ground covered by the term 'music.' They regard music as including only those artistic creations which appeal to their cultivated natures, and refuse patronage to any propaganda which recognises the value of musical works which do not profess to arouse emotion in any but less cultivated minds. They give their benediction to schemes for the establishment of national opera, a form of art which apparently leaves a large part of the public quite cold. They profess to appreciate the work done in schools without taking the trouble to make first-hand acquaintance with it, or to improve it in any way. They loudly voice the virtues of the younger school of British composers, who with all their enterprise do little but write music which obviously must be caviare to the general. The hierarchy of the profession will have nothing to do with anything but the first-rate, forgetting that what is second-rate to them may be first-rate for the public at large, to whom the absolute first-rate makes no appeal. Both in the press and official circles these worthy experts receive homage, deserved no doubt, but not more so than the efforts of those who endeavour to bring music home to the many rather than to the few.

Secondly, there has been a great deal too much diffusion of effort in musical education, a lack of unity of purpose, of common aim. This perhaps arises from the innate tendency of the Englishman to resent dictation, and to regard organization as an interference with his cherished liberty. But since the war began he has had to submit to wholesome discipline, and is inclined to be a little more docile. Without wishing in any degree to cast a stone at Nonconformity, I may be pardoned for asserting that the same tendency which exists amongst non-conforming bodies to split up into small sects, the members of which would be hard put to it to differentiate their respective dogmas, is also met with in the case of musical organizations. Doing substantially the same work, small choral and orchestral societies rival each other in giving concerts in which the exhibition of their own prowess is more in the minds of members than is the edification of the audience. The competitive spirit is all very well, but if it results in nothing but the ability of one body to say that it is better by so many marks than another, it is not easy to see how the art of music is much benefited thereby.

I have already remarked elsewhere that one very pertinent example of this diffusion of effort has been conspicuous in the late armistice celebrations. Nearly everybody not past middle-age has been educated in schools where song-singing has been practised. How many of these songs were heard on the occasion in question? Practically none. Why not? For the prosaic reason that there were no songs known in common by any considerable section. Can anyone name half-a-dozen national songs of which the music and words are known by, say, ninety per cent. of any fortuitous concourse of Englishmen? If the answer is in the negative, how could one possibly expect that music would take its proper place in the peace demonstrations? The fact is, that although hundreds of songs have been taught in schools, no particular group of songs have been taught in all schools.

Thirdly, we have sadly neglected open-air music. In England this has been practically confined to military and brass bands, and the paucity even of this kind of music in London on armistice day was a disgrace to whatever authorities—if any—were responsible. Is it really impossible to get the Englishman to sing out-of-doors? No one is more reserved than the Englishman, nor more afraid of 'making a fool of himself.' Of course, a good many English folk did make fools of themselves, and perhaps would not have looked so silly had they vented their delight in song-singing. I for one refuse to believe that an Englishman cannot be persuaded to sing in the open air, but he requires a lead which he has hardly yet begun to receive.

There is another point which bears upon this problem. What songs can a crowd be persuaded to sing? A thorny question this, but it must be boldly faced. One influential coterie would decide the matter by taking up the attitude that there are certain types of song which the man-in-the-street ought to like, others which he should avoid. Now this way disaster lies. Tell a Britisher that he ought to sing 'John Peel' in preference to 'Keep the home fires burning' and he will promptly choose the latter. Those who have had anything to do with open-air massed singing will agree that there is a paucity of national songs suited to the purpose. In fact nearly all our 'national songs' have ceased to be national, in spite of desperate efforts to keep them alive. Their historical and artistic merits will prevent them falling into absolute disuse, but they can never again be national in the sense that once they were. Just a very few can be made to serve our present purpose, and possibly the same can be said for one or two folk-songs; but most of the latter are too individualistic in sentiment for massed singing. There is really a want of such straightforward ditties as Parry's 'Keep on looking at the bright side.' Cannot we persuade some of our best poets and composers to combine and write, say, half-a-dozen of such songs? But before doing so they ought to make a most careful examination of the features of those songs—feeble enough, most of them—which gained ephemeral popularity during the war. There are certain well-defined characteristics possessed by these songs which should be turned to better advantage. 'Rule, Britannia' for instance should not, with all its merits, be taken as a model, because the words of all verses except the first are difficult to remember, and—dare one say so?—hardly worth remembering. Space precludes any detailed examination of this interesting subject, but many well-intentioned efforts to provide good popular music have failed because composers loftily disdain to try and discover what features not appear in music designed to captivate the multitude. Although, as remarked above, the Englishman resents dictation, he is quite ready to be persuaded if met half-way, and there is no good reason for supposing that he would not be quite ready to adopt a small set of national songs if they really appealed to his simple tastes.

It is good news that a Society has recently been formed to take a lead in providing choirs and music for national celebrations. One can only hope that this Society will proceed on the assumption that on such occasions the music—or most of it—must be made rather by the people than for them. The democratisation of music, which has got to come, is going to do no harm to what we are pleased to call the 'higher forms' of the art. It will merely broaden the musical platform. Those who hope to capture the democracy for music must be prepared to lay aside all prejudices; folk-song, plain-song and other enthusiasts must broaden their outlook, they must regard music from the point of view of the ordinary citizen and not endeavour to convert him at a rush.

The following proposals may serve as a basis for discussion at the present juncture. They propose to deal solely with that part of the problem which concerns music for the masses—not for the elect:

- (1.) Opportunities for open-air singing, also for singing when a large crowd is present under cover, should be seized and exploited. For instance, at any large meeting, the local choral societies should unite to lead in the singing of national songs.
- (2.) More frequent occasions should be provided for the co-operation of schools in outdoor festivals.
- (3.) Each municipality should establish a committee elected on a broad basis to make the musical arrangements for all civic and such-like functions. This committee should receive reasonable financial aid.
- (4.) The brass band movement should receive more official encouragement. This could be developed in connection with the new Continuation Schools, somewhat on the lines adopted in certain towns in America. (It is difficult to imagine that even the most 'Moderate' County Council elector would object to a little expense on this ground).
- (5.) There should be more co-operation between church choirs and choral societies. This matter had already received some attention before the war, but there should be more functions in which all the choirs of the locality could combine forces.
- (6.) There should be frequent meetings in parks and open spaces where a good large choir should sing a few popular songs in which the audience should be encouraged to join.
- (7.) A small set of songs,* not exceeding a dozen at first, should be provided after a most careful investigation of their fitness for massed singing, and these should be learnt by heart in every school in the country. The existing song-books need not be superseded, but the great point is to have a few songs thoroughly known by all. This procedure was adopted by the London County Council a few years ago with great success; it has for some unknown reason fallen into desuetude.

It would also be advisable to have half-a-dozen hymns—not sacred poems—learnt similarly, so that not only the first but all the verses should be familiar. One hesitates to suggest a collection, but with one exception the following have already proved their fitness for inclusion:

- 'O God, our help';
- 'All people that on earth do dwell';
- 'Fight the good fight';
- 'Praise, my soul, the King of Heaven';
- 'O God, the Rock of Ages';
- 'Father in heaven, Who lovest all.'

The last hymn (by Kipling) is a national hymn in every sense except that of familiarity.

Finally, the whole success of such a scheme of reform as outlined here will depend entirely upon the self-denying spirit of its pioneers. All of us have our strong likes and dislikes in music; we must try to regard the matter more from the point of view of those whom we are trying to influence. It will mean, for instance, that some organizations of high attainments will have to co-operate with others which they have previously in some degree despised: musicians accustomed to pin their reputation on the performance of works of the calibre of the 'Dream of Gerontius' will have to condescend for a time to join in the singing of comparatively humble works no more sophisticated than 'Sweet and low.' This to begin with ; afterwards the thinness of such music will become apparent, and a desire created for more solid fare. Such an opportunity for reform as the present will probably never recur, and our responsibility is proportionately heavy. An outlet for the emotions will be found in one direction or another ; it may easily lead to very undesirable forms of expression—indeed, these have already made their appearance. Even if it is too late—and I do not believe it is—to enlist the active sympathy of the adult population, it will be relatively easy to capture the rising generation. But meanwhile do not let us spend too much time in debate. Work (on the desirability of which all are agreed) is waiting to be done. Let us set about it at once.

* The Society mentioned above is about to issue a set of songs; it remains to be seen whether the committee has selected the right type of song. Haste in such an important matter is to be deprecated.

Reviews.

Harmony in Pianoforte-Study. By Ernest Fowles.

[J. Curwen & Sons, Ltd.]

The title of this book is sufficient indication that in its aims it has little in common with the ordinary text-book on harmony.

The author does not claim that it shall supplant the work of the expert teacher of harmony, nor does he overlook the fact that the course of study advocated does not make for progress in the art of part-writing. It is the undue prominence, however, given to four-part writing in text-books on harmony, and in the tests at so many examinations, that has led the student to look upon his 'paper-harmony' work as something entirely apart from real music.

As the author observes, 'It is given to all with average intelligence to write a chordal progression in accordance with every rule devised by the wit of harmonists ; it is given to those only who have received a measure of illumination spontaneously to play such a progression with entire acceptance to the musical sense.' It is the one aim of this book to enable students to express themselves musically in keyboard language.

The author treats his subject under the following headings : 'Plain Harmony,' 'Auxiliary Sounds,' 'Cadences,' 'Chordal Transference,' 'Sequences and Pedals,' 'Chromatic Harmony,' 'The Building of the Dominant Discord,' and 'The Enharmonic Principle.' Throughout, the method of procedure is the same : first, the presentation of the simple chord or progression, and then its elaboration, in pianistic idiom, by decorative treatment.

There are a few illustrations from the works of the great composers, but in view of the lack of musical interest in some of the other examples, it would have been better had the author drawn more largely upon works of recognised value to illustrate his points.

The book should prove valuable not only to teachers for use with their pupils, but also to the individual student, who, if he diligently works through its pages, will assuredly be able more clearly to grasp mentally what is really in the music he may be studying. He will read new music with more intelligence, and will have his imagination stimulated and his powers developed in the useful art of extemporisation.

Obituary.

We regret to record the following deaths :

MADAME HILDA WILSON, the contralto soloist, at Boscombe. She made her début at the Shire Hall, Gloucester, at the age of fifteen, in 'Messiah.' Madame Wilson studied at the Royal Academy of Music, winning the bronze, silver, and gold medals, and the Westmorland Scholarship. She was a very popular oratorio singer, appearing at the Handel, Three Choirs, and other Festivals.

MRS. URSULA CURWEN, on November 30, at Gerrard's Cross, from pneumonia, after influenza. She was the wife of Major J. Kenneth Curwen, R.A.F., director of the music, publishing firm.

Letters to the Editor.

NASAL RESONANCE.

SIR,—In the November number of the Musical Times Mr. David Houston has referred to a paragraph in my article on 'Resonance,' which appeared in your August issue, in the following terms : 'Madame Larkcom said recently that some teachers trained for a small tone, some for sweet tone, some for big tone.' What I really said was : 'The taste of the teacher has very great influence on the quality of tone produced by her pupils. It is not so much that certain methods lead to certain results as that particular qualities are selected and encouraged. Hence some teachers' pupils are noted for brilliance of tone, some for sweetness, some fulness.'

I wished to impress on my hearers the fact that individual taste and judgment will unconsciously affect the work of every teacher. Even when practically similar methods are used by different instructors, the results of their work are likely to be modified by the personal bias.

In the December issue Mr. W. Robertson, referring to the same paper, asked what was the pitch of the tuning-fork I used. It was C, and the dimensions of the tube which gave the fullest resonance were 6 x 1 inches—the other tubes were longer. I did not think it necessary to give these details. It is well known that certain capacities of resonators respond to certain degrees of pitch. What I wanted my students to learn from the simple experiment with the tuning-fork was the desirability of applying the principles which underlie the reinforcement of musical sounds to the scientific training of the human voice. If we cultivate and increase the flexibility of those parts of the throat, mouth, &c., which are susceptible of change, they will become more adaptable, and ready to respond accurately and immediately to the will of the singer. Then by careful and patient experiment the student will in time find and command the use of the most appropriate resonance for every degree of pitch and quality of vowel. If we admit that there is an ideal resonance for every note, and the mind is capable of imagining exactly what it wants, the most highly-trained mechanism will be the quickest to realise the ideal and the most ready to reproduce it when occasion demands. As to the non-variable cavities, I imagine they will each select and reinforce the particular sounds which conform to their own period of vibration, whether those sounds are fundamental notes or overtones.—Yours, &c., 57, Talbot Road, N. 6.

December 6, 1918.

AGNES J. LARKCOM.

SIR,—It may be that the widespread acerbity generated by the general election is responsible for the tincture of bitterness which has slightly tinged previous letters on this subject. It seems to me that each writer is correct so far as his own observations go, and that each is earnestly and sincerely desirous to arrive at the truth, wherever truth may be and whatever it may prove to be. There is room for all such workers in the wide and beautiful realm of music, and with good-will and patience each may help the other in his quest. That is, so far as matters of fact are concerned. Regarding matters of taste, let the ancient saying be our restraining guide—De gustibus non est disputandum.

For myself I very much dislike humming in serious music, in fact to me it seems almost a degradation of the music as well as of the words of the poet ; others think differently, but I have faith to believe that they will yet come round to my view-point in time. Of course in songs written for and sung by children humming of various kinds—some nasal, some not—and even whistling is permissible. Children like it and do it well, with an abandon to which no grown-up can attain.

As regards pleasing adjudicators, it was truly said by some one at a committee-meeting of the Glasgow Choral Festival that 'the ideal adjudicator has yet to be found,' and it would be a great mistake for conductors to train their choirs with a view of pleasing any particular adjudicator or any class of adjudicators. These men are human—some very human—with special likes and dislikes which, it may be, are unconsciously allowed to weigh in their decisions. No ; let conductors train according to the capacities of their singers,

(Continued on page 33.)

When I thy singing next shall hear.

PART-SONG FOR FOUR VOICES.

Words by R. HERRICK.

Composed by J. A. SOWERBUTTS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Moderato.

mf

SOPRANO.

When I thy sing - ing next shall hear, . . . I'll

mf

ALTO.

When I thy sing - ing next shall hear, I'll *wish I might

mf

TENOR.

When I thy sing - ing next shall hear, I'll wish I might

mf

BASS.

When I thy sing - ing next shall Moderato. $\text{♩} = 72.$

mf

PIANO.
(For practice only.)

wish I might turn all to ear, To drink in notes and turn . . . all . . . to ear. To drink in notes . . . and num - bers turn all to ear, . . . To drink in notes and num - - bers such As hear, . . . I'll wish I might turn all . . . to num - bers such As bless - ed souls can't hear too much. When such . . . As bless - ed souls can't hear too much. When bless . . . ed souls can't hear too much. When ear, . . . turn all . . . to ear. When

The first system of the musical score consists of five staves. The first four staves are vocal parts (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass) with lyrics. The fifth staff is the piano accompaniment. The key signature has one sharp (F#), and the time signature is 4/4. Dynamics include p (piano) and f (forte).

I thy sing - ing next shall hear, . . . I'll wish I might turn all to

I thy sing - ing next shall hear, I'll wish I might turn . . . all . . .

I thy sing - ing next shall hear, I'll wish I might turn all to ear, . . .

I thy sing - ing next shall hear, . . . I'll

The second system continues the vocal and piano parts. The lyrics are: "I thy sing - ing next shall hear, . . . I'll wish I might turn all to", "I thy sing - ing next shall hear, I'll wish I might turn . . . all . . .", "I thy sing - ing next shall hear, I'll wish I might turn all to ear, . . .", and "I thy sing - ing next shall hear, . . . I'll".

ear, To drink in notes and num - bers such As . . . to ear, To drink in notes . . . and num - bers such . . . As To drink in notes and num - bers such As bless - . . .

wish I might turn all . . . to ear, . . . turn

The third system concludes the piece. The lyrics are: "ear, To drink in notes and num - bers such As", ". . . to ear, To drink in notes . . . and num - bers such . . . As", "To drink in notes and num - bers such As bless - . . .", and "wish I might turn all . . . to ear, . . . turn".

bless - ed souls can't hear too much.
 bless - ed souls can't hear too much. mp
 - ed souls can't hear too much. mp Then . . melt - ed down, all to ear.
mp
mp Then . . melt-ed down, there let mf me lie, there . .
 melt-ed down, there let . . me lie, . . there . . let . . me . .
 there let . . me, there let . . me . . lie, mp Then . . melt-ed down, there, . . there . . mf
 let . . me . . lie En - tranced, . . there . . let me lie En - poco rall.
 lie, there . . let . . me lie En - tranced, let me poco rall.
mf there . . let . . me . . lie En-tranced, there let . . me . . poco rall.
 let me lie, let me lie . . En - tranced, poco rall.

a tempo. f

tranced, en - tranced, and lost con - fu - sed - ly,

a tempo. f

lie En - tranced, and lost con - fu - sed -

a tempo. f

lie En - tranced, and lost con -

a tempo. f

en - tranced, and lost con - fu - sed - ly, and

a tempo. f

let me lie en - tranced, and lost con - fu - sed - ly,

ly, lost con - fu - sed - ly, fu - sed - ly, en - tranced, and lost con - fu - sed - ly, lost con - fu - sed - ly, con - fu - sed - ly,

tranquillo. p

And by thy mus - ic stricken

p

And strick - en

p

And strick - en

tranquillo. p

And by thy mus - ic stricken mute, strick - en

p tranquillo.

mute, Die, die, and be turned in - to a mute, Die, die, and be turned in - to a mute, Die, die, and be turned in - to a mute, Die, die, and be turned lute, turned in - to a lute. When lute, turned in - to a lute. (With closed lips.)

lute, be .. turned in - to a lute. (With closed lips.)

in - to a lute, a lute. (With closed lips.)

sempre p

I thy sing - ing next shall hear, I'll wish I might turn all to rall.

ear, I'll wish I might turn all to ear, all to ear.

rall.

wish I might turn all to ear, all to ear.

rall. p

wish I might turn all to ear, I'll wish I might turn all to ear.

rall. p

I'll wish I might turn all to ear.

(Continued from page 26.)

according to their own taste and ideals, sincerely and individually; the results must be good whether they gain a prize or not. I have heard most of the choirs competing in this City. Some gave greater pleasure by their independence than others gave by their correctness. Some of what have been called 'small-toned' choirs palled after a while, and listeners would have almost welcomed a crash of some kind. In fact one which charmed us in that way at the last Festival, when nearly finished fell flat a little, when I breathed a fervent 'Thank heaven, they are human after all.'

In some cases I wished the conductors could have felt sufficiently sure of their singers to have let them 'have their heads,' even if they had run away! A capable man will soon get them in hand again. One of the finest examples of what I mean occurred when the Band of H.M. Scots Guards played here last year. The conductor, Mr. F. W. Wood, had every man, every instrument, every note under strict guidance, but there were times when he let them go at their own pace and power, and the result was a great and an agreeable surprise. And while Mr. Wood took good care not to have too much of it, when it came at the right time and in the right way it gave both players and hearers a relief from tension, and was altogether a delight. Well-trained choirs could do the same thing, and in time, perhaps, adjudicators might grow to like it.

It is well that conductors should hear each other's choirs, not with the object of detecting flaws (they know their own only too well), but with the aim of according to each other the sympathy, the discriminating criticism and, above all, the appreciative praise for which the artistic temperament craves and by which it lives and flourishes.—Yours, &c.,

A. MILNE.

Glasgow,
December 4, 1918.

THE LOCAL COMPOSER.

BY HERBERT ANTCLIFFE.

The appeal by or on behalf of the native composer which started a few years before the war in many countries besides Germany, and particularly in those belonging to the Anglo-Saxon race, cannot be otherwise than intensified by the conditions obtaining during and subsequent to the war. This appeal is not necessarily the result of any feeling that among the composers whose claims are those set forth there is any likelihood of a genius of the front rank being discovered. Some of the most enthusiastic of the supporters of these claims even go so far as to deny the slightest probability of there existing such a genius. Nevertheless, natural musical taste and ability are widely diffused, and in communities where the necessary encouragement and education are given to composers, they rise in numbers to considerable heights. Like some countries of high physical elevation, however, it is the general eminence rather than that of any individual outstanding figures that exists in these circumstances.

Among the lower ranks of musicians, among those who pursue their daily tasks of teaching, playing, singing, or the less common ones concerned with literary or editorial matters in the profession, there are always some who have in their portfolios compositions worthy of a place alongside those which for generations have been considered only when emanating from composers with German, Polish, or Russian names. It is on this ground that the claim for recognition, not only of the native composer, but of the local composer, the composer whose reputation does not and probably never will extend beyond his own small circle, can be based.

There was a time, before the days of many newspapers, with their methods of seeking and creating celebrities, when the local composer might be a genius even of the first water and yet remain a local composer. John Sebastian Bach is, of course, the most striking but not by any means the only instance of this. To-day things are different, for which we have to praise, or to blame as our feeling dictates, not only the newspapers, but many other of the inventions and developments which in later years have made the world so small.

By the aid of the printing press we distribute hundreds or even thousands of copies of works of large dimensions and elaborate character with less trouble and not much more expense than a century or two ago it was possible to distribute a dozen; and by letter and telegram and telephone, and by the ease and safety with which we can travel even in war-time, we and our works can obtain and keep acquaintances and friends in widespread areas. Nevertheless the local composer remains with us, a contributor and contributory to the musical life of the nation. Great or small, good or bad, the work of the local composer forms an integral part of the living music of each nation. By despising or ignoring it we run a risk of allowing it to deteriorate, or of failing to recognise work of a high character; either result having a sensibly weakening effect on the music of the community in general.

The local composer appears under many guises and in many capacities. Most often he is the organist, unpaid or badly paid, of a local place of worship; sometimes he is the conductor of the band which provides the music for local dances or which plays at the local movies; not infrequently he is purely an amateur whose musical activities are confined to the narrow limits of his own social circle.

How and to what extent we can and may encourage him must depend entirely on the individual and upon local circumstances. There are cases in which our obvious duty is to discourage, candidly and by all means, the man who claims and some of whose friends claim for him the title of composer. Yet these are not so many as is often imagined. Many more require direction, which of course implies encouragement. Direction without encouragement is worse in every respect than no direction at all, as all educationists now recognise. To encourage publication is rarely the right kind of encouragement; to encourage private performance, and even occasional public performance, in the presence of kind but candid friends, is usually the better way. Candid criticism, it is true, is difficult to apply without offence; but the really earnest musician, however humble his talents, rarely resents it, and one comes across some who welcome it cordially.

The bane of the humbler ranks of composers is the incompleteness of study with which they are as a rule content. Criticism and encouragement tactfully applied do much to remove this. One minor and insignificant composer at least can bear witness that without these applied to his compositions—without the occasional playing of his organ voluntaries and the occasional singing of his chants and hymns in the local church, and the playing of his orchestral studies by the local amateur orchestra—he would never, in all probability, have met with the success he has achieved in other directions.

But let it not be supposed that the local composer is always such small fry as has been suggested. Only a few years ago it was the happy lot of the present writer to have shown to him by the organist at the parish church of a small market town the manuscripts of a couple of organ sonatas. They were of remarkable strength in idea and workmanship, and he therefore asked the composer about his published works. He had several, but no one had played them much; he had few friends outside his own town, and did not think it worth while submitting the new works to the publishers. Fortunately better counsels prevailed, and the bringing of these works to the attention of prominent musicians resulted in the rapid growth of the composer's reputation. To-day these and some of his other works are played the world over, and their composer is recognised as one to be reckoned with wherever organ recitals take place. Yet at fifty years of age, with his best compositions completed, and some of them published, he was merely a local composer.

Printing by a publisher does not necessarily mean making known to the public, which is frequently desirable before the printing takes place. Publication, like charity, begins at home—and sometimes ends there. But where talent exists it is never the worse for a little encouragement; and the more fully developed the talent of the least significant of our musicians, the greater will be the chances of the recognition of those with higher gifts. Which is a consummation to be desired; for it matters little whether there be a genius amongst us or not. What does matter is that everyone shall have the fullest opportunity to develop that talent and that personality with which nature has endowed him.

A MUSICIAN IN THE PROVINCES.

Before he took to writing plays, Mr. Louis N. Parker spent many years as director of the music in Sherborne School, and it was the tale of his experiences there, and the moral that he derived from them, that he told to the Musical Association on December 3, with the title, 'Provincial Memories.' He disclaimed being a scientific musician, and said it was a chronicle of small beer he had to recount, but it might serve as a warning to someone on the threshold of life. Possibly conditions had altered for the better, but he doubted it. Life in agricultural districts changed very slowly. Deep down the thought of to-day was very much the thought of yesterday and of the day before. At the time he went to Sherborne, forty-five years ago, the music was supervised by the mathematical master, Mr. James Sterndale Bennett. An accomplished musician, he had lately begun a bold experiment—nothing less than the introduction of high-class vocal and instrumental music into the School. A public school of that period could not be described as a promising field for the cultivation of the fine arts; but Bennett, fortunately, was very popular, and he persuaded a few of the older boys to rally round him. These influenced the younger ones, and so a small choral body was formed. By dint of inexhaustible patience and unquenchable enthusiasm, Bennett managed to do wonders, so that when Mr. Parker arrived he found a rather surprising organization in full working order. He had at first only a modest share in this part of the School music. He sat at the pianoforte and thumped out the parts. This, and teaching the same instrument to boys who did not want to learn it, were strange experiences to a student fresh from the Academy, fresh from Crystal Palace concerts, fresh from consorting with people to whom music was meat and drink, and for whom technical difficulties did not exist.

The lecturer considered that in the great majority of cases, teaching the average boy the pianoforte was a waste of money, time, and teacher. The pianoforte was in his opinion the very worst medium for instilling a love of music into boys. It would be much more sensible to teach a boy who showed any liking for music, not the pianoforte but the organ. The pianoforte after all was a makeshift into which the musician's imagination put all the colours of the orchestra and even of voices. For the boy it could not convey this. He heard only the impact of a hammer on a wire. Put him at the organ, and at once he would get something of this orchestral colouring, something of the nuance of varied tone. Moreover he would at once get a correct notion of the comparative time-value of note-signs. But if a boy had any music in him, singing was after all the best and quickest way to awaken him to the beauty of the art. Put him in a choir and at once his interest was aroused. It increased as his own powers increased. Often it became an enthusiasm and affected his whole life for good. Not seldom a boy who had been a little while in a choir would want to know more about music apart from choral work; he would want to be able to do something in the musical way off his own bat. Then he spontaneously took to an instrument, and then you might indulge in the hope that you had started one human being on the way to becoming a not too deadly amateur, or what was infinitely better, an intelligent listener. Possibly that was in Mr. Sterndale Bennett's mind when he founded the Sherborne School Musical Society, and so became the pioneer of choral music in public schools. It was a small beginning, but it grew apace, and before he left the School concerts were a flourishing institution.

When Mr. Bennett left, Mr. Parker was put in sole charge under the title of Director of the Music in Sherborne School. He took care to proceed on the lines already laid down. The great point was to make the Musical Society popular amongst the boys, so he roped-in the heads of houses, the captains of the games, the heroes of the sports, and the sixth form generally. This often involved having fellows in the choir who had neither voice nor ear. Never mind! they had influence, and the younger boys followed where they led. It continued to be 'the thing' to be in the Musical Society, and as the School increased and the choral force grew stronger, the independent bass of earless members was overwhelmed; it became a sort of faux-bourdon which did no harm but rather added richness to the superincumbent harmony. Up to 1892, when Mr. Parker left Sherborne, the Society had given a large number of oratorios and cantatas, symphonies, overtures, &c. The music was to all intents and purposes home-made, the only professional assistance being in the orchestra on state occasions, and then only when it was absolutely indispensable. Vocally they relied entirely on their own resources, and it was seldom the School was without at least one good representative of each voice. The lecturer did not pretend that the performances were perfect, or that the London critics would have been satisfied with them; but then the performances were not intended for the critics. They made music for its own sake. The rehearsals and performances were a joy to them, and all that part of the work was a pure delight and a rich compensation for the weary hours at the pianoforte. It was not the lecturer's ambition to turn out executants, but listeners who, as far as the modest means allowed, had nothing but good models set before them. They sent hundreds of young men out into the world with a knowledge that there was such an art as music.

Nothing could be better for a young musician than the ceaseless activity in every branch of music entailed by the School work. It made him alert. It kept him from rusting. It brought him up against all sorts of characters. Work in a big school would keep a young man young long after his prime, and the constraint which he was forced to keep on his words and actions would be of the utmost value to him through life. But there were two serious drawbacks. The first was the delicate question of social position; the second was the lack of opportunity, with its discouraging prospect of an old age without any of that leisure which should accompany it. In the case of a musician who loved his art and had to exercise it in a small community, the lack of opportunity, the total absence of any beyond purely local recognition of his work, was apt in time to kill ambition, to stifle incentive. He was buried; cut off from the world; he had no outlet. Publishers would not listen to him, would not even answer his letters. The big London firms ignored him. He was a poor little music-master, and that was all he could ever hope to be. At the age of sixty he got his congé, and if he was too old for the school he was too old for the town.

So when a youth had had five years of provincial life, he had had enough. He had had time to work off his youthful ebullience; he had found his feet and smoothed his temper; he knew the worst that could happen to him in the way of pupils; he had had time to improve himself, to study, to discover the art of music beneath the layers of scholasticism under which his pedagogues had conscientiously buried it. Now he should go forth and dare the great adventure.

THE LATE DR. W. G. McNAUGHT.

The committee of the Morecambe Musical Festival has decided to raise a 'Dr. McNaught Memorial Fund,' in order that his name may be linked with the Festival in a permanent manner. The form of the Memorial has not yet been decided upon, and the committee will welcome practical suggestions. Inquiries and donations should be sent to the hon.-treasurer, Mr. Frederick Bannister, the Festival Offices, Morecambe.

THE NOVELLO CHOIR.

After the late Dr. McNaught had given up conducting, he took the baton again as honorary director of the Novello Choir. The Choir was the outcome of an elementary singing-class formed by the staff of Messrs. Novello. It gave its first concert in 1908, and until its activities were interfered with by the War, was a flourishing body of about a hundred voices. Mr. Harold Brooke succeeded Dr. McNaught as honorary conductor in 1913. It is hoped that the Choir will resume its work early in the New Year, when the kind help of friends of the staff (especially tenors and basses) will be as welcome as in the past. Inquiries should be addressed to the hon. secretary, Mr. H. A. Griffith, Novello Works, Hollen Street, W.-1.

The Title-page and Contents of Vol. 59 (January to December, 1918) of the Musical Times, will shortly be ready, and can be had post-free by subscribers on application to the publishers.

THE CONCERT PROGRAMME.

BY ARTHUR T. FROGGATT.

It has long been a recognised duty of the State to provide galleries of painting and sculpture, and, indeed, of many other arts, for the education and delight of the public. Museums—enshrining the history of the past—are also considered indispensable from the same point of view. And in all these respects the municipalities of the great cities have followed suit, and have vied with each other in emulating the achievements of the capital. In short, throughout the countries of the civilized world much is being done, and increasingly so, for the education of the eye. Painting, sculpture, architecture, metal-work, wood-carving, porcelain, glass, tapestry, as well as the charms of landscape gardening—everything which ministers to refined pleasure through the eye—is directly encouraged by national enterprise.

But when we turn from the consideration of the training of the eye to that of the ear, all is changed. On the Continent, indeed, we may find that National Opera is subsidised, but in this country nothing whatever is done. It is a common saying that the eye is better trained than the ear; but as things are, how is it possible that it should be otherwise? The ear is left to take care of itself. 'I know what I like' is apparently considered to be a sufficiently safe guide for the cultivation of the public taste. It is becoming increasingly the fashion to terminate a series of concerts with a public programme; and although the result is usually more or less disconcerting, it seems to have occurred to no one to show us 'a more excellent way.'

Concert programmes are apt to suffer from two diametrically opposite causes. Firstly, from the frequent repetition of a few classics; and, secondly, from too many 'first performances.' It is curious to notice, during any musical season in London, the constant repetition of a favourite (or supposed favourite) work. For instance, an eminent pianist plays a certain Concerto, and in the course of the next few weeks half-a-dozen other eminent pianists do the same. Or if half-a-dozen orchestral concerts are given by as many different conductors in the course of eight or nine weeks, it is quite likely that the same Symphony will be heard at all of them. Some years ago the Symphony was almost certain to be Tchaikovsky's sixth; at the present moment the inevitable choice seems to be Beethoven's fifth. Or a particular 'Prelude' will be repeated ad nauseam, to the exclusion of any other Preludes by the same composer. About thirty years ago a violinist who failed to include a certain Cavatina in his programme would have been regarded as an oddity. And so on.

This prevalence of a well-known composition is of course a consequence of its popularity, and is intended to attract an audience. The object of a 'first performance,' of which at the present time we enjoy a considerable number, is quite different. The encouragement of talent—of possible genius, on the part of the composer's friends—or the natural desire of the composer himself to draw public attention to his work, these are usually the reasons of a first performance, which is not always, alas! followed by a second. Undoubtedly, if every new composition which arrives at a hearing could be guaranteed to be a work of genius, we could scarcely have too many 'first performances,' but as this, unhappily, is not the case, the conclusion seems to be inevitable that the new piece, at least equally with the old favourite, detracts from the satisfactory effect of the programme as an artistic whole.

After all, the object of ninety-nine concert-givers out of a hundred is a financial one, and the experienced concert-giver will tell you that unknown compositions very seldom attract; that little-known works of the past do not often attract; and that the safest course to pursue is the frequent repetition of old favourites. Now it is a melancholy reflection that the favourite work is not always the best. The (so-called) 'Moonlight' is not the finest of Beethoven's Sonatas; 'Elijah' is not the finest of Mendelssohn's oratorios; Raff's Cavatina is not the most beautiful solo ever written for the violin; 'The Lost Chord' is not quite the best of Sullivan's songs; nor is 'Home, sweet home' the best of Bishop's. It would seem to follow, therefore, if the art of music is really to exercise a valuable educational influence, that some other and very different plan of selection needs to be adopted.

Now, in the selection or purchase of pictures, pieces of sculpture, and other works of art for public galleries, the authorities are not guided by any desire to ascertain and follow the public taste; on the contrary, their object is to educate it, and by their selection to indicate what is worthy of public admiration. Doubtless mistakes are sometimes made, for it is human to err. But the aim is the right one; and, given the necessary expert assistance, the means employed to achieve it are the best available. Why cannot the same thing be done for the art of music?

Obviously it is not enough to establish schools of music, any more than it would have been sufficient to establish schools of art. In the first place, these are intended only for the (comparatively) few; but the education of the ear, as of the eye, should be provided for and placed within the reach of all. The cultivation of art is one thing; the enjoyment—the intelligent enjoyment—of art is quite another. As regards the art of music, the former is already amply provided for; adequate provision for the latter is still to seek.

An endowed orchestra for London, and, if possible, for other centres of population, is what is needed. Or better still, an orchestra subsidised to the extent necessary to supply the deficiency (if any) resulting from want of public support. It would, in my judgment, be a great mistake to supply concerts free of charge to the individuals who might choose to attend, and it would also be unfair to private enterprise. But a certain number of concerts given every year, with an expert committee (similar to the hanging-committee of the Royal Academy) to select the programmes, would secure to the public an opportunity for hearing that music which, in the opinion of the most competent judges, was most worthy of being performed.

The creation of an endowed orchestra offers a splendid opportunity to private munificence. Such an orchestra need not be enormous; indeed, of late years the tendency has been to increase the number of performers to an unnecessarily large extent. The doubling of the wood-wind ought to be sternly discouraged; and when the score contains only two horns, no more than two should be employed. To balance eight wind instruments, seven brass, and a pair of drums, twelve violins and twelve other strings (equally divided) ought to be sufficient, provided that all the stringed instruments are in the hands of thoroughly competent artists. With four horns, cor anglais, bass clarinet, bass tuba, and more percussion instruments, additional strings are doubtless required. But a great orchestra, like a great book, is sometimes a great evil.

With an orchestra, then, of forty artists as a nucleus, to be increased as occasion demanded, directed by a conductor of the front rank, entitled to expect public support but in the last resort independent of it, not less than forty concerts, given during as many weeks, with programmes drawn up from a purely artistic point of view, would be required to set a standard of taste from which in course of time the happiest results might be anticipated.

Each programme should comprise a symphony or symphonic-poem (or some other composition for full orchestra of similar extent), a concerto, an overture, a vocal solo with orchestral accompaniment, and an orchestral piece of lighter calibre with which to conclude. But no vocal or instrumental solo should be permitted without orchestral accompaniment.

The ideal programme is undoubtedly drawn from the works of a single composer; and although such a course is not always possible, it should be adopted much more frequently than is at present the case. I do not think historical programmes—such, for example, as one or more illustrating the development of the Symphony—would be desirable for a mixed audience, because they tend to monotony; such are more suitable in connection with lectures to professional students. But I am of opinion that an arrangement of the various items of a programme in chronological order should be adhered to whenever this was possible; it would be an advantage not only from an educational, but also from an artistic point of view. And, above all things, we need a systematic performance of all the classics—all the works of the past which the best-informed opinion regards as worthy of preservation. There are, for example, at least a couple of dozen out of the hundred and twenty-five Symphonies written by Haydn which ought to be heard periodically—most of them unknown to the present generation. There are very many other orchestral works of great merit which stand no chance of revival so long as concerts depend solely upon public patronage, because even the music-loving section of the public knows nothing of them—not even their titles.

Every programme should comprise one composition by a living writer—overture, symphony, concerto, or vocal piece, as the case might be; and at least half of these should be the work of native musicians. And when any such composition had been added to the repertoire of the national or municipal orchestra, it should not be allowed to die after one or two hearings, but should be ensured a permanent position. Nothing has been said with reference to choral music and chamber music, only because it is best to act on the principle of 'one thing at a time.' But unless some such scheme as the above is acted upon, music—in comparison with the other Fine Arts—must necessarily continue to occupy a position of inferiority.

SIR HUBERT PARRY AND THE POET LAUREATE.

In the October issue of this Journal (page 471), is reproduced the lament of a distinguished critic on the lack of community of spirit between English poets and English composers. His contention that in France music and literature are more closely related, no one who knows the truth would deny. Now, however, when music-lovers are thinking over the significance of the long career of Sir Hubert Parry, one remarkable English instance of community of spirit should not fail to occur to them. I mean, of course, the affinity between Parry and Mr. Robert Bridges.

In both, the artist and the scholar are blended. Both combine width of range, largeness and dignity of conception, with exquisite finish of detail. More particularly, in their treatment of the larger forms there is the same austerity, the same approach to ruggedness, just as in many of their smaller lyrical works the clear, wild-wood quality is all the choicer for an art not quite concealed. Their Greek sympathies, always notable, are found not only in works dealing with Greek subjects. Just as the Greek spirit breathes, ever and anon, through the most English of Bridges' smaller poems, so Parry brought something of its piercing clearness, its wise restraint, into not a few of his 'English Lyrics.'

We turn for a moment to some of the works written in collaboration. The tender beauty of the stanzas 'Since thou, O fondest and truest' finds a perfect counterpart in Parry's setting for four voices. So, on the larger scale, his music is grandly adequate to the mystery of the opening of Bridges' 'Nature' ode ('A Song of Darkness and Light'), and tackles freely and bravely the magnificent closing section, 'Gird on thy sword, O man.' Again and again, in the other works, the same perfect mating is found, as quite recently in 'The Chivalry of the Sea.'

If Parry did not second Bridges as perfectly as Debussy did Verlaine or Mallarmé—if the English artists are both of them less rare and less original—surely as musician and poet they are of larger build and wider sympathies. In France, the more intimate relationship between music and literature exists too often at the price of narrowness and self-consciousness. French art has too often been at the mercy of the doctrinaire, with his hot-house culture. But English art, in its best days, has developed more freely and naturally.

Though permeated with the literatures of many lands, Bridges' poetry is thoroughly English. Parry's music at its happiest remains English and individual, though its idiom has assimilated layer upon layer of German influence. And English literature and music, while learning much from other countries and ages, will go on their own road towards that ideal community of spirit of which Parry was in many ways so great a pioneer.

W. WRIGHT ROBERTS.

R. A. F., France.

We are asked to state that until further notice Mr. G. T. Holst's address will be 'c/o Y.M.C.A., Piccadilly Circus, Salonika.' During his absence inquiries as to his MS. compositions should be addressed to him 'c/o The Secretary, St. Paul's Girls' School, Brook Green, W.-6.'

THE MUSICIANS' Y.M.C.A. GIFT.

The 'Musicians' Gift' was established for the provision of additional musical facilities for the members of His Majesty's Forces in the 2,600 Huts and Centres of the Y.M.C.A. at home and abroad.

Committee.—The Editors of all the Musical Papers of the Country.

Hon. Treasurer.—Major H. Walford Davies, R.A.F., Mus. Doc.

Organizing Secretaries.—Percy A. Scholes, Mus. Bac., A.R.C.M.; Katharine E. Eggar, A.R.A.M.

Hon. Organizer of National Collection of Instruments and Music.—Herman Darewski.

Office.—Y.M.C.A., Universities House, 25, Bloomsbury Square, W.C.-1.

Total received to December 11, 1918 £ 5. 11. 0
Total for month November 11 to December 11 .. 2,858 13 6
86 14 2

Amounts received between November 11 and December 11.

(a) PROCEEDS OF CONCERTS AND RECITALS.		£	s.	d.
Birkenhead ..	Madame D. Prince, Concert ..	12	16	0
Cambridge ..	Dr. Alan Gray, Organ Recital ..	5	0	0
Craven Arms, Salop ..	Mr. W. Batey, Concert ..	23	1	0
Hebburn-on-Tyne ..	Mr. T. H. Smith, Concert ..	15	7	11
Leytonstone ..	Concert by the Professors of the Metropolitan Academy of Music during Mr. Douglas Bainton's Campaign of Collection of Instruments or Music in Leytonstone District ..	9	7	0
Liverpool ..	Mr. W. E. Bridson, Concert ..	5	6	0
Manchester Cathedral ..	Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, Recital ..	6	8	0
Romford ..	Metropolitan Academy of Music ..	0	9	0
		£75	15	0

(b) DONATIONS AND COLLECTIONS.		£	s.	d.
Captain W. Gurney, Aldershot ..	..	0	5	0
Mr. R. Erlebach ..	..	0	10	0
Lieut.-Col. Henschley, R.A.M.C. ..	..	2	2	0
Mr. C. P. Taylor ..	..	0	5	0
Miss K. Rodger ..	..	0	10	0
Miss L. Pearce ..	..	0	5	0
Miss Axtell ..	..	0	5	0
Miss M. Rootham ..	..	1	1	0
Mr. A. E. Taylor ..	..	0	5	0
Mr. F. C. Nicholls, Liverpool ..	..	0	10	0
The Misses Spedding ..	..	0	5	0
Miss A. Entrican ..	..	0	5	0
Mrs. E. Burwash ..	..	1	0	0
Rev. T. H. Davis ..	..	1	1	0
Mr. J. R. Kilner ..	..	1	0	0
Miss Helsby ..	..	0	5	0
Miss J. Wilson, Reader of 'Youth and Music,' Sale of Golliwogs ..	..	1	5	0
		£9	19	0

NOTES ON THE MUSICIANS' GIFT.

H.R.H. The Duke of Connaught is giving his patronage to the concert which the Strolling Players' Amateur Orchestral Society is holding in aid of the Musicians' Gift on Saturday, February 1, at 3.15 p.m., in the Central Hall, Westminster. The conductor, Mr. Joseph Ivimey, has arranged a programme of British music which will include Sterndale Bennett's Overture, 'The Naiades,' Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations, and Coleridge-Taylor's Suite, 'Othello.' Mr. George Baker will sing Stanford's 'Sea Songs' and Hedgcock's 'Mandalay,' and Mr. William Murdoch will play the Delius Pianoforte Concerto.

Mr. Hubert Hunt is giving a recital in Bristol Cathedral on December 26.

Mr. Harvey Grace has secured the help of the following distinguished organists for the London scheme of organ recitals: Mr. H. L. Balfour; Mr. E. T. Cook, of Southwark Cathedral; Mr. Lynwood Farnum, of Boston, U.S.A.; Mr. H. G. Ley, of Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford; Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson; Mr. Wolstenholme.

Mr. Douglas Bainton's collection campaign in Leytonstone resulted in the presentation of over twenty instruments of various kinds, including seven violins, and a large quantity of really useful and good music.

Mr. Charles Morris, whose Gloucester collection was such a success, has undertaken another collection, this time at Cheltenham and Stroud. We wish very much that more people would take up this idea.

The Y.M.C.A. is going into Germany with our Armies. Let us help our men to disprove the German saecr that 'the English are not a musical nation.'

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The Christmas term at this institution came to an end on Saturday, December 14, and during the latter part several public performances of considerable interest were given. On November 20 there was a Students' chamber concert, amongst the most noteworthy items of which were Sydney Rosenbloom's Violin and Pianoforte Sonata in C minor, admirably played by Miss Gladys and Mr. Russell Chester, three songs composed by Miss Peggy Cochrane and sung by Miss Adah Rogalsky, and Saint-Saëns's Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso, played by Mr. Paul Beard. On Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, December 10 and 11, the pupils of Mr. Acton Bond's Dramatic Class gave two performances of 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' which reflected great credit upon both teacher and pupils. The cast was a different one each evening. On Thursday afternoon, December 12 an orchestral concert conducted by Sir Alexander Mackenzie was given at Queen's Hall. The programme included Saint-Saëns's Pianoforte Concerto No. 5, in F (Miss Kathleen Levi), Paderewski's Fantaisie Polonaise (Miss May Bennett), Mackenzie's 'Pibroch' (Miss Dorothy Chalmers), and Ethel Smyth's Benedictus from the Mass in D, for soloist and choir, Miss Adah Rogalsky taking the solo part.

The last event of the term was by no means the least interesting. At the invitation of the Principal and the Directors, 150 wounded soldiers from the Over Seas Dominions and the U.S.A. were invited to the R.A.M., where, after listening to a concert given by the students in the Duke's Hall, they were entertained to tea. The arrangements for this pleasant musical and social function were admirably carried out under the direction of Mrs. Russell—the lady-superintendent at the R.A.M.

A gathering of exceptional interest was to have taken place at the Academy early in December, the welcome-home which the R.A.M. Club desired to extend to Mr. B. J. Dale, the distinguished young composer and Academy professor, on his return to England after internment in Germany since the beginning of the war. The reception, however, has been postponed until Saturday evening, January 12, when several of Mr. Dale's compositions will be performed. The tickets issued for December 7 will be available for January 11.

The following awards have recently been made: the Battison Haynes Prize, for orchestral composition, to Edmund T. Jenkins; the Hine Prize, for the composition of an English Ballad by students under seventeen, to Desirée MacEwan; the Philip Agnew Prize, for male students of the pianoforte, to Bryden C. Monteith; and the Fred Walker Prize, for contraltos who have been awarded the silver medal for singing, to Edith Bartlett; and the Broughton-Packer (Violin) Scholarship, to Dorothy Chalmers.

The Lent term opens on Monday, January 6. During this term special courses of lectures will be given on Wednesday afternoons, by the Principal and Dr. H. W. Richards. Full particulars will be announced in due course.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

The important post of Principal has been filled by the appointment of Dr. H. P. Allen. In the prime of life, with wide sympathies, and a strong personality, the successor to Sir Hubert Parry is a musician of whom the very highest hopes may confidently be entertained.

London Concerts.

QUEEN'S HALL.

ROYAL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The season opened on December 5 with a programme of exceptional interest, conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald. The outstanding feature was Elgar's Symphonic Study 'Falstaff,' which created a deep impression, and raised wonder that it should not have been heard in London for over four years. In our opinion it ranks with Elgar's very finest works, not only by virtue of its masterly scoring, but perhaps even more because of its intense humanity. Mr. Landon Ronald secured a fine performance, and deserves thanks for reviving a masterpiece. The composer was present, and received an ovation. The remainder of the programme consisted of Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' March, No. 2 (which deserves as frequent performance as the overplayed work in D), Grieg's Lyric Suite, Dukas's 'L'Apprenti Sorcier,' and Parry's fine song, 'The Soldier's Tent,' well sung by Mr. George Baker. The audience was not so large as the concert deserved, but it was very enthusiastic.

Mr. Robert Newman's annual concert attracted a large gathering on December 7. The Queen's Hall Orchestra, conducted by Sir Henry Wood, played a series of familiar items, and joined Mr. Moiseiwitsch in the 'Emperor' Concerto.

WIGMORE HALL.

A successful Trio Concert was given by Miss Rhoda Buckhouse, with the assistance of Mr. Felix Salmond and Mr. Harold Samuel, on December 5. Miss Buckhouse and her associates played admirably, being heard to special advantage in Ireland's second Trio and Mozart's Trio in G.

An excellent first appearance took place on December 6, when Miss Margaret Harrison made her bow as a violinist. She played Bach's unaccompanied Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Debussy's Sonata for violin and pianoforte (with Mr. Hamilton Harty), and brought forward a new work by Stanford, an Irish Concertino for violin and cello, in which she was assisted by Miss Beatrice Harrison. The novelty proved to be Stanford in his best and most Irish mood.

On December 6 the Allied Quartet gave fine performances of Borodin's and Franck's Quartets. Mr. York Bowen's Phantasy for viola and pianoforte received a delightful first performance by Mr. Lionel Tertis and Mr. Samuel Liddle. Miss Ethel Fenton gave much pleasure with French and English songs.

Miss Murray Lambert provided an interesting programme at her violin recital on December 7. It included two little-known works—a Concerto by Jules Conus and Dvorák's Sonata in F minor. The recitalist was in good form, and was ably accompanied by Mr. Harold Samuel.

Mr. Victor Benham was in fine form at his Beethoven recital on December 11. He set himself a heavy task, playing Opp. 57, 106, 53, and 27, No. 2. He roused his large audience to enthusiasm, especially with the 'Hammerklavier.'

ÆOLIAN HALL.

Mr. Vladimir Rosing has given two recitals, the first devoted to songs by Moussorgsky, the second to works written on the comprehensive theme of 'Love: Divine and Human,' the songs chosen ranging from Handel to Duparc. Very large audiences were thrilled by this most dramatic of singers.

On December 10 Miss Olga Haley gave what was announced as an 'International' recital, the term being barely justified, as the only German represented was Wagner with his 'Träume,' sung in English, and the only native composer was the clever Englishwoman who elects to be known as Madame Poldowski. The bulk of the recital consisted of French and Russian songs. In spite of the after-effects of a severe attack of influenza, Miss Haley sang hardly less beautifully than usual.

On December 12 the Harmonic Trio (Miss Dorothea Walenn, Miss Edith Vance, and Miss Jessie Munro) played Schubert's Trio in B flat, Spaight's 'Lament and Caprice,' and two movements of a Trio by the clever and lamented boy, Willie Manson. Miss Gwendolen Coleridge-Taylor varied the proceedings pleasantly with a recitation.

THE SOUTH PLACE CONCERTS.

A Parry Memorial Concert was announced for December 22, the works chosen being the Trio in E minor, the Quartet in E flat, a group of pianoforte solos, and thirteen songs. The artists were Miss Marjorie Hayward, Miss Dilys Jones, and Messrs. Frank Bridge, Ernest Tomlinson, Ivor James, Edwin Virgo, Harold Samuel, and Plunket Greene.

Music in the Provinces.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

BELFAST.

The Philharmonic Society opened its forty-fifth season with a miscellaneous concert on October 25. An unusually large audience gave evidence of a much increased subscription list, and the general approval by the public of the work done by the Society under the depressing influences of the great War now happily ended. The artists engaged were of high eminence, and their performances were worthy of their reputation. They were Mr. Leonard Borwick, Miss Phyllis Archbald, and M. Lucien Caveye. The two first-named are too well-known to need more than mention. M. Caveye is an excellent violoncellist of the French School. The choir, conducted by Mr. Godfrey Brown, sang with power and artistic finish Bach's Motet 'Be not afraid,' and part-songs by Charles Wood, Sir Edward Elgar, and R. Somerville.

The Society's second concert, on November 24, was on a larger and more ambitious scale. The principal work was the lamented Sir Hubert Parry's Ode 'A Song of Darkness and Light,' the solo part being sung by Miss Dorothy Silk. Miss Tessie Thomas was the violinist, and her performance of Mendelssohn's Concerto and Saint-Saëns's 'Havanaise' proved how well she deserved her high reputation. The work of the orchestra included Beethoven's Symphony No. 2, in D (Op. 36), and a selection from Glazounov's Suite, 'Ruses d'Amour' (Op. 61). For a provincial orchestra the attempt to give a really good performance of such works is most creditable to the careful training and admirable conducting of Mr. Godfrey Brown, the Society's conductor.

The Winifred Burnett Quartet (of which that lady is the accomplished leader and with whom were associated Mr. Fred Clarke, Miss K. McEndoo, and Miss Carrodus Taylor) gave a chamber concert on November 14. The programme included Beethoven's Serenade Trio, Tchaikovsky's Trio (Op. 80), with Mrs. Warnock at the pianoforte, and Grieg's String Quartet (Op. 27). The vocalist was Mrs. Jasper Grant, whose remarkably fine contralto was heard with much pleasure in a choice selection of songs.

BOURNEMOUTH.

The orchestral playing at the recent Symphony Concerts has been uniformly excellent, and it is evident that Mr. Dan Godfrey has taken great pains in the preparation of the various compositions brought forward. Some of these were of a distinctly elaborate nature, and it speaks volumes for the industry and enthusiasm of both conductor and instrumentalists that the complexities of the more intricate musical works have been so slight a hindrance to truly satisfying performances. Thus it goes almost without saying that the technicalities of the less exacting works were overcome with ease.

Among the many attractive compositions appearing in recent programmes we would specially mention the following: Scriabin's second Symphony, the Rhapsody, 'A Shropshire Lad,' by George Butterworth, Beethoven's Symphonies Nos. 2 and 4, the Introduction to Act 3, 'Lohengrin,' and the 'Mastersingers' Overture, Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony and 'Romeo and Juliet' Overture, and Brahms's Symphony in D. Particularly graphic was the treatment accorded to the 'Mastersingers' Overture and the Tchaikovsky and Scriabin Symphonies, the combined grandeur and charm of the last-named work being realised in most telling fashion. For purely orchestral novelties we have had an Elegie for brass instruments and drums by H. A. Keyser, a concert-overture, 'To Spring,' by Charles O'Brien, the poetical little Rêverie (Op. 24) by Scriabin, Chabrier's highly-pictorial overture to the opera 'Gwendoline,' and an 'In Memoriam 1914-18,' by Throsby Hutchison. One of the soloists, Mr. Leopold Davis, also elected to appear in a work previously unheard at these concerts, i.e., the famous Pianoforte Concerto in D minor by Bach, which has had an unaccountably long time to wait ere coming before a Symphony Concert audience. Mr. Davis played it with neatness and resource, but be it said that hardly did he seem sufficiently to convey the emotional content of the music. A delightful performance by Miss Marjorie Hayward of the popular B minor Violin Concerto by Saint-Saëns was a notable feature of the seventh concert of the series. We have rarely heard this particular composition so effectively played, either from the solo or the orchestral standpoint. On November 28 a youthful pianist, August Ardenois, a son of one of the Municipal Orchestra's trumpeters, essayed the well-known Concerto in E flat by Liszt, displaying considerable promise therein, although the performance was a somewhat unequal one. Mr. Victor Benham's performance of Beethoven's so-called 'Emperor' Concerto, at the ninth concert, was very interesting, the pianist receiving a very hearty reception. Finally, on December 12, we have to record an exceedingly enjoyable performance by Miss Adelina Leon of Böellmann's Symphonic Variations for violoncello and orchestra. We have heard Miss Leon on several occasions, but never to such advantage.

BRISTOL.

Musical events have been more numerous of late—that is, in the latter part of November and the first fortnight of the final month of this memorable year. The spirit of the times was reflected in Madame Clara Butt's 'Victory Concert' on November 27 at Colston Hall, when the famous prima donna was once more accorded a rousing reception by a vast audience. Madame Butt, who was in magnificent voice, sang a dozen times. Very impressive was her presentation of Elgar's 'Land of Hope and Glory,' with organ and pianoforte accompaniment, and the scope of the artist was manifested in the manner in which she interpreted such dainty trifles as 'A fairy went a-marketing' (A. M. Goodhart), and a new song by Dr. Herbert Brewer, 'Harebells.' Mr. Ben Davies retains his charm of voice in a wonderful degree. This was especially apparent in such old favourites as 'Sally in our Alley,' and 'I'll sing thee songs of Araby.' Miss Marie Hall, like Madame Clara Butt, also has cherished local associations, and the warmth of her reception and the enthusiasm with which her violin solos were received, must have been very gratifying to the gifted player.

The Bristol New Philharmonic Society—this being its eighteenth season, the word 'New' could well be dropped—continues its courageous policy of bringing forward some of the less-known choral and other works at its Winter and Spring concerts. It was pleasing to find that Mr. Arnold Barter (the hon. conductor), his committee, and the forces he directs were well supported at their concert at Colston Hall on December 4. The principal feature of the first part of the programme was Elgar's setting of O'Shaughnessy's ode, 'The Music Makers.' The recurring tender passage, 'We are the music makers, and we are the dreamers of dreams,' was beautifully sung, but the regrettable shortage of men's voices was noticeable in the more strenuous portions of the work. The solos were sung by Miss Phyllis Lett, with much sympathetic charm. Then followed César Franck's Symphony in D minor by the orchestra, led by Mr. Maurice Alexander, and after the interval the choir sang most acceptably Hubert Parry's Motet, 'My soul, there is a country.' A group of songs by Miss Phyllis Lett (from the 'Sappho Songs' by Granville Bantock) were very much enjoyed. A tone-poem for strings, 'In the woods' (W. J. Fenney), and dances for choir and orchestra from Borodin's 'Prince Igor,' completed the programme.

The Bristol Musical Club at its annual meeting decided that after that date no person of German nationality should be elected to membership. It was the Club's fifteenth annual meeting, and for the first time a Lord Mayor of the city (Ald. H. W. Twigg) directed the proceedings. Mr. C. T. Budgett reported on the satisfactory financial position of the Club. There were a hundred and seventeen members, and eighteen were away serving their country. Messrs. Frank T. Gardner, D. W. Rootham, and W. S. Young were elected to fill vacancies on the committee. Mr. C. T. Budgett was cordially thanked for presenting to the Club a framed photograph of Sir Hubert Parry, who was an hon. member. Dr. Basil Harwood (the president) followed with an address, in the course of which he said that although music in this country had to a certain extent been marking time during the War, they knew how fully it had been made use of and appreciated at the Front. With the advent of the lasting peace they hoped for, and with the return of their armies, came the certainty that artistic activities pent up during the War would burst forth and that music would take such a place in the national scheme as it had never held before. Looking back over the period since 1914 it seemed wonderful that musical institutions and societies should have contrived to carry on their work. Choral societies and church choirs had alike been depleted, yet choral music had gone on. Orchestras had lost many members, yet symphony concerts had still been given. Music had nowhere come to a standstill; its organizations remained, awaiting the driving force that would be imparted to them by the return of the vast numbers of men to set them running full speed.

With the Victoria Rooms being monopolised for national purposes, Clifton has been badly in need of a centrally-situated concert-hall. The Royal West of England Academy, which has been frequently used this season and last, does not offer the seating accommodation required. This was apparent at an attractive concert on November 22, when compositions by Dr. Cyril Rootham almost filled the programme. Dr. Rootham was at the pianoforte, and he was assisted by Miss Gladys Moger (vocalist), and a string quartet—Miss Rhoda Backhouse, Miss Mary Mellis, Miss Margaret Savory, and Miss Helen Luard. Miss Moger afforded pleasure by her interpretation of a number of songs composed by Dr. Rootham, who in some instances had written accompaniments for an instrumental quartet. The instrumentalists gave an excellent account of themselves in Dr. Rootham's Quartet in C major. These, and other items not by the Bristol composer, were cordially received.

Mr. Herbert Parsons made his only appearance on the local concert-platform so far this season, when on December 12 he gave a pianoforte recital at the Royal West of England Academy. He played with his customary ability selections from the works of Schumann, Ravel, B. J. Dale, Chopin, and César Franck, and his many admirers showed their appreciation by unstinted applause.

DEVON AND CORNWALL.

DEVON.

There is, it is feared, likely to be a dearth of orchestral music in Plymouth, the R.G.A. band (conductor Mr. R. G. Evans) having some weeks ago gone on the Continent for a six months' tour. News is forthcoming that already it has been very much appreciated in France, playing in huts, escorting troops to and from the boats, and mounting the guard of honour, formed by a mixed company of the Guards, to meet the King when he landed in France recently. Now we hear that the band of the R.M.L.I., Plymouth Division (conductor, Mr. S. P. G. O'Donnell), is under orders to proceed to France to swell the mass of bands which will assemble to do honour to President Wilson. It is deplorable that a town of the importance of Plymouth, with over 220,000 inhabitants, is without a local professional orchestra. The stumbling-block in the way of its formation should not be allowed to continue in the enlightened days that are coming.

The Plymouth Orpheus Choir (with Mr. David Parkes as conductor, and Mr. W. G. Finch as enterprising secretary) is becoming quite experienced as entrepreneur, and its concerts invariably present the spectacle of a hall crowded to an extent which would involve discomfort were not the arrangements so perfect in detail. On November 28, the choir was the means of bringing M. Pachmann to Plymouth, thus repeating an achievement of twelve months ago, and again the expectant audience was filled with wonder and delight at the revelation of exquisite beauty in the music that this inimitable artist has made his own. The chief item sung by the choir was Saint-Saëns's choral fantasia, 'Hymn to Aviators.' Other pieces, contributed with fine taste, comprised items by Vaughan Thomas, John E. West, and Maunder. The Choir's fortes were full and mellow, and its pp's round and exquisitely controlled. On November 30, at Plymouth, the Choir sang choruses and part-songs from its large repertoire, and was supported by Corpl. L. Busfield (violin)—who played three movements from a Suite composed by Mr. Parkes—Madame Holmes, Miss Julian, and Messrs. Parsons and Hill, who sang Herbert Oliver's Cycle, 'The Passing Show.'

During the Christmas season the Sunday concerts in Plymouth Theatre Royal are suspended. A number of vocalists (five) sang on November 24, when Pianoforte Trios were played by Gunners D. M. Durston, Spencer, and A. Bryant; and on December 1 Miss Isobel Wellington, a harpist of exceptional ability, played solos and duets with her father, Sergt. F. A. Wellington (violin), Mr. Sydney Smith and Sergt. Harold Nott sang excellently, and Mr. D. M. Durston played pianoforte music.

At the Plymouth Corporation concerts on November 23, when the band of the R.M.L.I. provided the programmes, a first performance in the district was given of Massenet's Suite, 'Le roman d'Arlequin,' the Serenade and the Réverie making a conspicuous success. Elgar's 'Cockaigne' Overture and the ballet music from 'La Source' (Débiles) were given. Operatic vocal music was provided on November 30 by Miss Phyllis Archibald and Mr. James Pursaill, and a fortnight later Senhor Edgardo Guerra, the truly great violin-artist, paid a return visit. Excellent weekly concerts continue to be arranged by the Education Department of the Plymouth Co-operative Society, at which Miss Elsie Chambers and Mr. Frederick Taylor (vocalists), Miss Florence Hood (violin), Miss Una Bourne (pianoforte), and the R.M.L.I. band have performed.

In Mutley Baptist Church, on December 4, a recital of sacred music given by Dr. H. Lake (organ), Mr. R. Ball (violin), and Miss W. Blight ('cello) included Rheinberger's Trio. The weekly concerts on the Pier included, on December 1, a performance by the R.M. band of H.M.T.S. 'Powerful,' conducted by Bandmaster G. W. Osman. Officers and Instructors from H.M.S. 'Impregnable' gave a successful concert on December 3, at the R.N. Hospital, Stonehouse. Musical members of Christ Church, Plymouth, have formed a Philharmonic Club, and gave a miscellaneous concert at Torpoint on December 4.

In the matter of music Exeter has been exceedingly dull during the autumn. Members of the profession and amateurs in this city seem to follow their several pursuits with individual enthusiasm, but concerted effort is practically nil. Mr. Norman Kendall has indeed made a good attempt to form a ladies' choir, and on December 6 the choir (the 'Æolian') sang part-songs by Ackerman, Sullivan, and Smart, and a chorus from Schubert's 'Paradise and the Peri.' No doubt the choir sang well, but we did not know of the event until it was over. Mr. R. Harper Kendal led an orchestra at the same concert.

A large audience was much interested at Exeter University College on December 7 in the remarks made concerning folk-song by Mr. F. J. Pinn, who, in referring to its origin in the 'call' of savage tribes, spoke of the recent labours of resuscitation of Mr. Cecil Sharp and the Rev. S. Baring-Gould, and incidentally pressed a plea for British music. Thirty female voices from the College Choir sang examples, and Mr. Pinn sang others and concluded with two Devonshire items.

The organistship of St. Sidwell's (Exeter) Wesleyan Church has become vacant through the regretted resignation of Mrs. John Passmore, a successful teacher of singing and a capable organist, who has done valuable work with the choir during the last twenty years. Mr. William Rains, late assistant-organist of Ripon Cathedral, has been appointed, after playing a test on December 8. His recital included an Introduction and Fugue (C sharp minor) by Basil Harwood, the Largo from Dvorák's 'From the New World' Symphony, Guilmant's 'Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs,' and the Toccata in G of Dubois.

At a miscellaneous concert at Exeter on December 10, Mr. S. J. Bishop (principal bass of the Cathedral) sang Hatten's 'Revenge,' Mr. Horace West played violin music by Dancla and Monti, and Miss D. Hoult contributed 'cello pieces by Sammartini and Popper.

Plymouth R.M. band is very popular at Torquay, and drew large audiences to the Pavilion on three days from December 1. A sacred concert opened the series; a symphony concert included Mendelssohn's 'Scottish' and music by Saint-Saëns, Elgar, Edward German, and Sterndale Bennett; and a patriotic programme was given at the final concert. On December 7 Mr. Arthur Riley's 'No. 1 Company of Instru-Vocalists,' comprising nine members, was heard, the instruments being euphonium, trombone, and cornets, and the singers contributing part-songs.

A party of singers at Tavistock on November 20 sang part-songs—'Sunbeams,' 'Snowdrops,' and 'Silent night'—duets, and solos, in aid of Red Cross funds; a choir conducted by Mr. W. E. Stevenson, at Beer, on November 21, supported by an orchestra, sang choruses (including 'See the conquering hero comes'), and concerted pieces; and the U.M. Choir of North Lew, on November 21, gave a sacred concert.

At Seaton an orchestra, conducted by Miss Bradbury Turner, played a good programme, assisted by vocalists; and a week later songs and part-songs were sung there in character under the direction of Mrs. W. Lloyd Worth.

CORNWALL.

Concerted music formed part of a concert in celebration of Budock Feast, on November 18, at Treverva, when duets and quartets were sung by members of the Wesleyan Choir. A series of sacred concerts in Looe district opened at Polruan on November 19, when songs, vocal duets, and pianoforte solos comprised a programme arranged by Mrs. Aldridge. St. Austell Ladies' Quartet sang at Camborne on November 19 in celebration of St. Martin's Feast, and several Camborne artists took part in the programme. Further celebration was made in Centenary Wesleyan Church, when the choir, assisted by Troon Choir, gave a sacred concert under the direction of Mr. Everson Luke. Over £25 was realised at Gunnislake on November 20, for a War Fund, by a concert given by local vocalists and others from Plymouth, with M. Scher as pianist; and for the same object, at Ilayle, on November 23, an orchestral concert was given, led by Miss J. Thomas, with vocal quartets sung by an excellent local party. The same funds were further augmented by a miscellaneous concert at St. Austell on the same date.

A choir of sixty voices was conducted by Mr. C. Spargo at Stithians on November 23, in choruses and part-songs; and at Saltash, on November 26, a band and party from Wearde Camp gave a successful concert for Prisoners of War funds.

A sacred concert was given by Busveal Wesleyan Choir on December 1, and concerted vocal music was prominent in the programmes of concerts at Trevellas and at Mousehole on December 2.

Roskear Girls' Choir and Camborne Ladies' Choir, both very efficient combinations, sang choruses and part-songs on December 7 at Camborne, supported by an orchestra of forty performers; and a party from Mullion gave a concert at Mevagissey on the same date. The band of the Royal Marines, Portsmouth Division, played at Falmouth on December 11. At Camborne, on December 13, Mr. James Martin's orchestra of forty performers was augmented by Redruth Orchestra, and played an excellent programme.

LIVERPOOL.

The third Philharmonic concert, on November 30, offered a well-varied programme which included Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony, Balfour Gardiner's thrilling 'News from Whydah,' Butterworth's Rhapsody, 'A Shropshire Lad,' and the 'Four Concerts' by Eugène Goossens, jun., who himself conducted the first performance of his recently-completed orchestral version. The titles of these short pieces, which take but eight minutes in performance, are 'The Gargoyle,' 'Dance Memories,' 'A Walking Tune,' and 'The Marionette Show.' What has been written about Mr. Goossens's harmonic daring, and his notable achievements as a miniaturist, applies with equal force to these latest instances of his individuality and surpassing skill in orchestral device, which in the 'Gargoyle' is applied with almost uncanny realism. Similar advanced technique is shown in the other numbers, with perhaps less immediate assimilation by the hearers in the case of 'Dance Memories,' a study in elusive harmonies in unrelated keys, and in the 'Walking Tune.' Butterworth's Rhapsody, 'A Shropshire Lad,' also illustrates an idea suggested by a title, but surely his music leaves the emotions free, while enlisting our imagination. Mr. Goossens conducted it sympathetically, but one has heard more impressive performances of Tchaikovsky's F minor Symphony, especially as regards the pizzicato. If Mr. Goossens has any weakness as a conductor, is it not in taking things rather fast? In this instance the Symphony was gone through in seven minutes less than the usual scheduled time. Under Dr. Pollitt's direction the band and choir (who sang alertly) gave an inspiring account of Balfour Gardiner's dramatic music to Masefield's grimly-humorous ballad, which received its second performance by the Society on this occasion. Other features of the concert were the 'Coriolanus' and 'Benvenuto Cellini' Overtures, and the extraordinarily brilliant vocalism of Miss Mignon Nevada in the 'Mad Scene' from 'Lucia,' in the 'Bell Song' from 'Lakmé' and in Cyril Scott's 'Blackbirds' Song,' in which the flautist, Mr. Redfern, contributed an exquisitely-played obbligato, as he did also in the Donizetti aria.

Mr. Josef Holbrooke has found staunch admirers in Liverpool, and appeared in fine form at his concert in Crane Hall on December 9, when this greatly gifted composer-pianist was recalled again and again after playing examples of the pianoforte music of to-day. In a characteristic programme-note he wrote that it is useless for him to play Chopin, Schumann, &c. Every pianist is doing this at present. So few devote themselves to the music being written to-day, that he wishes to do his best for it, always remembering that he is not anxious to assume the 'pianist-virtuoso' mantle, being primarily a composer. He truly remarked that in a country which loves its old favourites, it is not easy to introduce new and strange music. But Mr. Holbrooke's artistic powers outshine those of the mere pianoforte-virtuoso in combining as they do such interpretative qualities as he possesses and displays, especially in modern pianistic problems. Playing from book as he did (and for which he apologised), it would yet be difficult indeed to imagine more delightful presentments of John Ireland's scintillating modernities, 'Ragamuffin' and 'Chelsea Reach,' Cyril Scott's 'Elephant's Dance' and 'Rainbow Trout,' de Severac's 'Coin de Cimetière,' and his own masterly and epoch-marking Variations on 'Auld Lang Syne.' His accompaniments to the songs contributed by Miss Astra Desmond and Mr. George Paw'o were also models of masterly skill and appropriate tone-colouring. Miss Desmond exhibited a rich and vibrant mezzo-soprano voice, which she employed with great art. She sang with exceptional charm in Holbrooke's 'Killary,' Ireland's exquisite 'Sea Fever,' and Cyril Scott's 'Chinese Picnic.' Mr. Paw'o, a Finnish tenor, is an artistic and expressive singer who made the most of some lugubrious vocal examples by Melartin, Palmgren, and Sibelius. He also sang Holbrooke's remarkable setting of Poe's 'Annabel Lee,' Bantock's 'A Feast of Lanterns,' and Frank Bridge's 'Love went a-riding.' The programme and performance provided a feast of good things.

Two happenings among recent events which deserve to be chronicled are the matinee performance given by Miss Jean Sterling Mackinlay in the Repertory Theatre on November 21, and the lecture on 'Nerve Control' given by Mr. Ernest Hunt to a large gathering of the local Music Teachers' Association in Rushworth Hall on December 7. Miss Mackinlay applies exceptional gifts of voice and gesture in the interpretation of old songs, which find new inspiration and meaning in her fascinating performances. Her own deeply-felt emotions of pathos and passion, as well as archness and humour, find response in all who come under her spell. Whether in such examples as 'Caller Herrin' (one of her mother's great songs), 'Ould John Braddlem,' 'Whistle, daughter, whistle,' 'Get up and bar the door, O,' or in Lucy Broadwood's delightful 'The Tree in the Valley,' or, in deeper vein, Cecil Sharp's arrangement of the old secular carol, 'King Herod and the Cock,' or the sacred mystery of the 'Cherry Tree Carol,' she is supreme. Miss Mackinlay, while an interesting study in heredity, is also a great artist in her own right. Mr. Ernest Hunt is another example, he being the able son of a brilliant father, the late Dr. W. H. Hunt, of Birkenhead, who was the first Mus. Doc. of London University. Of practical experience as a teacher, singer, and successful writer of song-lyrics, Mr. Hunt is also an authority on 'Nerve Control,' and his cogent address was followed with evident attention and appreciation. It opened up new vistas for intellectual study, of which at present we know too little. Nerve-force can be trained and tempered, and its manifestations brought under control, in like manner as the more gross muscular body can be disciplined. It is all a matter of intelligent direction and persistence. The training of the subconscious mind which governs our thought-conceptions can be accomplished by all who apply themselves diligently in that direction. 'Courage-thoughts' can be as readily suggested and acquired as 'fear-thoughts.' The lecturer recommended students and teachers of music deliberately to aim at acquiring mental concentration, thereby lessening the drudgery of incessant digital labour.

Two representative Cathedral organists, Mr. H. G. Ley, of Christ Church, Oxford, and Mr. T. H. Collinson, of St. Mary's, Edinburgh, took part in the interesting series of organ-recitals which have been given on the new Rushworth organ in Hope Street Church, on November 28 and December 12 respectively. Mr. Ley handled the instrument with excellent effect in Harwood's first Organ Sonata, and in three of Parry's Choral Preludes. His reading of the familiar Wesley Larghetto in F sharp minor was less acceptable, the solo melody being played on a stopped-diapason, and taken at funeral pace. Mr. Collinson also played a Wesley piece, the fine 'Choral Song and Fugue,' and three movements of Widor's fifth Symphony.

The Post Office Choral Society has been kept well together considering prevalent difficulties, and at its concert on December 11 evidence of good material and training was again revealed in a performance of Goring-Thomas's tuneful Cantata, 'The Swan and the Skylark.' The choir is well-balanced and powerful, and reflects great credit on the fine public service from which it springs. The solo numbers were taken by Miss Mary Fielding, Miss Hilda Cragg-James, Mr. Furness Williams, and Mr. Klinton Shepherd. After ably holding the post of conductor for six years, Mr. Arthur Davies has resigned, and will be succeeded by Mr. H. Goss-Custard.

Pianists at the Wednesday Mid-day recitals in Rushworth Hall have included Miss Gladys Scollick, Mr. Frank Bertrand, and Miss Marjorie Sotham. Mr. J. C. Hock (cellist) and the Tobin Pianoforte Trio (Mr. John Tobin, pianoforte, Mr. John Lawson, violin, and Mr. Walter Hatton, cello) has also appeared. This able Trio, on November 27, introduced the melodious and musicianly Trio in C minor, Op. 71, by Mr. William Faulkes, and Ernest Austin's fourth Trio in one movement, Op. 26, both works being representative of two clever English musicians. A first performance was also given by Mr. Tobin and Mr. Lawson of the arresting first movement of John Ireland's Sonata No. 1, in D minor.

Notable among the Musical Wednesday Afternoons at Crane Hall was the pianoforte recital given on December 4 by Mr. Julian Clifford, the Harrogate conductor, whose great executive facility and artistic taste enabled him to deal resourcefully with the 'Moonlight' Sonata, Debussy's Toccata, and Chopin's C sharp minor Scherzo. A group of graceful original compositions also found favour.

Mr. Vasco Akeroyd has happily recovered from his serious breakdown followed by influenza, which occurred after the first concert of the Symphony Orchestra's new series held in the Central Hall on November 19. At this concert the vocalist was Miss Doris Woodall, and Mr. Arnold Trowell played Haydn's Violoncello Concerto, in which the interpolated cadences appeared to be of much more recent date. The fine orchestra played very well in the 'Pathetic' Symphony, a work in which Mr. Akeroyd specialises. It is satisfactory to hear that he has resumed work, but the remaining concerts are necessarily postponed.

Mr. H. J. Westhead, a local entrepreneur, is adopting a spirited policy in providing Saturday afternoon concerts in the Philharmonic Hall, which recall the traditions of the old Harrison Concerts in assembling great artists. At the first concert, on November 23 there were assembled Madame Stralia, M. Melsa, M. Vallier, Miss Adela Verne, and a débutante, Madame Eunice Westhead, whose sympathetic contralto voice and artistic style made a favourable impression. On December 14, Mr. Moiseiwitsch played Balakirev's remarkable epic of the East, 'Islamey,' and Miss Marie Hall, with Miss Carrie Tubb, and Mr. Walter Bridson as accompanist, carried through a successful programme.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.

Having put his opera house offer into definite shape, Sir Thomas Beecham lost no time in launching his campaign of propaganda to be carried on during the next five years or so. Characteristically enough he did this at the annual meeting of the Royal Manchester College of Music. It was on a similar occasion and in the same hall two or three years ago that he poured scorn on colleges of music, and the quality of students turned out by them. Some of his challenges were taken up. At least one of his operatic tenors was trained at this self-same College; another helped him out of a hole (though not of Sir Thomas's digging) at a Hallé concert soon after his speech; a good many string-players of the war-time Hallé Orchestra were products of the Royal Manchester College of Music; and his challenge to baritone students and their ability to interpret such music as the solo-part in Delius's 'Sea Drift,' was answered to the satisfaction at any rate of the composer, although, oddly enough, that success has been barren of any further result to the singer concerned. But if this earlier and rather capricious outburst was mainly destructive, Sir Thomas was in a constructive mood on November 29.

Writing in these columns twelve months ago, in November, 1917, I emphasised the constant, fertilising influence of the Hallé Orchestra since 1857 in preparing the ground for these 20th century developments. Comment was also made on the certainty that with Sir Thomas identifying himself with the management of the College of Music, it would virtually become a 'nursery' for young operatic singers and players, who would thus pass directly into the profession instead of being cast adrift on the seas of musical life. It is worth while recalling these among other points, because Sir Thomas, on November 29, insisted that the Manchester College of Music 'should be the fons et origo in the great movement that must now go forward all through the North of England.' He added that 'it is useless trying to found a great theatre in any district without identifying with it the rising talent of that part of the country. . . .

The College must play its part; it should be able to provide him—and the Institution and organization he was to found in the next five years—every year with half-a-dozen excellent singing pupils who would be in a position to go right into an operatic organization. 'This,' he said, 'is done in other countries, and must be done here.' Again, on the other point: 'If Manchester's public had not been trained for fifty or sixty years by its splendid orchestral concerts, it would have been impossible to give four months of opera.' Further preparation of the public mind will, however, have to be taken in hand; operatic appreciation classes, or something akin to these, will have to be inaugurated. Lecture-recitals would be another valuable aid; a systematic development of opera brochures similar to the 'Operführer' of the big Continental centres, at the cost of a few coppers; in fact any and all means of familiarising the mind of the public with the plots and stories, and with the numerous musical aspects of the newer or less frequently performed operas. Concert-platform performances of such things as 'Faust' or 'Cavalleria' may possibly be justified in the remoter, smaller, and musically starved centres, but in Manchester it is quite ludicrous when the real article can be heard and seen so easily. Personally I am not over-keen on the platform-performance of lengthy operatic excerpts at symphony orchestral concerts, although acknowledging freely their educational value to such an enterprise as the Beecham Opera in its present state of development. Amongst singers I am sure interest in matters operatic can be stimulated in the Manchester area if there existed a competitive musical festival, where in the solo and ensemble classes operatic music could be prescribed as test-pieces. From my own knowledge of these festivals in the last dozen years prior to 1914, I could name half-a-dozen men and women who through such means got their first start in what led ultimately to regular operatic work. Both in Lancashire and in Wales, possessors of rattling good voices and of temperament have been brought to light, but in the absence of any channels connecting festivals with colleges of music and thence with opportunities for practical operatic study and practice, the best possible use has not been made of the voices when found. Sir Thomas further alluded to the importance of the work carried on in Elementary Schools: 'We should resolutely keep from the observation of the child in the Elementary School all indifferent and unworthy music; if that were done the child would grow up with his or her taste not half but almost fully formed.' Again may one direct the attention of the Beecham powers-that-be to the fact that this is precisely what has happened in all competitive musical festival centres, where the children's classes have been handled in an enlightened manner. Under the Manchester Education Committee (and the same is true of Salford) much that is good is being done, and a progressive festival policy pursued in Manchester and Salford would produce still better results. There are men and women here who know what needs to be done and how best to do it, and if Sir Thomas Beecham would go into these matters and back with his enthusiasm and means the promotion of such a festival scheme, he will lay a good many foundation-stones on which to erect his edifice of a future music-appreciating public.

By the time this journal is published Beecham's fifth Manchester operatic season will be in progress. During the Christmas and New-Year holidays the operas were wisely of the 'box office' genre. From January 6 a six weeks' subscription season will run, during which Verdi's 'Falstaff' will receive its first performance by this Company, and Manchester will also gain its first acquaintance with the Beecham production of Puccini's 'Manon Lescaut,' Wagner's 'Valkyrie,' Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Coq d'Or,' and Moussorgsky's 'Khovantchina.' A revival of 'Othello' will gladden many habitués.

On November 23 and 28 we heard for the first time here Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Antar,' under Beecham, and Ravel's 'Valse nobles et sentimentales' under Goossens. A few of us had heard the Russian work at the Musical League concerts some years ago at Liverpool, under the late Harry Evans. Now, as then, the predominant impression was the utter absence of any logical cohesion such as is connoted by the term 'symphonic suite.' Call it pure phantasy tricked out in all imaginable orchestral devices and hues, exceedingly piquant, and up to a point enjoyable for, say, fifteen minutes; but thirty-five minutes of it weighed too heavily on the senses. One has not felt thus with other works of his, or of his compatriots, and I hardly expect this to achieve any popularity comparable to, say, 'Scheherazade.'

Both in the 'Antar' and in the Ravel 'Valse' there was lacking the complete abandon, the zest of every player revelling in his task. Yet even with this deficiency, the Ravel music gripped the imagination, and not all ballet-music transferred to the platform does that. Listening to these 'Valse,' my mind travelled back many years to a Richter programme illustrative of the dance, and his Viennese handling of the Ländler: how ponderous, how dull, alongside this sparkling, nimble-witted stuff! This is the sort of music one feels would chime with the spirit of a winter-sports holiday in the Bernese Oberland—sunshine, glistening, dancing lights on the snow in the still, clear atmosphere, all radiant and buoyant. One wanted to bathe in its stimulating harmonies just as in the Alpine noontide sunshine. To Mr. Goossens, jun., we are greatly indebted for successfully overcoming the difficulties of securing this performance.

Holbrooke's 'Queen Mab' Scherzo and Hamilton Harty's 'Wild Geese' Poem must be dealt with next month, as also the very-much-alive readings of 'Messiah' under both Sir Thomas Beecham and Sir Henry Wood.

The last few weeks have brought us into touch with much chamber-music of first-class quality. A Birmingham pianist, Miss Marjorie Sotham, has gradually worked her way into genuine recognition here. Associated with the Catterall Quartet, Mr. J. Hock, Miss Dorothy Silk, &c., she has introduced plenty of new music—e.g., Dupont's Pianoforte Quintets and Liszt's Pianoforte transcription of the famous Paganini Variations in A minor. In the Brahms F minor Quintet, and also in the same composer's 'Cello and Pianoforte Sonata in F (Op. 99), one had momentary doubts of her capacity for maintaining an accurate adjustment of tonal balance. In the Brahms Sonata her companion, as usual, freely indulged his predilection for imaginative pianissimo playing, but their moods as players did not achieve unity in idea or execution, and this defect was still more noticeable in the Brahms Quintet. As a solo player she has many of the qualities making for success.

The Catterall Quartet concert on November 23 showed in three Beethoven works that these players will have nothing to fear by comparison with the famous Continental and American quartets if ever they should visit us again. Their own visit to London of last Spring ought to be followed by visits to Paris and Brussels. They are fortunate in possessing instruments of quite unusual quality.

The first two Brodsky Quartet concerts, on November 21 and December 12, were notable for a new Pianoforte Quintet, still in MS., by Sydney H. Nicholson. Not many men spending the bulk of their time in the musical atmosphere of ecclesiastical establishments have succeeded so completely in banishing all trace of its influence in their compositions. This work has healthy, vigorous, melodic strength, and in the third movement exploits the gavotte rhythm in quite piquant manner. Miss Lucy Pierce is an ideal associate for trio or quartet work, and both she and her colleagues played in the Quintet with evident enjoyment. A few days later it was repeated at the Tuesday Noon-time concerts.

On December 12 came Busoni's Sonata No. 2, in E major, first played here in 1902 by Dr. Brodsky and the late W. H. Dayas. More recently it was performed by the composer and Kreisler, and on this occasion Dr. Brodsky and Mr. R. J. Forbes were the executants. It is one of the things to enthuse about to-day. Whatever obscurities it had for us in 1902, its informing spirit harmonized in ideal fashion with the moods of the present moment, and the interpretation under notice had that quality, easier recognized than described, which we are wont to term spirituality. There must be rare community of thought and mood, alike of composers and players, to achieve such interpretative power. Although the fine Schubert Quintet followed, I wanted no more music that night.

The Bowden Chamber Concerts have entered upon their eleventh season. On December 10 Messrs. Catterall, Forbes, and Hock played the Tchaikovsky Trio (Op. 50), and Beethoven in B flat (Op. 97). The singing of Miss Phyllis Archibald was hardly on the same high plane of excellence as the playing of the Trio.

Although much of this contribution has been devoted to the influence of the Royal Manchester College of Music, yet a few lines must be devoted to the Armistice Celebration concert on December 10. Miss Brema arranged the 'Prologue to Peace' from the opening of Rameau's 'Castor and Pollux.' Then followed Elgar's 'Carillon,' three Belgian songs by Paul Kocks, and other interesting things, altogether a programme off the beaten track, that satisfied both artistic and emotional senses in a much higher degree than either the Hallé or Brand Lane concerts. Why not repeat it in the Free Trade Hall, or in one of the theatres, with Rameau's orchestration?

Mr. Albert J. Cross's Manchester School of Music's concert on December 11 was chiefly conspicuous for the violin-playing of Miss Nellie Osbaldiston in Max Bruch's 'Romance.' Three orchestral works received their first performance in Manchester—Stewart Macpherson's 'On Scotia's Hills,' Ernest Ford's 'Scène Bacchanale,' and Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Scotch Rhapsody,' written in 1879.

NORWICH.

The Philharmonic Society opened its present season with a most successful performance of 'Judas Maccabæus' on Thursday, December 12. The work proved to be singularly appropriate for the present time, and attracted a very large audience. During an interval in the performance the Deputy Lord Mayor (in the unavoidable absence of the Lord Mayor) gave an account of the war work undertaken by the Philharmonic and Choral Societies during the last four years. Considerable sums of money were raised for local war work, and free concerts given to soldiers. Dr. Bates and the members of the Society were recently thanked by the civic authorities for all they had done, and for having provided the usual series of high-class concerts during the whole period of the war.

After the speech of the Deputy Lord Mayor a verse of the 'Old Hundredth' was sung by choir and audience, who remained standing until the close of the chorus 'Sing unto God,' which, with a verse of the National Anthem, brought the concert to a conclusion. The soloists were Miss Caroline Hatchard, Miss Dorà Arnell, Mr. Richard Ripley, and Mr. David Brazell. Mr. Haydon Hare was at the organ, and Dr. Fred Bates conducted.

OXFORD.

On November 13, the new Professor of Music, Dr. H. P. Allen, organist and Fellow of New College, gave his inaugural lecture in the Sheldonian Theatre, the subject being 'Music in the University of Oxford since 1626: a Survey and a Forecast.' The chair of music here, said the Professor, was founded in 1626 by Dr. William Heather, who was a great friend of Camden, and it was at the suggestion of the latter that the chair was established. Thus the work of the 'famous fourteen' who had directed and carried on 'the divine art' in this ancient seat of learning extended roughly-speaking over three centuries.

Some amusement was caused by the lecturer reading a record of the conferment of the Doctor's degree upon Heather in company with Orlando Gibbons, the 'Music' (i.e., the Exercise or Composition) being written by Gibbons and made to do duty for Heather as well!

In 1592, when Queen Elizabeth visited Oxford, all the professors of the University were told to be in readiness to deliver their lectures at any time required, but the musical men were vouchsafed a special private hint, 'because, though skilful as musicians, they are not so learned in the Latin tongue as other University men, so that more care on their part is needed.'

We have not space to touch upon more than two or three Professors who have occupied the chair since its foundation, but things must have got into a superlative state of slackness in the days of Crotch and Sir Henry Bishop, who were both non-resident, and only saw Oxford once a year the occasion being the Enconia. On the other hand, in 1858, Sir Frederick Ouseley instituted thoroughly good examinations, and worked hard to put matters on a more solid basis. The lecturer paid him a well-deserved compliment. Ouseley was followed by Sir John Stainer, who notably extended the influence of the foundation. Next came Sir Hubert Parry—our English Bach, as we delight in calling him—who raised the status of the musical degree to a remarkably high level, and through him the lecturer said music had been wonderfully blessed. Dr. Allen went on to say that Parry's writings owed their origin in a great measure to the influence of Oxford, and were a contribution to the Art of music which would remain for many years the best compositions of their kind. It seems almost unnecessary to add that Parry's lead was scrupulously followed by his successor, Sir Walter Parratt. In venturing to forecast the future, the Professor said he hoped that when again we returned to normal times the sphere of usefulness of music would be considerably enlarged.

On Sunday, December 1, an excellent concert was given in the Sheldonian under the able direction of Dr. Allen, the principal item being Bach's Magnificat, which was last heard here about four years ago. This setting of the Magnificat is very strongly tinged with Italian influences, a flavour that characterises also many similar works of Handel. Say what we will, the choral voices appear to revel in this type of composition, and on this occasion their interpretation taken as a whole, was superb. The soloists were Miss Salvin, Miss Cropper, Mr. Child, and Miss Greeves-Johnson, who all alike were admirable. The Cantata, 'Sleepers, wake,' was also included in the programme, the same soloists taking part, and the choir as before singing excellently. The Concerto in F, with its solos for violin, flute, oboe, and trumpet, came as a welcome relief after the masses of vocal tone.

Mention must be made of the inclusion also of two beautiful Carols, 'I sing the birth' and 'Welcome, Yule,' both by Sir Hubert Parry. So delightful indeed were they that they ought to be widely known.

Musical Notes from Abroad.

ROME.

THE WINTER SEASON IN ROME.

After the lugubrious report which I contributed last month on the present state of music in the Eternal City, it is pleasant to be able to assert that with the dawn of peace there is also a promise of better things in the artistic world. As I write we are at the eve of the re-opening of the Augusteum, when the famous Sunday Afternoon Concerts will be resumed under the ordinary direction of Signor Molinari, the director of the Accademia di Sta. Cecilia. Amongst the other conductors of whom a visit is promised us, one notes the names of Vittorio Gui and Maurice Ravel. The Spanish pianist, Richard Viñes, is also to give a couple of concerts, and there will be a special commemoration of Debussy, with a concert devoted exclusively to his works. A particularly interesting feature of the season for a Roman audience will be an 'America Day,' devoted to the music of our transatlantic Allies. Amongst the novelties promised are 'Joan of Arc,' by Enrico Bossi, written for solo, choir, and orchestra, and a sacred drama, 'St. Agnes,' also for choir and orchestra, by Licinio Refici, master of the cappella of St. Mary Major (and therefore a successor of Palestrina, as I mentioned last month).

The Costanzi Theatre, departing from the traditional opening on St. Stephen's evening, will commence the Winter operatic season on December 19, and the première is to be Verdi's 'Don Carlos,' a work last presented in Rome in 1910, when it was hailed as a novelty for the new generation, having previously been unknown on the Roman stage for twenty years. The choice of this opera has given rise to some unfavourable criticism in Roman musical circles, but I will defer any further remarks till my report of its revival. The Winter programme of the Costanzi (only just published, by the way) contains three Puccinian novelties—'Il Tabarro,' 'Suor Angelica,' and 'Gianni Schicchi,' whose proximate completion I mentioned in the Musical Times of July, 1917, and which will be directed by the author. The other novelties promised us are 'L'Amore dei tre Re' ('The love affair of the three kings'), by Marinuzzi (who by the way, is to be the ordinary conductor for the season), 'Tuc man,' by Boero, and 'Mirra,' of Alaleone. Of the eagerly-awaited 'Nerone' no mention is yet made, but a representation of 'Mefistofele' will bear the character of a commemoration of Boito; and on the whole it is to be confessed that the programme promises matter of varied and lively interest.

LEONARD PEYTON.

Miscellaneous.

The committee of the Summer School of Church Music has arranged a Conference to be held at St. Paul's Chapter House from January 14 to 16 inclusive. The basis of the discussions will be the important section on Church Music in the Archbishops' report. The need for training will be the dominant idea. The musical training of clergy, choirmasters, organists, and congregations will form the subject of conferences on successive days. Applications for time-table and other particulars should be made as soon as possible to the Rev. A. S. Duncan-Jones, St. Mary's Vicarage, Primrose Hill, N.W. 3.

Dr. C. H. Kitson, organist of Christ Church Cathedral and Professor of Music at University College, Dublin (National Union), has been appointed Senior Professor of Harmony, Counterpoint, and Composition at the Royal Irish Academy of Music, Dublin.

Mr. E. H. Bibby has relinquished his appointment as Y M C A. music organizer in the South-Western Division, and has returned to Manchester to resume his professional work there.

Lieut. J. Albert Sowerbutts, M.C., assistant music-master at Winchester College, is now safe home after being a prisoner-of-war in Germany.

We regret that several articles from our country correspondents arrived too late for insertion.

	Page
Music during the War	9
Modern British Composers : Introductory Article. By Edwin Evans	10
A Great Artist : G. Francesco Malipiero. By G. Jean-Aubry	13
Interludes	15
The Clavier Toccatas of Bach. By Sydney Grew	17
Occasional Notes	20
Church and Organ Music	21
Manual 32-ft. Stops. By George Dixon	21
A Pressing Need. By Robert T. White	24
Reviews	26
Obituary	26
Letters to the Editor	26
The Local Composer. By Herbert Antcliffe	33
A Musician in the Provinces	34
The late Dr. W. G. McNaught	34
The Novello Choir	34
The Concert Programme. By Arthur T. Froggatt	35
Sir Hubert Parry and the Poet Laureate	36
Royal Academy of Music	37
Royal College of Music	37
London Concerts	37

'When I thy singing next shall hear.' Part-song for Four Voices By J. A. SOWERBUTTS 27

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BACH, J. S.—“Now thank we all our God.” Chorale from “The Lord is a sun and shield.” (No. 232, Novello's Short Anthems.) 1½d.

BENNETT, J. LIONEL.—“In royal robes of splendour.” A Hymn of Apostles and Martyrs. 1s.

CUTTLE, W.—“The Grenadier’s good-bye.” Song.
2s.

DYKES, J. B.—“From East to West.” Hymn of Thanksgiving for Peace. (No. 959, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) Id. Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100.

GERMAN, EDWARD.—“March Paraphrase,” “Men of Harlech,” from Welsh Rhapsody. Full Score, 7s. 6d. Violin 1, 1s.; Violin 2, 1s.; Viola, 1s.; Violoncello, 6d.; Bass, 1s.; Wind Parts, 11s.

— "Rolling down to Rio." Arranged for S.A.T.B.
No. 1,327, Novello's Part-Song Book). 4d.

HAMAND, L. A. Air from County Derry ("The Londonderry Air"). Arranged for the Organ. 1s. 6d.

HARDING, G. Vesper Hymn ("Holy Father, Great Creator"). 2d ; 1s. 6d. per dozen.

HARRISON, HARRY. Pax Triumphans. "O God of Power! our great Defender." Hymn. 6d.

HARTOG, CÉCILE. — "Song of the Judeans."
Marching Song. 6d.

HAWKES, W. D.—"We praise Thee, O great Master."
Words only, 3s. per 100.

MAUDE, CAROLINE.—"Freda and the Fairies."
Operetta in two Acts for children. Libretto by Percy French. 2s.

NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS :
No. 386, "When Christ was born." M. B. FOSTER. 1d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 319), contains the following music in both notations:—"Twilight is falling." Unison Song, by GEORGE RATHBONE. "Since first I saw your face." Unison Song, by T. FORD. 13d.

SHARP, CECIL J.—"Country Dance Tunes." Set 9.
For "The Running Set." Arranged for Pianoforte
Solo. 1s. 6d.

No. 2292. "Hymn before Action." For S.A.T.B.
H. WALFORD DAVIES 188d.

„ 2293. "Sir Eglamore." For S A T.B.
H. BALFOUR GARDINER 2d.

TONKING, H. C.—“Remember those.” Hymn and Tune. On card. 3d.

WILSON, A. W.—"O Light everlasting." Short Anthem.
For Boys' Voices. (No. 63, Novello's Chorister Series.) 3d.

Oratorio, Concerts, Receptions, &c. For vacant dates, address
67, Ashbourne Avenue, Mitcham, Surrey.

ST. SAVIOUR, FALKNER SQUARE, LIVERPOOL—The post of Organist and Choirmaster is now vacant, owing to the death of Dr. J. Heroet England, Mus. Soc., F.R.C.O. Applications, with copies of not more than three testimonials, to Rev. H. S. Broadbent, 52, Upper Parliament Street, Liverpool. Please state salary required.

FOR SALE.—MODERN CHAMBER ORGAN.
1 Manual and Pedals, 4 stops on Manual, and Pedal Bourdon ;
2 Couplers; hand and foot blower; pneumatic action throughout.
Oak case. Mrs. H., Doveley, Rocester, Staffs.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER required for Holy Trinity Church, Elgin, N.B. Apply, with testimonials, to Canon Hay-Dinwoody, Rector, Elgin. State age, experience, &c. Salary, £50-£60.

THE WORDS BY

P. J. O'REILLY

THE MUSIC BY

FRANK JEPHSON.

In Two Keys, E flat and F.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

*To ensure insertion in their proper positions,
Advertisements for the next issue should reach
the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.-1, not later than*

THURSDAY, JANUARY 23 (FIRST POST.)

THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SCALE OF TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Two Lines	--	--	1..	--	--	£	s.	d.
Three Lines	..	..	..	..	..	0	3	0
For every additional Line						0	3	4
One inch (displayed)	..	..	..	..	..	0	10	0
Half a Column	..	..	..	..	..	2	0	0
A Column	..	..	..	..	..	4	0	0
A Page	..	..	..	..	..	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

PENITENCE

PARDON AND PEACE

J. H. MAUNDER.

The Musical Times, 1/1/99: "An admirable example of a commendable class of Church music. Consists of writing of that melodious and effective nature for which the composer is so widely famed."

Musical Opinion, 1/2/98: "A fine Church composition."

Musical News, 15/1/98: "We have no hesitation in cordially recommending it."

Musical Standard, 5/3/98: "Deserves considerable popularity."

Organist and Choirmaster, 15/2/98: "For the music we have nothing but praise."

Birmingham Post, 5/3/98: "The music is of a high artistic value."

Liverpool Courier, 2/8/98: "A work of great merit in every respect."

Manchester Courier, 9/3/98: "It will doubtless be used in many quires and places where they sing."

Newcastle Leader, 23/2/98: "A well-written work."

Western Morning News, 25/3/98: "A good composition. Striking and original."

Chester Chronicle, 16/4/98: "A beautiful work, very tuneful, and exceedingly effective."

Lichfield Mercury, 4/2/98: "Extremely effective, containing some really beautiful music."

Journal of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, 1/2/98: "A well-written work. We can strongly recommend it."

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 2s. 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words, 2s. per 100.

Band Parts may be hired or purchased from Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb, 34, Percy Street, W.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOW THANK WE ALL OUR GOD.

CHORALE FROM THE CANTATA

THE LORD IS A SUN AND SHIELD.

COMPOSED BY

J. S. BACH,

WITH FREE ACCOMPANIMENT.

Price, Three-halfpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ORGAN MUSIC

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, MUS. D. CANTAB.

	s.	d.
First Set of Twelve Short Easy Pieces	2	0
Second Set Do. do.	2	6
Largo in E flat	1	0
Minuetto in D	1	6
Fantasia alla Marcia in C	1	6
Toccata in A major	1	6
Two Short Pieces—Larghetto in F major, Pastorale in A major	1	6
Two Sketches—Adagio in F sharp major, Andante in D flat	1	6
Introduction, Air with Variations, and Finale Fugato in B flat...	2	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE LORD'S PRAYER

COMPOSED BY

BORTNIANSKY

Arranged for use in St. Margaret's, Westminster,

BY

EDWIN STEPHENSON.

Price 4d. net.

J. & W. CHESTER, 11, Great Marlborough Street, London, W. 1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

EIGHT EASY MELODIES

FOR YOUNG BEGINNERS

FOR

VIOLIN

With Pianoforte Accompaniment,

COMPOSED BY

ERNEST NEWTON.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

The pieces are suitable for Solo or Ensemble playing.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE

ORGAN.

(New Series.)

No.			s.	d.
1.	Seven Chorale Preludes (1st Set) ..	C. H. H. Parry	3	6
2.	Prelude in C ..	W. Wolstenholme	1	6
3.	Festval Prelude on "Ein Feste Burg" ..	W. Faulkes	1	6
4.	Meditation ..	W. Faulkes	1	6
5.	Postludium ..	W. Faulkes	1	6
6.	Jour de Noces ..	J. Stuart Archer	1	0
7.	Cantilène ..	R. G. Hailing	1	0
8.	Ite Missa Est .. (Edited by John E. West) ..	J. Lemmens	1	6
9.	Triumphal March (Edited by John E. West) ..	J. Lemmens	1	6
10.	Fanfare .. (Edited by John E. West) ..	J. Lemmens	1	0
11.	Cantabile .. (Edited by John E. West) ..	J. Lemmens	1	6
12.	Finale .. (Edited by John E. West) ..	J. Lemmens	1	6
13.	A Fantasy ..	C. Edgar Ford	1	6
14.	Intermezzo (A Marriage Souvenir) ..	W. Wolstenholme	1	6
15.	Legend ..	Harvey Grace	1	6
16.	Meditation ..	Alfred Hollins	1	0
17.	Barcarolle ..	A. W. Pollitt	1	0
18.	Cantique ..	Edward Elgar	1	6
19.	Prelude and Fugue in C (Edited by John E. West) ..	J. L. Krebs	2	0
20.	Epilogue ..	W. Wolstenholme	1	6
21.	Suite Ancienne ..	F. W. Holloway	2	6
22.	Fantasia and Fugue ..	C. H. H. Parry	2	6
23.	Voluntary ..	W. G. Alcock	1	0
24.	Impromptu ..	W. G. Alcock	1	0
25.	Legend ..	W. G. Alcock	1	0
26.	Intermezzo ..	J. Stuart Archer	1	6
27.	Twelve Miniatures ..	H. M. Higgs	3	0
28.	Toccata (A study in Staccato) ..	W. G. Alcock	1	6
29.	Romance in A flat ..	H. Sandiford Turner	1	0
30.	Nocturne ..	Thomas F. Dunhill	1	0
31.	Festval Prelude ..	Thomas F. Dunhill	1	6
32.	Caprice of Concert ..	J. Stuart Archer	2	0
33.	Romance ..	H. R. Woleedge	1	0
34.	Prelude in G minor in 7/4 time ..	W. S. Vale	1	0
35.	Romanza ..	Alfred Hollins	1	0
36.	Festval Prelude ..	Alec Rowley	2	0
37.	Romance with Variations ..	J. Stuart Archer	2	0
38.	Tone-Poems ..	Oliver King	2	0
39.	Allegretto Scherzando ..	J. Stuart Archer	2	0
40.	Nocturne ..	H. R. Woleedge	1	0
41.	Festval Toccata ..	Percy E. Fletcher	2	0
42.	Praeludium Pastorale ..	J. Stainer	1	0
43.	Fountain Réverie ..	Percy E. Fletcher	2	6
44.	Ballade in E ..	J. Stuart Archer	1	6
45.	Seven Chorale Preludes (2nd Set) ..	C. Hubert H. Parry	3	0
46.	Prelude on Rorate Coeli ..	Anthony Bernard	1	0
47.	Three Chorale Preludes ..	John E. West	2	6
48.	Berceuse ..	Eric Webster	1	0
49.	Three Short and Easy Postludes ..	F. W. Wadely	1	6
50.	Evening Rest ..	Alfred Hollins	1	6
51.	Scherzo ..	Alfred Hollins	1	0
52.	Wleg No. 2 ..	Charles H. Lloyd	2	6
53.	Morning Song ..	Alfred Holmes	1	6
54.	Five Variations on an Old English Melody ..	J. Stuart Archer	2	6
55.	Chanson D'E poir ..	J. A. Meale	1	6
56.	Scherzo ..	J. A. Meale	1	6

(To be continued.)

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

G. RICORDI & CO., 265, REGENT STREET LONDON, W. I.

THE LARGEST OPERATIC PUBLISHERS IN THE WORLD.

PUBLISHERS OF ALL THE GREAT METHODS OF VOICE-PRODUCTION—CONCONE, BORDOGNI, NAVA, LAMPERTI, PANOFKA, VACCAJ, BONA, PARISOTTI, &c., &c.

Publishers of all the Music (Vocal, Pianoforte, and Instrumental) of the following Grand Operas :—

MADAME BUTTERFLY—PUCCINI.
LA BOHEME—PUCCINI.
TOSCA—PUCCINI.
LE VILLI—PUCCINI.
MANON LESCAUT—PUCCINI.
THE GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST —PUCCINI.
AIDA—VERDI.

OTELLO—VERDI.
RIGOLETTO—VERDI.
FAUSTAFF—VERDI.
DON CARLOS—VERDI.
LA GIOCONDA—PONCHIELLI.
MEFISTOFELE—BOITO.
FRANCESCA DA RIMINI—ZANDONAI.
CONCHITA—ZANDONAI.

QUEEN OF SHEBA—GOLDMARK.
LA WALLY—CATALANI.
DEJANICE—CATALANI.
LA TRAVIATA—VERDI.
IL TROVATORE—VERDI.
THE ANGELUS—NAVLO.
IRIS—MASCAGNI. &c.

ALL WAGNER'S OPERAS :

VOCAL SCORES, with Italian Words ; and PIANOFORTE SCORES (complete).

POUPEE VALSANTE. (The Dancing Doll.) ED. POLDINI.

For Pianoforte Solo. One of the most fascinating and popular Pianoforte Pieces ever written ; it is now played either as a programme item or as an encore by all the leading pianoforte soloists at their recitals.

"THE LITTLE ORCHESTRA"

150 NUMBERS.

For Pianoforte, 1st and 2nd Violins, and Cello (Viola and Bass ad lib.).

"THE THEATRE ORCHESTRA"

105 NUMBERS.

For Strings, Wind, and Percussion (Pianoforte ad lib.).

These include nearly 100 arrangements by the famous EMILE TAVAN. New lists now ready.

NEW EDITION OF THE CELEBRATED VIOLIN WORKS OF THE OLD MASTERS.

Arranged by MONSIEUR J. SALMON, of Paris, with new Pianoforte Accompaniment :—

	NET. s. d.
ANTONIOTTI, G. (1692-1776). Sonate (G minor) ..	3 0
ARIOSTI, A. (1666-1749?). Sonate (E minor) ..	3 6
— Sonate (G major) ..	3 0
BIRCKENSTOCK, J. A. (1687-1733). Sonate (E minor) ..	4 0
BOCCHERINI, L. (1743-1805). Menuet (G major) ..	2 0
BONONCINI, G. B. (1680-17..?). Sonate (A minor) ..	3 6
CAPORALE, A. (16..?-17..?). Sonate (D minor) ..	3 0
CERVETTO, G. (1682-1733). Sonate (C major) ..	3 0
— (1) Adagio et Allegro ; (2) Andante cantabile et Allegro ..	4 0
— Séparés : Adagio et Allegro ..	3 0
— " Andante cantabile et Allegro ..	3 0
— Sonate (G major) ..	4 0
CORELLI, A. (1653-1713). Sonate (D minor) ..	3 0
COUPERIN, F. (1668-1733). Les Chérubins ..	2 6
DALL'ABACO, E. F. (1675-1742). Sonate (F major) ..	3 0
DE FESCH, W. (1695-1758). Sonate (G major) ..	3 0
— (1) Prélude et Allemande ; (2) Sarabande et Menuet ..	3 0
— Séparés : Prélude et Allemande ..	2 6
— Sarabande et Menuet ..	2 0
— Sonate (D minor) ; (1) Sicilienne et Allemande ;
— (2) Andante cantabile ; (3) Menuet ..	3 0
— Séparés : Sicilienne et Allemande ..	2 0
— " Andante cantabile ..	1 6
— Menuet ..	1 6
DUPUIS, J. B. (1741-17..?). Sonate (D major) ..	3 0
ECCLES, H. (1670-1742). Sonate (G minor) ..	3 0
— (1) Grave et Courante ; (2) Adagio et Vivace ..	2 6
— Séparés : Grave et Courante ..	1 6
— Adagio et Vivace ..	2 0
GALLIARD, J. E. (1687-1749). Sonate (G major) ..	3 0
— Sonate (E minor) ..	3 0
GASPARINI, Q. (1715-17..?). Sonate (E minor) ..	3 0
GRAZIOLI, G. B. (1755-1820). Sonate (G major) ..	3 0
GUERINI, F. (1710-1780). Allegro con brio ..	2 6

	NET. s. d.
GUERINI, F. (1710-1780). Sonate (G major) ..	4 0
HERVELOIS, CAIX D' (1670-17..?). Gavotte ..	2 0
— Sonate (A minor) ..	3 6
LECLAIR, J. M. (1697-1764). Tambourin ..	2 0
LEILLET, J. B. (1653-1728). Sonate (A minor) ..	4 0
— Sonate (G major) ..	3 0
MARAI, ROLAND (17..?-17..?). Sonate (C major) ..	4 0
MARCELLO, B. (1686-1739). Sonate (D major) ..	3 0
— (1) Grave et Allegro ; (2) Largo et Vivace ..	3 0
— Séparés : Grave et Allegro ..	2 6
— " Largo et Vivace ..	2 0
— Sonate (E minor) ..	3 0
— Sonate (G major) ..	3 0
— Sonate (G minor) ..	3 0
— Sonate (G major) ..	3 0
— Sonate (F major) ..	3 0
PIANELLI, G. (1725-17..?). Sonate (F major) ..	3 0
PORFORA, N. A. (1681-1769). Sonate (F major) ..	3 0
RAMEAU, J. PH. (1683-1764). Gavotte pour les fleurs du — ballet Les Indes Galantes ..	2 0
— Menuet de l'Opéra Platte ..	2 0
— Gavotte ..	2 0
SAMMARTINI, G. B. (1700-1770). Sonate (G major) ..	3 0
— (1) Allegro ; (2) Grave ; (3) Vivace ..	3 0
— Séparés : Allegro ..	2 0
— " Grave ..	1 0
— Vivace ..	1 6
SENAILLE, J. B. (1687-1730). Allegro spiritoso ..	2 6
— Largo et Gigue ..	2 6
— Menuet ..	2 0
— Sarabande et Allemande ..	2 6
— Vivace ..	2 6
SOMIS, G. B. (1676-1763). Sonate (G major) ..	4 0
TRICKLER, J. B. (1746-1813). Sonate (G major) ..	4 0
VALENTINI, G. (1681-17..?). Sonate (B flat major) ..	3 0

VIOLONCELLO WORKS.—The whole of the Works in the above list have been arranged for Violoncello with new Pianoforte Accompaniment by Monsieur J. SALMON, of Paris.

G. RICORDI & CO., 265, REGENT ST., LONDON, W. I.

ERNEST AUSTIN

PIANO MUSIC

PRELUDES

Op. 56.

No. 1. F major	First Set.	No. 4. A $\flat$ major	Second Set.
„ 2. D major		„ 5. C minor
„ 3. D minor		„ 6. A $\flat$ major

Each Set, Two Shillings net.

(Moderately Difficult.)

MUSIC POEM, No. 2.

Op. 28.

Two Shillings net.

(Difficult.)

TO MUSIC

SEVEN POEMS FOR PIANO,

Two Shillings and Sixpence net.

(Difficult.)

RONDEL

TONE-STANZA No. 15.

One Shilling and Sixpence net.

(Moderately Difficult.)

J. H. LARWAY,

14, WELLS STREET, OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

NOVELLO'S

ELEMENTARY MUSIC MANUALS

No. 1.—PART-WRITING FOR BEGINNERS, by J. W. IVIMEY.

The Rules tabulated are for the guidance of beginners in the Art of Part-writing. Many of them change from rules to recommendations, when the student becomes more advanced. Bound in linen covers. Price 6d.

No. 2.—LESSONS IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Many elementary students of harmony can satisfactorily add parts to figured basses, but are unable to harmonize even simple melodies. This book gives minute instruction which any student can understand. Part I. *Price 1s. 6d.*No. 6.—LESSONS IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Part II. *Price 1s. 6d.*No. 7.—ADDITIONAL EXERCISES IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. *Price 6d.*No. 3.—AN ELEMENTARY MIXED-VOICE SIGHT-SINGING COURSE (Staff Notation through Tonic Sol-fa), by GEORGE LANE. The Exercises are written in the Treble and Bass Clefs, in order that the Book may be used by Male and Female voices in one class. Suitable for Evening Continuation Schools. Part I. *Price 6d.*No. 4.—AN ELEMENTARY MIXED-VOICE SIGHT-SINGING COURSE (Staff Notation through Tonic Sol-fa), by GEORGE LANE. Part II. *Price 6d.*No. 5.—HINTS TO YOUNG VIOLINISTS by C. EGERTON LOWE. *Price 1s.*No. 8.—HINTS ON PIANOFORTE TEACHING (chiefly to Boys), by E. D. RENDALL. *Price 1s. 6d.*No. 9.—SCHOOL CHOIR TRAINING, by MARGARET NICHOLLS. A Practical Course of Lessons on Voice Production for the Guidance of Teachers of Class Singing. Price 2s. (The Appendix, published separately: Hints on Part-Singing and Exercises, 2d.; Sol-fa, 2d.).No. 10.—THE COMPOSITION OF SIMPLE MELODIES by ROBERT T. WHITE. *Price 1s. 6d.*No. 11.—PHYSICAL EXERCISES IN THE INFANT SCHOOL, by MARGARET A. HUGHES. Price 4s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED.

MARCH PARAPHRASE
MEN OF HARLECH

FROM

WELSH RHAPSODY.

FOR FULL ORCHESTRA.

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD GERMAN.

Full Score, Seven Shillings and Sixpence.

String Parts, 4s. 6d.; Wind Parts, 11s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE ELEMENTS OF PIANOFORTE TECHNIQUE
ARRANGED UPON A RHYTHMIC BASIS

BY

DR. R. H. BELLAIRS.

Strongly recommended by the highest authorities.

More work can be done with Dr. Bellairs' Method than with any other.

Eliminates Mechanical Drudgery.

Interests the pupil from the very beginning.

List of companion works and testimonials on receipt of a post-card.Price 2s. 6d. net. Of all Musicsellers.

ENOCH & SONS, LONDON.

Enoch House, 58, Great Marlborough Street, W.1.

"THE FRINGES OF THE FLEET."

EDWARD ELGAR. RUDYARD KIPLING.

THESE FOUR POPULAR SONGS ARE NOW ISSUED FOR

S.A.T.B., octavo, each 1s. net.

Of all Musicsellers.

ENOCH & SONS,

ENOCH HOUSE, 58, GT. MARLBOROUGH ST., W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE COUNTRY DANCE BOOK PART V.

CONTAINING "THE RUNNING SET."

COLLECTED IN KENTUCKY, U.S.A., AND DESCRIBED BY

CECIL J. SHARP

AND

MAUD KARPELES.

*Price 2s. 6d.*COUNTRY DANCE TUNES SET IX.

FOR "THE RUNNING SET."

ARRANGED BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

Price 1s. 6d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST

(Op. 30, No. 1.)

AND

THE DEATH OF MINNEHAHA

(Op. 30, No. 2.)

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

ARRANGED FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

BY

JOHN POINTER.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE EACH.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE MONTHS

TWELVE SKETCHES FOR THE PIANOFORTE

BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN

IN FOUR BOOKS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

CONTENTS:—

BOOK 1.

January. Lullaby for the New Year.
February. (St. Valentine) Flirtations.
March. Boreas.

BOOK 2.

April. In Springtime.
May. Italian Serenade.
June. Birds.

BOOK 3.

July. Butterflies.
August. Mid-day Rêverie.
September. Harvest Hymn.

BOOK 4.

October. Autumn Evening Song.
November. Civic Procession in the Olden Time.
December. Christmas Morn.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA BY THE COMPOSER.

No. 2.	February.	String Parts (5)	... 4s. 0d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	... 2s. 9d.
No. 5.	May.	String Parts (5)	... 1s. 6d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	... 1s. 6d.
No. 6.	June.	String Parts (4)	... 1s. 0d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	... 2s. 6d.
No. 9.	September.	String Parts (5)	... 2s. 6d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	... 5s. 0d.
No. 12.	December.	String Parts (5)	... 2s. 3d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	... 4s. 6d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

FOUNDED IN 1844.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH.

No. 912.—Vol. 60.

Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage.

FEBRUARY 1, 1919.

Price 4d.; Postage 1½d.

Annual Subscription, Post-free, 5s.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., MUS.D.

SATURDAY, MARCH 1, AT 2.30 P.M.

A HYMN OF PRAISE - MENDELSSOHN.

AND OTHER WORKS.

MISS AGNES NICHOLLS.

MISS FLORENCE MELLORS.

MISS GERTRUDE HIGGS.

MR. WALTER HYDE.

MR. GRAHAM SMART.

SATURDAY, MARCH 29, at 2.30 p.m.

HIAWATHA - - - COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

MISS RUTH VINCENT.

MR. BEN DAVIES.

CAPTAIN HERBERT HEYNER.

Full Chorus and Orchestra.

At the Organ: MR. H. L. BALFOUR.

Prices: Stalls, 8s. 6d.; Arena, 7s.; Balcony, 4s. 9d. and 3s.;
Gallery (Promenade), 1s. 3d.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.-1

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: SIR A. C. MACKENZIE, MUS. DOC., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

HALF-TERM begins Monday, February 17th.

Organ Recital, February 3rd, at 3.0.

Fortnightly Concert, February 15th, at 3.

Chamber Concert, February 17th, at 3.

Lectures by the Principal, February 5th, 12th, and 19th, at 2-30.

Edward and Anne Seguin Scholarship for Soprano. Last day for Entry, March 27th.

Prospectus can be obtained on application.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.-7

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams—"Initiative, Southkens, Telephone—"1160, Western."
London."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Director: HUGH P. ALLEN, ESQ., M.A., MUS. DOC.

Honorary Secretary: M. MUIR MACKENZIE, ESQ.

The EASTER HALF-TERM commences on Monday, February
17th, 1919.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age.
Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from The Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND
(Founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c.,
may be had on application.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Sec.

Kensington Gore, S.W.-7

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

PRINCIPAL LANDON RONALD.

NEW TERM BEGAN MONDAY, JANUARY 13TH.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING
in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £7 17s. 6d. and £10 10s., comprising principal and secondary Subjects, Harmony, Sight-
Singing, and / or Orchestra.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local Schools
Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Victoria Embankment, E.C.-4.

ROYAL

MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £30. Special fee for Organ Course, £20, and for Wind Instrument Course, £15.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations,
and Entry Forms, on application.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE.

SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A.

SESSION 1918-1919.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 23 to December 21); WINTER TERM (January 20 to April 5);
SUMMER TERM (April 7 to June 28).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra,
Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Lessons.
Full Orchestral Class, Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras,
Opera, Ensemble, Elocution, Choral, and Harmony, &c., Classes.
Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

UNIVERSITY OF DURHAM.

Examinations for degrees in Music are held as follows: Matriculation,
January, July, and October; First Mus. B., March and September;
Mus. B. and Mus. D., September only.

For particulars, apply Secretary of Examinations, University Offices,
Durham. Copies of former Examination Papers, 1s. 6d. per set.

ADVANCE IN PRICES.

With the exception of folio songs, all the Novello
publications were increased in price on January 1, 1918, but the charges have not been altered in
the advertisement columns.

THE BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY.

Offices: 19, Berners Street, W.-1.
FOR THE FOSTERING OF BRITISH MUSIC.
Membership open to all music-lovers.

Patron: The Rt. Hon. A. J. BALFOUR.
President: THE LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.
Director: A. EAGLEFIELD HULL, Mus. Doc. OXON.
Committee of Management:

Mr. Adrian C. Boulton
Mr. W. W. Cobbett
Mr. Alvin Langdon Coburn
Sir Edward E. Cooper
Mr. W. R. Davies
Mr. Edward J. Dent

Rev. E. H. Fellowes, Mus. Doc.
Col. W. Johnson Galloway
Mr. H. Cart de Lafontaine
Mrs. W. Lee Mathews
Mr. G. Bernard Shaw
Major Geoffrey Toye
W. R. DAVIES, Treasurer.

Particulars from the Acting-Secretary, A. Eaglefield Hull, Mus. Doc. OXON., 19, Berners Street, W.-1.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.-2
Founder and Director: MR. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, Concerts, &c. Telephone Paddington, 5990. Sec., E. B. GOLDING.

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC, LONDON

(Under the direction of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.).

INCORPORATED 1891.

158, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W.-11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.
Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc., Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.
Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.M.
Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O.
ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.
Rev. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. Oxon.
Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects, including the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M. F.V.C.M., also for the Teachers' Professional Diploma in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and December.

Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition.

Local Secretaries required for towns not represented.

Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint; and all other subjects connected with the culture of Music.

SPECIAL CINEMA COURSES in Orchestral, Piano, and Organ-Playing.

All communications to be addressed to The Secretary, Registered Office, 11, Bursleigh Street, Strand, W.C.-2

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH MUSICIANS.

Founded 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI.
Victoria, Cap. cxxxii., § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.D.,
DEAN OF DURHAM.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.), LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.), FELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London and approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

COMPETITIONS, 1919.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best ANDANTE for the ORGAN, and a SHORT ANTHEM with Treble Solo.

BRONZE MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, DOUBLE CHANT, and KYRIE.

Organists (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Vacant Appointments.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of DR. LEWIS, Warden,
158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W.-11.

COMPOSERS.

THE BOARD OF ASSOCIATED COMPOSERS.

President: SUMMERS BROWN.

J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. Bac., F.R.A.M., Director of Revisions.
Composers are assured of receiving the highest professional skill for revision and completion of their works ready for publication. Address, The Secretary, 38, Bedford Street, Strand, W.C.-2.

LYRICS written to suit Music. Ballads preferred.
Violet Hoy, 19, Bath Road, Buxton, Derbyshire.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W.-1

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION.

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.A.M.
DR. ARTHUR S. HOLLOWAY, Mus. Doc. Oxon.; F.R.C.O.
DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.
G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Violin, Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held in APRIL. Last day of entry, March 15.

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, may be had on application to the Secretary.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate (A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, July, and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A. Mus. L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L. Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship (F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented, either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date. For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.

Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 3870.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique: How it feels to Sing." 3s. 6d. each, post 3s. 10d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y.

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—Gentlewoman.

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—Eastern Morning News.

"Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald.

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury.

"Is an acknowledged authority."—"Western Morning News."

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H. Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

THE TECHNIQUER

(THE MASTER KEY TO TECHNIQUE.)

Patented in Great Britain and U.S.A. For all instrumentalists.

Testimonial from G. E. DUNN, Esq., Editor Musical News:—

"I have given the Techniquer a thorough trial, and find its effects quite wonderful. It is a most useful invention for developing powers of technique, and I wish it every success."

Accredited American Representative: Miss Myra F. Hale, Principal, St. Mary's Hall, New Jersey, U.S.A.

Send for particulars and list of testimonials. "Hand Development," 7d. post free. Secretary, Miss Cooper, 33, Orchard Street, W.-1.

PIANO PEDALS with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

THE CATHEDRAL, MANCHESTER,

DEAR MR. MALKIN,

Nov. 8, 1910.

I think your Patent Pedal Attachment, which you have fitted to my Steinway, is simply splendid. I find the action absolutely silent and its touch beautiful.—Yours truly,

R. H. P. COLEMAN, F.R.C.O., Sub-Organist.

Terms: Cash, or instalments of 20s. per month.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

Works—Hanley, Staffs.

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

BECOME A GOOD PIANIST WITHOUT CONSTANT "PRACTISING."

ALL necessity for "KEYBOARD DRUDGERY" has been abolished by my "From Brain to Keyboard" System. Instead of spending years in wearisome "practising" for several hours daily, you need give only a few minutes for a few months twice daily.

The mastery of the piano which my System will give you is unattainable by the slow and laborious "practice" methods, even though you spend years in diligent drudgery.

Improvement starts with the very first lesson, and success is certain whatever your age or proficiency. The lessons are given by post, and will be carefully adapted to your individual requirements, my personal attention being given to each student. No apparatus or special notation is used.

Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. 10,000 successful students.

SEND FOR MY ILLUSTRATED BOOK:
"Light on Pianoforte Playing."

This book fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in my Postal Course, and should be read by pianists of all grades of proficiency. When replying, please send 3d. for part war-time cost and postage, and state whether average or advanced pianist.

M. MACDONALD SMITH,
19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE, LONDON, W.C. 1

"From Brain to Keyboard"

CHARLES TREE

RECITAL LECTURES THROUGHOUT GREAT BRITAIN.

CANON OWEN, King William College, writes, December 4: "You should, in the public interest, visit all Training Colleges. As an entertainment your lecture and singing were much enjoyed; but its educational value is very high. The simplicity of your methods, the clearness with which you explain both right and wrong production, are very telling. I have already used your method successfully with two boys who were producing wrongly."

Shrewsbury Outlook, December 13: "A full house. It was undoubtedly the best of its kind ever presented by the society. Most instructive, interspersed with delightful humorous touches; the interest was maintained throughout. He sang fifteen songs, to illustrate, with all his wonderful ease, freshness, power, and purity of tone. A great musical treat." New Address: 14, Courtfield Gardens, Kensington, S.W. 5. (Western 5386.)

DANIEL MAYER & Co., Ltd.

FORMERLY

CONCERT-DIRECTION DANIEL MAYER

(ESTABLISHED 1890).

REPRESENTING THE WORLD'S LEADING ARTISTS.

Concert and Musical Arrangements under the direction of

PEDRO J. TILLET

CHATHAM HOUSE, GEORGE STREET,
HANOVER SQUARE, W.-1.

Telegrams:—Keynote, London. Telephone, Mayfair 3017.

BAND INSTRUMENTS AND MUSIC FOR IMMEDIATE SALE.—A number of Band Instruments and a large quantity of music, all in good condition. Full particulars and authority to inspect these instruments can be obtained on application to:—The Secretary, Surplus Government Property Disposal Board, 6, St. James's Square, London, S.W. 1.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MR. ERNEST A. FLAMBE (BASS).

Oratorio, Concerts, Receptions, &c. For vacant dates, address 67, Ashbourne Avenue, Mitcham, Surrey.

GRACE CLARE

(CONTRALTO)

Oratorios, Concerts, &c. Parliament Mansions, Victoria St., S.W.-1. Telephone, Victoria 6400.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS

(TENOR).

Address—164, Bank Buildings, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

MADAME ALBANI

Gives Lessons in Singing and Voice-Culture, and prepares Pupils for Opera, Oratorio, and Concert Work. 61, Tregunter Road, S.W.-10.

C. HUBI-NEWCORBE.

For words of Songs, Cantatas, Libretti, Translations, French, Italian, &c. Adaptations to Composers' Melodies. (1,200 Songs sold. 300 Adaptations and Translations.)

STOCKTON HEATH, WARRINGTON.

MUSICAL REVISOR TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-FOUR YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING.

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.-2

*The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Major H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.B. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of F.L.C.M., L.Mus.L.C.M., A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916), and L.R.A.M. Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, "Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the College of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-19 .. 136 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-19 .. 27 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 362 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey. 'Phone, Burgh Heath, 346.

DR. HARRIS REVISES AND PREPARES MSS. FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written and Works Scored for Orchestra. Address as above.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS in MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.-11

DR. ARTHUR S. HOLLOWAY, Mus. D. Oxon., 13, Roseleigh Avenue, Highbury, N.-5, continues to PREPARE CANDIDATES for the various Theoretical Examinations. Music of any description revised or arranged. LESSONS in COMPOSITION, by post if desired.

ENGAGEMENTS ACCEPTED AND POSTAL LESSONS given by Mr. C. T. HEAVISIDE, SOLO PIANIST Cellist, &c., 27, Torwood Street, Torquay.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.

Address, 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.-3

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Professor of Singing, R. A. Music. Private Pupils received at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.-1

DR. LEWIS, Mus. Doc., F.E.I.S., Warden, Incorporated Guild of Church Musicians, gives LESSONS, Personally or by Post, in HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT. 158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W.-11.

DR. LEWIS' TEXT-BOOKS:

HARMONY. (2 vols.) 5s. each, net.
COUNTERPOINT. 5s. net.
DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT AND CANON. 5s. net.
FUGUE. 1s. 6d. net.
ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. 2s. 6d. net.
DEVELOPMENT OF ANGLICAN CHURCH MUSIC. 2s. net.
PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
MATERIAL OF MELODY. 3d. net.
IMPROVISATION. 1s. 6d. net.

The above, complete, will be forwarded (carriage paid) for £1 5s.

H. E. MACKINLAY, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L., L.R.A.M.
Correspondence lessons in "Rudiments," Art of Teaching, Harmony, Counterpoint, &c. Preparation for R.C.O., R.A.M., and all recognised Examinations. Moderate fees. "S. Cecilia," Powys Lane, Palmers Green, N. 13.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Pianist (Specialist), coaches for Pianoforte Diplomas. Paper Work by Correspondence. 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

L.R.A.M.—ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF has had September, 1917, Successes. He begs to state that he is a British-born subject. Address as in other advertisement.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils referred and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes, L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd., West Kensington.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.-1

EXETER CATHEDRAL CHORISTERS' SCHOOL.

Vacancies for two Probationers at once. Fees £35 per annum until admitted to Chorisherships, after which £20. Candidates should not be over nine years of age. Full particulars on application to Rev. R. W. B. LANGHORNE, The Choristers' School, The Close, Exeter.

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL.

TWO MINOR CANONRIES are vacant. Stipend £200 and a house in each case; rates, taxes, and external repairs free. Also the MASTERSHIP of the CHOIR SCHOOL, which will be held with one of the above, at a further stipend of £100. A part-time Mastership at the King's School may possibly be held with the other by a suitable candidate. Forms of application may be obtained from the Acting Chapter Clerk, Mr. F. H. Day, The Precinct, Rochester, to whom they should be sent, complete, with copies of not more than three recent testimonials, by February 8th. Applicants are requested not to write to the individual members of the Chapter.

LINCOLN CATHEDRAL.—There will shortly be a TRIAL of BOYS' VOICES to fill up vacancies in the choir. For further particulars apply to The Precentor, Lincoln.

LINCOLN CATHEDRAL.—There is a VACANCY for an ALTO. Salary commencing at £95, with 25 per cent. War bonus. Apply to The Precentor, Lincoln.

YORK MINSTER.—ALTO Songman REQUIRED Services (usually) 9.0 week-day and 2.0 Sunday, with two rehearsals. Applications to Chapter Clerk, Minster Gates, York.

ALTO (£30). South Kensington. Sun. 11 to 12-30, 6.30 to 8; Fri. 7 to 8. Sight-reader essential. Age and experience briefly to "Choragus," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.-1.

ST. MARGARET'S, WESTMINSTER.

There will be a TENOR VACANCY at Easter. Applications may be sent at once, addressed to the Vestry Clerk.

NEW COLLEGE, OXFORD.

There are VACANCIES in this Choir for two LAY-CLERKS with a Tenor voice. Salary £80 yearly. Special consideration will be given to candidates who wish to read for a University degree.

Particulars may be obtained by application to The Precentor, New College, Oxford.

ST. ANNE'S, SOHO.

SOLO TENOR REQUIRED. Must be a good reader. Apply, stating salary required, to R. M. Armitage, St. Anne's Vestry.

TENOR WANTED, for the Church of the Ascension, Balham. £12. Address, Adolphus Antoine, 43, Alderbrook Road, S.W.-12.

TENOR WANTED for N.W. London Church. Good Reader. Communicant. Stipend, £15. Address, Vicar, 37, Camden Square, N.W. 1.

ST. ASAPH CATHEDRAL.—BASS and BARTONE LAY-CLERKS REQUIRED.—Must be good readers from the old Notation. Preference given to discharged Soldiers. Duties light, and much spare time. Salary £40 per annum. Apply to The Chapter Clerk.

MAGDALEN COLLEGE, OXFORD.

The post of Organist is vacant by the resignation of Dr. Varley Roberts. The College proposes to appoint a successor, to commence his duties not later than October, 1919. Intending Candidates should apply, in writing, by Friday, February 28th, 1919, to "The Rev. The Dean of Divinity, Magdalen College, Oxford," who will send a printed statement of the duties, and a Form of Application to be returned with Testimonials.

N.B.—The choice of the Electors will not be limited to those who make application.

WANTED, ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER for St. George's Presbyterian Church, Palmer's Green, N. State age, qualifications, experience, salary required, by letter, to "Organist," c/o J. W. Vickers & Co., Ltd., 5, Nicholas Lane, E.C.-4.

ORGANIST WANTED, for Holy Trinity Church, Cheltenham. Salary 50 Guineas. Apply, Wardens, 93, Winchcombe Street, Cheltenham.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED, for Nuneaton Parish Church. Salary, £100 per annum. Address, stating particulars as to Degree, University, &c. Address, Canon, c/o Hart's Advertising Offices, Maltravers House, Arundel Street, London, W.C.-2.

THE POST OF ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER of an important Midland Parish will shortly be vacant. The large population offers a good opening for teaching. Salary £100 p. ann. State particulars as to Degree, University, &c. Address, Canon, c/o Hart's Advertising Offices, Maltravers House, Arundel Street, London, W.C.-2.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED, for Holy Trinity, Elgin. Light duties. Opportunities for good man. £60-£70. Apply, with testimonials (stating age, experience), to Canon Hay-Dinwoody, Rectory, Elgin.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER wanted for Baptist Church, N.E. London. Permanent position. Apply, stating qualifications, experience and salary required, by letter, to "A. G. M.," 134, Brooke Road, N. 16.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER (41), at present serving in the Army, DESIRES POST (Church of England) on demobilization. South preferred. Recitalist and successful choir-trainer. Also experienced conductor (orchestral and choral). "M. H." c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.-1.

ORGANIST will Give his SERVICES as Organist or Assistant, or will Deputise in exchange for practice. Write "B. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.-1.

ORGANIST, experienced, DESIRES post as Assistant. Nonconformist Church preferred. Central London or Croydon. Modern organ essential. H. P., The Woodlands, Red Down Road, Coulsdon, Surrey.

OFFICER AWAITING DEMOBILISATION wishes to undertake position as ORGANIST and MUSICMASTER at Public School. A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., &c. Highest testimonials dealing with Musical and Army experience. Address: Lieut., c/o Messrs. Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., London, W.-1.

DISCHARGED OFFICER desires post as ORGANIST in South-West London. "C. J. B.," 54, Mysore Road, S.W. 11.

MR. ALFRED HOLLINS will give an ORGAN RECITAL at Park Chapel, Crouch End, N., on Monday, February 17, at 8 p.m. Collection for St. Dunstan's. Tube to Finsbury Park, thence 111 bus passes door of church. 50-stop Willis organ.

DOLLAR ACADEMY.—WANTED, ASSISTANT MUSIC-MISTRESS to Teach Piano; Elementary Violin a recommendation. To commence duty at once. Salary £110. Apply, Headmaster.

WANTED, a MUSICAL CONNECTION, in good part of London, suitable for a gentleman, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Apply, S. C. M., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.-1.

TO COMPOSERS.—Mr. E. Westropp Morgan has LYRICS for Sale, or would collaborate. Address, 459, Kensington Hill, Brislington, Bristol.

PIANISTE wishes to meet VIOLINISTE or other INSTRUMENTALIST, for Practice at d Concerts. Evenings. "E. L.," 20, Lambourn Road, Clapham, S.W. 4.

WANTED, ASSISTANT for MUSIC DEPARTMENT.—State experience, &c. Foyle, 121-123, Charing Cross Road, W.C.-2.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

SEVERAL TWO-MANUAL ORGANS, with pedals, various sizes, suitable for CHURCHES, COLLEGES, &c., built on entirely new principles of specially constructed action, recently introduced, at minimum of cost. Apply W. E. Richardson & Sons, Organ Builders, Manchester, S.W.

WANTED, Good Second-hand ORGAN PEDALS for Piano. Price and particulars to Choirmaster, Wesleyan Church, Drighlington, near Bradford.

TENORS should buy set of two songs, BRIGHT BE THE PLAQUE and FAREWELL (Oakley). Compass E to G. Price 1s. 6d. the set. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.-1.

BASS VOCALISTS should buy SONGS OF THE NIGHT (Oakley). Two sets: Numbers 1/4 and 5/7. Price 1s. 6d. each set. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.-1.

LIMITED NUMBER.—100 Copyright Songs by MacDowell, Delius, Sibelius, Reger, Weingartner, &c. 17s. 6d. carriage paid. Sample dozen, 3s. 6d. Kingsley, 43, Southdown Avenue, Brighton.

TO TEACHERS AND TRADE.

GREAT SALE OF MUSIC.—Large Stock of Breitkopf & Härtel, Peters, Universal. Costallat and other Continental Music Publishers by the leading Classical and Modern Masters, comprising band, orchestral, trios, quartets, quintets, violin solos, violin duets, violin and piano, piano solos, piano duets (two pianos, four and eight hands), cello solos, cello duets, organ, harmonium, harmonium and piano, mandoline, mandoline and piano, operas (vocal and piano scores), songs, choruses for mixed voices, full orchestral scores, Gregorian music, Catholic Church music (Latin words), &c., at greatly reduced prices. Parcels sent on approval.

KINGSLEY, 43, Southdown Avenue, Brighton.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The undermentioned Books MUST BE SOLD, through death of owner:—

DICTIONARY OF MUSIC. Edited by Sir GEORGE GROVE.

Four Vols.

EBENEZER PROUT. Complete Works.

Also a MISCELLANEOUS LOT OF BOOKS, covering all Subjects—Theory and Practical.

A detailed list will be sent to prospective purchasers on application. 193, NEWPORT ROAD, MIDDLESBROUGH.

GUIDE TO CANDIDATES FOR THE

A.R.C.M. DIPLOMA PIANO TEACHERS' EXAMINATION.

Price 1s. 2d. post free.

By A. H. FILLINGHAM, A.R.C.M.

3, THE CRESCENT, ROUNDHAY, LEEDS, YORKS.

"Candidates want advice of this kind."—Musical Herald.

"Most original and encouragingly helpful."—J. H. Thomas, Esq.

"I shall highly recommend it."—A. M. Craven, A.R.C.M., and others.

Musings and Memories of a Musician.

By SIR GEORGE HENSCHEL, Mus. Doc.
With Portrait. 8vo. 12s. 6d. net.

The Musical Herald.—"A book that is full of delightful stories and that narrates the most intimate intercourse with Brahms that has ever appeared, must be welcomed by all musicians."

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., LONDON, W.C.-2.

FORTHCOMING ORGAN RECITALS. FOR THE MUSICIANS' GIFT.

CATHEDRAL RECITALS.

In the near future a number of cathedral and other celebrated organists are giving recitals in aid of the Musicians' Gift to the Forces. Recitals have been arranged at the cathedrals of Bristol, Chichester, Glasgow, Hereford, Llandaff, Lincoln, Londonderry, Manchester, Newcastle, Oxford, Ripon, Southwark, Winchester, Worcester, and York. Recitals will also be given at St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate, All Hallows', Gospel Oak, and St. Andrews', Leytonstone, and many others are in process of arrangement.

A LEAD TO EVERY ORGANIST.

This magnificent lead to a fresh effort to raise funds for the provision of musical facilities to our men could be easily followed by almost every organist without personal expense. Invaluable aid would thus be rendered to the work of the Musicians' Gift at this time when the need is more urgent than ever.

CONTINUOUS REQUESTS FROM FRANCE.

The next few months must be months of waiting and uncertainty for many thousands of men who cannot yet be demobilised, and the continuous requests from the Y.M.C.A. Huts abroad for music and instruments are such that the Musicians' Gift is in immediate need of further resources. Over £3,000 has already been given by musicians and music-lovers, of which all but £30 has been expended on music, instruments, and musical organization. To meet immediate needs, a further £2,000 is urgently required.

TO ORGANIST READERS.

Arrangements are being made to supply leaflets to all organists who give recitals to raise fresh funds. The programme can be printed on the back of the leaflet, which briefly describes the need of the men for the recreation which only music can supply. Every organist reader of the Musical Times is earnestly asked to co-operate in this effort by giving at least one Organ Recital in aid of the Fund. Promises of recitals should be sent to Major H. Walford Davies, R.A.F., Mus. Doc., Musicians' Gift to the Forces, Universities House, 25, Bloomsbury Square, W.C. 1, together with a request for the number of leaflets which the recitalist requires with blank side for programme.

TO THOSE WHO ARE NOT ORGANISTS.

If you are not an organist, please bring the need and the suggestion before an organist of your acquaintance, and, if possible, obtain the promise of a recital.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

February 5, at 3 p.m.—Pianoforte Recital by Miss Emmeline Medd-Hall.

February 12, at 3 p.m.—Students' Concert.

February 19, at 3 p.m.—Pianoforte Recital by Mr. Charlton Keith.

February 26, at 3 p.m.—Students' Concert.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical Musical Subjects, and Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Any number of subjects—from one to the Full Course—may be entered for. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student.

Students are prepared for the Degrees in Music of the London and other Universities, the Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, Trinity College of Music, &c.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College students for other subjects.

All modern systems of Technique (whether for the Pianoforte, Violin, or other instrument) and of Vocal Training are taught by qualified professors.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

Students not older than 16 years are admitted to the JUNIOR SCHOOL at reduced fees.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W. 1.

MACDOWELL'S SONGS

ALBUMS.

FIVE SONGS, Opp. 11 and 12, Low or High Voice.

SIX LOVE SONGS, Op. 40.

FOUR SONGS, Op. 56, Low or High Voice.

THREE SONGS, Op. 58.

THREE SONGS, Op. 60.

ALBUM OF SELECTED SONGS, Low or High Voice.

Price, each, 3s. 6d. net cash.

SEPARATE SONGS.

	Price Net.—s.	d.
CONSTANCY, D, F (E to F) and G	...	2 0
DESERTED, D $\sharp$ (D $\sharp$ to D $\sharp$) and E $\sharp$	...	2 0
FAIR SPRINGTIDE, C (B to E) and E	...	2 0
MY JEAN, G, A (E to E), and C	...	2 0
SLUMBER SONG, D $\sharp$ (D $\sharp$ to D $\sharp$) and E $\sharp$	...	2 0
THY BEAMING EYES, D, E $\sharp$, F (C to F) and G	...	2 0

MacDOWELL, in his songs, proves himself gifted with a fount of melody as spontaneous as that of Schubert. A rare delicacy of charm and piquancy pervades them all.—Musical World.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, W.-1.

AND OF ALL MUSIC SELLERS.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

THE LITTLE SEVCIK

Complete, 3s. 6d.

Or in Three Parts, 1s. 6d. each.

The BEST VIOLIN TUTOR the World has produced. Chosen for the Associated Board EXAMINATIONS.

Full Prospectus of the Sevcik Method, complete List of Violin and Orchestral Music, and graded catalogue of Pianoforte Works sent free on application.

SEVCIK WORKS

Everyone rejoices, and we are sure PROFESSOR SEVCIK the foremost among these, that his people are now recognised as an allied nation (Czech).

FINGER TECHNIC, Op. 1, four books.

BOWING TECHNIC, Op. 2, six books.

PREPARATORY TECHNIC, Op. 7, 8, 9, four books.

VIOLIN METHOD, Op. 6, for Beginners, seven parts.

BOOK OF MELODIES " "

BOSWORTH & CO.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods:

BERINGER'S TUTOR. WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR. HEMY'S TUTOR. WICKINS'S RAPID TUTOR. GRAHAM P. MOORE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES.

Publishers of Sevcik's Violin Method, Beringer's Daily Technical Studies. Macfarren's The Child's First Music Lesson.

IN PREPARATION.

MY

MUSICAL PILGRIMAGE

1850-1918.

BY

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

FEBRUARY 1, 1919.

MODERN BRITISH COMPOSERS.

BY EDWIN EVANS.

I.—FRANK BRIDGE.

The problem of eclecticism in music is one that exercises many minds. Some go so far as to refuse it any right to exist. If, for instance, a critic confesses to many tastes he is liable to be told that he has no taste. If he can sound the metaphysical depths of a modern Symphony, and also take pleasure in cleverly-written music of the lighter kind, his opinion on the former will be open to suspicion. It is not every musician who has the courage to assert, as one of our composers did the other day, that Sousa's Marches are essentially good music. The position of the composer is even more delicate. There are some who maintain that no great artist can be an eclectic. Did not one of the greatest modern French painters assert in all seriousness that in art there is revolution and there is plagiarism, and there is nothing between? Others, on the contrary, maintain that every great artist must necessarily be an eclectic, and they have a primâ facie justification in the fact that every time a creative artist makes a selection between various ideas occurring to him, he is in fact performing an exercise in eclecticism. In the end the solution of the problem depends not only upon the degree in which the ideas are his own, but also on the degree in which he makes them his own, for it is obvious that every creative artist must acknowledge a debt to his predecessors, unless he elect to begin with the most primitive forms, and discard all inherited knowledge.

In modern music the question is at all times acute. We can all cite instances of composers who deck themselves with borrowed plumes which they fail to combine in a homogeneous garment. The feathers plucked from various sources are in constant conflict with each other, and there is no unity of style. These are the bad eclectics. There are, however, others who, without being revolutionary in themselves, are in sympathy with modernity, or rather with those elements of modernity which can be assimilated into their own set style, for it is the test of such composers that they really have a personal style which acts as a solvent upon any ingredients they may introduce to enrich it. These are the good eclectics, and one of the best, perhaps even the best of such in English music of to-day, is Frank Bridge. One might compare his æsthetic to that of the eclectic wing in modern Russian music, or perhaps to that of Florent Schmitt in modern French music. In a lighter mood one might venture a pun on his name, but with the qualification that, if he is a bridge, he is an impressive piece of architecture, a bridge that besides fulfilling its function, presents an outline and a composition of masses that endow it with the qualities of the best art.

Frank Bridge was born at Brighton in 1879, and studied at the Royal College of Music. The teaching there rests upon the solid foundation of the older polyphony in association with the cult of composers like Brahms and Glazounoff. It is eminently sound, but its conservatism is such that the more venturesome students on emerging from it promptly proceed to throw their academic ballast overboard, often without discriminating sufficiently between what would be of service to them and what is useless. At the other extreme there are, as always in such institutions, students who are content to go on repeating, as well as may be, the pattern of their models. Frank Bridge took the middle course. He has never departed from the solid methods which have their roots in tradition, but his conformity to them, which has at no time been slavish, has gradually become associated with the wide range of modern resource. These new elements have, however, always been assimilated with his established style, and it would be difficult to find in his works a modernism that could not be explained by the older ruling. Just as the acute dissonances used as a pointillage by Stravinsky in his later works occur also in Ravel, but embedded in an explanatory harmonic context, in Frank Bridge will be found most of the current extensions of the older harmony, but in a state of complete reconciliation. This implies, of course, a consummate technical proficiency, and even those, if there be any, who find nothing else to admire in his music, will readily concede to him the great quality of knowing exactly what he is doing, and doing it with remarkable precision. Nowadays that counts for much.

Owing to the relatively rarer performance of orchestral works, the importance of Frank Bridge in English music is best measured by his chamber music, which is a constant feature of our concert rooms. It is represented by numerous works, the first of which dates from 1904 and consists of 'Three Novelettes' for string quartet. One would scarcely select them nowadays as an example of their composer's characteristic work, but nevertheless the first of them still retains its hold upon the affections of concert-goers. The following year Bridge was a prize-winner in the first of the numerous competitions instituted by Mr. W. W. Cobbett for works in the cyclic form for which he has revived the title 'Fantasy,'—formerly a very familiar one in English music, both as 'Fantasy' and 'Fancy.' The first competition was for a string quartet, and the work sent in by Frank Bridge, which took the second prize, is still frequently performed. In the same year he also wrote a quintet in four movements for strings and pianoforte. Although he had not yet travelled any great distance along the road which led to his present strongly individual manner, this work was of the type upon which no composer cares to turn his back even when he has left far behind the method of working which it represents. Its chief fault was its length, and by reducing the number of movements to three and subjecting these to drastic revision he has since given it the right to rank with his best works. In fact there are many who look upon the slow movement as containing as much intrinsic beauty as may be found in those works which are considered his masterpieces.

In 1906 he obtained a mention d'honneur in an international competition organized at Bologna for a string quartet. Sixty-seven works were sent in, that of Frank Bridge being his Quartet in E minor. After one or two hearings this now familiar work suffered the fate of music that is allowed to remain in manuscript, and it was not until it was published two or three years ago that it made its re-appearance in the concert-room, where it has become a permanent feature of the English répertoire. A quotation from the second movement is given here:

STRING QUARTET IN E MINOR (2ND MOVEMENT).

Adagio molto.

EX. 1. pp f pp pp plaintive. &c.

The only other chamber work of that year consists of 'Three Idylls' for string quartet, which preceded the larger work and are similar in conception to the 'Novelettes,' although the advance towards maturity is distinctly apparent. Signs of it are, however, more readily discerned here, as elsewhere, in the method employed to obtain the richer sonority than in the actual thematic material.

In 1908 Mr. Cobbett held his second competition, this time inviting composers to submit Fantasy-Trios for pianoforte, violin, and 'cello. That of Frank Bridge, in C minor, obtained the first-prize. It is a very good example of the form, which one might describe as that of a Sonata-Allegro in which the development section is occupied by episodes corresponding to an Andante and Scherzo. In the same year the composer began to turn his attention to folk-tune, the first-fruit of this new interest being 'An Irish Melody' for string quartet, the theme of which is the very beautiful one known as the 'Londonderry Air.' The treatment is clever and interesting, but it is felt that the Introduction is relatively so important as to impair the balance of what is to follow.

About this time Mr. Cobbett began to vary the practice of organizing competitions by commissioning works in fantasy form from composers of proved merit, and among others he invited Frank Bridge to write for him, with a free hand as regards both method and time of composition, a Fantasy-Quartet for pianoforte and strings. Possibly as a result of this greater freedom the Fantasy-Quartet in F sharp minor, which dates from 1910, is not only one of its composer's outstanding works but also one of the most striking of the many which have been the result of Mr. Cobbett's initiative. One might, in fact, regard its date as a turning-point in Bridge's career.

Though his progress towards a more complete deployment of his individuality has been continuous, from 1910 onwards it was to become more rapid. The first effect of this will be noticed in the remarkably fine Sextet for strings composed in 1912, which, unfortunately, has not yet been published. It belongs to the steadily growing list of works by which British chamber music challenges comparison on equal terms with contemporary achievements in the same field. Until, however, it is made more readily accessible to the public, the nature of the composer's progress can best be judged by comparing the Bologna String Quartet of 1906 with the String Quartet in G minor, another Cobbett prize-work, which received its first hearing in 1915. Both these compositions abound in high musical qualities, and have every title to a permanent place in the répertoire. It is not one of those instances so common with modern compositions where the new work supersedes the earlier effort. But to those who seek to probe the musical personality of the composer, the more recent Quartet will convey much more than its predecessor. For that reason quotations are included from the first movement:

STRING QUARTET IN G MINOR.

(a) Opening of the 1st Movement.

EX. 2. Allegro. f mf p &c.

(b) and Subject. [Viola.] dolcissimo.

pizz. [Cello.] pizz.

&c.

The Bologna Quartet might still, if one were captious, be classed with the works of epigoni. That in G minor reveals a personal outline and physiognomy. About the same time Bridge returned to the treatment of popular themes, writing two short but very attractive pieces based on the English tunes 'Sally in our Alley' and 'Cherry Ripe.' They are also adapted for stringed orchestra, and are frequently heard in both forms. A pianoforte-duet arrangement has recently been published.

The composer's most recent work is a broadly-conceived Sonata for 'cello and pianoforte in two movements. The sweeping, somewhat rhetorical phrasing which permeates most of the composer's work holds complete sway here. Its grip on the audience is such that on first hearing one is apt to resent the inevitable interruptions which arise from the necessity for preserving the shape of the work. It is only when the form is familiar that one realises the need for a punctuation the first impression of which is that it errs on the side of excess. As always is the case of works whose foremost quality is breadth, a great deal depends on the interpretation which, if not sympathetic and intelligent, might easily give the impression of loosely-knit fragments. There are many modern works of which the same might be said, and it belongs to the many risks which a composer has to take. Happily Bridge's position is now so assured that there remains little likelihood of his being blamed for the shortcomings of the performer.

Frank Bridge's orchestral works naturally reflect the same process of evolution as his chamber music, with the reservation that, whereas in the latter he was chiefly concerned with securing a richer blend of composite sonority, in the former the problem was rather to balance the subtlety of his later method with the brilliance that had always characterised his scoring. In knowledge of instrumentation he has few rivals even among those who, like himself, combine composition with a high degree of instrumental proficiency. It is the same dual experience that makes him a remarkably good conductor. In any other country but England it is fairly certain that occupation would have been found for him in that capacity. As it would have diverted much of the time he is now able to give to creative work, perhaps we may congratulate ourselves, though we might not have become aware of the loss at first, as, in place of one or two unwritten chamber compositions, we should have had more frequent opportunities of hearing his orchestral works to which other conductors seem to think their duty accomplished by giving a performance every two years or so. The prejudice against giving the public the same chance of familiarising itself with an English work, however successful, as with one of foreign origin, is as difficult to understand as it is to overcome.

The list of orchestral compositions which the composer, eliminating the works of his nonage, still considers representative, opens with 'Isabella,' a tone-poem inspired by Keats's poem, and completed in 1907. Although the poetic basis of the work is in narrative form, the musician has wisely abstained from treating it in its anecdotal aspect, preferring to concentrate upon its emotional elements. A quotation is given in Ex. 3:

SYMPHONIC POEM (ORCHESTRA).

'ISABELLA.'

EX. 3. Allegretto moderato.

Next followed a 'Dance Rhapsody,' dated 1908, and not to be confused with the later 'Dance Poem.' As is implied in the title, it is constructed of dance rhythms treated with a certain freedom from formal constraint, and at the same time with dramatic feeling. There is in addition to be remarked, here and in some later works, a certain spectacular quality of orchestration which points to the probability that Frank Bridge would be a brilliant writer for the theatre if the English stage, both lyric and dramatic, offered more liberal openings for the native composer. Opera, and perhaps more particularly the modern expanded art of the ballet, would be a fruitful field for him, but unfortunately it is a field that, in the England of to-day, has still to be wrested from the foreigner.

There followed next in succession a Suite, 'The Sea,' which is about to be published under the auspices of the Carnegie Trust, and the 'Dance Poem,' which, though perhaps a fruit of the same impulse which produced the earlier 'Rhapsody,' differs very characteristically from it both in method and substance. The tone-poem, 'Summer,' like most of these works, has had few performances, and the writer is not in a position to describe it, but the two shorter poems inspired by the writings of Richard Jefferies have left an abiding impression that they belong to their composer's most representative works. They are respectively prefaced by the following quotations :

Those thoughts and feelings which are not sharply defined, but have a haze of distance and beauty about them, are always dearest.

How beautiful a delight to make the world joyous !
The song should never be silent, the dance never still,
the laugh should sound like water which runs for ever.

A quotation from the first of these Poems is given in Ex. 4 :

TWO POEMS (ORCHESTRA).—No. 1.

Ex. 4. Andante moderato e semplice.

It is impossible to leave the orchestral section of Frank Bridge's activities without referring to a Suite for Strings which is in course of publication, and especially to the 'Lament' for Strings:

LAMENT (STRING ORCHESTRA).

Ex. 5. Adagio, con molto espressione.

composed on June 14, 1915, in memory of a well-loved child-friend, Catherine, who perished with the whole of her family in the 'Lusitania.'

This short, but pathetically beautiful piece, which is obtainable in print, is not only characteristic, but of the most convincing sincerity. There lingers in the memory an impression of the effect it made when first heard at Queen's Hall. The audience was too spell-bound for a noisy demonstration of favour, but the eloquence of the music had achieved what a more ambitious or studied composition could not have effected.

In turning to Frank Bridge's pianoforte pieces and songs, it is necessary to make some distinction. Some of them are not only of a very high quality, but they also reflect the modern spirit. On the other hand there have been times when he was inclined to make concessions to a larger public, and one would scarcely recognise the Suite 'A Fairy Tale' as emanating from the same pen as the 'Three Poems,' or especially the 'Four Characteristic Pieces.' The former include 'Solitude,' from which is taken:

'SOLITUDE' (FROM 'THREE POEMS FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO').

The chromaticism of the 'Four Characteristic Pieces' recalls a little that of Scriabin, and especially of his middle period, with which however Frank Bridge has little familiarity. As in many such instances one is driven to the conclusion that there are processes of harmonic thought which are, so to speak, in the air, and that composers of an adventurous turn of mind are bound to explore them sooner or later whether they happen or not to be aware of their predecessors' experiments in the same direction. But even if Frank Bridge was subconsciously influenced from without, he has made this chromaticism, in common with all the idiomatic devices he employs, in an intimate sense his own. The piece 'Bittersweet':

'BITTERSWEET' (FROM 'CHARACTERISTIC PIECES FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO').

Allegretto moderato.

furnishes a striking example of this. Technically it has the resemblance referred to, and yet the actual musical content is very characteristic of Frank Bridge's later writings.

His latest composition for the pianoforte consists of three Improvisations for the left hand alone, entitled 'At Dawn,' 'A Vigil,' and 'A Revel.' The impulse to write them came from a pianist who has lost his right arm in the War. There must, unfortunately, be many such cases, as it has already been foreshadowed that they will be the occasion for many similar compositions. It is to be hoped that their aim will be kept in view with the same assiduity, for these pieces are models of their kind. In the first place, unless they have real musical interest, apart from superficial attractiveness, they are a poor compliment to those for whom they are intended. But, in addition to this, it is scarcely enough that they must be written so that they can be played with one hand. That is an insufficient motive to a musician. They must be so conceived for one hand only that the other becomes actually an impediment if one attempts to use it. This is what has been achieved in these three remarkable pieces. They are of great musical interest, and so admirably thought-out for one hand that it is much more difficult to play them, especially 'A Revel,' using both.

With regard to the songs—which, as will be seen from the appended list, are becoming fairly numerous—it is necessary to bear in mind the type that has hitherto prevailed in England. Frank Bridge is sufficiently an Englishman to appreciate its better features, and sufficiently a musician to recoil from the evil fate which has overtaken it. He has rescued its directness of appeal, its melodic conciseness and unity of design, and presented them with a new vitality. To those who favour the more declamatory type of song that is now in the ascendant, these lyrics may savour of reaction, but their quarrel will be with the type of song, and not with the use to which Frank Bridge has put it. At the same time there are signs that the composer's allegiance to the type is wavering, and the near future should see some development in this direction which has hitherto been retarded solely by the overwhelming attention Frank Bridge has given to chamber music, in which his best success has been achieved.

It is in this domain that one most readily concedes to him those flattering epithets of which the critic makes, or should make, sparing use. He is also a fine writer for the orchestra, but here his actual achievements are less conspicuous. Should the conditions of our theatrical life improve, the writer is confident that it is this composer's destiny to produce works à grand cadre which will have the double quality of pleasing all but the most sophisticated section of the musical world without at the same time estranging that much greater public which is less eager for the technical innovations than for broad, picturesque, and spectacular effects. There is in his most spacious works an unusual power of sustaining and even accumulating effect, and in opera, ballet, or any form of dramatic work, it is ultimately this power of sustaining the interest which wins the day.

LIST OF COMPOSITIONS.

ORCHESTRAL.

Symphonic Poem, 'Isabella'	Unpublished
Dance Rhapsody	"
Suite, 'The Sea'	To be published by the Carnegie Trust
Dance Poem	Unpublished
Suite for String Orchestra	To be published by Goodwin & Tabb
Tone-Poem, 'Summer'	Unpublished
Lament for String Orchestra	Goodwin & Tabb
(Also arranged for Pianoforte Solo.)
Two Poems (Richard Jefferies)	Unpublished
Five Entr'actes, 'The Hunchback'	"

CHAMBER MUSIC.

Three Novelettes (string quartet)	Augener & Co.
Three Idylls	"
Quartet in E minor	Avison Edition
Quartet in G minor	Novello & Co.
Phantasy String Quartet	"
Phantasy Trio (Pianoforte, Violin, and 'Cello)	"
Phantasy Quartet (Pianoforte, Violin, Viola, and 'Cello)	Goodwin & Tabb
Quintet (Pianoforte and Strings)	Unpublished
Sextet (2 Violins, 2 Violas, and 2 'Cellos)	"
An Irish Melody (Londonderry Air) for String Quartet	Augener & Co.
'Sally in our Alley,' 'Cherry Ripe' (String Quartet)	Winthrop Rogers
Sonata for 'Cello and Pianoforte	"
Miniatures (easy) for Pianoforte, Violin, and 'Cello	"
Books 1, 2, and 3	Goodwin & Tabb

PIANOFORTE SOLO.

Minuet	Augener & Co.
Columbine	"
Romance	"
Sea Idyl	"
Capriccio, No. 1	"
Capriccio, No. 2	"
Three Poems (Solitude, Ecstasy, Sunset)	"
Arabesque	"
Three Sketches (April, Rosemary, Valse Capricieuse)	Winthrop Rogers
Three Miniature Pastorals (easy)	"
Four Characteristic Pieces: (1.) Water Nymphs; (2.) Fragrance; (3.) Bittersweet; (4.) Fireflies	"
Suite, 'A Fairy Tale' (The Princess, The Ogre, The Spell, The Prince)	Augener & Co.
Three Improvisations (At Dawn, A Vigil, A Revel)	Winthrop Rogers

SONGS WITH PIANOFORTE (Early).

Devon Maid	Winthrop Rogers
Go not, happy day	"
Dawn and Evening	"
The Violets Blue	"
All things that we clasp	"
E'en as a lovely flower	"
So Perverse	"
Blow, blow thou Winter wind	"

SONGS (Later).

Adoration	"
Come to me in my dreams	"
Strew no more red roses	"
Love went a-riding	"
Where she lies asleep	"

SONGS WITH PIANOFORTE.

Thy hand in mine	Winthrop Rogers
Mantle of Blue (in process of publication)	"
So early in the morning O!	"
Easter Hymn (arr.)	Chappell & Co.
Isobel	"
O that it were so!	"
Sonnet for Voice and Orchestra (or Pianoforte); 'Blow out, you Bugles'	Winthrop Rogers

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE.

Gondoliera	Augener & Co.
Four Easy Pieces: (1.) Meditation; (2.) Spring Song; (3.) Lullaby; (4.) Country Dance	Augener & Co.
Norse Legend	Winthrop Rogers
Souvenir	"
Amaryllys	"
Moto Perpetuo	Goodwin & Tabb
Cradle Song	"

'CELLO AND PIANOFORTE.

Elégie	Goodwin & Tabb
Mélodie	"
Morning Song	Winthrop Rogers

VIOLA AND PIANOFORTE.

Pensiero	Stainer & Bell
Allegro appassionata	"

ORGAN WORKS.

Andante Moderato in C minor	Novello & Co.
Adagio in E major	"
Allegro con spirito in B flat major	"
Andantino	Winthrop Rogers
Allegro ben moderato	"
Andante con moto	"
A Book of Three Pieces (being published)	"

PART-SONGS.

Autumn (S.A.T.B.)	Novello & Co.
--------------------------	---------------

SCHOOL SONGS.

'For God, and King, and Right' (Unison)	Winthrop Rogers
'The Graceful Swaying Wattle (2 Parts and Accompaniment	"
'Lullaby' (3 Parts and Accompaniment)	"
'Peter Piper' (3 Parts, Unaccompanied)	"
A Litany (3 Parts)	"
'Sister, Awake!' (2 Parts and Accompaniment)	"
'Lay a Garland (2 Part Canon and Accompaniment)	Winthrop Rogers

CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA.

Prayer	Augener & Co.
---------------	---------------

Interludes.

The encore to-day is so frequently a concession to the clamour of a handful of insatiates—often the least musical section of the audience—that it is refreshing to read of a demand at once quiet and unanimous. Turning over the pages of the Musical World of September 30, 1836, I came across the following in an account of the Norwich Festival:

'The magnificent anthem, "Hosannah to the Son of David," one of Orlando Gibbons's best specimens (accompanied on the organ by Mr. Turle) was performed in a most masterly manner; the whole audience rose at its conclusion, which was an intimation for its repetition. It was accordingly encored.'

It would be interesting to know how far such a method of encoring was general. Our concerts to-day would gain if the recalls of soloists could be done away with. There is no more ridiculous convention than this of holding up the proceedings while a performer dodges to and from the platform, gathering up the gradually-diminishing applause. One good salvo, a bow, and the incident should close. And if encores were given only in response to such an impressive demand as this at Norwich, a great deal of time and bad temper would be saved. It is worth noting, by-the-way, that the demand followed a severe choral work. To-day concerted items, however fine, usually obtain much less applause than a solo effort of inferior musical value. If we estimate the musical taste of a crowd by indications of this sort, what conclusion should we come to concerning the packed audience at Queen's Hall the other day, who made more fuss over Calvé's singing of Gounod's 'O ma lyre immortelle' than over the fine new orchestral work of Delius, 'Once upon a time'? Here we had a singer and a song, both (to be quite frank) showing unmistakable signs of wear, but received with rapture; the reception given to Delius and his novelty was comparatively cold. Even when allowance is made for the sentimental fervour of the hundreds of old opera-goers present, who were more concerned with their memories of Calvé fifteen years ago than with the business in hand, the comparison gives rise to depression. One cannot help feeling that great singers are often a drag on the wheel of progress. Thanks to a voice (or the remains of one plus a great past) they are able to perpetuate music of a standard which no orchestra or instrumental soloist would dare to include in a first-class programme. They do further damage by drawing attention from much finer performances by a band or chorus. A concert in which the feeblest music produces the biggest results in the way of applause and bouquets is a failure. It has merely helped to perpetuate a thoroughly bad tradition. The cure? A firm stand by those responsible for the arrangement of the programme, a disregard of box-office considerations, or an epidemic of laryngitis of a virulent and chronic type among all but a handful of singers. As all these three remedies are phenomena involving a temporary suspension of the laws of nature, we need not consider them further.

Let us instead get back to this Norwich Festival of eighty-three years ago, and note that although the audience distinguished itself as few audiences do by knowing a good thing when they heard it, those responsible for the performance did their best to spoil the work. It is curious how at that time, and for about a century previous, people seemed to have had no perception of the beauty of unaccompanied singing. The great composers were no better. Take all the choral works of Bach, Handel, Purcell, Mozart, Haydn, Beethoven, and Wagner, and see how rarely they allow the voices to be heard alone. To-day no decent choir would dream of singing Gibbons's 'Hosanna' other than a cappella. At this Norwich concert they not only imported Mr. Turle to provide a quite superfluous organ background, but added some brass as well :

'The fine pedal pipes of the organ, the equal and subdued tones of the well-filled choir, the sweet confusion of the subjects, and the trombones, just introduced at the last period, rendered the performance of this anthem one of the gems of the morning.'

A choir to-day, even if 'well-filled,' singing this work in a 'subdued' fashion would be faithfully dealt with by the critics. But the representative of the Musical World was perhaps too much swayed by extra-musical considerations. For example, he begins his notice of the 'Creation' performance with a dithyramb on the physical attractions of some of the choir. Clearly he had a roving eye! Hear him :

'The soprani are as pretty a choir of sweet faces as the place may well be proud of; and save the galaxy and talent exhibited in the treble choir at the Exeter Hall Festival this season, we have not seen a match to their angel voices' (sic).

So he had been throwing glances in Exeter Hall, the rogue! But why the significant silence as to the altos? Since when have trebles had the monopoly of pretty faces? I have never been a keen observer of such matters, but my experience however, the point is not nearly so important as our Norwich writer seemed to think.

This unanimous standing of the audience when they wished for an encore, was an excellent and truly democratic method. I was mentally praising the good sense of it, when turning the page I found that the Norwichians, like the cookery book, had also 'another way.' Among the items of this same concert was Beethoven's 'Quail' song. 'Caradori' (we read) 'sang it very well; and it was instantly signified by the President's wand, that an encore was desired, which of course took place.' Let us be thankful that we have no 'president at our concerts to-day. It is bad enough to have an encore brought about by a group of the performer's friends. A Member of the Nobility and Gentry of the Neighbourhood, wand in hand, graciously signifying that a performance has pleased Him so much that He desires its repetition, would be too much for even a ballad concert audience.

A point in connection with the new Delius work mentioned above serves to remind us that a composer may now do with impunity things that ten—or even five—years ago would have called forth a storm of objection. Midway through the work (I quote from the analytical note) 'the movement gains speed and works up to a frenzied climax, culminating in a wild shout of men's voices, heard behind the orchestra.' It is a significant fact that so far from objecting to this deliberate employment of an unmusical effect, most of the newspaper reports did not even mention it. Yet what a hullabaloo there was over the Strauss wind machine, the bleating of the sheep in 'Don Quixote,' and the battle music in 'Ein Heldenleben.' Following the Delius work, we had Calvé singing the 'Habanera' from 'Carmen,' and very audibly snapping her fingers as a substitute for the tambourine. Again nobody turned a hair. Can you imagine these things being done at a symphony concert a few years ago without a protest?

By the way, the shout in 'Once upon a time' was a failure. Most of us had looked forward to a thrill, but the shout, instead of being 'wild,' as per contract, was singularly tame. The ensemble and tone were delightful, but these are just the qualities that were not wanted. The piano, well drilled, and apologetic 'Hi' was quite out of the picture. Even so might the churchwardens and sidesmen of St. Abinadab's raise a devout cheer next Sunday on finding a fat and unexpected cheque in the collection. I hope to hear 'Once upon a time' again soon, with a whoop that will make the audience sit up.

Most musicians will agree with the general principles laid down in Mr. Froggatt's article on 'The Concert Programme' in the January Musical Times. There are, however, one or two matters of detail over which many of us will part company with him. For example, he considers that an orchestral programme should include 'a Symphony or Symphonic Poem (or some other composition for full orchestra of similar extent), and a Concerto.' I believe few audiences of to-day want to hear a Symphony and a Concerto at a sitting. There is a growing opinion that the Concerto is the least interesting of the larger forms. Most of the frequently-played examples, judged on purely musical grounds, should go straight to the shelf. They are kept from deserved oblivion merely by the glamour surrounding the soloist. I recently observed the attitude of the audience during a performance of the 'Emperor' Concerto. The only apparent signs of interest came from people in a good position to watch the pianist's hands. At least a dozen folk near me folded their evening paper, like the Arab, and silently stole away. Judging from the attitude of the remainder, they were less interested in the Concerto than in any other item, yet its end was the signal for the most vociferous applause of the evening. How many of them thought of Beethoven or his work? The man of the hour was the pianist, who, having bowed some six or seven times, graciously gave us a brief solo. How much is the cause of music advanced by such performances as this? If we must have the pianoforte and orchestra in combination (and many of us deny the necessity), cannot we have shorter examples, or a movement detached from a concerto? This latter suggestion will no doubt be regarded as a heresy. But when there is no thematic connection between the movements, and each is complete, why should they not be heard separately? Nobody objects to a pianist playing a Bach Fugue without the Prelude; our best actors frequently perform an Act from a Shakespeare play, or such extracts as the Screen scene from 'The School for Scandal.' Even Wagner's operas are cut, and (worst of all) scenes are transferred from the stage to the concert platform, with vocal parts represented by instruments. Having swallowed these camels for years, we need make no fuss about such gnats as the carving up of concertos.

'No vocal solo should be permitted without orchestral accompaniment,' says Mr. Froggatt. This convention is one under which we have groaned too long. If vocalists made use of the very fair supply of fine modern songs with orchestral accompaniment we should welcome the recommendation. As they almost invariably give us a threadbare extract for a long-dead opera, what might be one of the most delightful features of the programme is merely a bore. Further, I see no reason why a group of good songs with pianoforte accompaniment should not be heard at an orchestral concert. It would provide welcome relief, and would also bring to the ears of a large audience many beautiful songs which at present are heard only by the comparatively small numbers that attend vocal recitals.

'The ideal programme is undoubtedly drawn from the works of a single composer.' I am sorry to differ again from Mr. Froggatt, but if there is one kind of programme that more than any other tends to monotony it is the single-composer scheme. At least three composers should be represented by the big works of a programme, and if three more can be given a show by means of smaller items so much the better for all concerned, —including the big composers. (Mr. Froggatt, it must be remembered, in speaking of a type of concert which rarely lasts less than two hours. In vocal and instrumental recitals of from sixty to ninety minutes' duration, there are cases where a one-man programme, very carefully planned, may give no impression of monotony.)

Again, 'an arrangement of the various items of a programme in chronological order should be adhered to whenever possible; it would be an advantage from an educational, but also from an artistic point of view.' I grant the educational advantage, especially in a scheme showing the development of a particular form, but I deny the artistic value of such an arrangement. Many a charming old work gains by following a strenuous modern one. For example, I never heard Bach's Aria for strings to such advantage as on an occasion when it succeeded a strepitous Symphonic Poem. Similarly the modern work that came after the Bach Aria sounded more beautifully coloured than if it had followed the Symphonic Poem. The contrast was good for both music and hearers.

Lastly, I go only part of the way with Mr. Froggatt when he asks for a revival of at least a couple of dozen of Haydn's hundred and twenty-five Symphonies. I am sure we all have a kindly feeling for Papa, but I doubt if such a revival would be the best way of showing it. It would surely be far better to detach some of the best movements from the Symphonies of the writers of that period, and give them occasional performance. No one can have looked over the Sonatas and Symphonies of the Haydn-Mozart school without being struck by the frequency with which a delightful movement occurs in an otherwise unsatisfactory work. As a result of the purist's insistence on playing the whole Symphony or leaving it alone, many real gems have been lost to us. The conductor who will revive a handful of them will be doing good work. They may be played separately, or three or four converted into a Suite, after the manner of the Bach Organ-Trio examples arranged by Sir Henry Wood. The policy of playing detached portions might well be adopted in the case of some modern Symphonies wherein the value of the movements is unequal, or where the work is of great length. Objectors may be reminded that the Ninth Symphony is rarely performed in its entirety, the Finale being usually omitted. If we may do this with the greatest of Beethoven's Symphonies, why not with some of the others? Why, for example, should we never be allowed to enjoy the best of the Scherzi without . . . (dare I finish? I see the devout Beethovenite looking round for a missile) . . . without being bored by the slow movements? There! the heresy is out, and the heretic must take cover with what speed he may.

FESTE.

THE QUESTION OF FESTIVALS: A PLEA FOR CONTINUANCE.

BY HERMAN KLEIN.

This question has not yet been properly—e.g., worthily and adequately—argued. It is all very well to assume a pontifical attitude and declare with much emphasis, 'There shall be no more Triennial Festivals; they do more harm than good; therefore let us do without them.' That does not quite settle the matter. It is easier to destroy than to build up; also it may be, as we have seen during the past four and a half years, a process far more enjoyable to otherwise intellectual people. And now, with so much 'reconstruction' in the air, it is becoming habitual to say, 'Pull down such and such an institution, and see if we cannot replace it with a better.' But the art of the country is not exactly on all fours with its commerce and trade. It cannot be dealt with quite so summarily; and, where music is concerned, you have to be particularly careful that your new device or system is ready, workable, efficient, and superior to the old one. Otherwise your trouble will have been in vain, and the remedy prove worse than the disease—if there be one.

The discussion upon the advisability of continuing to hold Triennial Festivals after the War seems to have taken concrete shape in the autumn of last year. An article on the subject appeared in the Saturday Review in September, and was quoted at length in the columns of the Musical Times for October. That article may be described as a defence in anticipation of, rather than a reply to, an attack upon our Festival system; for, truth to tell, there had been no direct attack either in print or otherwise, but merely gossip and an occasional expression of opinion that 'after the War there will be no regular resumption of these gatherings.' The result plainly showed that it had not been a case of smoke without fire. The expected attack came quickly, minus camouflage, from a rather unexpected quarter—that is to say, in the Observer of October 6, and from the pen of Mr. Ernest Newman. It went 'hammer and tongs' for Triennial Festivals generally and the writer of the Saturday Review article in particular; the latter, indeed, being courteously described as the 'cursed critic' who was trying to reanimate Festivals after the fashion of that 'cursed monk, Luther' (so termed by Nietzsche), when he revived religion just as it 'was fading away during the Renaissance.' The comparison, however, may possibly have been taken as a compliment.

There is no need to recapitulate the arguments put forward by the 'cursed critic,' since they have already appeared in this journal. In the reply that was to 'smash and pulverise them,' Mr. Newman, after declaring that the whole question is not primarily one for London at all, says that in the larger towns (where 'real musical opinion is against the continuance' of Festivals), 'the Festival does no good that can compare with the evil it does'; and, further, that 'no town that saddles itself with a Triennial Festival can become a genuinely musical town.' He proceeds to give his reasons for holding these views, based of course upon his own experiences of Birmingham ('the least-cultured city of anything like its size in the whole world'), which, as Mr. Newman's admirers are aware, colour in a marked degree the majority of his ideas upon the musical life of this country. Birmingham, therefore, is taboo; and 'neither Sheffield nor Leeds can be called a musical town. In a word, a town can have a vigorous musical life or it can have a Festival; but it cannot have both.' Ergo, Manchester, Liverpool, and Glasgow, not being 'afflicted with a Festival,' must be regarded as 'the only three British provincial towns that deserve the title of musical.' Doubtless they feel extremely proud of an ipse dixit emanating from so distinguished a source.

But what is the poison germ that issues from these Festivals? What is the cardinal sin or crime that they render active, that causes Mr. Ernest Newman so much perturbation, that has made Birmingham recognise, 'even among many of the leading families of the town that were once the financial backbone of the Festival, that these gatherings must be finished with if the town is ever to place its musical life on a sound and durable basis'? The answer, according to the same authority, is that this 'triennial debauch, like all debauches, exhausts its victims'—its social victims, apparently. The town is 'not only morally, but socially, exhausted after it all' (poor, feeble, overwrought Birmingham!); and, worse still, this 'wasteful' Festival (which for a hundred and fifty years has been performing good music and has given over £150,000 to its medical charities) is run by gentlemen who 'know next to nothing about music,' who 'pay egregious, ludicrous prices for everything,' who are 'the best part of a generation behind the times,' and who know neither the real great artists of the day nor the 'vital movements in the music of the time.'

What an indictment! Nay, what a sentence! It is as though the prosecuting counsel had assumed the duties of judge, put on the black cap, and condemned the whole row of provincial Festivals—murderers of all musical progress—to forthwith suffer the fate of Tyl Eulenspiegel and trouble a busy critic no more. It certainly sheds a strong light upon his feelings towards them; it might even incline the unprejudiced thinker to arrive at the conclusion that the advocate in this instance had protested too much, that in the effort to make out a strong case he had ceased to be judicial and indulged in mere rhetoric and right-down exaggeration. I would go further, and assert that in this instance he allowed his feelings to get the better of him and lead him into unfairness, and I will show why.

In his attack in the Observer, Mr. Newman admitted that there were two arguments in the Saturday Review article which could be brought forward in favour of the continuance of Festivals, viz., that they had been of service to the medical charities, and that they had provided 'finer choral singing than can be had at normal times.' Nevertheless, he rejected both: (1) Because the rich men who would only part with their money when hustled into doing so by the sentiment of a Festival were the men whom it would be better to do without, rather than have musical art ruined and 'the progress of local culture retarded because music has been unfortunate enough in the past to get mixed up with people of this undesirable sort'; and (2) Because Festivals were no longer essential to choral singing on a grand scale, the technique whereof was 'becoming passé,' and which was 'not the rarity to the provinces that it was to the metropolitan critic.' Reasoning of this description is best left to answer itself; it carries no conviction, but merely suggests a determination to see no good in aught that associates itself with the very name of 'Festival.' Even the 'prolonged social fuss, the excitement of preparation,' is harmful in Mr. Newman's estimation, though most visitors to these meetings have been given to understand the exact contrary. The more talk, the more interest in the events of the week, the better the sale of tickets and the better would be the financial result. Nor is there anything in this to hinder the appreciation of musical art in its best and noblest manifestations. Go where you will, 'society' will be found clinging tightly to the skirts of music, and without its aid 'the development of orchestral and operatic' enterprises would not go far.

There was, however, a third vital argument in the Saturday Review article, which Mr. Ernest Newman for some reason chose to ignore. He made not the slightest reference in the Observer to the enormous stimulus, the solid support, that Triennial Festivals have accorded native musicians by giving them commissions to write new choral works for these gatherings. Occasionally, it is true, the same privilege has been extended to illustrious foreigners, but in most cases it was reserved for British composers; and, down very nearly to the close of the last century, it constituted their almost exclusive medium for reaching the ear of the public with works of this calibre. It is hard for the spoilt 'futurist' or the blasé connoisseur of to-day to realise what this outlet meant years ago in the way of encouragement to rising musicians, to men whom the timely 'lift' helped to work their way to the front, and many of whom are still alive to tell the tale. The novelties were not all successes, of course; far from it. The proportion of failures was at times even large and discouraging. But did that matter? Not greatly, so long as public trial and criticism, public praise or blame, were teaching the skilful hand how to grow more masterful and how to attain its ultimate goal.

So important has been this feature of our Festival system, so extensive and valuable its harvest of music of a high order, that I have been tempted to compile a list of the principal works that have seen the light at the great triennial gatherings held in the English provinces during the past seventy or eighty years. I do not pretend that it is by any means complete, but I believe it to be accurate as far as it goes. The omission of orchestral novelties has been inevitable; otherwise the list would have extended far beyond the limits of space here available. But the yield in works of this genre has been extremely large, especially in recent years, and has added vastly to the debt which native composers owe to the managers of these Festivals. The following, then, come under the heading of oratorios and cantatas only:

ENGLISH FESTIVAL NOVELTIES.

BIRMINGHAM.

1840	Hymn of Praise	Mendelssohn
1846	Elijah	"
1864	Bride of Dunkerron	Henry Smart
1867	Woman of Samaria	Sterndale Bennett
	Ancient Mariner... ..	J. F. Barnett
1870	Paradise and the Peri	"
1873	Light of the World	Arthur Sullivan
1876	Corsair	F. H. Cowen
	Resurrection	G. A. Macfarren
1882	Redemption	Gounod
1885	Mors et Vita	"
	Spectre's Bride	Dvorák
	Three Holy Children	Stanford
	Sleeping Beauty	F. H. Cowen
1888	Judith	C. H. H. Parry
	Callirhoe	J. F. Bridge
1891	Requiem	Dvorák
	Eden	Stanford
	Veni Creator	A. C. Mackenzie
1894	King Saul	C. H. H. Parry
	Swan and the Skylark	Goring Thomas
	Stabat Mater	Henschel

1897	Requiem	Stanford
	Ode to the Sea	Somervell
1900	Dream of Gerontius	Elgar
1903	Apostles	"
1906	Kingdom	"
	Bells	J. Holbrooke
	Omar Khayyam (Parts I. and II.)	G. Bantock
1909	" (Part III.)	"
	Midnight	R. Boughton
1912	Music-Makers	Elgar
	Song of St. Francis	Walford Davies

LEEDS.

1858	May Queen	Sterndale Bennett
1877	Joseph	G. A. Macfarren
1880	Martyr of Antioch	Sullivan
	Building of the Ship	J. F. Barnett
1883	King David	Macfarren
	Gray's Elegy	Alfred Cellier
1886	Golden Legend	Sullivan
	Story of Sayid	A. C. Mackenzie
	Revenge	Stanford
	St. Ludmila	Dvorák
1889	St. Cecilia's Day... ..	C. H. H. Parry
	Voyage of Maeldune	Stanford
	Sword of Argantyr	F. Corder
1895	Invocation to Music	C. H. H. Parry
	Forsaken Merman	Somervell
1898	Te Deum... ..	Stanford
	Caractacus	Elgar
	Ode to the Passions	F. H. Cowen
1901	Blind Girl of Castel-Cuillé	Coleridge-Taylor
	Two Veterans	C. Wood
1904	Witch's Daughter	A. C. Mackenzie
	Songs of the Sea... ..	Stanford
	Everyman	Walford Davies
	Ballad of Dundee	C. Wood
1907	Stabat Mater	Stanford
	Sea Wanderers	G. Bantock
1910	Sea Symphony	R. Vaughan Williams
1913	Mystic Trumpeter	Hamilton Harty

THREE CHOIRS.

1887	(Worcester) Prodigal Son	Sullivan
1880	(Gloucester) Prometheus Unbound	C. H. H. Parry
1884	(Worcester) Hero and Leander	C. H. Lloyd
1886	(Gloucester) Andromeda	"
1887	(Worcester) Ruth	F. H. Cowen
1890	" Repentance of Nineveh	J. F. Bridge
1891	(Hereford) De Profundis	C. H. H. Parry
	" Battle of the Baltic	Stanford
	" Song of Judgment	C. H. Lloyd
1892	(Gloucester) Job	C. H. H. Parry
1894	(Hereford) Cradle of Christ	J. F. Bridge
1896	(Worcester) Light of Life	Elgar
1897	(Hereford) Hymn of Thanksgiving	C. H. Lloyd
1891	(Gloucester) Song of Darkness	C. H. H. Parry
1900	(Hereford) Te Deum	"
	" Last Post	Stanford
1901	(Gloucester) Forging of the Anchor	J. F. Bridge
	" Emmaus	A. H. Brewer
1902	(Worcester) Temple	Walford Davies
1903	(Hereford) Atonement	Coleridge-Taylor
1904	(Gloucester) Sinfonia Sacra (I.)	C. H. H. Parry
1906	(Hereford) " (II.)	"
1907	(Gloucester) Christus (Selection)	G. Bantock
1909	(Hereford) Noble Numbers	W. Davies
1910	(Gloucester) Christus (Gethsemane)	G. Bantock
1912	(Hereford) Nativity Ode	C. H. H. Parry
1913	(Gloucester) Promised Land	Saint-Saëns

NORWICH.

1881	St. Ursula	F. H. Cowen
	Sun Worshipers	Goring Thomas
1884	Rose of Sharon... ..	Mackenzie
	Elegiac Ode... ..	Stanford
1890	L'Allegro ed il Pensieroso... ..	C. H. H. Parry
1893	Water Lily	F. H. Cowen
1899	Sea-Pictures... ..	Elgar
1905	Pied Piper of Hamelin	C. H. H. Parry

VARIOUS.

1836	(Liverpool)	St. Paul	Mendelssohn
1856	(Bradford)	He giveth His beloved	G. A. Macfarren
1873	(Bristol)	St. John the Baptist ...	G. A. Macfarren
1877	(Brighton)	Lalla Rookh	F. Clay
1878	"	Deluge	F. H. Cowen
1882	(Bristol)	Jason	Mackenzie
1885	(Chester)	Daniel	Joseph Bridge
1886	(Wolv'pton)	Maid of Astolat	S. Heap
	"	Bridal of Triermain ...	F. Corder
1891	(Chester)	Rudel	Joseph Bridge
1892	(Cardiff)	Saul of Tarsus	Joseph Parry
1895	(Cardiff)	Bard	Stanford
1896	(N. Staffs)	King Olaf	Elgar
1899	"	Death of Minnehaha ...	Coleridge-Taylor
	"	(Hiawatha)
1904	(Cardiff)	John Gilpin	F. H. Cowen
1907	"	Vision of Life	C. H. H. Parry
"	"	He giveth His beloved	F. H. Cowen
"	"	Sir Patrick Spens ...	A. H. Brewer
1908	(Bristol)	Wellington Ode	Stanford
"	"	Andromeda	C. R. Rootham
1908	(Sheffield)	Sea-Drift	Delius
1910	(Cardiff)	Veil	F. H. Cowen
"	"	Sun-God's Return ...	A. C. Mackenzie

Lengthy as it is, this list would have been much longer had it included the whole of the now-forgotten novelties contributed by musicians such as Spohr, Molique, and Benedict at Norwich, by Costa and Benedict at Birmingham, and others of lesser fame. Among the latter was at least one composer of English birth, Hugo Pierson, who won himself a reputation in Germany and whose oratorios were produced at Norwich in the 'fifties; but who remembers his name now? On the other hand, it would have been wrong to omit foreign masters of the stamp of Mendelssohn, Gounod, Dvorák, and Saint-Saëns, who assuredly cannot be classified among the forgotten, and who were proud to place their new scores at the disposal of English Festival committees.

Another point: there is no purely church music in the above catalogue, and, as everybody knows, a vast quantity of it has been expressly written for these meetings, notably the Three Choirs, which may justly boast of the fine anthems and services contributed prior to the middle of the last century by Boyce, Dr. Alcock, J. S. Smith, G. T. Smith, G. J. Elvey, and others whose names are household words in British cathedrals and churches. The exclusion of the orchestral novelties has kept out a few well-known names—Edward German, Frederic Cliffe, and Hamish MacCunn, for instance. But the total aggregate, comprising new works and pieces of every description, falls not far short of four hundred compositions.

This is a brave showing, not merely in the numerical sense, but from the standpoint of quality. Nothing can be easier than to ask, How many of the works here enumerated are 'living' to-day, how many are to be found in the active repertory of choral societies in this country and the Dominions Over-seas? The reply must perforce be 'not many.' Yet amongst those few there are certain masterpieces that will never die; others that will continue to honour native art in spite of changing fashions and the meteoric eccentricities of a decade.

As for the rest, including all the succès d'estime, the glorious failures, the illustrious 'has beens,' at which the modern critic points his stiffening finger of derision and scorn, I will venture to say that they have served a useful purpose, if no more.* For, like the weak and unlucky who fall amid an advancing host on marshy ground, and thereby make the way solid for their more fortunate comrades to press onward to victory, so have these failures served as a vivid and powerful lesson in what to avoid and how to achieve. They may not have elevated the banner of English music to nobler heights; but despite failure or merely temporary success, they have aroused an ever-increasing admiration and respect for the splendid technical equipment and the high artistic ideals of the earnest, serious, hard-working, uncrushable British musician.

So much, then, for the side of the question which our 'prosecuting counsel' elected to pass over without a word of comment. It seems to me that this omission greatly emphasises the weakness of his case. But its greatest weakness lies in the fact that it is based upon purely destructive criticism; that it seeks not to reform, but to annihilate the best part of the system which it attacks, on account of a few characteristic blemishes so obvious (yet, after all, so trifling) in their nature that their removal strikes one as an easy and indispensable duty. By all means let every Festival committee be strengthened and improved. Get rid of the 'figure-heads'; bring in the up-to-date musician and the man who by sympathy, education, and experience, knows something of musical art. By all means relegate the 'social fuss' to the background; there is no reason why it should interfere in the slightest degree with the working of the main machinery. If the 'triennial debauch' is a social, not a musical one, as Mr. Newman declares—if it 'exhausts its victims' both morally and financially—then set about teaching the poor weak-minded creatures how to understand things better, how to spread their interest in music over three years instead of three months or three weeks, and how to avoid their periodical Festival 'orgies' (without neglecting the harmless Festival itself) as religiously as if it were the cocaine or the opium habit.

The anti-Festivalite is fond of reiterating the stale argument that in the 'triennial' towns music suffers because the quantity and quality of what is given between the gatherings is negligible. That this is not true has been proved over and over again. On the contrary, the Festival stimulates the independent operations of the various local choral and other musical societies. Mr. Newman was clearly answered on this point by the letter from Dr. A. Herbert Brewer which appeared in the Observer the following week. He showed that the inter-Festival activities of Gloucester were in no way affected by the triennial 'orgie'—unless for the better. And Birmingham itself, if properly handled, could no doubt be made to achieve the same creditable result. A musical friend, who is also a sporting enthusiast, has put the matter in a nutshell by comparing the Triennial Festival with the annual cricket week, of which hundreds are held all over the country and succeed in arousing the proper spirit of emulation without lessening by one the number of intermediate matches. If a week's satiety once a year does not injure a national sport, surely the same allowance once in three years ought to do no harm to a national art.

* The article on the Festival of the Three Choirs, in Grove's Dictionary (revised edition), concludes as follows:—'The managers of the Festival have hitherto felt bound to maintain their high reputation by commissioning new works for performance, and for many years such commissions were the only means by which native composers could obtain a hearing for important new works. For the mere fulfilment of the financial object of the Festivals it might be held that the most hackneyed works of the repertory would suffice to fill the cathedrals, but if this became the rule, the Festivals would go back to the position of purely local affairs, whereas they have for many years been of real national importance.'

Meanwhile, what proof have we that a Festival impedes the musical progress of a city, or that the development of cognate art institutions cannot go forward simultaneously in the same municipality? Birmingham, which may or may not be an un-musical town, is not really relevant to the point. Manchester has had its local orchestra for half a century, but is only just beginning to think of building an opera-house; at no time did it have the festival instinct. Liverpool and Glasgow both started Festivals, then dropped them for specific reasons, without, however, founding either a permanent orchestra or an opera to take their place. What is it, then, that makes them more musical than Leeds and Sheffield? It cannot be their choral societies, for all are equally well off in that respect. But choral singing on the big scale is 'becoming passé.'

Is it? Not in the opinion of those who know how to read the signs of the times. Now that the War is over and the men are coming back, the large choirs will once again be au grand complet; they will not long be idle. From American sources I learn that preparations are being made for the biggest revival of oratorio that has ever been known in the United States. Yet at this very juncture we are to abandon Triennial Festivals as harmful, and with them relinquish the 'old-fashioned large choir' in favour of the 'smaller madrigal choirs,' with their 'new technique,' which, by the way, is as ancient as the Masses of Palestrina and the a cappella singing of the Sistine Chapel. How absurd; how ruthless!

One musician, Joseph Joachim, who knew this country well for fifty years, hit the right nail on the head when referring to this subject; it was whilst he was showing me over the Hochschule at Berlin, in 1904, and I have never forgotten his words. 'If,' he said, 'there is one branch in which you stand pre-eminent in England, it is choral-singing. We envy you that, and we envy you your wonderful Festivals, which we have nothing to compare with. But,' he added, after a moment's thought, 'what a pity it is that those Festivals attempt to do so much! The programmes are always too long, too heavy, too overloaded with good things. And they go on for four days and nights. What an infliction for your poor musical critics!' The great violinist must have been thinking of Mr. Ernest Newman.

Occasional Notes.

MUSIC FOR THE TROOPS. The committee of 'The Musicians' Gift' may well be proud of the results of their year's labours. Over £3,000 has been raised, and more than 1,000 instruments, 30,000 song-books, and 100,000 pieces of music have been sent to the troops. But the money has been all spent, and much more is required if the committee is to continue its work during the difficult period of demobilization. At least £2,000 more is needed, and quickly.

The following well-known organists are kindly giving recitals in aid of the 'Gift': Mr. W. Wolstenholme, at All Hallows', Gospel Oak, February 11, at 8; at Lyndhurst Road Congregational Church, Hampstead, March 8, at 5.30; Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, at St. Andrew's, Leytonstone, February 3, at 7.30; at All Saints', Tooting Graveney, March 1, at 6.30; Sergt. W. Lynwood Farnam, at Southwark Cathedral, February 19, at 6; Mr. H. L. Balfour, at Holy Trinity, Sloane Street, March 8; Mr. Reginald Goss Custard, at All Hallows', Gospel Oak, February 25, at 8; at Park Chapel, Crouch End, March 24, at 8; Mr. G. D. Cunningham, at St. James's, Muswell Hill, March 8, at 5; at Lyndhurst Road Congregational Church, Hampstead, February 15, at 5.30; Mr. H. Leslie-Smith, at Croydon Parish Church, March 25, at 8. Dr. J. E. Borland hopes to give to the Fund the collections at four of his weekly recitals at St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate (Tuesdays, at 1.15). Other dates are being arranged as we go to press.

Here is a lead which we hope the rank and file of the profession will follow. Even if no great sum of money is raised, the Fund is brought to the notice of many who may wish to help in other ways, such as the giving of instruments or music. Players who arrange recitals should write to the Secretary, 'The Musicians' Gift,' Y.M.C.A., 25, Bloomsbury Square, W.C. 1, asking for a supply of leaflets, on the blank side of which they should print their programme.

PRESIDENT PADEREWSKI. The election of Paderewski to the Presidency of Poland was announced in The Times of January 18, the news having been telegraphed from Warsaw. Musicians will view the fact with mingled feelings: Poland's gain is music's loss. Will Paderewski find time to compose the Finale to his B minor Symphony? The work was produced ten years ago by the Boston Orchestra, and played at Queen's Hall by the London Symphony Orchestra, under Richter, in November, 1909. It dealt with the political troubles of Poland, and broke off at the third movement, the composer having deferred the writing of the Finale—a song of triumph—until his country was free. As patriot, Paderewski makes a better figure than Chopin. The latter was at Vienna when Poland began one of her struggles for freedom. Chopin's companion, Woyciechowski, hurried home, but Chopin hesitated, and finally contented himself with expressing his devotion to his country in the tremendous C minor Etude.

POLITICAL MUSIC. Political music can never be a complete success. If the music is fine enough to live, its political origin is rarely remembered. How many people think of Poland when hearing the C minor Etude? Who cares about the Napoleonic side of the 'Eroica'? If Mendelssohn's Symphony is ever played, nobody is concerned with the Reformation. The only music that has any influence on political events, or is even remembered in connection with them, is of the popular song type—'Lilliburlero,' 'Ça Ira,' 'Charlie is my darling,' and so forth. The big works simply stand or fall on their musical merits, and the few that stand quickly shed their political associations.

There are various ways of paying homage to a great composer. Probably Sir Edward Elgar is the first to be honoured by having a cricket club named after him. We are asked to announce that a 'good class cricket club' is being formed in the Herne Hill district, named 'The Elgar C.C.' Membership is confined to music students aged nineteen and over. Inquiries should be addressed to Mr. J. F. Porte, Margate School, 93, Cannon Street, E.C. 4.

Who are the most important members of an orchestra? It seems a fairly easy question, but the front page of a Queen's Hall Symphony programme sets us wondering.

Only two members of the band receive mention—the leader (as is fitting) and the player of the celesta. Why the latter? At this particular concert his instrument was used in one work only, and then merely as one of the crowd. Altogether, he played about twenty or thirty bars in a work that lasted fifteen minutes, and at no time was his part difficult—or even audible at times. When the 'Casse Noisette' Suite took us all by storm, the celesta was a delightful novelty, and its little solo passages in the 'Dragon-fly Dance' were perhaps sufficiently important to make the mention of the player's name worth while. But the celesta is now a common object of the seashore, so to speak, and the prominence given to its player is absurd. If justice had been done on the occasion under notice, the whole of the band would have been mentioned, and at the end, in the smallest possible type, we should have read:

'Also ran—The Celesta. Mr. Nemo.'

Many of us have yet to realise that music is not the only thing of importance at a concert. In the following report from a Belfast critic, published in a London weekly journal, our art is put in its proper place,—a good second to that of the dressmaker:

Miss — wore a becoming gown of ivory lace and chine silk, and Miss — gown was carried out in Saxe-bleu georgette. Miss — and Miss — played on two violins, as a duet, two very characteristic waltzes by Coleridge-Taylor. Miss — was wearing a frock of hydrangea-blue glacé and chiffon, while Miss — gown was of dull amethyst glacé and chiffon with a big knot of violets in the corsage. A feature of the programme was a Fantaisie by Liszt, played as a duet on two pianofortes by Miss Annie — and Miss —, the latter becomingly gowned in black crêpe de chine with touches of gold.

This was evidently written by a woman; no mere man could handle such high matters with ease and confidence. But if there is a public thirsting for information of the kind, our critics must be prepared. At present, how many of them can distinguish between a gown of Saxe-bleu georgette and one 'carried out' in hydrangea-blue glacé?

The latest organ novelties gathered from recital programmes: 'March of the Magic,' 'Fantasia on "In Dutch Jubilo";' 'St. Francis preaching to the triads.'

Church and Organ Music.

A WINTER SCHOOL OF CHURCH MUSIC.

By MAURICE F. BELL.

In atmospheric conditions resembling those of August, 1916 (when the last Summer School was held), this Winter Conference—anticipating the Summer session planned for this year—has been held on account of a peculiar urgency of the ecclesiastical situation. It is two years since the Archbishops appointed a committee to 'consider and report upon ways in which the public worship of the Church can be more directly related to the felt needs of actual life at the present moment.' The Report of this committee, issued only a few months ago, was in three chapters, of which the third dealt exclusively with 'the difficult question of Church music.' This was significant, and marked an advance; and yet it was said of the report that 'if an official of a musical college were to study it and try to find out what the Church wanted, he would not get very far.' It was felt that a conference of the members of the Summer School might be useful, and that in the course of three days' discussion of the report, some definite conclusions might be reached, the hands of the ecclesiastical authorities strengthened, and the work of reconstruction furthered.

The Conference met in the Chapter House of St. Paul's Cathedral on January 14-16, under the chairmanship of the Rev. A. S. Duncan-Jones, and for the services which have proved so important a part of the work of the Summer School, at St. Augustin's, Watling Street.

One need say little about the latter. Two simple and congregational settings of the Holy Communion Service were sung—one was Merbecke and the other Plainsong, and a third by John Shephard, an early polyphonic Mass of great beauty. The Psalms were sung from the Psalter of Briggs and Frere, and the hymns were from the 'English Hymnal'—mainly British, ancient and modern, and all of the best type.

The discussions were on the training of the congregation, of the clergy, and of the choir-master. It should be noted that the word 'training' was the motif that ran throughout the deliberations of the Conference, the Report of the Archbishops' Committee having laid stress on the great need in the Church 'for a sufficient number of trained musicians.' In fact, towards the end of the Conference, resolutions were passed recommending drastic reforms in the curriculum of our theological and musical colleges to meet the requirements both of those who are being trained for holy orders, and also of church organists and choir-masters in matters relating to the historical, liturgical, and practical aspects of the music in the worship of the Church.

Mr. Geoffrey Shaw, it is true, found fault with the expression 'trained musicians.' It was 'trained Church-musicians,' he said, that we need. Even the report itself said little, for instance, about the importance of the rightful rendering of the music of the Holy Communion; though in its second chapter it laid down the principle that 'the whole tradition of the Church is in favour of making this service in some way central.' Mr. Shaw maintained that the liturgical portions of that service belonged to the congregation, and that the Kyries, Creed, Sanctus, and Gloria should be sung always in such fashion that the congregation could take their rightful part in singing them. The music used might be the ancient plain-song, or it might be frankly modern; but it should always be—as he expressed it—in the musical shape resulting from ‘natural tendencies.’ It was a natural tendency to sing words as they are spoken; to slow down at the ends of phrases; to get louder as the music goes up, and softer as it descends. This cut at the root of most of the ‘Services’ with which we are familiar. There is a principle at stake here which needs emphasising.

Mr. E. G. P. Wyatt pointed out how the old service books laid stress upon what the report calls the ‘definite line that must be drawn between congregational and non-congregational music,’ the music appointed for the more important portions of the liturgy being of a type in which the people could—and in old days did—join, that for the more incidental parts (Introit, Gradual, Communion, and the like) being better suited to the skilled and more highly-trained choir.

When Major Walford Davies came to instruct the School in the proper rendering of hymns, he enforced the same principle, i.e., that, in the congregational portions of the Church services, the music must be subservient to the words. Even in metrical psalmody, he said, ‘there is no stock minim: it is the words that matter. The minim was made for man, and not man for the minim.’ He made us first say and then sing. In this way hymns can be made to live.

The practical conclusion seemed to be this—that congregational music, i.e., most of the music sung in the average parish church, must be simple, for the most part unisonal, and that it should be the common offering of the people and never of the nature of a ‘performance.’

There was an urgent plea for the training of the congregation. In many churches, it appears, a good beginning has been made in the shape of congregational practices (or, as Major Walford Davies preferred to call them ‘Sing-Songs’), held in the half-hour before Evensong. ‘Let the parson say to his people, “You have got to get to heaven; better have rehearsals now. The Church is your real Home: let us have a real Sing-Song. It is worth the training we shall impose upon you.”’

We were fortunate in having with us not only the organist of the Temple, but also the new organist of Westminster Abbey. Mr. S. H. Nicholson’s subject was the training of the choir-master. Here again was a line of thought that fitted in with so much of what Major Walford Davies laid down as essential. Mr. Nicholson told us how the article pupil or student at choir-training classes, or the young man who picked up more or less vague ideas from books and observation, had no real experience of the proper handling of boys and men so as to get the best results out of them. ‘The training of a choir-master is more a matter of psychology than of technique.’ He pleaded for the establishment of a Schola Cantorum, in which theoretical instruction could be combined with practical work; but, above all, for what Major Walford Davies afterwards summed up in the two words, ‘Life’ and ‘Mastery.’ The word ‘training,’ we were told, is only bearable when you have the goal before you, and in these two words we may perceive and find that goal. Life is the great claim of our Lord on the common man. He came ‘that they might have life and have it more abundantly.’ The choir-master, as well as the clergyman, had to be a life-conveyer. And mastery is, after all, what all we common-folk admire and applaud. What is worth doing at all is worth doing well.

Perhaps the most noticeable contribution to a valuable series of discussions was the talk given to us by the Bishop of Kingston on the training of the clergy. He told us how the specialised training of the clergy in their theological colleges contained practically no music-study. ‘They know in a vague way,’ he said, ‘that music is an emotional power of possible value to them in days to come; they will have to arrange details of services, conduct services, deal with organist and choir, and with congregational singing. But they meet with no help towards learning about the history, principles, and practice of the art; their relations to music are never once taken seriously.’ The worship of the Church, he maintained, must be taken and treated scientifically from a historical and from a liturgical point of view, and the ordinand must be trained in forming a standard of judgment so as to know what is good. All this must be in addition to voice-production and intelligent interpretation in both monotonous and reading the prayers. He laid down two principles which should control the priest’s attitude towards music: (1) Common-sense and (2) Reverence. He gave us several illustrations of the way in which common-sense will lead to helpful reform, and with regard to reverence, he laid down that it will ask all through for what deepens and enhances our consciousness of the Presence of God. ‘Screeching tunes and maudlin words make us unsensitive of the Presence.’

They were three crowded days of hard work—three profitable and encouraging days. The Summer School is making progress every year.

ORGAN RECITALS AT THE NATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR THE BLIND.

Among the interesting series of organ recitals with which London is so well supplied must be mentioned those given weekly at the National Institute for the Blind, Great Portland Street. These recitals take place in the Armitage Hall on Wednesdays, at 3.30. Admission is free, and visitors who wish to see the processes connected with the production of music and literature in Braille type are invited to attend at 2.30, when they will be shown over the building. The organ is a three-manual of forty-eight stops, built by Messrs. Norman & Beard, and is a replica of that at the Royal College of Organists plus ten stops to make it more effective for recital purposes. Blind candidates for the R.C.O. diplomas have free access to the organ. Over sixty blind organists hold the College diplomas. The Wednesday recitals are arranged chiefly with a view to bringing forward blind performers and the works of blind composers. In addition, recitals are given on the first Tuesday in each month at 1.15, and on the third Thursday at 2 p.m. We recently attended one of these mid-day recitals, and found a most appreciative audience (mostly blind) enjoying a delightful performance by Mr. H. G. Ley. Mr. Ley played Franck’s Choral No. 3, Wesley’s Larghetto in F sharp minor, Jongen’s ‘Chant de Mai,’ Bach’s Prelude (9/8) and Fugue in C, and Parry’s Preludes on ‘Ye blessed realms’ and ‘As pants the hart,’ adding as an extra the first movement of Bach’s Sonata in C. Mr. H. C. Warrilow is the musical director, and will gladly answer any inquiries.

A special service was held at Lincoln Cathedral on New Year’s Day, when Handel’s ‘Messiah’ (Part 1) was performed under the conductorship of Dr. G. J. Bennett, the nave being crowded from end to end. The choir and orchestra (led by Mr. J. H. Parkes, of Sheffield) numbered about three hundred performers, and the solos were sung by Miss P. Moore, of Rotherham, and members of the Cathedral choir. Before the service Mozart’s Symphony in G minor was played by the orchestra. Dr. Alan Gray, of Trinity College, Cambridge, was at the organ, and after the service played his Fantasia on Christmas Carols.

Mr. Gatty Sellars has been touring South America under the direction of the British Patriotic Committee there, giving organ recitals in the principal cities for British Red Cross funds. For a period of four months Mr. Sellars allowed the receipts from these recitals to go to the Red Cross. At Buenos Aires he gave nine recitals, St. John's pro-Cathedral being crowded to overflowing and numbers turned away. At Valparaiso nearly 3,500 Chilean dollars were taken in two nights.

The organ in the historic church of St. George's-in-the-East is at present in such a bad condition as to be unusable. The organ-builders responsible for its care report that with cleaning and overhauling the instrument will be useful for some time yet. The estimated cost is £55 10s.—a small sum at first sight, but a heavy one for a poor East-End parish. Perhaps some of our readers who are interested in St. George's, or in church or organ music, will help this deserving case. Donations should be sent to the Rector, the Rev. F. St. John Corbett, The Rectory, St. George's-in-the-East, E. I.

At Soar Chapel, Penygraig, on Christmas and Boxing nights, the Williamstown Male Choir (conducted by Mr. Ted Lewis), winners of this year's National Eisteddfod, gave their annual concerts, the works sung being 'Damon and Phintias' (Prout), the 'Song of Harold Harfager' (Pointer), and Ambrose Thomas's 'The Tyrol.' The soloists were Miss Phyllis Archibald, Mr. Manuel Jones, and Mr. Glanville Davies. The leader of the orchestra was Mr. Aneurin Parker, and Mr. Ben Thomas accompanied.

The Johannesburg Town Hall was well filled on the occasion of the thirty-second Subscription Concert, on Wednesday, October 2, 1918, when an excellent rendering of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' was given, with chorus and orchestra of two hundred performers, conducted by Mr. John Connell, town organist. The soloists were Miss Aileen Hodgson, Miss Ethel Mann, Mr. Harry Evans, and Mr. John Fellowes. Mr. Wansbrough Poles was at the organ.

Mr. G. Tootell has just finished a very interesting series of eight weekly recitals at Kendal Parish Church. The following programme may be taken as a specimen: Grand Symphonic piece, César Franck; Largo, 'New World' Symphony, Dvorák; Overture, 'The Meistersingers'; Scherzo Symphonique, Faulkes; Triumphal March, 'Caractacus,' Elgar, with vocal solos by Mendelssohn and Dvorák.

Parts 2 and 3 of Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' were performed at Park Chapel, Crouch End, on December 22. The solos were sung by members of the choir, assisted by Mr. William Dallison. Mr. J. S. Yates was at the organ. Music is an important feature at Park Chapel. A very successful Hymn Festival was held recently, and Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' is down for performance during Lent.

The congregation of Holy Trinity Church, Anerley, S.E., has presented a canteen of cutlery, and the clergy and choir a silver-mounted baton and a barometer, to Mr. G. B. Choat, organist and choirmaster, on his departure to take up similar duties at Christ Church, Gipsy Hill, S.E.

The Christmas music from Handel's 'Messiah' was given at Halifax Place Chapel, Nottingham, on December 22, under the direction of Mr. E. M. Barber. The soloists were Miss Warner, Madame Parkin, Mr. J. Franklin Pearson, and Gunner Stoton. Driver C. E. B. Dobson was the organist.

The 'Hymn of Praise' was sung at St. John's Church, St. Leonard's-on-Sea, on December 18. The tenor soloist was Mr. George Brierley, of St. Paul's Cathedral. Mr. L. O'Connor conducted, and Mr. Allan Biggs was at the organ. There was a large attendance.

After twenty-five years' service as organist and choirmaster at Ikley Parish Church, Mr. Isaac Hirst has been presented with a cheque and a canteen of cutlery of about a hundred pieces.

Mr. Clifton Cook's musical lectures at King George's Hall have realised £93 for the Y.M.C.A. Fund for wounded soldiers.

ORGAN RECITALS.

Mr. Allan Brown, Albert Hall—Toccata in D, d'Evry; Fountain Réverie, Fletcher; Overture in C minor, Hollins. At Wesleyan Central Hall, Tooting—'Rheims,' from 'Sonata Eroica,' Stanford; Sunset and Evening Bells, Federlein; Toccata in G, Dubois; 'Pomp and Circumstance.' At Clapton Park Congregational Church—Suite Gothique, Boëllmann; Scherzo, P. Mansfield; Fugue in G minor (The Great), Bach; Allegro from 'Cuckoo and Nightingale' Concerto, Handel.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Prelude 'St. Thomas,' Parry; 'Verdun,' Stanford; Nocturne in D flat, Bairstow.

Mr. Ernest W. Chaney, Gillingham Parish Church—Prelude to 'Parsifal'; Choral, Vierne; Organ Suite ('Scenes from the Life of the Blessed Virgin'), Malling.

Mr. J. A. Meale, Wesleyan Central Hall, Westminster—Sonata, No. 6, Mendelssohn; Fantaisie Rustique, Wolstenholme; Orchestral Suite, 'Harlequinade,' Higgs; Introduction and Fugue from Sonata, Reubke; Scherzo and Passacaglia from Sonata in E minor, Rheinberger; Romanza and Allegretto, Wolstenholme; Allegro Cantabile and Toccata (Symphony No. 5), Widor; Sonata in A, Borowski.

Dr. F. W. Wadely, Carlisle Cathedral—Prelude in C, Bach; Choral in A minor, Franck; Andante con Moto and Allegro, Stanford; Fantaisie in E flat, Saint-Saëns.

Mr. Sydney L. Crookes, Newlands U.F. Church—Andantino in D, Hollins; Moto Perpetuo and Intermezzo, Ford; Choral Prelude, 'Martyrdom,' Parry; Concert Caprice in G, P. Mansfield.

Mr. Arthur S. Warrell, St. Nicholas, Bristol—Noël (founded on an old carol by Clement Marot), Quef; A Christmas Postlude, Harvey Grace; Fantasy on Two Christmas Carols, West; Rhapsody on Christmas Carols, Gigout.

Mr. Ernest H. Smith, St. Bede's, Liverpool—Andante Pastorale, Sullivan; 'Christmas Eve,' Smith; March in E flat, Best.

Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool (three recitals)—Air, 'Holsworthy Church Bells,' S. S. Wesley; A Christmas Postlude, Harvey Grace; Miniature Suite, Eric Coates; March in E flat, Salomé; Fugue in G minor (the Great), Bach; A Dream of Love, Liszt; Suite No. 1, 'L'Arlesienne,' Bizet.

Mr. Arthur R. Saunders, St. Mary-le-Bow, Cheapside—Sonata da Camera, Peace; Allegretto Grazioso, Hollins; Fantasia on Old Christmas Carols, Faulkes; Fantaisie Rustique, Wolstenholme. At St. Stephen's, Walbrook—Sursum Corda, Elgar; Toccata and Fugue in C, Bach; Allegretto, Lemare.

Dr. William Prendergast, Winchester Cathedral—Toccata (Sonata No. 14), Rheinberger; Pastorale in G, Charles Wesley; 'Occasional' Overture, Handel.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas, Cole Abbey (three recitals)—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Fantasia in E flat, Saint-Saëns; Fugue, Reubke; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Mendelssohn; Overture in D minor, Smart.

Mr. W. Henry Maxfield, St. John's, Altrincham—Christmas Offertoire, Lemmens; Offertoire on Two Christmas Themes, Guilmant; Fantasia on Old Christmas Carols, Maxfield.

Driver C. E. B. Dobson, Central Mission, Nottingham (three recitals)—Concert Allegro in G, Mansfield; Question and Answer, Wolstenholme; Sonata in G minor, Merkel; Christmas Postlude, Harvey Grace.

Corporal Leonard Brown, Central Mission, Nottingham—Choral Prelude, 'In dulci jubilo,' Bach; Fantasy on Two Christmas Carols, West.

Mr. John Pulein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Sonata in E minor, Rheinberger; Carillon in B flat, Wolstenholme; Rhapsody on Two Christmas Themes, Gigout.

Mr. Harold M. Dawber, St. George's, Stockport—Introduction and Allegro, John Keeble; Aubade, Bernara Johnson; Finale in B flat, Franck.

Mr. Norman F. Demuth, St. Wilfrid's, Bognor (two recitals)—Voluntary in D, William Croft; Prière, Borowski; Two Preludes, Psalm xliii. (Carey), and Nunc Dimittis, Charles Wood; Capriccio, from Sonata in A, Rheinberger; Idyl No. 2, Gray; Meditation in A minor, d'Ervy; Christmas Pastoral, Selby.

Mr. Frederick J. Tarris, All Hallows', Bromley—Andante Cantabile, Tchaikovsky; Sonata No. 2, Mendelssohn; Variations on an original theme, Stuart Archer; Postlude alla Marcia, Halsey.

Mr. Bertram Hollins, Beckenham Congregational Church (two recitals)—Overture in C minor, Hollins; Prelude on the 'Old 104th,' Parry; Toccata (Symphony No. 5), Wiaor; Finale from Sonata in C sharp minor, Harwood; Jubilant March, Stainer.

Mr. Ernest Jones, Christ Church (Congregational), Llandudno—Gavotte, Wesley; Pastorale No. 2, Lemare; Offertoire 'Sur deux Noels,' Guilmant; 'In Paradisum,' Dubois.

Dr. Caradog Roberts, Brake Wesleyan Chapel, Moss—Overture in C, Hollins; Scherzo in C minor, Guilmant; Fantasia in E flat, Saint-Saëns; At Talsarn—Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs, Guilmant; Andante from Symphony in G, Haydn; Concert Fantasia in E minor, Caradog Roberts.

Mr. Cyril A. Pearce, Unthank Road Baptist Chapel, Norwich—Choral Prelude on 'In dulci jubilo,' Bach; Christmas Pastorale, Selby; Fantasy on Two Christmas Carols, West.

APPOINTMENT.

Captain C. H. Stuart Duncan to be Organist and Director of Music at Loretto School.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT THE BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY.

By A. EAGLEFIELD HULL.

It is a common delusion that geniuses spring up suddenly like mushrooms in the night; but this is certainly not the case. Mr. Bernard Shaw truly says Bach and Mozart could not have occurred in the Sandwich Islands. Before the rise of a genius there must be a host of prophets to prepare the way, and a public of some kind sufficiently cultured to supply a soil suitable for the reception of the works of the genius. The British Music Society is out, amongst other things, to cultivate the soil in our islands by arousing the interest and raising the taste of the public. Much attention will be concentrated on municipal music; for it is useless to expect a fine school of orchestral writers to spring up in Great Britain whilst there are only five or six orchestras here to play its works. The Society will be up against the two unforgivable things in art—provincialism and insularity.

We hope to enlist the sympathies and co-operation of musicians, professional and amateur, music-lovers, and all who are conscious of the national importance of music as an element in culture; we hope to wipe away the harmful impression that music is a foreign art in which Britons had better give up all hope of excelling.

The Society's activities are divided into three categories—organization, propaganda, and education. The work of the first department includes the establishment of common rooms with offices in all musical centres, the organization of an information bureau, the preparation of a catalogue of British music of permanent interest, and the formation of local centres in provincial towns for the giving of concerts of chamber music, lectures, causeries, discussions, &c., with schemes for the discovery and organization of local talent. Some of these meetings will be open to the public; others to members only.

All these activities are already well laid out, and notifications of the inauguration of branches have come from a large number of chief cities and towns. The catalogue has already been commenced under a specially deputed staff of specialists; the material for the information bureau is also being collected. The question of buildings must wait for funds. Meanwhile the London Centre announces its first four evening meetings. On February 13, Mr. Herbert Howell's 'Carnegie' Quartet and Mr. Armstrong Gibbs's Quartet will be heard, and some new songs will be sung by Mr. Fraser Gange; on March 13 a little-known Suite by Parry and Sir Edward Elgar's new Sonata for pianoforte and violin will be given; April 3 will be devoted to modern French music; in May an evening of Elizabethan music will be arranged by Mr. E. J. Dent; and many other fixtures are being made. The first three meetings will take place at 32, Gordon Square, W.C., by the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. W. Lee Mathews, and these music-makings will be more of the nature of a music club than a public concert, being open to members only.

Branches are being formed at Liverpool, Newcastle, Chelmsford, Huddersfield, Colchester, Bishop's Stortford, and many other towns.

The propagandist methods cover a movement for the improvement of Church music in all denominations; the support of local teachers, conductors, and others who are furthering the aims of the Society (already some telling work has been done in this direction); the encouragement of British opera; agitation for municipal orchestras; the organization of the musical vote, both parliamentary and municipal; the improvement of the repertoires of our military and other bands, and the appointment of special representatives of the Society at Paris, Rome, Madrid, Stockholm, New York, and other capitals, who will be able to assist British musicians living or touring abroad. And here a word in season may be useful. It is not wise to dump British music down in lumps either at home or on the Continent. It is much better to let the British composers take their places naturally in the world's music. In this respect there are only two kinds of music—good and bad; for music, as Sir Walter Parratt says, is super-national.

Educationally the activities will cover the discussion of teaching methods; the training of audiences for forthcoming concerts; the improvement of music in public, secondary, elementary, and continuation schools; the placing of British music in a position commensurate with that occupied by English literature in our educational institutions; and the publication of pamphlets, lectures, manifestoes, &c. Three pamphlets are now in hand: Dr. Fellowes's 'The Elizabethan Madrigals,' Mr. Cobbett's 'Modern British Chamber Music,' and Mr. Ernest Newman's 'The Treatment of Metre and Stress by English Composers.'

The Society is not intended to compete with any institution having similar objects, but to co-operate with all such bodies. There is any amount of work to be done, and with two thousand members we can do much; with ten thousand—El Dorado!

A new Violin Sonata (Op. 82), by Sir Edward Elgar, is in the press, and will be published by Messrs. Novello during the next few weeks. The work is in E minor, and consists of three movements—Allegro, Romance, and Allegro non troppo.

MUSIC IN RUHLEBEN CAMP.

BY EDGAR L. BAINTON.

In the Autumn of 1914 all the British civilians of military age, who had been in Germany at the outbreak of War, were collected together and thrown pell-mell into the horse boxes and hay-lofts of stables at Ruhleben race-course in the near vicinity of Berlin. For some little time the conditions of life bordered upon chaos. Practically nobody knew anybody else, and only by degrees did men make acquaintances and find out colleagues in their own professions and spheres of life.

At first the daily life consisted for the most part in obtaining the physical necessities and decencies of existence, and endeavouring to ameliorate the general conditions of the Camp, which in the early days were deplorable. But in course of time the need for some sort of corporate life made itself felt, and its first expression was in the realm of music. Impromptu concerts were held in the corridors of the stables, and before very long it was discovered that there were many good musicians in the Camp, both professional and amateur. Pianists, violinists, 'cellists, and vocalists soon found out one another, and many a dull evening during those first winter days was brightened and made merry by these spontaneous though sometimes humble efforts.

After a little while the use of a large hall under the centre grandstand, overlooking the race-course, was obtained from the military authorities for concerts and entertainments. This hall had originally served as a refreshment bar for visitors to the races, and contained a solid wooden counter from which the refreshments had been served. This counter formed an excellent base upon which to build a platform, and by degrees an excellent stage was constructed upon which concerts and dramatic performances were given. With the acquisition of this hall a new era was inaugurated in the life of the camp. An orchestra and choir were formed. Music and instruments were obtained from Berlin, and things were set going. During the first winter several concerts were given, and although neither the programmes nor their execution reached the standard attained later, many interesting results were obtained and many pleasurable evenings were enjoyed.

In the spring of 1915 the professional musicians formed themselves into a society for the purpose of procuring space for practice-rooms and for arranging the concerts and musical affairs of the Camp. After considerable difficulty and delay, permission was obtained from the military authorities to use a small room in one of the grandstands as a practice room, and also to build a small shed for a similar purpose. Later on, a portion of one of the stable lofts was also granted to us for a music room, where, beside its daily use as a practice room, occasional concerts of a more intimate character than those given in the grandstand hall were held. Several pianofortes were hired or bought from Berlin, and musicians had now the opportunity, at least to a certain degree, of keeping up their practice and cultivating their art. The only serious drawback was the lack of heating in the winter months, but even then the hapless musician, undaunted by the rigours of a temperature several degrees below zero, would be found sitting muffled in heavy overcoat and wraps, endeavouring with freezing fingers to draw music out of his instrument.

In the autumn of 1915 a series of weekly Sunday evening concerts was arranged. Every alternate Sunday the orchestra occupied the podium with symphony concerts, the intervening weeks being devoted to chamber music, recitals of all kinds, and choral or ballad concerts. These symphony concerts were really, in the circumstances, extraordinarily good. The orchestra by this time numbered some forty-five players, the leaders being all professional men, while the rank and file were drawn from amongst the amateurs. We had an excellent little body of strings, three flutes, an oboe, two clarinets, and one horn, trumpet, and trombone respectively. Timpani and percussion were also well in evidence. It will at once be seen that our orchestra was somewhat unbalanced and top-heavy, but the missing parts were filled in on a harmonium, occasionally augmented by a judicious use of the pianoforte, and some really good results were obtained.

The orchestra rehearsed every morning (excepting Sundays), from 8 to 10 a.m. in the summer and from 8.30 to 10 a.m. in the winter, and when you consider that during the latter season the temperature of the hall was frequently bordering upon, if it had not actually crossed, the line of zero, you will understand the devotion and enthusiasm which underlay and inspired these efforts. There were several conductors in the Camp, who shared the work between them, consequently no one had too much to do. As the grandstand hall where the rehearsals took place was the only room of any size in the Camp where the prisoners could sit to read or smoke, it was always thrown open to all comers during the hours of rehearsal. The result was that men crowded into the hall every morning while rehearsals were proceeding, in order to listen to the music. In this way many music-lovers were able to become thoroughly familiar in detail with works which they afterwards heard complete at the concerts. At first this large and curiously mixed audience was somewhat disconcerting both to conductors and orchestra, especially at a first rehearsal of a difficult work, accustomed as one is in ordinary life to rehearsals under conditions of perfect peace and privacy. But everyone soon became quite used to it, and the sympathetic, if sometimes amused, audience seemed even to act as a stimulus and an encouragement to the objects of their interest. The repertory of the orchestra at the symphony concerts included Symphonies of Haydn, Mozart, Schubert, Mendelssohn; most of the Overtures of Beethoven, Weber, Mendelssohn, Mozart, and even a few modern examples such as Smetana's 'Bartered Bride'; pianoforte concertos of Mozart, Beethoven (the last three), Grieg, Schumann, Chopin, Liszt; violin concertos of Max Bruch, Mendelssohn, and Beethoven; miscellaneous works of all the classical composers and the shorter works of modern composers of the type of Elgar, Grieg, Tchaikovsky, Wagner, Sibelius, Percy Grainger, and so forth.

During the summer months the orchestra gave promenade concerts outside one of the grandstands, which practically the whole Camp used to attend en masse. These concerts consisted of light, popular music, and naturally appealed to a wider public than the more serious winter concerts.

The programmes of the chamber concerts and recitals, being given for the most part by the professional players, naturally covered a wider range than those of the symphony concerts, where the limitations of the executants had to be taken into account when making a choice of works. Most of the principal chamber works of the classical period, as also of Brahms, Dvorák, and Borodine, were given from time to time, while the repertory of the soloists ranged from Bach to Scriabine. It will thus be seen that music was provided abundantly for all classes and for all tastes.

Ruhleben possessed two choirs, a large and a small combination. The large choir gave performances of such works as 'Messiah,' 'Elijah,' and even Verdi's 'Requiem.' But however well these oratorios might have been arranged for male choirs, it is obvious that the effect obtained would bear only a small relation to the intentions of their composers. More success was attained by the smaller madrigal choir. This association was confined to twenty-five selected voices, and was formed primarily for the study of Elizabethan madrigals. But its programme also included many modern male-voice part-songs such as G. Holst's 'Hymns from the Rig Veda,' and examples of Elgar, Bantock, Vaughan Williams, and other modern British composers.

There were several composers amongst those interned, and although the conditions of the Camp would scarcely seem ideal for creative work, a good deal of new music first saw the light there. Though perhaps little was produced that can be described as epoch-making, some very interesting work was brought to actual performance. Most of this was written for the Ruhleben Theatre in the shape of incidental music to plays. The Ruhleben Theatre was one of the most remarkable and efficient organizations in the Camp, and considerably over a hundred plays were produced on our stage. There were several good professional actors amongst the prisoners, and these lavishly devoted their gifts and knowledge, not only to appearing themselves, but also to training others, so that in course of time an excellent company was gathered together. Plays of all types were performed, including several of Shakespeare, Sheridan, and other classics, practically all the dramatic works of Shaw, Wilde, and Galsworthy, and a host of others. The Camp composers collaborated in writing incidental music to several of these productions, such as 'Twelfth Night,' 'The Merry Wives of Windsor,' 'As you like it,' and 'The School for Scandal'; and special mention should be made of the really beautiful music written by Mr. Quentin Morvaren for the Chinese play, 'The Yellow Jacket.'

Besides the regular orchestra already mentioned, there was a small orchestra which used to perform at all theatrical productions, and also a charming little combination which bore the name of 'The Octra,' a kind of little chamber orchestra which used to play mostly the better class of light music, and whose performances were amongst the most popular at Ruhleben.

In addition to all these activities the educational side of music was not neglected, and although owing to lack of space anything approaching systematic teaching on a large scale was out of the question, a good deal of instruction was given under the auspices of the Camp school, another energetic and successful institution. This instruction was mainly in the domain of theoretical subjects, several students taking a complete course from rudimentary Harmony to combined Counterpoint, Fugue, and Instrumentation. Lectures with musical illustrations were given from time to time. These included a course on Musical History, a series of lectures on the Classical Masters, and another series on the Ultra-modern School.

A staff officer from the Berlin War Office, visiting the Camp one day, remarked that, so far as he could judge, the centre of musical life in Germany at that moment was situated at Ruhleben. Be that as it may, it is clear that the musicians who had the misfortune to be interned in Ruhleben Camp realised the opportunity it afforded them for developing their own musical knowledge and attainments while at the same time doing their utmost to spread an appreciation and understanding of the art among their fellow-prisoners.

We are informed that Dr. Charles Harriss is on his way to England, for the purpose of reviving the Imperial Choir.

Reviews.

Bach's Chorals. By Charles Sanford Terry. Part II. The Hymns and Hymn Melodies of the Cantatas and Motetts.

[Cambridge : University Press.]

Musicians generally, and lovers of Bach in particular, will, we are sure, be truly grateful to both the author and the publisher of this volume. They will find here a mass of information, much of it peculiarly interesting to choralists and organists, and some of it quite new to English readers, treated in a most comprehensive and concise manner, and giving evidence of wide and patient research.

The book forms the Second Part of a monumental and exhaustive study of the hymns and hymn-tunes used by Bach in his concerted works. Part I., a much smaller work, dealt with those in the 'Passions' and Oratorios. In the present volume those of the Cantatas and Motetts are considered. The hymn melodies of the organ works are reserved for Part III.

The author treats his subject almost exclusively from the historic standpoint; æsthetic points are rarely raised. His object is to reveal the origin and authorship of the hymns and hymn melodies 'which, like jewels, decorate Bach's concerted Church music.' The melodies are here presented in their earliest form, and, where possible, Bach's variations of them are traced to an earlier tradition or attributed to himself. On the first occurrence of every Choral melody, the author states where Bach uses it elsewhere in his concerted Church music and organ works. This will prove very helpful to students, who are thus enabled to make an extensive study of Bach's treatment of any particular Choral. An Appendix of translations of the hymn stanzas, upwards of two hundred and fifty in number, which Bach uses in the Cantatas and Motetts, will be particularly welcomed by organists, who will gain thereby valuable assistance in arriving at a correct interpretation of some of the Choral Preludes. For the sake of completeness, six melodies that occur in the 'Passions' and Oratorios, but which are not found in the Cantatas and Motetts, are presented in an Appendix; so that the volume contains all the Choral tunes used by Bach in his concerted Church music.

In a long and weighty Introduction extending to a hundred and twenty-eight pages, the author discusses fully the evolution of the Church Cantata in Bach's hands, culminating in the magnificent works of the later Leipsic period. A useful table shows how the two hundred and two Cantatas (which survive out of a much larger number composed by him) are distributed between the five periods of Bach's career: (1.) Arnstadt and Mühlhausen Cantatas; (2.) Weimar Cantatas; (3.) Cöthen Cantatas; (4.) Leipsic Cantatas (1723-34); (5.) Leipsic Cantatas (1735-50). Another grouping gives the Church Cantatas according to the season of the Church's year for which they were written.

The Choral forms employed by Bach in the Cantatas are also fully considered, viz., the Choral Fantasia, the Simple Choral, the Embellished Choral, the Extended Choral, the Unison Choral, the Aria Choral, the Dialogus Choral.

The latter half of the Introduction is of particular interest, dealing as it does with the question of Bach's original hymn-tunes. It may be noted, by the way, that though Bach himself wrote Chorals, the only original tunes which he has wedded to the stanzas of a congregational hymn in the whole range of his concerted Church music are two Choral Arias in the 'Christmas Oratorio' and one in the fifth Motett. As a whole they are not appropriate to congregational singing: they are sacred Arias rather than Chorals. 'Their charm,' Spitta remarks, 'is like that of a pious family circle, musically cultured, and we may delight to fancy that these touching hymns, so delicately worked out in their small limits, were sung, at the master's household devotions, by one or other of the members of his family.'

It is curious that so little effort has been made to identify Bach's original hymn-tunes and to sift those which unquestionably are his from others wrongly attributed to him. Carl von Winterfeld, who first gave the subject critical examination, left a large legacy of error; Spitta's few remarks are disfigured by very serious mistakes; Schweitzer is content merely to record the conjectures of others.

Dr. Terry, in the light of information which these writers did not possess, thoroughly explores the subject. At the outset he is able to give the authors or publishers of ten tunes which have been wrongly considered as Bach's, and eight others which have been inaccurately attributed to Bach by Spitta have been traced by Dr. Terry to other sources. This leaves forty-two tunes which are to be found for the first time in one or other of the Bach collections, and which, for that reason, may presumably be regarded as his compositions. Many will enjoy examining these tunes in company with the author, and noting on what evidence he arrives at his conclusions as to their authorship.

The main body of the book is taken up with a detailed description of each Cantata—the particular use made of the Choral, the other works in which the same Choral is used, the form of the Cantata and its instrumental treatment.

A very comprehensive Index refers to first lines, melodies, authors, composers, and sources.

Readers will congratulate Prof. Terry on a notable contribution to musical literature, and will look forward with keen interest to the appearance of the final volume of this scholarly work.

[We regret that our review of Prof. Terry's book is somewhat belated. Fortunately the delay matters little in the case of a volume which, on account of both subject and treatment, is of permanent value, and hardly likely to be superseded.—Ed., M.T.]

Set down in Malice. A Book of Reminiscence. By Gerald Cumberland.

[Grant Richards.]

Mr. Cumberland's book will no doubt make a stir out of all proportion to its value. It is a mixture of good and bad journalism. On the good side we have a few extraordinarily vivid character-sketches, such as those of Richter and Beerbohm Tree; on the bad side are some trivial gossip, and a few personal attacks in the worst of taste. The author is at pains to let us know that he has been everywhere, done everything, and met everybody. He seems to have enjoyed it all immensely, and is evidently not hard to please, for he has done little of importance, and met few people who really matter. A keener sense of humour would have saved Mr. Cumberland from his constant posing as a devil of a fellow, and would have led him to refrain from some of the smallest of small beer chronicles. He has, however, irrepressibly high spirits, and writes with attractive gusto. The literary quality of the book is best gauged from his own words: 'The journalist is rarely intellectual; as a rule he is merely ready and glib. I am ready and glib myself.' He is.

Musicians and musical critics figure largely in his pages. Some of the former have good cause to rue the day on which Mr. Cumberland swam into their orbit. They may console themselves by reflecting on some of the objects of his admiration.

On December 12, the Londonderry Philharmonic Society gave its first concert of the season, with Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and miscellaneous items. The soloists were Miss Dorothy Moulton and Mr. John Gill. Mrs. A. J. Cunningham joined Miss Moulton in 'I waited for the Lord.' The orchestra gave, in addition to the Symphony, 'Pomp and Circumstance' in D, by Elgar. As usual, brass and wind were supplied by Mr. Henry Coleman, on the organ, Mr. A. G. Cunningham was the conductor, and Mr. Coleman officiated at the pianoforte. An Amateur Operatic Society (the Waterside Choral Society) gave its first performances recently, playing the 'Country Girl' to full houses nightly for a week. The annual performance of Part 1 of 'Messiah,' but including the 'Hallelujah Chorus,' was given in the Cathedral on December 22. The collection was handed to the Y.M.C.A. Musicians' Gift to the Forces.

Obituary.

We regret to record the following deaths:

'MICHEL BRENET,' on November 22, 1918, at 72, Rue d'Assas, Paris, aged sixty. This distinguished French musicologist, whose memoir is given briefly in the new edition of Grove's Dictionary of Music, by M. Gustav Ferrari, had a very prolific pen, and published over a dozen valuable works on various phases of music. Very few were aware that such a remarkable writer was a woman, Mlle. Marie Bobillier, who, in 1880, adopted the pen-name of 'Michel Brenet.' Her principal work was a History of the Sainte-Chappelle du Palais, Paris (1910), but she also published admirable biographies of Handel, Palestrina, Ockeghem, de Brossard, and others. Her Memoir of Gretry was crowned by the Belgian Academy, and her contributions to French periodicals were numerous. A year ago her 'La Musique Militaire' was reviewed in this journal, and she had in the press a work on French musical terms. This gifted writer was a great-granddaughter of an Irish officer—General Foley.

BERTRAM LUARD-SELBY, a distinguished organist and all-round composer. He was born at Igham, Kent, on February 12, 1853, and was trained at Leipsic Conservatoire, his teachers being Reinecke and Jadassohn. Besides holding posts at various parish churches, he was at Salisbury Cathedral from 1881-83, and Rochester Cathedral from 1900-16. His compositions include examples in many forms, but his most lasting works are for church-choir use. In these, and in his writing for organ, he showed gifts out of the common.

JOHN SOUTH SHEDLOCK, on January 9. He was born at Reading in 1843, graduated B.A., London, in 1864, and afterwards received his musical education in Paris, chiefly from Lalo. He was an admirable pianist, but will be remembered rather as one of the most distinguished musical littérateurs of his time. The esteem in which he was held was shown on his retirement from the post of musical critic to the Athenæum three years ago, when his co-workers in musical journalism presented him with an address and a gold watch.

Sir ALFRED SCOTT-GATTY, K.C.V.O., Garter Principal King-of-Arms. He was born at Ecclesfield Vicarage, Yorkshire, in 1847. He composed hundreds of songs, many of which were very popular. Perhaps his best work in this direction was the collection of Plantation Songs, which had an enormous vogue, and which, thanks to their inspiring choruses, are still heard with pleasure.

JAMES HOYLE, a well-known local musician, on January 6, at Exeter, aged seventy-eight. He came to Exeter some years ago from the north of England to take up an appointment as alto singer in Exeter Cathedral, a position he held for some time. He then became organist of St. James's Church in the city, and conductor of the Diocesan Choral Association.

JOHN RICHARDS HILL, on November 20, from pneumonia following influenza. He was organist and choirmaster of Burley Dam, having been appointed when seventeen years old. He was a promising musician, and his death at the early age of thirty-four caused much regret in musical circles in Shropshire and Cheshire.

W. A. ELLIS, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., on January 2. He was the author of a six-volume biography of Wagner, and translated the composer's prose works (eight volumes).

LIEUTENANT ELI HUDSON, the well-known flautist, on January 18. He was a native of Manchester, and studied in London at the R.C.M., at which institution he was lately an Examiner.

We regret being compelled to hold over the second instalment of Mr. Sydney Grew's 'The Clavier Toccatas of Bach.'—Ed., M.T.

Letters to the Editor.

THE VALUE OF HUMMING IN VOICE-PRODUCTION.

SIR,—In my opinion, the value of humming as an aid to correct vocalisation cannot be overrated.

When humming correctly—that is, with the breath, and not by throat-contraction—not only is the movement of the larynx much more distinctly felt than when vocalising on a vowel, but the resonant position of each note is also much more distinctly felt. In the act of humming the voice is being played upon in exactly the same manner as any other reed instrument. Therefore if the action of humming is combined with the correct position of the articulatory organs for the art of language, a perfect singing method is obtained.—Yours &c.,

AMY B. ANDERTON.

29, Victoria Street,
West Bromwich,
January 13, 1919.

AN OBSCURE WORK OF BALFE'S.

SIR,—Can you, or any of your numerous readers (either privately or through your pages) give me any information as to a composition of Balfé's, which, I believe, was first published in Paris, entitled 'Les trois filles d'Aymon'?

I cannot ascertain whether it was a complete operatic work, or if (as I believe) only the musical numbers inserted into a musical play of that name.

Many years ago I was engaged to play as accompanist at a concert a Buffo Duet for two basses from that work, with English words. It was very comic, and began 'The vast fortune of your young Master incredible seems to me,' and received an uproarious double encore.

I have applied to the original English publishers of this duet, who say they have records of the publication of the music, which is now out of print, but they can obtain no further information about it. Application to several other London publishers has failed to produce any information. If any of your readers possess a copy I would readily purchase it.—Yours, &c.,

PAUL JERRARD.

6, The Avenue, Blackheath,
London, S.E. 3.

December 17, 1918.

[Balfé's 'Les quatre fils d'Aymon' was produced at Paris in 1844, and in England under the title of 'The Castle of Aymon.'—Ed., M.T.]

ORGAN PEDAL TECHNIQUE.

SIR,—The recent articles which have appeared in the Musical Times with regard to Pedal Technique have undoubtedly brought to light one of the most important factors in modern organ playing. While I am strongly in favour of some standard method of pedalling, I see no necessity for revolving seats or bootless feet. If organ music bristled with such passages as the example of Mr. Barkworth's in the November issue of the Musical Times we should certainly require some device for getting over these difficulties, but the majority of the most awkward pedal passages to be found in the standard organ works require only a slight movement of the body either way, and the quieter you can sit for all pedalling, the better. Any movement with the hands for registration would naturally upset the position of the feet for the time being. One of the first things a beginner is taught is to find his bearings by letting his feet hang naturally over the middle of the pedal-board. The revolving seat would tend to do away with stability in that direction, and the player's bearings would be lost. I still believe that the adjustable stool very slightly slanting is adequate for all purposes. The want of some definite principle of pedalling is undoubtedly the cause of the trouble. Mr. Ellingford's remark in his recent article on 'Pedal Technique' is only too true, 'The use of the heels on the long notes.' For some years I have taught on a principle of using the left heel as frequently as possible, and always passing in front of the right toe, both in upward and downward passages, making a front and back line for the action of the feet. Passages like those occurring in Bach's Toccata in F, the D major Fugue, and the D major scale at the commencement of the Prelude will clearly demonstrate this system. Some players reverse the position, always using the right in front. Again quoting Mr. Ellingford, this is an unnatural position for the limbs. He says: 'for passages lying to the right of the board the left foot is naturally slightly in front, those to the left vice-versâ.' Of course there are times in which no system on earth would apply, especially when the short keys are in constant use. But as a general rule I have found it an invaluable help, both in teaching and in my private practice, to remember to keep the left heel line immediately in front of the short keys (with the exception of the few bottom notes of the board), making a line behind for the right toe.—Yours, &c.,

REGINALD GOSS CUSTARD.

SONGS OF THE HEBRIDES.

SIR,—In the long and sympathetic report, in your December number, of the paper I read in November to the Musical Association on 'Songs of the Hebrides,' there occurs a printer's error which is misleading. I had occasion to say that previous to entering on this work of oral song-collecting I 'had been giving lecture-recitals on songs and song-writers and had carefully pointed out the means by which such writers as Wolf, Cornelius, Liszt, and Schubert heightened the effect of their melody and deepened and subtilized its expression by harmonic colouring and by figures of accompaniment. I had thus learnt how slight were the melodic formulæ out of which, at times, a perfect art-song might be fashioned. And that I found the unrecorded music of the Hebrides consisted mainly of just such characteristic separate motives, such definite melodic formulæ, as I had been dealing with in the Art-song.'

Now, your printer, by inadvertently substituting the word harmonic for melodic, has made nonsense of the foregoing statement. I shall be grateful if you will insert this letter of correction in your next issue.—Yours, &c.,

MARJORIE KENNEDY-FRASER.

6, Castle Street, Edinburgh,
December 30, 1918.

A COMMON BASIS OF CRITICISM.

SIR,—Dr. Ford, in a letter published in your December number, attempts a criticism of critics, and whilst admiring his bravery I do not feel quite in agreement with him.

He opens the attack with Johnsonian wisdom, and immediately follows with the name of 'Ernest Newman' (I expected it), and an allusion to that writer's criticism of Dr. Vaughan Williams's 'A Shropshire Lad.' Further he says Mr. Newman has 'no suggestion forthcoming of how an improvement might be effected in the compositions criticised.'

I have read many of Mr. Newman's articles, and have always had the impression that he was particularly clear in this respect. With regard to 'A Shropshire Lad,' surely we must all agree with Mr. Newman (allowing for the different interpretations of individual natures) that the composer when writing a setting of 'Bredon Hill' should be chiefly concerned with the anguish of the Lad who is heartbroken at the death of his sweetheart, and the ringing of bells should be 'a hint rather than a persistent over-statement'; and if, as Dr. Ford says, a composer sometimes can take only one point of view, it is not flattering to the imagination of Dr. Williams that he chooses the use of bells so patently, as though he would impress us with their continual ringing rather than let our sympathy go the stricken lover.

I have been impressed on reading Mr. Newman's criticisms with his bold frankness, and cannot over-estimate the help his writings have been to me in my musical education. Although it may amuse him, at times I have felt somewhat annoyed to read some of the absurd constructions placed on his articles by people who robe themselves as apostles, and, should one of the compositions of their gods be ruthlessly attacked, hold up their hands in horror at the audacity of a mere mortal, and say, 'Away with this man. He is not of our religion.'

I have heard Mr. Newman attacked for his dislike of Debussy. I have never been able to discover this dislike in his writings. He simply sees Debussy's limitations and faults as well as the delicate beauty of the French composer's genius. It was chiefly through Mr. Newman's writings that I grew to appreciate, not only Debussy, but other modern composers, whom fanatical worshippers say Mr. Newman dislikes.

In short, I think we should be proud that we possess in England so brilliant a musician, and doubtless future generations will as readily quote the sayings of this redoubtable critic as Dr. Ford does Dr. Johnson.—Yours, &c.,

97, Etruria Vale, Stoke-on-Trent, P. LOMAS.
December 19, 1918.

MUSICAL DEGREES, ETC., IN THE ARMY IN FRANCE, BY CORRESPONDENCE COURSE.

SIR,—Will you kindly make it known to your readers in the Army in France that, in suitable cases, the Y.M.C.A. is prepared to provide facilities for correspondence tuition in preparation for University Degrees in music, and also in preparation in the paper work of the Fellowship of the Royal College of Organists. Such tuition will be, in the case of University Degrees, limited to music students who have passed an examination of matriculation or Senior Local Standard, University Preliminary or Leaving Certificate (Scotland). Applications will only be considered from officers and other ranks in the bases, and the request for such tuition should be submitted to the Sub-Director of Education in the Students' Base, or direct to Sir Graham Balfour, Director of Education, Y.M.C.A. Headquarters, A.P.O.S. 8, B.E.F., France. The course (for which no fee will be charged) will, in the first instance, be limited to three months, and the student will be expected to continue his correspondence work for that period if he is moved from place to place or sent home. In suitable cases, where good work has been done during the first period of three months, and the student still remains in the Army, the course will be renewed for a further period of the same length.—

Yours, &c., PERCY A. SCHOLES
Universities House, (Secretary, Music Section, Y.M.C.A.), 25, Bloomsbury Square, W.C. 1.

MENTAL PROCESSES IN MUSIC.

The paper under the above title read by Mr. J. Swinburne on January 14 at the meeting of the Musical Association, proved to be of an unusually interesting character, opening up several pregnant lines of thought. He pointed out that playing an instrument was mainly a matter of skill rather than musicianship. Taking such a man as Mozart as the highest type of musician, if he hurt his hand so as to be unable to play, and if his originality waned so that he could not compose, he would still be a first-rate musician. Technical musicianship consisted in the power of imagining and remembering music down to its details, away from any instrument. Musical feeling generally went with it, but many people had that feeling without technical musicianship. They were merely musical people, not musicians.

A singer ought to be able to read his part at sight, but such elementary musical ability was comparatively rare. Choral singers seemed to find their way by a sort of instinct based on long experience, but they relied on each other to a large extent. The reading of several parts involved much greater ability. Keyboard players did not learn to play musically; that was to say, a note, passage, or chord in the print suggested not a certain sound or effect but a particular movement of the fingers. Printed music was thus to them a kind of muscle language, whereas to the perfectly competent musician it represented certain sounds and was thus to him a musical language. As the pianist developed into a musician he learned to read in both ways, and was thus struggling with two languages at the same time, without knowing it. The lecturer thought it was a question whether people of ability should not learn from the very beginning to treat the print as musical language, first imagining the sound and then putting down the note to produce it.

Transposition was commonly dependent on various kinds of mechanical helps, but the trained musician read the sound desired and then produced it at the required pitch by ear. Playing by heart seemed to depend almost entirely on muscular memory, and so far was not musical. If the player had memorised the music down to the smallest detail, he could play it equally well in any key, or could write it out, but very few were capable of doing this. Practically, playing by heart resembled the skill of the juggler, and the actual playing was performed subconsciously by the lower brain-centres. It was commonly held that a pianist who played by heart played better because he was free to give his whole attention to the way he played, but this was wide of the mark. If he really attended, he was about to interfere with his subconscious automatism and spoil his performance. As a rule organists played less by heart than did pianists, but it was to be borne in mind that whereas the latter could and did get up a repertory which they gave on all occasions, the former were compelled by the nature of their work to play a great deal of fresh music. Some good musicians really memorised music as such; they could play or write out the music in any way and could learn it away from the keyboard. Playing by ear, by which was meant the accurate reproduction of music in any key, involved as thorough musicianship as writing it out.

Fumbling out stuff on the pianoforte until one got something that sounded nice was not composition. Some song-writers jotted down a melody, and then fumbled out an accompaniment at the pianoforte. Others would harmonize their melody according to the text-book rules. In the early part of his life, even Wagner was largely dependent on the pianoforte, and the lecturer was of opinion that such works as 'Rienzi,' 'Tannhäuser,' and parts of 'Lohengrin,' betrayed this dependence, of which however there was no sign in such a work as 'Die Meistersinger.' There was little in common between such methods and that of, say, Mozart, who appears to have thought out a composition, complete in every detail, so that writing out was merely a mechanical process.

What was generally called extemporising was an unmeaning rigmarole. To extemporise music the player must actually compose it in his head before playing it, and it was doubtful whether extempore playing in this sense was possible, and whether its production was really worth anything. It had to be remembered that criticism of extempore playing was itself extempore, and that no good music could be either enjoyed or criticised at first hearing, save by very exceptional people. If good music could be extemporised, there existed plenty of means nowadays for recording it.

It was impossible to read an orchestral score at sight. All that could be done was to read the bits that looked salient. How far it could be read at leisure was a difficult question. It was by no means necessary to know it in order to conduct, for military bandmasters, dealing with a fuller organization than an orchestra, produced complicated music without scores.

Though much attention was now given to ear-training, contrapuntal listening formed but a small part of musical education. To hear several parts contrapuntally as opposed to harmonically involved a special kind of imagination, which was probably much rarer now than two centuries ago; but to be able to think in canon, or to imagine a subject in stretto, was a special feat.

Music could be, and was, enjoyed by most people without their giving attention to it. Probably only a small percentage of a concert audience really listened. Even reading difficult music at sight did not occupy the whole attention, and it was easy to play it and to think of something else at the same time, so that nothing was remembered. It was also easy to read music like letterpress, while thinking of something else, so that nothing remained. The subconsciousness played the reading part in music.

Nervousness consisted of stage fright before, and a special disability during, performance. The first was just fear, like any other kind of fear. Nervousness during performance was not so much want of self-control as a mistaken effort at unwonted self-control, and was due to self-consciousness, by which the performer instead of letting his lower brain-centres do the work according to their training, interfered with them, tried to control them consciously, and failed.

The study of mental processes in music ought to reduce unnecessary labour, and eliminate bad methods, both in studying music and in learning to perform it.

Dr. C. Harford Lloyd, who occupied the chair, Mr. D. J. Blakley, Mr. H. H. Statham, and others, contributed to the discussion following the lecture.

Let your light so shine.

February 1, 1919.

FULL ANTHEM FOR FOUR VOICES.

St. Matthew v. 16.

Composed by J. BAPTISTE CALKIN.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Andante con moto. ♩ = 100.ORGAN.
(ad lib.)

Sw. 8 & Aft.

Man.

Let your light so shine be-fore . . men, . . let your

Let your light so shine be-fore men, let your

Let your light so shine . . be-fore men, . . let your

Let your light so shine be-fore men, let your light so shine . . be-fore . . men, . . that they may see, may light so shine . . be-fore . . men, . . that they may see, may light so shine be-fore . . men, that they may light so shine be-fore . . men, that they may mf Gt. Triaps. Sw. coupled.

see your good works, that they may see, may see your good works, that they may see, may see, may see your good works, that they may see, may see your good works, that they may

Ped. 16 ft.

see your good works, and glo - ri - fy your Fa - ther which see your good works, and glo - ri - fy your Fa - ther which see your good works, and glo - ri - fy your Fa - ther which see your good works, and glo - ri - fy your Fa - ther which is in heaven, and glo - ri - fy your Fa - ther which is in heaven, and glo - ri - fy your Fa - ther which is in heaven, and glo - ri - fy your Fa - ther which is in heaven, and glo - ri - fy your Fa - ther which

p Sw.

Man.

is in . . heaven. so shine be - fore is in . . heaven. Let your light . . so shine be - fore is in . . heaven. Let your light so shine, shine be - fore is in heaven. Let your light so shine be - fore add Oboe.

Ped. stac.

men, let your . . light so shine be - fore . .

men, let your light so shine be - fore

men, let your light so shine . . be - fore . .

men, let . . your light . . so shine be - fore

Man.

Ped. stac.

men, that they may see . . your good . . works, and glo - ri - men, that they may see, that they may see your good works, and glo - ri -

men, that they may see, that they may see your good . . works, and glo - ri - men, that they may see, that they may see your good . . works, and glo - ri -

Man.

- fy your Fa - ther which is in heaven, which is in heaven, . . .

- fy your Fa - ther which is in heaven, in heaven, which is in

- fy your Fa - ther which is in heaven, which is in heaven, which is in

- fy your Fa - ther which is in heaven, . . .

p Oho in.

Ped.

. . . which is in heaven. . .

heaven, which is in heaven. . .

heaven, which is in heaven, which is in heaven. . .

. . . which is in heaven. . .

Ped.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The Lent term opened on Monday, January 6. On January 22 and 29 two lectures were announced to be given by Dr. H. W. Richards on 'Violin and Pianoforte Sonatas.' The scheme of the lectures is to trace the development of the violin sonata step by step from its earliest form down to the complex work of living composers. The influence of the form on the violin itself and on the bow; the development of technique; the discovery of acoustical effects peculiar to the violin; and the development of harmony and form, will all be touched upon, and their contribution to the evolution of the modern violin and pianoforte sonata carefully assessed. The illustrations include movements from Violin Sonatas by Corelli, Bach, Tartini, Beethoven, Arthur Hinton, and Walford Davies, played by Miss Winifred Small (violin) and the lecturer. The coming events include an organ recital by the pupils on Monday, February 3; a course of three lectures by the Principal on 'War music past and present,' to be given on Wednesday afternoons, beginning with February 5; and the performance of two short one-Act operas, 'Drinos and Cassandra,' the music by Arthur L. Sandford, and 'The Nightingale and the Rose' by E. Cuthbert Nunn, under the direction of Mr. Henry Beauchamp.

NEW ANGLO-AMERICAN SCHOLARSHIP AT THE R.A.M.

The Royal Academy of Music has recently issued the particulars and conditions pertaining to the 'Edward and Anne Seguin Scholarship.' The establishment of this scholarship is an event of far more than ordinary interest. It is to be awarded by competition to vocalists born in the United States of America, or in the United Kingdom of Great Britain, and will entitle the winner to two years' musical education at the R.A.M.—with a possible extension of period in cases of exceptional talent. The first competition is for sopranos, and will be held about April 24. The scholarship has been founded by Maria Childe Seguin, formerly of New York, who died in Denmark in 1903. Under the will of this lady, a sum of money was left in trust to found a scholarship at the R.A.M., in order to perpetuate the names of her parents who were students at the R.A.M. in its very earliest years. It was in 1826—nearly a hundred years ago—that a young bass singer, Edward Seguin, became a student at the R.A.M., which had then been founded some four years. In the concerts and performances of those early days he frequently took a prominent part, as did also another student of that period, a soprano singer, Anne Childe, whom he married. After leaving the Academy the Seguins remained for several years in England, taking leading parts in opera, both at Drury Lane and Covent Garden, but in 1838 they proceeded to America, where they organized the 'Seguin Opera Troupe,' and in course of time made a large fortune. It is under the will of their daughter that the money to found the scholarship has come to the Royal Academy of Music. That the first competition for this Anglo-American scholarship should take place during the time when English and American statesmen are sitting together at the great Peace Conference is a coincidence of more than ordinary interest. In some three years the R.A.M. will be celebrating the Centenary of its foundation, and it may almost be regarded as a unique event that so close to its hundredth birthday a scholarship should be founded, the parentage of which is directly traced to two young singers who in its very earliest days took no unimportant part in laying the foundation of its fame as a training-school for musicians.

RECEPTION TO MR. B. J. DALE AND MR. F. KEEL.

A crowded audience of professors, students, and members of the R.A.M. Club and the Society of British Composers and their friends, assembled in the Duke's Hall of the Royal Academy of Music on Saturday evening, January 11, to welcome Mr. B. J. Dale and Mr. F. Keel after their long internment in Germany. The programme was made up entirely from the works of these two musicians, and included Mr. Dale's Fantasy for Viola and Pianoforte (admirably played by Mr. Lionel Tertis and Miss Myra Hess), and his Viola Sextet for six violas, which received a beautiful interpretation under the leadership of Mr. Tertis. Mr. Keel sang six songs, four by himself and two by Mr. Dale, all of which had been written at Ruhleben. Two songs by the late Miss Morfydd Owen brought the first part of the programme to an end. During the interval which followed Sir Alexander Mackenzie, in welcoming the two guests on behalf of those present, said: 'This evening's meeting is no ordinary gathering, and I propose to make a short interlude which is not announced upon the printed programme. We are gathered together this evening, not merely to listen to some excellent music prepared and performed in that sympathetic manner which it not only deserves but is its due, but we are here to welcome home two distinguished members of our staff on their return after a long and dreary internment borne with much patience and courage in an uncomfortable country. But although they have been far away from us for some four years, our thoughts have ever been with them, and we have been able to keep in touch with them. We know also that they have often thought of us, and were continually looking forward to the time when they would be able to rejoin their many friends. Mr. Keel has long been eminent as a singer and teacher of singing, but his admirable songs which we have listened to this evening with so much pleasure, have revealed to me that he had other gifts, which I admit I was unaware that he possessed. Mr. Dale has already won for himself a place in the very front rank of the most distinguished of our young native composers. Early promise has ripened into mastery. We most cordially welcome them back to their families and their friends, and to continue their work in different spheres under happy and congenial conditions. There is, however, another thought which comes to my mind at this moment. The release of these two British musicians conveys a deeper and symbolic meaning representing the liberation from a most unwelcome foreign art-tyranny which was being imposed and forced upon our native music and reacting to its very apparent detriment. During the last quarter of a century the once great German art has as surely been steadily degenerating and declining, as ours has been healthily progressing all the time. And I hope that the incubus has been permanently removed and lifted. In a double sense, we are "getting a bit of our own back" to-night, and I hail the restoration of our friends to their families and ourselves with great joy.'

Mr. Dale and Mr. Keel briefly replied.

Mr. Dale in his reply referred to the fact that some years ago, before England and Germany were at war, the performance of Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Britannia' Overture had been prohibited in Germany, yet during the War this Overture was performed at Ruhleben and received with great enthusiasm, although he should prefer not to say very much about the performance. After the interval Miss Myra Hess played Mr. Dale's Pianoforte Sonata in its entirety. The remarkable performance which Miss Hess gave of this fine and difficult work will long remain in the memories of those present. It formed a notable conclusion to a unique occasion.

The programme also included two very beautiful 'Madonna-Songs' (charmingly sung by Miss Adah Rogalsky) by Miss Morfydd Owen, whose recent death is sincerely lamented at the Royal Academy of Music.

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

Sir Frederick Bridge's long career at Westminster Abbey ended on New Year's Day. He retires with the title of Emeritus-Organist of the Abbey, and will continue to occupy his house in the Little Cloisters.

Sir Frederick has had a half-century's experience as cathedral organist, having been at Manchester for six years before going to Westminster in 1875. His term of office at the Abbey has been marked by a large number of historic occasions,—the 1887 Jubilee, the Coronations of King Edward and King George, the funerals of Darwin, Tennyson, Browning, and Gladstone, &c., being among the most important, while outstanding occasions of the festival type are the celebrations of Purcell (1895), Orlando Gibbons (1907), and Samuel Sebastian Wesley (1910).

Sir Frederick was knighted at the Diamond Jubilee, received the M.V.O. from King Edward after the Coronation, and the Commandership of the Royal Victorian Order from King George. Though retiring from the Abbey, he will be far from idle, as he is continuing his work in connection with the Royal Choral Society, the University of London, Gresham College, Trinity College, and the Royal College of Music.

A CONCERT-HALL AT TOKYO.

The first concert-room in the Orient has, after various delays, been built and successfully opened at Tokyo, under distinguished auspices. The Marquis Tokugawa and his son and heir, Lord Raitei Tokugawa, are the persons responsible for the erection, which forms part of a group of buildings intended for educational purposes. The dedication ceremony was held on the morning of October 27, 1918, on which occasion speeches on education and music were made by Viscount Hatano, Minister of the Imperial Household, Mr. Nakabashi, Minister of Education, Marquis Ohkuma, president of Waseda University, and the Hon. Mr. Kamada, president of Keio University.

The first concert was given in the evening, with full orchestra and chorus. The analytical programme, of forty-four pages, in Japanese (save for a few paragraphs in English by the builders of the hall), shows that Japan has begun in the most creditable way possible with an all-Beethoven concert, consisting of the Overture 'Consecration of the House,' the Pianoforte Concerto in E flat ('Emperor'), and the 'Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage.'

A new Overture by Dr. E. W. Naylor, for this first concert, was commissioned by cable last May, but the MS. score appears to have been fifteen weeks in getting to Japan, and thus too little time remained for its production.

The hall is not very large, although it is understood (from a letter of Lord R. Tokugawa to Dr. Naylor) that the orchestra numbered fifty and the chorus a hundred and fifty. The building is in the classical style. The first design was made by Sir Alfred Brumwell Thomas, the eminent architect of the Woolwich Town Hall and Belfast New City Hall. Local considerations made it necessary to somewhat modify the design, and the building has been erected, in 1917 and 1918, by Messrs. W. M. Vories & Co. The construction is of reinforced concrete, on the Khan system, which is the best known for resisting fire and earthquake. (Fire and earthquake are both rather usual in Japan; scarcely a week passes without tremors of some kind.)

The principal dimensions, according to plans which were in the writer's hands in April, 1917, are height, 43-ft. 9-in.; width of façade, about 46-ft.; length, 100-ft.; length inside room, 75-ft.; height from floor to ceiling, about 30-ft.

A modern three-manual organ by Abbott & Smith is to be placed in the hall as soon as possible. This was designed early in 1915, but all progress was stopped by the war.

In the basement a museum of interesting musical instruments, books, &c., is to find a home. Amongst the books will be about four hundred volumes from the collection of the late Dr. W. H. Cummings.

The building is erected to the memory of His Majesty the late Mikado.

N.

BRITISH MUSIC IN HOLLAND.

The two concerts of British music announced to be given by Mr. Edgar L. Bainton with the Mengelberg Orchestra of Amsterdam took place in December, 1918, the one at Amsterdam, the other at The Hague. The programme was the same at each concert. The following pieces were played in the order given: Stanford's 'Irish Rhapsody,' No. 1; Elgar's Variations on an original theme ('Enigma'); Delius's 'Brigg Fair'; Coleridge-Taylor's Ballade in A minor; Frank Bridge's 'Lament' (for string orchestra); Percy Grainger's 'Shepherd's Hey,' and Balfour-Gardiner's 'Comedy Overture.'

Seeing that these were the first concerts of British music ever given in Holland, the press reports will be of interest. There are good reasons—not all musical—for our expecting no wildly enthusiastic notices. It is satisfactory, however, to find that the conductor met with unqualified approval.

The New Rotterdam Courant, December 8, 1918, says:

'The presence in our land of Mr. Edgar L. Bainton as an interned civilian gave occasion to his engagement as conductor of the second Mengelberg concert, series B, at The Hague. He created the impression of one who thoroughly knows the business of conducting. Calm in his movements and carrying conviction in his conceptions, he held the orchestra well in hand, and the audience lavished upon him well-deserved applause. Of English composers we know that the fruits of their labours commonly merit the designation of "worthy." They take up their task seriously, and become masters of the technique of composition. Beyond that they seldom go. One misses originality, and with most of them one can easily tell to which school they belong, and upon which composer of genius they model their work. Thus their productions have rather a cosmopolitan than a national stamp. These general reflections apply to practically all the works we heard last night. Stanford's "Irish Rhapsody" is brilliant; Elgar's Variations proved the best thing of the concert; "Brigg Fair," by Delius, would be dreamy, but reminds one that in order to dream one must first sleep; Bridge's "Lament" is agreeable to listen to; and Percy Grainger's "Shepherd's Hey" is a showy, merry bit of music.'

The Amsterdam Telegraaf finds 'the English composers are about twenty years behind the Continental tendencies by which they are influenced.'

The Amsterdam Algemeen Handelsblad, of Monday, December 9, says:

'The intense interest which has been shown in the last few years for modern French and Belgian music has hitherto not extended to English art. On the programmes of orchestral concerts English works are exceptions. Therefore it was of particular interest to be able to obtain a more or less comprehensive insight into present-day English orchestral music. Our orchestra played with brilliancy and virtuosity, and Bainton is a good conductor who brings a fine conception of the music as a whole without losing the delicacy of detail—who holds fast to broad, big lines without sacrificing the tempi. He was given a hearty ovation. In the music there was great variety. Stanford is indeed quite other than Elgar or Delius, and between Bridge, Coleridge-Taylor, and Balfour-Gardiner one notices marked differences. All kinds of tendencies were represented—the formal neo-romantic, the impressionist, the folk-lorist, and what not. One felt the influence of Wagner, Tchaikovsky, Grieg, and Debussy in stronger and weaker measure. Stanford and Grainger remind one of Grieg; Elgar shows the influence of Tchaikovsky; Balfour-Gardiner's "Comedy Overture" is inspired by Wagner's "Meistersinger" Overture, and Delius's "Brigg Fair" has a Debussy colouring. In this English music one misses the great, strongly personal genius. It moves still too much on the level of talent.'

The Rotterdam Courant of December 9, speaking of the Amsterdam Concert, said:

'The Variations of Elgar were the most appreciated number in the concert programme. Villiers Stanford awakened also hearty remembrances among the audience. The "Irish Rhapsody" bore the stamp of distinction. Of the remaining works there is little to add to our notices in yesterday's paper of the concert at The Hague. Mr. Bainton again showed himself to be a fine, sympathetic, excellent conductor, and earned repeated expressions of grateful appreciation from the crowded audience.

THE MUSICIANS' Y.M.C.A. GIFT.

This is a scheme for providing additional musical facilities for the members of His Majesty's Forces in the 2,600 Huts and Centres of the Y.M.C.A. at home and abroad.

Committee.—The Editors of all the Musical Papers of the Country.

Hon. Treasurer.—Major H. Walford Davies, Mus. Doc.

Organizing Secretaries.—Percy A. Scholes, Mus. Bac., A.R.C.M.; Katharine E. Eggar, A.R.A.M.

Hon. Organizer of National Collection of Instruments and Music.—Herman Darewski.

Office.—Y.M.C.A., Universities House, 25, Bloomsbury Square, W.C.-1.

Total collected to December 31, 1918 (including receipts of Edinburgh and Glasgow Committees)	£	s.	d.
	3,229	0	0
Total received during January, 1919	..	48	16

(a) PROCEEDS OF CONCERTS AND RECITALS FROM DECEMBER 12, 1918 TO JANUARY 11, 1919.

		£	s.	d.
Bristol	 Mr. Herbert Hunt, Cathedral Organ Recital. Also anonymously a violin, 2 bows, case and quantity of music value £10	7	0	0
Bristol	 Miss E. Brockman, Pupils' Musical Evening	0	10	0
Cheltenham	 Mr. C. A. Morris, Concert during his collection campaign	20	0	0
Co. Down	 Madame Cosslett-Heller's Concert at Slieve Donard Hotel, per J. W. Manning, Manager	18	4	0
Dublin	 Madame Cosslett-Heller's Concert at Collinstown Aerodrome, per Major Woods	5	0	0
Enfield	 Proceeds from Carol-Singing, per Miss E. B. Franklin Pike	2	10	0
Lee	 Miss Charlotte Clark, Pupils' Concert	2	2	0
Leicester	 Miss S. M. Vardy, Pennies given by little children at Breaking-up meeting	0	1	6
Liverpool	 Miss Eda Levin, Musical Evening	3	3	0
Sheffield	 Miss G. Scholefield, Concert	15	0	0
Southampton	 Miss K. E. Douthwaite, Wesley Guild Musical Evening	1	12	0
		£75	2	6

(b) DONATIONS AND COLLECTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Bradford Musical Union, per Mr. H. Coates	10	10	0
Mr. Edward German (2nd Donation)	3	3	0
Sir C. F. Dyson	2	2	0
Miss E. Anderson Lounds, collection in box at studio, per Miss Audrey Paddon	1	10	0
Miss A. A. Wilshire	2	2	0
Misses Bradshaw, The	1	1	0
Miss Agnes Fennings (3rd Donation)	1	1	0
Miss Hay	1	1	0
Miss Edna Lane	1	2	0
Miss Dorothy Wilson	1	2	0
Mr. Louis B. Prout	1	1	0
Mr. C. T. Pattman	1	1	0
Mr. H. Rose	1	1	0
Mr. P. J. Gilbody	1	1	0
Mr. S. R. Walker	1	1	0
Miss C. E. Ward	1	1	0
Mr. F. N. Abernethy	0	10	6
Miss H. M. Cruse, per the Music Student	0	10	6
Mr. J. T. Wall	0	10	6
Miss C. S. Hutt	0	10	0
Mr. Fredk. Jones	0	10	0
Miss A. Marley	0	10	0
Miss E. M. Allen, per the Music Student	0	5	0
Miss Barlow	0	5	0
Mr. G. Beale	0	5	0
Mr. T. Davis	0	5	0
Mr. C. J. Hall	0	5	0
Miss M. Lowther, per the Music Student	0	5	0
Miss I. M. Yates, L.R.A.M.	0	5	0
Mr. C. J. Harris	0	0	6
'Florence'	0	0	6
	£34	12	6

Sixty Years Ago.

From the Musical Times of February, 1859:

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—SPELDHURST AND RUSTHALL CHOIRS.—The choir of St. Paul's Church, Rusthall, and St. Mary's, Speldhurst, held their annual feast on the 28th ult., at Rusthall, Tunbridge Wells. Morning and afternoon services were conducted in the church, and the choir were regaled throughout the day with substantial entertainments in the school-rooms. In the evening a number of sacred and secular pieces from the first authors were sung, under the able superintendence of Mr. James Roberts, the choirmaster. The evening was spent in a very agreeable manner by all present.

YORK.—Dr. Monk, of St. Peter's, Radley, has been appointed organist of York Minster.

DEVONPORT.—... The audience, which included a great number of the poor, were much pleased with the entertainment.

WARDWICK (Derby) — ... The performance was patronised by many of the nobility and gentry, and was highly successful.

WHEN MY LOVE SIGHS, I HEAR.—New song by Nectarine Sunnyside, Esq. Price, 2s. 6d.

"Deserving of favour, on the score both of the poetry and music. The verses are elegant, and the air is simple, pleasing, and expressive."—Illustrated London News.

Cramer, Beale, & Co., 201, Regent Street.

London Concerts.

QUEEN'S HALL.

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The hall was crowded on January 11, many people being turned away. One would like to think that music was the main attraction, but it was evident that the majority had come to greet Madame Calvé, and to revive memories of past operatic joys. The famous singer delighted the audience with Gounod's 'O ma lyre immortelle,' David's 'Charmante oiseau,' and the 'Habanera' from 'Carmen.' The musical interest of the concert was centred in the first performance of an Orchestral Ballad by Delius, 'Once upon a time,' based on Norwegian folk-lore, but with no definite programme. The Ballad is highly imaginative in a fantastic way, and is beautifully scored. Thanks to some thrilling climaxes, it may possibly achieve the popularity that the composer's works have so far escaped. Mr. Delius was present, and had a very cordial reception. Mr. de Greef gave a notably fluent performance of Saint-Saëns's second Concerto. The Symphony was Beethoven's A major.

ÆOLIAN HALL

On January 8, the London Trio (Madame Amina Goodwin and Messrs. Sammons and Whitehouse) gave the first performance of Stanford's new Pianoforte Trio. The work bears the inscription, 'In Memoriam E.U., A.T., A.K., E.J.G., M.G. Per aspera astra.' It expresses resignation—even occasional cheerfulness—rather than grief, the finale being especially buoyant. The composer was heartily applauded. The balance of the performance was made up by Dvorák's 'Dumky' Trio, and songs contributed by Miss Gladys Banks.

Miss Zola Rosowsky and Mr. Vladimir Rosing gave a concert on January 11, with a programme containing some unfamiliar operatic duets. Both sang groups of solos by modern Russian composers with the fervour that we expect from them. Mr. Manlio di Veroli accompanied.

WIGMORE HALL.

Miss Beatrice Harrison began a series of concerts on January 11, playing (with Mr. Hamilton Harty) the Delius Sonata, of which she recently gave the first performance. Both in this work and in a group of short pieces (including two Bach Choral Preludes, arranged by Anthony Bernard), she played splendidly. Miss Margaret Harrison played Handel's Sonata in E, in place of the Bach Double Concerto, abandoned owing to the illness of Miss May Harrison.

Mr. Victor Benham gave a recital on January 17, playing the Beethoven Sonatas in E flat and D minor from Op. 31, besides Schumann's 'Carnival' and 'Papillons.' He also included a well-written Sonata of his own.

On January 11, at the Central Hall, a large audience enjoyed a rich treat at the hands of Miss Adela Verne, who gave a Chopin-Liszt recital.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

An enormous audience attended the Royal Albert Hall on January 4, when 'Messiah' was sung. The soloists were Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Norman Allin. Mr. H. L. Balfour was at the organ, and Sir Frederick Bridge conducted.

RETIREMENT OF DR. VARLEY ROBERTS.

After thirty-six years' work at Magdalen College, Oxford, Dr. Varley Roberts has retired. He was for six years organist of Armlay, going to Halifax Parish Church at the age of twenty-six. He remained at Halifax for fourteen years, and then succeeded Sir Walter Parratt at Magdalen. He has been remarkably successful as a trainer of boys' voices.

Music in the Provinces.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

BIRMINGHAM.

The principal local musical event was connected with the fortnight's operatic season given by the Beecham Grand Opera Company at the Prince of Wales's Theatre from November 18 to November 30, 1918. Crowded audiences practically filled the Theatre nightly to overflowing, each representation being received with unbounded enthusiasm. The revival of Wagner's 'Tannhäuser,' with an excellent cast of principals that included Miss Rosina Buckman, Miss Gladys Ancrum, Mr. Frank Mullings, Mr. Norman Allin, and Mr. Robert Parker proved a welcome feature on the opening night of the season. The novelty centred in the first performance here of Rimsky-Korsakov's last opera, 'Le Coq d'Or,' written a year before the composer's death, which occurred at Lionbesk, near St. Petersburg, in 1908. Founded on a fairy-tale by Pushkin, the librettist, V. Bielsky, has created a kind of phantasmagoria in which grotesque pantomime plays an important part. It was brilliantly represented, the richness and glowing colours of the quaint costumes being almost too dazzling to behold. The music is chiefly noteworthy on account of its fascinating orchestration. Although at times bizarre it seems to speak a language of its own. Excellent performances were given of 'Tristan and Isolde,' 'Aida,' 'Carmen,' 'Louise,' 'La Bohème,' 'Samson and Delilah,' 'Marriage of Figaro,' 'Phœbus and Pan,' 'Magic Flute,' 'Othello,' 'Madame Butterfly,' 'Faust,' 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' and 'Pagliacci.' Sir Thomas Beecham made only one appearance, when he conducted 'Aida,' on the last night of the season. The other conductors were Messrs. Eugène Goossens, jun., Eugène Goossens, sen., Percy Pitt, and Wynn Reeves.

The Appleby Matthews Sunday Orchestral Concerts at the Scala Theatre seem now to be well established. The excellent orchestra, numbering over forty performers, now forms a reliable and artistic body of musicians, constant ensemble playing under the same conductor (Mr. Appleby Matthews) being the means of furthering that unanimity which such practice alone can impart. The programmes provided were calculated to satisfy all comers, being a happy blend of standard works by the classical masters and an admirable selection of the best-known excerpts which as a rule find acceptance at popular promenade concerts. Mr. Appleby Matthews is evidently a conductor who will make his mark. He displays sound musicianship, temperament, and judgment of no mean order.

The Annual Scottish Concert, which took place at the Town Hall on November 30, was once more the occasion for the gathering of the clans under the auspices of the Birmingham and Midland Scottish Society. Owing to existing conditions there was no Scottish choir, which for so many years past has been a feature of these concerts, especially when the famous Glasgow Choir took part in this annual event. The concert, like that of last year, was again in the nature of a ballad concert, the vocalists being Miss Jessie Livingstone, Miss Annie Hobson, Mr. A. McGregor, and Douglas Hamilton. Boys of the Royal Caledonian Schools exhibited their skill as pipers and dancers. Mr. Samuel Simms, of Birmingham, acted as accompanist.

Mr. Max Mossel's second concert of a series of four was given in the Central Hall on December 3, when the hall was packed. Madame Kirkby Lunn, the celebrated contralto, was the vocalist, and Miss Lena Ashwell gave some recitations with distinct articulation. In instrumental music rested with Mr. Max Mossel (violin), Mr. Salmond (violinello), and Mr. Appleby Matthews (pianoforte). One of the most pleasing features of the concert was the fine singing of part-songs by the Appleby Matthews Choir, especially the wonderfully artistic interpretation of three of Elgar's best-known part-songs—'As torrents in Summer,' 'The Shower,' and 'Weary Wind of the West.'

Madame Minadieu's second Matinée Musicale of a series of four given at the Grosvenor Room, Grand Hotel, on December 7, was devoted to old-world music of the 16th and 17th centuries, written for the viola da gamba, the precursor of the violoncello. Miss Hélène Dolmetsch, an expert and artist on the instrument, was especially engaged for this concert, and the main work was assigned to her, the programme opening with a Sonata in G minor for viola da gamba by Henry Purcell (1658-95), accompanied on the pianoforte from the original figured bass by Miss Dorothy Moggridge. The beautiful mellow tone produced on the viola da gamba, a perfect instrument made by Brgonzi in 1727, was even more fully in evidence in Bach's Sarabande et Courante from the Suite in D major for unaccompanied viola da gamba. Of special interest was the melodious and truly captivating Sonata in A minor by Schubert, written in 1824 for arpeggione and pianoforte, but played on this occasion on the viola da gamba. The two artists were in perfect sympathy, the whole performance being a truly artistic achievement. Miss Moggridge was also thoroughly successful in her pianoforte solos by Couperin, Rameau, and François Dandieu, to which she imparted the right tone-colour, enhanced by delicacy of touch. Dr. Tom Goodey sang a number of short songs by Bach and other old composers with fine expression and clear enunciation.

Of much artistic interest was Miss Gertrude Fuller and Miss Beatrice Hewitt's third and last violin and pianoforte recital given in the large Lecture Theatre of the Midland Institute on December 14, which brought forth an exceedingly fine performance of Mozart's Sonata in G minor for violin and pianoforte. The reading was distinguished by a correct conception of how Mozart should be treated; indeed it was a delight to hear such scholarly playing. Beethoven's always welcome Sonata, also for violin and pianoforte, in F major, Op. 24, was interpreted in a way that nearly achieved perfection. Miss Fuller gave for her violin solo the delightful Concerto in D minor by Tartini, with Cadenzas by Joachim, accompanied on the organ by Mr. Appleby Matthews. Her pure and sympathetic tone and her earnest musicianship were very fully displayed. Another interesting feature of this concert was Miss Hewitt's fascinating and characteristic art of pianoforte playing in Brahms's 'Waltzes,' Op. 39, and four of Chopin's great Studies.

The terminal concert by the orchestra of the Midland Institute School of Music took place on December 16, in the large Lecture Theatre of the Institute, under the direction of Prof. Granville Bantock. The principal feature of the programme was the revival of Sullivan's Incidental Music to Shakespeare's 'Tempest,' the first work he wrote after his return from Leipzig, and first produced at the Crystal Palace on April 5, 1862. It was a happy thought on the part of the Principal of the School to give preference to Sullivan, who after all was the greatest composer of his time, the man who wrote for the people. A very gratifying exposition was given of this dainty and melodious music, Miss Emily Broughton singing in a very pleasing manner the two 'Ariel's Songs' and 'Where the Bee sucks.' Quite pleasing readings were also given of Bach's third Concerto in G for Strings, and four of Dvorák's exhilarating 'Slav Dances,' Op. 46. Debussy's 'Danse Sacrée' and 'Danse Profane' were played on the pianoforte by Miss Enid Lewis, accompanied by strings.

The Birmingham Chamber Concerts Society's third concert of the current season was held at the Royal Society of Artists' Gallery on December 18, the executive again being the Catterall Quartet. The works presented were Glinka's Quartet in F, Eugène Goossens's two Sketches, 'By the Tarn' and 'Jack o' Lantern,' and Beethoven's great String Quartet, Op. 131, in C sharp minor. Only the best-equipped string-quartet players can do justice to this great and homogeneous work, which the Catterall combination realised in the most artistic way.

An interesting musical event just before Christmas was Mr. Richard Wassell's Carol Concert, given in the Town Hall on December 21, which attracted an enormous audience. A fine collection of carols by Stanford, Barnby, Alec Rowley, J. Varley Roberts, Thomas Adams, Tchaikovsky, G. Vincent Evans, J. H. Wallis, and James Tomlinson was sung by the Choral Union Choir of two hundred select voices, excellently trained by Mr. Wassell, the conductor of the Birmingham Choral Union. It was a real delight to hear such excellent and pure singing, the magnificent tone-quality of the sopranos and contraltos being a distinctive feature. Rarely has one heard such exquisite singing as that in Barnby's impressive 'Cradle Song of the Blessed Virgin.' The solo vocalists were Miss Ada Forrest, the cultured soprano, and Mr. Robert Parker, the popular bass of the Beecham Opera Company. Both artists were in excellent form, and created immense enthusiasm with their inspired singing of well-chosen songs. The instrumental portion of the programme included a number of organ solos of great brilliance, played with consummate skill by Mr. T. W. North, and pianoforte solos contributed by Mr. Arthur Cooke, the most popular pianist in the Midlands. Violoncello solos were played by Miss Joan Willis in her customary artistic manner. Mr. Wassell officiated as accompanist.

The Birmingham Festival Choral Society's sixty-third annual Yule-Tide performance of 'Messiah' took place in the Town Hall on Boxing Night, as usual attracting a packed audience.

On account of sudden indisposition, Sir Thomas Beecham was unable to conduct the performance, and the duty again devolved upon Mr. Allen K. Blackall, the genial chorus-master of the Society, who secured an impressive reading framed on orthodox traditions. The choir was well-balanced and of sonorous tone-quality. The quartet of solo vocalists was Miss Mabel Manson, Miss Doris Manuelle, Mr. Frank Mullings, and Mr. Herbert Heyner, the latter replacing Mr. Allin, who was not able to fulfil his engagement. With such artists the solo work was in safe hands. Mr. T. W. North was the organist, in place of Mr. C. W. Perkins.

A blind musicians' concert was given in the Town Hall on January 1 in aid of the St. Dunstan's Hostel for soldiers and sailors blinded in the War. Lady Pearson had organized a select concert-party of blind musicians, comprising a vocal quartet—Miss Lister, Miss Maden, Mr. Turner, and Mr. Logan—who sang some part-songs, each artist also contributing songs of a popular character. The solo pianist was Mr. Leonard Marsh, one of the best blind pianists ever heard in Birmingham. One of the finest things he did was an improvisation on melodies suggested by the audience, which included Liszt's 'Libeastrum.' All the vocalists sang expressively, and in the concerted numbers the voices blended admirably. The accompanist was Miss Dorothy Capon. Unfortunately there was a very poor attendance.

Among the recent local concert-givers is Mr. Hubert S. Brown, who inaugurated a series of concerts at the Temperance Hall on January 8, the concert-giver acting as accompanist. The artistic personnel associated with him were all well-known local artists. Miss Elma Baker, who sang in place of Miss Dorothy Silk (the latter unfortunately being indisposed), Miss Alice Vaughan, Dr. Tom Goodey and Mr. Charles Harrison were the vocalists, with Mr. Arthur Hytch (solo violin) and Miss Marjorie Soham (solo pianoforte). Of special interest was Miss Soham's fine performance of three numbers of Albeniz's Pianoforte Suite, 'Iberia.' Mr. Hytch played two movements from Elgar's Violin Concerto, accompanied on the pianoforte by the concert-giver, and revealed a well-schooled technique.

BOURNEMOUTH.

First-class concerts have of late been well up to the average in point of numbers, the past month bringing many interesting events in its train. Christmas-time meant rare prosperity for the Winter Gardens, the number of pleasure-seekers paying for admission to the various attractions being very numerous.

It is specially gratifying to learn that the Symphony Concerts have drawn such good houses, for these affairs are really the backbone of Bournemouth's musical enterprise. After all it is no wonder that they have prospered, as audiences have been assured of programmes that will please, and the performance of these has, on the whole, been very praiseworthy. Many compositions that will always repay a hearing have figured in the scheme, viz., such works as Rim-ky-Korsakov's 'Antar' Suite, Weber's Overture to 'Der Freischütz,' Svendsen's first Symphony, Beethoven's 'Leonore' Overture (No. 3), Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, the 'Tannhäuser' Overture, Schumann's D minor Symphony, Dvorák's 'From the New World,' Liadov's 'Kikimora' Legend, Joseph Jongen's Fantasia on two Popular Walloon Christmas Carols, and Percy Grainger's 'Shepherd's Hey.' The only novelty among the purely orchestral items has been Howard Carr's 'Three Heroes' Sketches, which, under the composer's direction, made a great impression on the audience. The music is certainly of a very attractive order, the 'Captain Oates' section, in particular, being exceedingly expressive.

The solo artists at these concerts have in nearly every instance attained a higher level of performance than most of those who appeared at the earlier concerts of the series. Miss Augusta Chilton-Griffin, in Tchaikovsky's B flat minor Pianoforte Concerto, was not afraid to match her powers against the many eminent virtuoso performers who make a speciality of this over-played work, and came through the ordeal very successfully. Another attractive keyboard performance was that of Mr. Gordon Bryan, whose playing in MacDowell's somewhat neglected A minor Concerto was exceedingly fluent and tasteful, the slow movement proving particularly charming. A Violoncello Concerto by Joseph Jongen was presented by Miss Valerie Valensen—an artistic player, though somewhat lacking in tone. She had the advantage of Jongen himself as conductor, this composer also directing the performance of his Fantasia on Walloon Carols. At the eleventh concert Guillaume Franck and Miss Kate Sylvester, two highly-efficient members of the Orchestra, were associated in a performance of Bach's Concerto for Violins in D minor, a work, strangely enough, never previously heard at the Symphony Concerts. The rendering was extremely enjoyable owing to the soloists' very musicianly conception of the music.

Reference has been made on one or two occasions in this column to the active work of the Bournemouth Conservatoire of Music, of which institution Mr. Hamilton Law is the principal. In continuance of those periodic notices we would allude to the Conservatoire functions known as the 'Fortnightly Musical Afternoons.' Lectures on various subjects are a feature of these affairs, and it may be of interest to record some that have taken place recently, viz., 'Dr. Arne' and 'My Musical Recollections,' two lectures by Mr. Burnham W. Horner; two on 'Handel,' by Mr. H. J. Nash; and a lecture by Mr. A. W. Russe, who chose for his subject 'Arthur Sullivan.' A lecture-recital on 'Modern French and Russian pianoforte music,' by Mlle. Juliette Folville, Professor of the Royal Conservatoire of Music at Liège, was closely followed by a similar evening devoted to 'The Violoncello,' by Miss Vera Ensor. Finally, Mr. Hamilton Law has delivered two lectures on 'Modern British Songs and their Composers,' one on 'Brahms,' and another having for its subject 'What is Music?'; and he is now delivering a series dealing with 'The Story of Russian Music: its Rise and Development.'

'Messiah' was performed by the Peterhead Choral Society at its New Year's concert on January 2. The soloists were Miss Margaret Inverarity, Miss Mary Doig, Mr. Beresford Inglis, and Flight-Sergeant Bishop, and the orchestra was led by Mr. Alec Sim. Mr. Willan Swainson conducted a powerful and finished performance.

CAMBRIDGE.

The University Musical Society is giving a Memorial Concert on March 14, at which Dr. Rootham's setting of Mr. Laurence Binyon's 'For the Fallen' (composed in December, 1914, but not yet performed), Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' Beethoven's fifth Symphony, and an Irish Rhapsody by George Butterworth will be performed. The committee feels that such a concert will be appreciated by a very large number of people in and near Cambridge, and that the expense of the venture will be justified. The numbers of both choir and orchestra have increased this term, and the prospects are much brighter than they have been for upwards of four years.

The Musical Club has re-opened its rooms in Petty Cury, and is resuming the weekly concerts.

EDINBURGH.

The New Year's Day performance of 'Messiah' proved more popular than ever. Miss Caroline Hatchard, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. John Adams, and Mr. Herbert Brown all met with a cordial reception in the solo parts. Mr. Hemingway, solo trumpet, Mr. Gavin Godfrey, organist, and Mr. W. Greenhouse Allt, conductor, filled their respective parts admirably. On the evening of the same day the above artists gave a Scotch concert.

A recital of English, French, Russian, and Hebridean songs, by Jeanne L'Hommedieu, assisted by Joan Singleton as accompanist, was given on January 11.

On January 17 the Fellows String Quartet, with Mr. Philip Halstead as solo pianist, gave a delightful performance of Sinding's Quartet, Op. 5, Haydn's Hornpipe Quartet, and César Franck's Quintet in F minor.

His Majesty's Grenadier Guards Band gave a series of performances from January 2 to 8 inclusive. The Band's artistic playing, under the baton of Dr. Williams, was an education to those who were successful in gaining admittance to the recitals.

GLASGOW.

The Glasgow Grand Opera Society, under Mr. Hutton Malcolm, gave a week's performances (November 26-30) at the Theatre Royal, the programmes alternating 'Faust' and 'The Daughter of the Regiment.' The proceeds, as usual, were handed to one of the Patriotic Funds. For a similar object the Fellows String Quartet gave the first of a series of three chamber concerts on December 5. Under the auspices of the English Association, Dom Gregory S. Ould delivered a highly informative lecture on 'Christmas Carols' on December 7. The lecturer dealt with the literary and musical aspects of the subject, covering a period of many centuries. The musical illustrations were given by the lecturer and by the St. Wilfrid's Ladies' Choir, a recently-formed and highly-promising body. What was formerly the Annual Scottish Concert of the Glasgow Orpheus Choir (Mr. H. S. Robertson, conductor) has become so popular as to necessitate three performances instead of one. These took place on December 10, 11, and 12, before audiences which completely filled St. Andrew's Hall. Among the outstanding renderings in a programme of original part-songs and arrangements were Bantock's 'O can ye sew cushions' and De Pearsall's 'Sir Patrick Spens.' Vocal solos, largely drawn from Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser's 'Songs of the Hebrides,' were given with splendid effect by members of the Choir. With the close of the Autumn Exhibition at the Royal Institute of Fine Arts, the weekly chamber concerts under Mr. Philip Halstead's direction terminated. These have proved highly attractive.

The Choral Union's fifty-second annual performance of 'Messiah' took place as usual, and the singing of the familiar choruses was quite satisfactory. An excellent quartet—Misses Flora Woodman and Edna Thornton, and Messrs. Gervase Elwes and Robert Radford—gave the solo music, and the accompaniments were played by a somewhat incomplete band led by Mr. Fellowes, with Mr. Herbert Walton's able assistance at the organ. On New Year's evening the Union again appeared, but in a miscellaneous selection of National music, accompanied and unaccompanied. Their standard of performance in the light of present-day attainments in choral singing was only moderately good. The programme was suitably varied by the inclusion of vocal solos by Miss Flora Woodman, and violin solos by Mr. Fellowes. The sixth concert of the Choral and Orchestral Union's series brought together a very large audience on January 11. The main attraction was evidently the pianist, Mr. Moiseiwitsch, whose magnificent playing of an unhackneyed programme, chiefly of modern compositions, was keenly appreciated. Mr. Moiseiwitsch was associated with Miss Daisy Kennedy in a charming performance of César Franck's Pianoforte and Violin Sonata in A. The vocalist was Miss Desirée Ellinger, who, however, cannot be cordially complimented on the selection of songs presented. Mr. Edgar Barrett acted as pianoforte accompanist.

LIVERPOOL.

Sir Henry Wood, who is always a welcome visitor, chose an interesting programme for the fourth concert of the Philharmonic Society on December 21, when in place of a Symphony we had MacDowell's 'Indian Suite,' Op. 48, music redolent of the spirit of the primeval forest. It indeed possesses the individual charm peculiar to so much of MacDowell's music, and his idyllic presentment of American Indian life will probably remain as the composer's best memorial. Delightful re-hearing was also Elgar's masterly 'Wand of Youth' Suite, No. 2. Ravel's impressive 'Pavane sur une Infante Défunte,' with the 'Carnaval Romain' Overture and Wagner's 'Faust' Overture completed the orchestral items, which were associated with a really fine choral performance of Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens' sung in Memoriam, and conducted by the choir-master, Dr. Arthur W. Pollitt, whose recent appointment has had the happiest results. Miss Phyllis Lett was the vocalist, and sang with rare distinction of voice and style in two of Elgar's beautiful 'Sea-Pictures,' and with irresistible archness in the 'Chanson des Tambourineur' by Weckerlin.

The Liverpool Choral Society, which will next year attain its majority, sang 'Messiah' in St. George's Hall on December 21, in aid of the fund for Blinded Soldiers and Sailors. This large and powerful choir has attained a high standard under Mr. Percival Ingram's direction, and the choral numbers were sung with excellent effect. The vocal principals were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Phyllis Lett, Lieut. John Booth, R.G.A., and Mr. Hamilton Harris. The orchestra was led by Mr. John Lawson, and Mr. Ellingford presided at the organ.

The third of the concerts promoted by Mr. H. J. Westhead received but meagre public support on January 11, when Mr. Mark Hambourg gave a pianoforte recital in the Philharmonic Hall. Undeterred by the smallness of the audience, Mr. Hambourg displayed all his well-known qualities of fire, force, and occasional fury in a programme of which Schumann's C major Fantasia, Op. 17, Ravel's 'Jeux d'eau,' and the Mendelssohn-Liszt 'Wedding March' are the chief memories of an exuberant virtuosity which is not always tempered by his possession of genuine musicianship. In the cases mentioned there was a happy blend of these qualities.

Thanks to the Rodewald Concert Society and to Miss Lilius Mackinnon, of Aberdeen, an opportunity was given at an 'Invitation Concert' on January 13 of hearing a selection of pianoforte pieces by Scriabin. Our knowledge of his four hundred contributions to instrumental music has hitherto been confined to his first Symphony (minus the choral epilogue) which Savonov conducted at a Philharmonic Concert in November, 1915, and to his beautiful Nocturne for the left hand, which pianists with more or less daring are adding to their répertoires. On this occasion examples of Scriabin's three periods were offered in selections from the Preludes, Opp. 11, 13, 15, 16, 17, 31, and 35; the Poems, Opp. 32, 63, and 69 (Étrangeté), the Studies, Opp. 8 and 42, and the Sonata in F sharp major, Op. 30. Generally speaking there was little difficulty in recognising the attractive interest and newness of the earlier Preludes and Studies of the student period, in which there are traces of the influences of Schumann and Chopin, as for example in the Preludes in E, Op. 15, in G flat major, Op. 16, and in E major, Op. 11. The Sonata in F sharp is less intelligible, and in this instance Miss Mackinnon appeared less convincing as an interpreter then as a careful and accurate performer. But the message conveyed in Scriabin's later periods is of a subtlety which one is disposed to think few players can penetrate. There are too many disturbing technical, harmonic, and psychological problems to encounter, and with each successive higher opus-number, the message to ordinary hearers appears to become more involved and less clear. The due appreciation of Scriabin's revolutionary genius is a matter for deep and analytical study rather than of immediate conviction. But none could hear these examples of his pianoforte music so cleverly played from memory—at what cost of mental and digital labour!—without recognising that Scriabin has envolved a new language in musical art, and a new method of composition, for which we as listeners have to acquire a new way of listening. As Scriabin has written no songs, the acceptable vocal reliefs provided by Miss Helen Anderton—an artistic singer, who was expertly accompanied by Miss Dorothy Crewe—including three of Bantock's characteristic 'Sappho' Songs, and a Russian group by Tchaikovsky, Moussorgsky, and Rimsky-Korsakov, came most opportunely.

The Welsh Choral Union's 'Messiah' performance on December 28 attracted a crowded and deeply appreciative audience to the Philharmonic Hall. It is satisfactory to find that the rich material out of which the lamented Harry Evans fashioned this superb body of chorals is still available. It is the chief and at present the only memorial of his life-sacrificing labours. But it is yet a splendid monument. Conducted by Mr. Hopkin Evans, of Neath, who has on previous occasions acted in this capacity with conspicuous ability, the choir moved through the familiar music with sureness. Notably good was the singing of the Passion choruses, not only in the matter of sheer weight of tone but also in interpretative intention. Generally speaking Mr. Hopkin Evans maintained the Handelian tradition in tempi, and the 'Hallelujah' chorus so greatly thrilled the assembly that a repetition was demanded and given. The vocal principals were Miss Emily Breare, surely one of the best singers in oratorio, Miss Winifred Lewis, Mr. Ben Davies, a splendid veteran whose powers have suffered no apparent diminution, and Mr. Herbert Brown, whose 'Why do the nations' was intensely dramatic. The orchestral playing was in places capable of improvement, and probably through lack of band-parts the players made a poor show in the opening Doxology and National Anthem, after which the conductor might have observed a less lengthy and irritating pause before going on with the oratorio. Mr. Alfred Benton was at the organ, and it was satisfactory to see Mr. Vasco Akeroyd in his old place as leader. It is sincerely hoped, now that the war is over, that the Welsh Choral Union will emerge from its enforced inaction and resume its old distinctive place.

The enterprising proprietor of the Shakespeare Theatre, Mr. W. W. Kelly, has catered liberally for the opera-loving community by the provision of sixteen weeks of Grand Opera. The season commenced on Boxing-Day, with the H. B. Phillips Company, by arrangement with the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company. It is to be followed by two seasons of shorter duration. Up to the present the operas have been exceedingly well supported. This is no wonder, when such performances of popular works can be enjoyed at popular prices, which range from a fourpenny gallery to three-shilling stalls.

Mr. Edward Isaacs has recently provided a new attraction to his recitals by performing pianoforte concertos with the orchestral part sustained on a second pianoforte. On the first occasion, in Crane Hall, on December 18, Mr. Isaacs played Mendelssohn's 'Capriccio Brillante' and Chopin's E minor Concerto, and on January 15, in the Rushworth Hall, he gave similar masterly performances of Mendelssohn's G minor Concerto and Saint-Saëns's Concerto in the same key. In each case Mr. Isaacs had an able and sympathetic coadjutor in Miss Dorothy Crewe at the second pianoforte.

A wide circle of friends has hailed with satisfaction the announcement that Mr. Frederic Brandon, the well-known local pianist has been awarded the M.B.E. in recognition of his services as chief inspector of the National Shell Factory, Rotherham, where he has been since the factory opened. A pianist of great technical attainments, he possesses a real gift of interpretation, shown in a wide range of styles, and his return to musical activities in our midst will be welcomed by all who know his qualities as a man as well as a musician.

The Liverpool Organists' and Choirmasters' Association resumed their pre-war annual dinner at a largely-attended function held in the Washington Hotel on January 6. Dr. James Lyon, as president, occupied the chair, and the guests of the evening were Mr. S. W. Pilling, president of the National Union, and Mr. W. C. Lord, president of the Southport Association.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.

The City Council Opera House site sub-committee has held its first meeting under the chairmanship of the Deputy Lord Mayor, Sir Alexander Porter. Advantage is sure to be taken of this large-scale transformation of part of the centre of the City's buildings to combine the Opera House with certain municipal office extensions, so that a site of not less than 45,000 square yards will be essential. This will all help to secure insulation from the ceaseless clangour of city traffic.

Up to the time of writing the long opera season has been a continuous success. The tide of support has run strongly, without any suggestion of slack water, and naturally the holiday-season repertory was frankly popular. For ten days now in January the subscription season has been in full swing, and has witnessed a revival of 'Othello' and the first performance here of 'Le Coq d'Or.' The writer's actual experience of these performances can only commence after January 20, but it is said that various interesting modifications of former casts have proved very stimulating. Of course this sort of thing cannot be applied to the monumental operatic rôles. Tristans, Iagos, Othellos, are not to be picked up anywhere, though Santuzzas, Marinas, Pimenos, Costanzas, and Blondes may be found without much difficulty. One of the prime qualities of Beecham opera is the interchangeability and interdependence of parts, and it has this characteristic to-day just as, fifty or sixty years ago, the old Calvert stock repertory company in the Theatre Royal showed a similar facility.

Sir Thomas Beecham has done no conducting so far this year, but is understood to be actively interested in the 'Falstaff' preparations for February.

To go back to old year concert-music left over from my previous notes: For very many music-loving people in this country, probably the Christmastide performances of 'Messiah' would be welcomed as providing the most fitting outlet for the strange mixture of emotions generated by the great news of the Armistice. This occasion seemed to furnish us all with a new angle of vision for the contemplation of the work. Manchester had three 'full-dress' performances in the Free Trade Hall in one week (each of which was crowded to the doors), not to name the hundreds of church and chapel performances on a humbler scale. Illness prevented Sir Thomas Beecham from conducting the Hallé interpretation on December 19. Mr. Hamilton Harty took his place on this occasion, and adhered to Sir Thomas's plan of omissions and transposition. Never before (and possibly never again) shall we experience that peculiar sense of fitness in moving the 'Hallelujah' chorus to the end of the work, where its blend of solemnity, sublimity, and jubilation voiced the feelings universally uppermost in popular thought. Again, one could not listen unmoved to the newly-perceived eloquence of 'Comfort ye,' as sung with such unadorned simplicity by a young soldier, Mr. Alfred Jordan. This singer, and the soprano, Miss Stiles Allen, were, I believe, both new to Manchester oratorio audiences. They both revealed the fullest qualifications for such work. Mr. Norman Allin storms his way through the 'Messiah' solos with the giant stride of a Titan, and for once 'The trumpet shall sound' was an equal contest, the resonances of voice and instrument constantly vying for supremacy. Miss Edna Thornton sang the contralto music. Mr. Hamilton Harty indulged in no 'readings,' taking everything in a straightforward fashion, except for a sudden accelerando for two or three bars in 'All we like sheep,' which reminded one of a too-zealous sheep-dog worrying the flocks at a Lakeland hillside. The Sir Henry Wood version on Mr. Brand Lane's concerts was really a repetition of this conductor's presentation at the last Birmingham Festival, the orchestral parts being the same as used then. It is doubtful whether it can ever be truly said of music (as for example is sometimes said of sculpture) that this or that interpretation attains finality; yet those who scoff at the readings of these more or less standardized works by conductors who approach them from an enlightened point of view, as they would any new work of real importance, are surely in the wrong, for Sir Henry Wood's interpretations of 'Messiah' and 'Elijah,' along with those of Sir Thomas Beecham, galvanized anew these classics whose mission it is to be immortal. The still too frequent stodgy performances are merely the outcome of a lazy mentality, and we may all pray to be delivered from such monotonous routine work. I often wonder what would be the effect on a present-day experienced (musically) audience, if 'Messiah' (or any other big oratorio) had been an unknown work, unearthed recently, and had received the careful preparation and rehearsal which would be given to an undoubtedly fine modern work. How would those choruses and solos impress audiences and critics? I am not here concerned to argue whether oratorio as an art-form is dead or dying, but I do say that where Bach and Handel have the greatest pains bestowed upon them, the impression produced on performers and audiences alike is not one of apathy but of lively interest, and apart from the intrinsic value of such performances under men like Sir Thomas Beecham and Sir Henry Wood, their greatest value seems to me to be in the incentive they afford to fresh and apprehensive minds. It has been well said that the sum of potential energy in the works of these great old masters is infinite. One is not unmindful of purist theories and practice, but, on balance, who can doubt where the ultimate advantage lies?

The stream of chamber music, which had risen bank-high towards the end of the year, quickly shrank until it was barely more than a trickle during January. The Brodsky Quartet, with Miss Kathleen Moorhouse as second 'cello, played the big Schubert Quintet at a concert of the Tuesday Mid-Day Series; Miss Edith Robinson's Quartet also introduced the Brahms Op. 111 Quintet, under the same auspices. By the time this journal is published Miss Robinson and Miss Lucy Pierce will have resumed their Friday Noontide Sonata Series.

The outstanding feature of this aspect of our month's musical experience was the visit of Messrs. William Murdoch, Albert Sammons, and Felix Salmond in Brahms's C major Trio and John Ireland's Trio. In the Scherzo of the former they stirred the normally apathetic audience of the Gentlemen's Concerts Society to something very like enthusiasm. The modern work seems to have impressed some hearers as rather sombre in colouring and feeling. Perhaps in the midst of winter's industrial gloom—both atmospheric and economic—Manchester may be pardoned for its longing for music of a sunnier complexion.

In these columns I have before commented on the unostentatious way in which Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, now at Westminster, has done so much for the Music in War-time movement. 'It's dogged as does it' is often exemplified in the County Palatine. Thanks to his untiring efforts in conjunction with his committee it would appear quite likely that the Tuesday Noontide War-time concerts will not expire with the advent of Peace. Mr. Nicholson is not likely to neglect similar possibilities in his new sphere of labour.

SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

Gounod's Oratorio, 'The Redemption,' still retains its hold on a section of the musical public. The qualities that won for it so sensational a reception on its production at Birmingham in 1882 have proved its defects, and the work only survives by reason of its intermittent moments of noble and inspiring music. To a choir equipped with all the formulae of expressive singing, possessing a good balance of parts, and the power to produce effects of massed sonority, 'The Redemption' furnishes grateful music, despite its almost total absence of those contrapuntal choruses which are the bread and butter of singers brought up on Handel and Mendelssohn. The Sheffield Amateur Musical Society has all the qualifications named. Consequently at the performance of the work at its Winter concert Sir Henry Wood was enabled to engineer a number of imposing choral climaxes, while in the quieter sections, notably in 'The Reproaches,' a high degree of expression was reached.

By consistently accelerating the pace of the various numbers, the conductor invested the music with much vitality and brightness, though with inevitable loss of the mystic and devotional character of certain scenes. On the whole it was a picturesque performance, greatly enhanced by the fine playing of a complete and thoroughly competent orchestra. The soloists were Misses Ethel Dyer, Constance Ireson, and Joan Ashley, Messrs. Ben Morgan, Fred Worton, and John Buckley. They sang with a fine ensemble in the quartets, while in the solo portions special successes were won by Miss Dyer and Mr. Worton. Mr. J. A. Rodgers was organist.

'Messiah' by the Sheffield Musical Union is a recognised ante-Christmas attraction. The eighteenth annual performance once more brought a full hall, and the performance, conducted by Dr. Coward, added another to the chain of his successes in a work that he has in the North of England made peculiarly his own. There was a large choir, in which it was gratifying to notice a re-inforcement of the male section. The power and brilliance of the voices were utilised to the full in the great cumulative numbers, while not the least affecting of the choral sections was the difficult 'Behold the Lamb of God.' The soloists were Miss Florence Mellors, Miss Elsie Frood, Mr. Horace Binks, and Mr. Hamilton Harris. Mr. W. H. Peasegood was the organist.

A novel type of programme was arranged for the third of Messrs. Wilson Peck's Sheffield Subscription Concerts, when a quartet of singers from the Beecham Opera Company—Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Frank Mullings, and Mr. Norman Allin—were heard in operatic arias and concerted pieces, drawn mainly from works of the modern French and Italian Schools. The whole of the Garden Scene from 'Faust' was given, and proved a popular and enjoyable selection. Mr. Arnold Trowell's artistically played 'cello solos completed an interesting programme. At the fourth concert, a recital by M. de Pachmann, the hall was again sold out. The veteran pianist was as entrancing and amusing as ever.

The continuation of the Misses Foxon's Thursday Three o'Clock Concerts has been marked by a departure of bold character. Three Pianoforte Concerts in one programme are a severe test of the assimilative capacity of an audience. They were however carried to a successful issue, and another similar concert is being arranged. Miss Helen Guest played strongly, and with free, warmly-coloured style, in Tchaikovsky's Concerto No. 1 and Arensky's work, while Mr. Stanley Kaye showed a firm feeling for rhythm and much delicacy in Grieg's pleasant Concerto. Songs from 'Ivanhoe' and 'Carmen' were sung by Miss Pansy Moore and Mr. Ernest Platts. A well-found orchestra was conducted by Mr. J. A. Rodgers. The Spring series of concerts arranged by the Misses Foxon will be given on successive Fridays, though two orchestral concerto concerts will take place on Thursday evenings.

A successful visit of a fortnight's duration of the Carl Rosa Opera Company to the Lyceum Theatre has attracted crowded audiences. The repertoire included three of Puccini's works, viz., 'La Bohème,' 'La Tosca,' and 'Madame Butterfly.' 'Tannhäuser,' 'Mignon,' 'Tales of Hoffmann,' and a number of standard works completed the list.

YORKSHIRE.

LEEDS.

The event of the season in the music of Leeds has been the visit of the Beecham Opera Company for a fortnight in December. During that time no fewer than seventeen different works were produced, only one being given more than a single performance. They were all produced with rare completeness. Not a single scene had to do double duty, save only in the 'Coq d'Or' of Rimsky-Korsakov, which was the most novel work introduced to Leeds, unless it be Bach's 'Phœbus and Pan,' which, staged and dressed by Dulac, and eked out by the charming dances arranged and orchestrated from the French Suites by Mr. Goossens, jun., was a perfect delight. Other works of importance were 'Tristan and Isolde,' Verdi's 'Otello' (both with Mr. Frank Mullings in the title-parts), 'Samson and Delilah,' 'Tosca,' and 'Louise,' while the superbly staged 'Figaro' was among the more notable events. Mr. Percy Pitt and Mr. Goossens, jun., advanced their position as conductors by the excellent work they did, and among the artists there may be specially mentioned Mr. Robert Radford, Mr. Frederic Austin, Miss Jeanne Brola, Mr. Norman Allin, Mr. Walter Hyde (a fine Samson), Mr. Ranalow, and Miss Miriam Licette, though indeed all the operas were most efficiently cast. The orchestra was, for once in provincial opera, adequate and well balanced, and there was none of the orchestral camouflage usually necessary. We even had all the six horns on the stage in the first Act of 'Tannhäuser.' The ballet was one of the most artistic ever associated with opera. It never seemed an excrescence, but always fitted into its place, and the stage-management, for which Mr. George King was responsible, was invariably thoughtful and effective. The visit has aroused the greatest interest at Leeds, and one frequently hears a wish expressed that it may be repeated for a still longer season.

On November 30, the feature of the Leeds Saturday Orchestral Concert was Mr. John Dunn's masterly playing in Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto, a work which suits both his powerful technique and his artistic idiosyncrasy perfectly. Mozart's G minor Symphony was another feature in an interesting programme. Mr. Julian Clifford conducted. At the Leeds Bohemian Concert, on December 4. Pianoforte Trios by Rachmaninov, Smetana, and John Ireland were played by Messrs. Cohen, Hemingway, and Anderson-Tyrer, and on December 17 a free concert was given under the auspices of the Arts Club in the Leeds Art Gallery, by a party, chiefly amateur, organized by Mr. F. H. Fulford, which gave with much success a Beethoven programme that included the String Trio in C minor (Op. 9), the Quartet in F (Op. 18), and the Quintet in C (Op. 29).

An interesting recital of recent English organ music was given by Mr. Percy Richardson at St. Chad's, Leeds, on November 23, works by Stanford (Sonata 'Eroica,' inspired by the war), Parry, Bairstow, Harvey Grace, John Ireland, and H. Arnold Smith being introduced. The Leeds University recital on December 3 introduced a violoncellist, Mr. Kolni-Balozky, a Russian who has recently joined the teaching-staff of the University, and who, with Mr. Hoggett, played Beethoven's G minor Sonata with artistic feeling.

The Leeds New Choral Society, which fulfils a useful function in training choral singers for the older Societies, gave 'St. Paul' on January 15, under Mr. H. M. Turton's conductorship. The place of orchestra was filled, inadequately, by the Town Hall organ, which is quite incapable of anything approaching orchestral subtleties, though it was judiciously played by Mr. W. Hartley. The choir, though lacking balance, sang with spirit, and the very competent principals were Madame Naomi Bell, Miss Nancy Howe, Mr. George Wood, and Mr. W. Chippindale.

BRADFORD.

The Subscription Concerts on November 22 and on December 13 were given by the Hallé Orchestra. On the former occasion Sir Thomas Beecham conducted Rimsky-Korsakov's Symphonic-poem, 'Antar,' and the Garden Scene from the 'Village Romeo and Juliet' of Delius. The second concert was conducted by Mr. Goossens, jun., who gave a fine performance of Brahms's first Symphony, and Miss Myra Hess was the soloist in Rachmaninov's second Pianoforte Concerto, which she played very charmingly. Ravel's brilliant but patchy 'Symphonie Espagnole,' and Ireland's 'A Forgotten Rite,' were also heard. On November 29 the Festival Choral Society gave a miscellaneous concert under Dr. Bairstow's direction, and on December 16 joined the 'Old' Choral Society in a performance of 'Messiah,' the combined choruses producing a fine effect. On this occasion Mr. Charles Stott conducted. The Bradford Permanent Orchestra's Concert on December 7 was distinguished by Mr. Anderson Tyrer's fine performance in Rachmaninov's C minor Pianoforte Concerto, and works by Cyril Rootham, Weston Nicholl, and Julian Clifford (who conducted) gave native music a material share in the programme.

The Free Chamber Concerts organized by Mr. S. Midgley began a ninth season on January 13. John Ireland's new Violin Sonata in A minor, played by Mr. Dunford and

Mr. Midgley, was the leading feature of the programme, and Mr. E. Wright was the violoncellist in Sterndale Bennett's seldom-heard but pleasant Sonata in A Op. 32). Dvorák's Pianoforte Trio in G minor was begun, but collapsed in the middle, as Mr. Midgley, who had been struggling gamely against a sudden indisposition, had to give up playing. Miss Nellie Judson was the vocalist.

OTHER TOWNS.

The Halifax Chamber Concerts were resumed on November 29, when the Catterall Quartet, with Mr. Rawdon Briggs as second viola, played String Quintets by Mozart (in G minor) and Brahms (in G), together with a couple of short pieces for a string quartet by Mr. Josef Holbrooke—Serenade, 'Belgium, 1915,' and 'Russian Dance, Russia, 1915,' both of which have strong individuality—the former intense in its melancholy, the latter a very spirited movement, the principal subject being treated with great vivacity. At the next concert of the series, on January 17, Mr. Walter Hatton and Mr. Herbert Johnson played in brilliant style Sonatas for violoncello and pianoforte by Brahms and Grieg.

Musical Notes from Abroad.

PARIS.

With peace in sight there is already a revival of artistic life in Paris, and some of our concert-halls are booked in advance for every day until next May. It is not merely that French concerts are increasing in quantity, but there is a very discernible improvement in their quality. There is a tendency amongst the younger musicians, backed by those of standing, to break fresh ground; but, as in other countries, there is at present in France a wave of academism which, under pretext of nationalism, seeks to keep alive the routine of tradition. This was clearly visible at one of the last concerts in the Salle Gaveau, when there was performed a very interesting orchestral piece by Florent Schmitt. As we know, M. Florent Schmitt is not a very young man, being now about forty-five. He is a member of the Conseil du Conservatoire, and has won the Prix de Rome. Thus it will be admitted that he has certain claims to distinction of technique. But M. Florent Schmitt is a very broad-minded man, and full of sympathy for the most recent musical expression. Moreover, like all truly great artists, he is eager always to renew his musical vitality. He is far from being satisfied with re-performing his old musical triumphs, and his new departures have occasionally not met with the full approval of the Junkers of the art. His last work ('Dreams') was hissed by the reactionary section of the audience, while the new blood and ardent spirits were just as vigorously applauding it. As a matter of fact this work of M. Schmitt's is extremely interesting. He has employed the wind instruments in an entirely new manner, giving to them almost the most important part in the score, and so creating an atmosphere of profundity and grandeur in so short a work.

I quote this example, not merely to draw attention to M. Schmitt's last work, but also to demonstrate that the old-time pugnacity and spirit of controversy of French audiences is as keen as ever, and perhaps keener, for during the last four years it has to a great extent been repressed by the exigencies of the war and by the classicism of the music performed. In musical circles we must recognise that the Union Sacrée is now a thing of the past, and, I think, for the best, since it is only from the fighting qualities of the younger artists that we can hope for more original performances.

The Concerts Colonnè-Lamoureux have paid deserved homage to the memory of Claude Debussy in devoting two of their concerts to the works of this composer. Almost the whole of Debussy's orchestral compositions found a place in the programmes of these two concerts, and were received enthusiastically by audiences that filled the hall to overflowing. We hope that this will convince concert-managers that modern music does not always spell commercial ruin, and that it really is not absolutely necessary to wait for an artist's death in order to do him full justice.

Another success of the Concerts-Lamoureux has been the second Symphony, in B flat, of Vincent d'Indy. This powerful work is too seldom performed, for it is certainly one of the best examples of modern symphonic resources in France. At the same concert was performed also the 'Poem of Love and Sea,' by Ernest Chausson, for voice and orchestra. This work I believe is to be performed in London at one of the Royal Philharmonic Society's concerts. I hope that the London audience will approve this effective and touching work to the extent shown by the Paris audience.

At the last Concert Colonne-Lamoureux we have had the pleasure of hearing 'The Poem of the Forest,' by Albert Roussel, which, if I remember rightly, has not been performed in its entirety since 1908. If this work does not reach the magnificent originality of the 'Evocations,' it is distinguished as having first revealed the talent of M. Albert Roussel, who is unanimously regarded as among the pre-eminent figures of French music.

SOCIÉTÉ NATIONALE DE MUSIQUE.

This Society has just given its four hundred and seventeenth concert. Four new works received their first performance on this occasion, among which must be specially noted a suite in C minor for violin, viola, and pianoforte, by Mlle. Marcelle Soulage, which, though not of outstanding originality, is full of charm, and two new pieces for harp by M. Gabriel Faure, entitled 'Impromptu' and 'A lady in the tower.' The latter work especially shows the characteristic cleverness and feeling of the great master, who wears lightly his seventy-five years.

THÉÂTRE MUSICAL DU VIEUX COLOMBIER.

Madame Jane Bathori, whose efforts were interrupted by the alarming developments of the war last spring, has been hard at work all the summer organizing a new musical campaign, into the scope of which she hopes to gather all the young enthusiasts. She now announces a very remarkable season of small musical plays, ancient and modern, which will certainly attract all that particular and ardent public that before the war made the Théâtre du Vieux Colombier so important a factor in the artistic life of Paris. The list of plays contains almost all the young French composers, and even some foreigners, as we notice among them the names of Manuel de Falla and Madame Poldowsky.

The old plays include Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas,' 'La Serva Padrona,' by Pergolesi, and Mozart's 'Sérénade Théâtrale,' and the first of the old French Opéras-comique, 'Le Jeu de Robin et Marion,' by Adam de la Halle, which was so successful during the last season of the Théâtre. Among the modern plays we notice 'Une Education Manquée,' the charming one-act opéra-comique by Chabrier, Debussy's 'La Boîte à Joux,' now arranged for the stage, and 'Aucassin and Nicolette,' by Paul le Flem, a very pleasant setting of the old story. We see also in the prospectus a setting of 'Les Uns et les Autres,' a one-act play by Max d'Olonne (a setting of verses by Paul Verlaine), and 'L'Enfant Prodigue,' the striking parable of André Gide by M. Darius Milhaud. In addition there will be five or six small plays written, composed, and mounted by the most original literary men, composers, and painters of the present generation.

The Théâtre du Vieux Colombier will thus be one of the most interesting artistic centres not only for the French public but for all foreigners who desire to obtain a true idea of French art of to-morrow. We know that the intentions of the managers of this theatre are not specially nationalist, and that therefore it may be hoped that the future programmes will include some of the most original creations of foreign artists.

MILAN.

A NEW OPERA.

The Scala season closed just one week before Christmas. As a season of opera it cannot be said to have been a glaring success, inasmuch as the artists engaged, with one or two exceptions, were not first-rate. However, this is due to circumstances consequent on the war, and no exceptional season was expected.

A novelty in the way of opera centred round a subject of considerable attraction, 'Urania,' which is a lyric legend conceived by Ugo Flares and set to music by Alberto Favara. The libretto of this work is an adaptation from the fable of Perault, 'La belle au bois dormant.' In the first Act, King Folco celebrates the baptism of his daughter Jolé. Fairies, each one bringing the gift of a wish, flutter around the cradle of the royal infant. Unexpectedly another fairy appears on the festal scene. It is Urania, the most powerful of fairies, to whom Folco had omitted an invitation. Urania takes her revenge by predicting that the princess will die by a prick of a spinning-needle. King Folco, under a threat of decapitation, orders that no one shall henceforth spin in the kingdom. But one day—we are now in the second Act—Jolé encounters an old servant who, despite the prohibition, is spinning on the threshold of the palace. She takes up the spinning-needle, pricks herself, and succumbs. King Folco returning at that moment, is confronted with the lifeless body of his daughter. Urania however mitigates her revenge, ordaining that the princess shall sleep for a hundred years, after which time a prince will awaken her to life and love. The hundred years have elapsed as the curtain is lifted on the third Act. Augusto, the expected prince, is chasing a wild animal in a thick wood which has arisen by the magic of Urania around the castle wherein Jolé is asleep. He feels a subtle attraction towards the strange abode. Presently he finds himself in a large room: the beautiful princess is asleep on a couch, around which are grouped the courtiers and suite whom the magic of Urania has also sealed in slumber. Augusto, representative of youth, energy, and love, prints a fervid kiss on the pallid brow of the 'Belle au bois dormant.' Disenchanted, Jolé awakens to the glory of a beautiful day of spring, her bridal day.

The first performance of 'Urania' was given on December 9. The pretty legend immortalised by Perault has not been fully exploited by the librettist, who has limited himself to giving relief only to the most important points, neither adding any new sentimental or fantastic element, nor intensifying the symbolical significances. How different is this treatment from that of Maeterlinck, who intensified the fable by the admixture of familiar folk-lore material. The libretto gives a feeling of scantiness. It is totally lacking in dramatic contrasts, but the ocular satisfaction derived from the fascinating scenic effects mitigates in part this inherent poverty. The composer's field of action is therefore limited, as is so often the case with modern works. The picturesque elements constituted by the king's court, by the apparition of the fairies, by the enchantment of the wood, and by the evoking of the magic castle, are not such as to awaken in the mind of a composer a forceful inspiration that shall have a complete musical success. The composer has shown his worth in the moments which call for a tinge of dramatic effect, such as when Urania, in the presence of Folco and his court, condemns the princess to centennial sleep. A sentimental touch is given in the last Act, in the love-duet between the prince and the princess. But there is a lack of body in the entire opera. The composer has not been able to utilise all the ponderous technical means which modern composition offers, and through which audiences of to-day, taken collectively, would appear only to be moved. Inverseley 'Urania' is rich in graceful melody, and the music is well adapted to the ethereal subject of the work. The composer—who is a professor of composition at the Conservatorium of Palermo—is well known for his studies of musical folk-lore and by the publication of a collection of Sicilian songs 'della terra e del mare' (of land and sea). He shows considerable ability in writing for the orchestra, and always he avoids drowning the voices. The scenery, designed by Grosso, is admirably painted by Rovescalli, Rota, and Santoni. Maestro Tullio Serafin conducted, and directed the work with his customary refinement. Summing up, 'Urania' is a sober, dignified work, and should certainly be heard with much favour.

AN ENGLISH GIRL DANCES AT THE SCALA.

In the annals of the Scala, this is perhaps the first occasion that an English girl has taken the part of first ballerina in opera performances. Such good fortune fell to Miss Marie Robinson, who has studied under Signor Grassi, the Director of the Scala Ballet. She danced her way this season into the sympathies of the Scala audiences in 'Mosé,' 'Aida,' 'Mefistofele,' and 'Urania.' She is quite a young and very graceful girl, and it is hoped that her success will inaugurate a series of triumphs for other artists of Anglo-Saxon birth. In point of racial sympathy, genuinely good British artists would receive a hearty reception in Italy, and especially at Milan, the great throbbing heart of musical Italy. Some American artists have obtained extraordinary success, and there is no reason why English artists should not also achieve prominence.

On January 4 a concert was given at the Conservatorim at Milan by the Comitato Nazionale in honour of the Czecho-Slovacs. It comprised purely Bohemian music. The aim of this concert was to augment the funds necessary for the presentation of a medal, commemorating their participation in the war on the Italian front, to the Czecho-Slovak soldiers. The concert was quite successful. Tenor Simonetta sang some Bohemian songs excellently, Maestro Giacomo Orefice and Professors Enrico Dolo and Giovanni Berti gave a very faithful interpretation of Dvorák's Trio in F minor, and Smetana's Trio in G minor. Several humoresques and pieces for violin and pianoforte were executed in masterly fashion by Orefice and Dolo.

In honour of President Woodrow Wilson on the occasion of his visit to Milan on January 5, a special performance was given at the Scala Theatre. The programme opened at 9.30 with the Italian Royal March. This slashing tune, significant of the high-strung spirited temperament of the Italian nation, released the long restrained enthusiasm. Thundering applause burst forth, intensified by the fact that the President, momentarily yielding to the general excitement, beat time to the March with his ungloved right hand. Following came the American Hymn, in which the President, his wife and daughter joined heartily. Another crash of applause ensued. An excerpt from 'Aida' was then performed—the celebration of the triumphant return of Radames. The huge stage was packed with performers, and the scenic effect was indeed gratifying. As the curtain was lowered a huge bouquet of deep red roses was offered to Mrs. Wilson. The curtain was raised once again, revealing the stage still crammed to overflowing. Amneris was seen holding the Stars and Stripes, and Aida the Italian tricolor. The American Hymn was then sung by the hundreds of voices on the stage, following which came the Hymns of Garibaldi and Mameli, so dear to Italian hearts. Once again the American Hymn was given, and this closed the evening. Thousands of voices, handkerchiefs, hats, and flags saluted the President as he was leaving the box. It was a great never-to-be-forgotten sight.

E. HERBERT-CESARI.

January, 1919.

Miscellaneous.

BRITISH REGIMENTAL MARCHES.

In the Musical Quarterly for October, 1918, there is an interesting article under the above title from the pen of Mr. Ernest Hart (New York). Much of the information is accurate, but there are numerous slips, and it may be well to point out the more flagrant. 'Blue Bonnets over the Border' is described as over two hundred years old. 'The March of the Cameron Men' is ascribed to a Colonel Campbell, one of the clan, shortly after the Crimean War, whereas it was composed by an Irishman, Alexander Lee, long before that period. 'Whistle o'er the lave o't' was not composed by John Bruce; while it is scarcely correct to say that 'Here's to the Maiden of bashful fifteen' dates back 'about a hundred and fifty years.' Surely 'St. Patrick's Day in the Morning' can be traced back more than a hundred and fifty years; it was actually played at the Battle of Fontenoy. Mr. Hart's statement that 'Speed the Plough'—the march of the Suffolk regiment—is 'one of the oldest Marches in the British Army,' and is 'of unknown antiquity,' cannot stand for a moment, as the tune is frankly modern, and was composed by an Irishman, John Moorehead, in 1798, giving a title to the play of 'Speed the Plough.'

A Musical Festival has been organized at Woking. There will be three or four concerts each year. The first takes place on March 15, at 3, in the Great Hall of the County Secondary School, Woking, and will be devoted to the works of Sir Charles Stanford, who will conduct. Mr. Herbert Fryer will play the new Pianoforte Concerto, and Mr. Plunket Greene will sing 'Songs of the Sea.' The Irish Rhapsody No. 1, and 'Verdun,' will also be included. The organizing secretary is Mr. H. Scott-Baker, York Road, Woking.

A very successful chamber concert took place at the Ventnor Literary Institution on December 21, when Schumann's Pianoforte Quintet and a Haydn Quartet were performed by Miss Petherick, Mrs. R. B. Watts, Miss Francis, and Messrs. Longworth and Simmonds. Miss Jessie Holmes sang.

A committee is being formed to consider a memorial to the late Mr. C. J. Bishenden. Friends and pupils desiring particulars should write to Mrs. Bishenden, 2, Great Turnstile, High Holborn, W.C.-1.

The Glasgow Orpheus Choir is offering prizes to the value of £40 for arrangements of Scottish folk-songs and original settings of Scottish subjects. The music should be for mixed voices.

A Training School for Teachers was inaugurated on January 11, the opening address being given by Mr. Stewart Macpherson. The present home of the School is 19, Berners Street, W.-1.

Answers to Correspondents.

'WOGGLES.'—We agree that some relaxation is necessary. Examiners have no use for counterpoint possessing the merely negative virtue of breaking no rules. In our March number we shall publish an article on the subject by Dr. G. J. Bennett.

'YORKSHIRE.'—'How to write for Brass Band,' by C. Vincent (Winthrop Rogers), and 'The Military Band' by Griffiths (Rudall Carte).

'PARSEE SUBSCRIBER.'—We cannot put you on the track of Loder's 'Brooklet' ('Whoin?'). It appears to have been long since out of print.

CONTENTS.

	Page
Modern British Composers: I. Frank Bridge. By Edwin Evans	55
Interludes	61
The Question of Festivals: A Plea for Continuance. By Herman Klein	63
Occasional Notes	67
Church and Organ Music	68
A Winter School of Church Music. By Maurice F. Bell	68
A Few Words about the British Music Society. By A. Eaglefield Hull	71
Music in Ruhleben Camp. By Edgar L. Bainton	72
Reviews	73
Obituary	74
Letters to the Editor	75
Mental Processes in Music	76
Royal Academy of Music	81
Sir Frederick Bridge	81
A Concert-hall at Tokyo	82
British Music in Holland	82
The Musicians' V.M.C.A. Gift	83
Sixty Years Ago	83
London Concerts	83
Retirement of Dr. Varley Roberts	84
Music in the Provinces	84
Musical Notes from Abroad	89
Miscellaneous	91
Answers to Correspondents	91

MUSIC:

'Let your light so shine.' Full Anthem for Four Voices	By J. B. CALKIN	77
--	-----------------	----

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this number:—

'There is a green hill far away.' Anthem for Soprano Solo and Chorus. By Ch. Gounod.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

ARNE, DR.—"Rule, Britannia" (in G). Arranged by W. P. Rivers as a Song for Medium Voice, with ad lib. Chorus for Mixed Voices; or for S.S.A. or T.T.B.B. (No. 1332, Novello's Part-Song Book). 2d.

BROWNING, S.—"In the Palace Garden fair." Song for Contralto or Baritone. 2s.

BUTT, W. D.—Peace Thanksgiving Hymn ("On this day the world rejoices"). 2d.

CALKIN, J. B.—"Let your light so shine." Full Anthem for four voices (No. 912, The Musical Times). 1½d.

DACEY, W. D.—"De Profundis" (Out of the Deep). Anthem for Tenor and Bass Soli and Chorus. 4d.

EVANS, MARY A.—"To America." Song for Contralto or Baritone. 2s.

FOSTER, MYLES B.—"O thou Sword of the Lord." Introit for Chorus, Orchestra, and Organ (No. 231, Novello's Short Anthems). 1½d.

HOLBROOKE, JOSEF—Reels and Strathspeys. 1st Violin, 1s.; 2nd Violin, 1s.; Viola, 1s.; Violoncello, 1s.; Bass, 1s.; Flute, 1s.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 320), contains the following music in both notations:—"My Ship and I" and "The City Child." Unison Songs, by R. HOUSTON MACDONALD. "Oh! Jesu, Master." Hymn and Tune by JAMES LANGRAN. 1½d.

SHORE, S. ROYLE.—Te Deum laudamus. In Latin. The part for Unison Choir and Congregation. 3d.

SOWERBUTTS, J. A.—"When I thy singing next shall hear." Part-song for Four Voices (No. 911, The Musical Times). 1½d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

GAINES, S. R.—"To-day in Bethlehem." Christmas Carol. (12 cents.) 6d.

ORGAN MUSIC

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, MUS. D. CANTAB.

First Set of Twelve Short Easy Pieces	...	...	...	s. d.
Second Set Do. do.	...	...	...	2 0
Largo in E flat	...	...	...	2 6
Minuetto in D	...	...	...	1 0
Fantasia alla Marcia in C	...	...	...	1 6
Toccata in A major	...	...	...	1 6
Two Short Pieces—Larghetto in F major,	}	...	...	1 6
Pastorale in A major
Two Sketches—Adagio in F sharp major,	}	...	...	1 6
Andante in D flat
Introduction, Air with Variations,	}	...	...	2 0
and Finale Fugato in B flat...

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 19 (FIRST POST.)

GENTLEMAN wishes to act as ASSISTANT to ORGANIST of CATHEDRAL or first-rate Church. Good Diploma. Salary not essential. Address, "Gamba," c/o Messrs. Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

SOLO BASS (late Chorister H. M. Chapels Royal. St. James's), just demobilised, desires Appointment. Cathedral or Church. Also post in firm of Publishers as Assistant or in Professional Dept. Address, Arthur Ackerman, 15, Meadway, Gidea Park, Essex.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER, now released from the Army, DESIRES POST. High standard of musical efficiency, and enthusiastic worker. Church of England. Communicant. Manchester, Edinburgh, or London district preferred. Address, Shapley, "Barfield," Fog Lane, Didsbury, Lancs.

MR. SAM GANNER (TENOR VOCALIST).

Concerts, Oratorios, &c. 15, Granville Street, Gateshead-on-Tyne.

ORGANIST (RECITALIST), Competent CHOIRMASTER seeks PROVINCIAL POST. Good organ and teaching essential. A.R.C.O., 112, North Road, Manchester, S.E.

WANTED, Second-hand TECHNIQUER. Good condition. State price. Apply, "J. S.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WANTED to BUY, HALFDAN KJERULF'S ALBUMS OF SONGS, 1 to 4. Preferably Low Voice. Cloth bound. Apply to Mrs. Coney, Batcombe, Bath.

STABAT MATER

SET TO MUSIC

FOR FEMALE VOICES

BY

GIOVANNI BATTISTA PERGOLESI.

ENGLISH VERSION

BY

W. G. ROTHERY.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

WATCH YE, PRAY YE

(WACHET, BETET)

A CANTATA

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

J. S. BACH.

EDITED BY E. H. THORNE.

ENGLISH VERSION BY CLAUDE AVELING.

Price One Shilling.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE MUSICAL TIMES.SCALE OF TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	..	..	0 3 0
Three Lines	..	..	0 3 4
For every additional Line	..	..	0 0 10
One inch (displayed)	..	..	0 10 0
Half a Column	..	..	2 0 0
A Column	..	..	4 0 0
A Page	..	..	7 10 0

Special Pages (Cover, &c. by arrangement.
A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

CANTATAS FOR LENT.

LAST NIGHT AT BETHANY

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY

JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 2s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.

String Parts, 8s. 6d. Wind Parts, 15s. 6d. Full Score, MS.

Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

GETHSEMANE

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY

JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 2s. 6d. String Parts, 10s. 6d. Wind Parts and Full Score, MS.

Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

IN THE DESERT AND IN THE GARDEN

FOR

SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI
AND CHORUS

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND SELECTED BY

VIOLET CRAIGIE HALKETT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

FERRIS TOZER.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 2s. 6d.

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

Parts for Strings and Timpani may be had on hire.

THE CRUCIFIXION

A MEDITATION

ON THE

SACRED PASSION OF THE HOLY REDEEMER

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

W. J. SPARROW-SIMPSON, M.A.

SET TO MUSIC BY

J. STAINER.

Vocal Score, paper cover, One Shilling and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 2s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 9d.

Words only, with Hymn Tunes, 2d. ; Tonic Sol-fa, 2d.

Words, complete, 10s. per 100 ; Words of Hymns, 5s. per 100.

THE DARKEST HOUR

FOR

SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI
AND CHORUS

WITH

HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS SELECTED, AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED, BY

HAROLD MOORE.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 2s. 6d. ; Tonic Sol-fa, 9d.

Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100. String Parts, 6s. 6d.

Wind Parts and Full Score, MS.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST

WORDS SELECTED FROM THE HOLY SCRIPTURES, INTERSPERSED WITH APPROPRIATE HYMNS, BY

W. MAURICE ADAMS

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling.

Tonic Sol-fa Edition, 6d. Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

THE STORY OF CALVARY

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence. Paper boards, 2s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 9d.

Words only, 10s. per 100.

IS IT NOTHING TO YOU?

AN EASY CANTATA

For use during the Season of Lent, and on Good Friday, specially adapted for Country Choirs

BY

E. V. HALL, M.A.

Price Eightpence.

Tonic Sol-fa, 3d. Words, with Music to the Hymns, price 2d.

VIA DOLOROSA

A DEVOTION

FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS

Suitable for the Seasons of Lent and Passiontide

THE WORDS DERIVED MAINLY FROM ANCIENT SOURCES

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

E. CUTHBERT NUNN.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence. Paper boards, 2s. 6d.

Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

OLIVET TO CALVARY

FOR

TENOR AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS
INTERSPERSED WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY
THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 2s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 9d. Words only, 10s. per 100.

String Parts, 11s. Wind Parts, 13s. 6d. Full Score, MS.

AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS

(STABAT MATER)

FOR SOLI, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

ANTON DVOŘÁK.

(Op. 58.)

THE ENGLISH ADAPTATION BY FRED. J. W. CROWE.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 5s. per 100. Vocal Parts, 9d. each.
String Parts, 10s. Wind Parts, &c., 20s Full Score (Latin words) 45s.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

PENITENCE PARDON AND PEACE J. H. MAUNDER.

The Musical Times, 1/1/99: "An admirable example of a commendable class of Church music. Consists of writing of that melodious and effective nature for which the composer is so widely famed."

Musical Opinion, 1/2/98: "A fine Church composition."

Musical News, 15/1/98: "We have no hesitation in cordially recommending it."

Musical Standard, 5/3/98: "Deserves considerable popularity."

Organist and Choirmaster, 15/2/98: "For the music we have nothing but praise."

Birmingham Post, 5/3/98: "The music is of a high artistic value."

Liverpool Courier, 2/8/98: "A work of great merit in every respect."

Manchester Courier, 9/3/98: "It will doubtless be used in many 'quires and places where they sing.'"

Newcastle Leader, 23/2/98: "A well-written work."

Western Morning News, 25/3/98: "A good composition. Striking and original."

Chester Chronicle, 16/4/98: "A beautiful work, very tuneful, and exceedingly effective."

Lichfield Mercury, 12/9/98: "Extremely effective, containing some really beautiful music."

Journal of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, 1/2/98: "A well-written work. We can strongly recommend it."

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 2s. 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words, 2s. per 100.

Band Parts may be hired or purchased from Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb, 34, Percy Street, W.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE Solitudes of the Passion. A PASSIONTIDE CANTATA FOR SOLO VOICES (TENOR AND BARITONE) AND CHORUS WITH HYMNS FOR CHOIR AND CONGREGATION.

THE WORDS SELECTED BY

E. A. WELCH,

Vicar of Wakefield.

THE MUSIC BY

ALBERT HAM

(Organist and Director of the Choir, St. James Cathedral, Toronto, Canada).

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

The Musical Times says:—

"A useful addition to the store of choral works for use in Lent and Passiontide is Dr. Albert Ham's Cantata, 'The Solitudes of the Passion.'"

"The words are Biblical and well selected."

"The music is devotional and very singable."

Other Press Notices:—"The beautifully arranged words have been treated with fine devotional feeling."

"The score reveals the gifted musician, one well versed in the traditions of the Church."

"The Tenor Solo, 'Who did no sin,' is pure inspiration."

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND ELEMENTARY HARMONY
(In the Press.)

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE LORD'S PRAYER

COMPOSED BY

BORTNIANSKY

Arranged for use in St. Margaret's, Westminster,

BY

EDWIN STEPHENSON.

Price 4d. net.

J. & W. CHESTER, 11 Great Marlborough Street, London, W.

NEW ANTHEMS, ETC.,

By CALEB SIMPER.

*REJOICE AND BE GLAD. New Easter 4d.

Fine Choruses. Rolling Passages. Grand Bass Solo.

*AWAKE! ARISE. New Easter. 4th Edition 4d.

Full of melody and effect. Vigorous Choruses.

*O WELCOME PEACE. New. 3rd Edition 4d.

For Peace Thanksgiving Services. A Vicar says: "I am sure it will appeal to my people." A Choirmaster writes:

"Simply delightful."

GOD IS OUR REFUGE. Occupies about 1 hour 8d.

Intensely expressive. Solos for the different voices, with Choruses of inspiring and stirring effect.

*FIVE CHANT TE DEUMS (for Victory and Peace) 3d.

THREE QUADRUPLES AND TWO SETS OF THREE DOUBLES, COMPLETE.

Those marked * can also be had in Tonic Sol-fa.

London: WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.-1.

POPULAR EASTER ANTHEMS

COMPOSED BY EDWYN A. CLARE.

Not difficult, but very interesting and effective.

*HALLELUJAH? KING OF KINGS 28th 1000 3d.

*HE IS RISEN. A great favourite 36th 1000 3d.

*CHRIST SHALL GIVE THEE LIGHT 29th 1000 3d.

*THANKS BE TO GOD (with a fine Bass Solo) 24th 1000 4d.

*WHY SEEK YE THE LIVING AMONG THE DEAD 28th 1000 3d.

*NOW IS CHRIST RISEN 17th 1000 3d.

*HALLELUJAH! CHRIST IS RISEN 26th 1000 3d.

*THE BLESSING OF PEACE. New 4th 1000 3d.

For Peace Thanksgiving Services. Expressive Solo for Soprano or Tenor; soft and loud Choruses; interesting and imitative.

*THE LORD REIGNETH (Festival) 18th 1000 3d.

PRaise THE LORD, O JERUSALEM (Festival) 44th 1000 3d.

FAVOURITE MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN D 28th 1000 4d.

Full of flowing melody. Sung at a Choral Festival.

*BENEDICTUS IN D. Quadruple Chant 8th 1000 2d.

Varied Acc. for Boys' verses and Men's or Unison verses.

*NEW BENEDICTUS IN B FLAT 5th 1000 2d.

Very effective changes. No monotony.

Those marked * are also issued in Tonic Sol-fa.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.-1.

New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

SUCCESSFUL PERFORMANCES of this Devotional work have taken place at the University Church, Oxford; St. Philip and James, Oxford; the Abbey Church, Bath; St. Mary's, Liverpool; the Parish Church, Bradford, Nuneaton, Southsea, Banbury, Chipping Norton, Kidderminster, Biggleswade, Kettering, Oldham, Tackley, Blackburn, Alderbury; St. Paul's, Weston-super-Mare, Bideford, Oldham, (Australia), &c.

VIA CRUCIS

(THE WAY OF THE CROSS)

A SACRED CANTATA

DEPICTING THE THREE LAST SCENES OF

THE SAVIOUR'S LIFE ON EARTH.

FOR

TWO SOLO VOICES (TENOR AND BASS) AND CHORUS,

Interspersed with Hymns to be sung by the Choir and Congregation.

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM THE HOLY SCRIPTURES

AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

FREDERICK ILIFFE, M.A.,

Mus. Doc., Oxon.; Organist to the University of Oxford.

PRICE:

Vocal Score, 2s. net. Tonic Sol-fa Edition, 1s. 4d. net.

Words only, complete, for the use of Congregation, 1½d. each,

or 11s. 3d. per 100.

Words complete, with addition of Hymn Tunes, 3d. each.

or 22s. 6d. per 100.

Orchestral Parts, for Strings, Two Horns, Two Trumpets, and Drums may be hired of the Publishers.

London: WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.-1
Chicago, U.S.A.: CLAYTON F. SUMMY CO., 64, E. Van Buren St.

ELEVENTH THOUSAND.

BENEDICITE OMNIA OPERA, set to music by W. H. Holloway, L. Mus., T.C.L. Price 2d.

"A varied and tuneful setting."—Manchester City News.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Manchester: HIME AND ADDISON.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALSE ARABESQUE

FOR
PIANOFORTE SOLO

COMPOSED BY
PERCY E. FLETCHER.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

REFLECTIONS

FOR
PIANOFORTE SOLO
(AFTER VERSES FROM LONGFELLOW)

BY
PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALSE IMPROMPTU

FOR
PIANOFORTE SOLO

COMPOSED BY
ALFRED HOLLINS.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ERNEST AUSTIN

PIANO MUSIC

PRELUDES

Op. 56.

No. 1. F major	} First Set.	No. 4. A $\flat$ major	} Second Set.
„ 2. D major		„ 5. C minor
„ 3. D minor		„ 6. A $\flat$ major

Each Set, Two Shillings net.
(Moderately Difficult.)

MUSIC POEM, No. 2.

Op. 28.

Two Shillings net.
(Difficult.)

TO MUSIC

SEVEN POEMS FOR PIANO,
Two Shillings and Sixpence net.
(Difficult.)

RONDEL

TONE-STANZA No. 15.

One Shilling and Sixpence net.
(Moderately Difficult.)

J. H. LARWAY,

14, WELLS STREET, OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

THE

ELEMENTS OF PIANOFORTE TECHNIQUE ARRANGED UPON A RHYTHMIC BASIS

BY

DR. R. H. BELLAIRS.

Strongly recommended by the highest authorities.
More work can be done with Dr. Bellairs' Method than with any other.
Eliminates Mechanical Drudgery.
Interests the pupil from the very beginning.
List of companion works and testimonials on receipt of a post-card.

Price 2s. 6d. net. Of all Musicsellers.

ENOCH & SONS, LONDON.

Enoch House, 58, Great Marlborough Street, W.1.

"THE FRINGES OF THE FLEET."

EDWARD ELGAR. RUDYARD KIPLING.

THESE FOUR POPULAR SONGS ARE NOW ISSUED FOR

S.A.T.B., octavo, each 1s. net.

Of all Musicsellers.

ENOCH & SONS,

ENOCH HOUSE, 58, GT. MARLBOROUGH ST., W.-1.

THE CROWN OF EMPIRE

FOR CHORUS

With Accompaniment for Pianoforte or Orchestra.

THE WORDS BY

FREDERICK G. SCOTT,
1st Canadian Division, B.E.F.

THE MUSIC BY

EATON FANING.

Price Threepence.

Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

An Anthem for Thanksgiving Services and General Use.

PSALM LXVII., SET TO MUSIC BY
W. R. ALPE.

Musical News.—"Thoroughly well written."

Musical Opinion.—"Very effective."

Price Threepence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

EIGHT EASY MELODIES

FOR YOUNG BEGINNERS

FOR

VIOLIN

With Pianoforte Accompaniment

COMPOSED BY

ERNEST NEWTON.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

The pieces are suitable for Solo or Ensemble playing.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CHAPPELL & CO'S STANDARD OPERATIC AND CHORAL WORKS.

Messrs. CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., beg to draw the attention of Choral Societies, &c., to the undermentioned Standard Works, which will be in great demand with the resumption of performances by Choral and Dramatic Societies :—

CONCERT VERSION

OF MERRIE ENGLAND

COMIC OPERA

By EDWARD GERMAN.

SCOTTISH RHAPSODY.

THE WEDDING OF SHON MACLEAN

FOR CHORUS, SOLI, AND ORCHESTRA

By HUBERT BATH.*FAUSTBy CH. GOUNOD.

CONCERT VERSION

TOM JONES

COMIC OPERA

By EDWARD GERMAN.

CONCERT SELECTION

OF
A PRINCESS OF KENSINGTON

COMIC OPERA

By EDWARD GERMAN.*LOOK AT THE CLOCKBy HUBERT BATH.THE MARTYR OF ANTIOCHBy ARTHUR SULLIVAN.VOCAL SCORE, CHORUSES AND ORCHESTRAL PARTS.

FULL PARTICULARS WILL BE SENT ON APPLICATION TO—

CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

THE MONTHS

TWELVE SKETCHES FOR THE PIANOFORTE

BY
FREDERIC H. COWEN

IN FOUR BOOKS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

CONTENTS :—

BOOK 1.

January. Lullaby for the New Year.
February. (St. Valentine) Flirtations.
March. Boreas.

BOOK 2.

April. In Springtime.
May. Italian Serenade.
June. Birds.

BOOK 3.

July. Butterflies.
August. Mid-day Réverie.
September. Harvest Hymn.

BOOK 4.

October. Autumn Evening Song.
November. Civic Procession in the Olden Time.
December. Christmas Morn.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA BY THE COMPOSER.

No. 2.	February.	String Parts (5)	4s. od.	Wind Parts, &c.	2s. 9d.
No. 5.	May.	String Parts (5)	1s. 6d.	Wind Parts, &c.	1s. 6d.
No. 6.	June.	String Parts (4)	1s. od.	Wind Parts, &c.	2s. 6d.
No. 9.	September.	String Parts (5)	2s. 6d.	Wind Parts, &c.	5s. od.
No. 12.	December.	String Parts (5)	2s. 3d.	Wind Parts, &c.	4s. 6d.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

There is a green hill far away

COMPOSED BY

CH. GOUNOD.

- | | | |
|--|--|--|
| 78. Above all praise Mendelssohn 12d. | 18. In this was manifested H. Lloyd 3d. | 178. O ye priests of the Lord Hird 12d. |
| 58. Almighty and everlasting Smith 12d. | 155. Is it nothing to you Ouseley 12d. | 39. O ye that love the Lord Elliott 12d. |
| 145. Ditto A. M. Richardson 12d. | 206. It is high time Williams 12d. | 44. Ditto S. Coleridge-Taylor 12d. |
| 122. Almighty God, Who hast Ford 12d. | 26. It is of the Lord's mercies Thorne 12d. | 217. Our Father which art Phillips 12d. |
| 20. And I saw another Angel Stanford 2d. | 56. Jesu, Saviour, I am Thine Steane 12d. | 7. Our soul on God G. M. Garrett 12d. |
| 24. Arise, O Jerusalem Oliver King 12d. | 46. Jesu, Who from Thy F. C. Wood 3d. | 45. Ponder my words, O Lord Culley 12d. |
| 30. Arise, O Lord G. F. Cobb 12d. | 48. Jesu, Word of God J. White 12d. | 3. Praised be the Lord daily Calkin 12d. |
| 126. Ditto Hervey 12d. | 64. Jesus said unto the people Stainer 12d. | 105. Prevent us, O Lord A. H. Brewer 12d. |
| 168. Arise, ye people W. Hayes 12d. | 186. Judge me, O God Ouseley 12d. | 14. Rejoice greatly Woodward 12d. |
| 60. Ave Maria Arcadelt 12d. | 208. Judge nothing before Williams 12d. | 175. Rejoice in the Lord Calkin 12d. |
| 48. Ave Verum J. White 12d. | 61. Lead me, Lord S. S. Wesley 12d. | 187. Ditto Reay 12d. |
| 90. Awake up, my glory F. Iliffe 12d. | 116. Let my prayer beseech forth Martin 12d. | 76. Rejoice, O ye people Mendelssohn 12d. |
| 177. Be not Thou far from me Hird 12d. | 166. Ditto C. Macpherson 12d. | 144. Rejoice ye with Jerusalem King 12d. |
| 193. Behold, God is my Stainer 12d. | 118. Let my prayer come up Purcell 12d. | 200. Remember, Lord Verrinder 12d. |
| 165. Behold, O God C. Macpherson 12d. | 80. Let our hearts be Mendelssohn 12d. | 153. Rend your heart Ouseley 12d. |
| 117. Ditto G. C. Martin 2d. | 139. Let the wicked forsake his way 12d. | 226. Save us, O Lord Hugh Blair 12d. |
| 195. Behold the Lord Thorne 12d. | 32. Let the words of my mouth Blair 12d. | 129. Seek the Lord H. Elliott Button 12d. |
| 30. Beloved, if God so loved Barnby 12d. | 117. Let Thy hand be G. C. Martin 2d. | 201. Seek ye the Lord Verrinder 12d. |
| 35. Beloved, let us love G. F. Cobb 12d. | 65. Let us come boldly C. H. Lloyd 12d. | 49. Shew me Thy ways J. V. Roberts 3d. |
| 10. Beloved, now are we E. H. Thorne 12d. | 209. Let your moderation Williams 12d. | 115. Sing to the Lord Tye 12d. |
| 204. Beside Thy cradle J. S. Bach 12d. | 137. Lift up the everlasting gates Tye 12d. | 220. Spirit of mercy H. A. Chambers 12d. |
| 160. Blessed are they S. S. Wesley 12d. | 234. Lighten our darkness J. Booth 12d. | 5. Teach me Thy way Gladstone 12d. |
| 185. Blessed be the Lord Ouseley 12d. | 191. Like as the hart Williams 12d. | 55. The Angel of the Lord Gray 12d. |
| 125. Blessed be Thou, O Lord Lloyd 2d. | 261. Lo! from the hills Elliott Button 12d. | 190. The Gentiles shall come Reay 12d. |
| 143. Blessed is He A. H. Brewer 12d. | 120. Lo, the day of rest Elliot Button 12d. | 4. The great day of the Lord Martin 12d. |
| 9. Ditto B. Luard-Selby 12d. | 19. Lo, the Winter is past H. Gadsby 3d. | 216. The Harvest truly Pearson 2d. |
| 199. Ditto Verrinder 12d. | 142. Lord God Almighty, hear Verdonck 12d. | 111. The Heavenly Word Williams 3d. |
| 26. Blessed is the man Oliver King 12d. | 93. Lord, I call upon Thee F. Iliffe 12d. | 150. The joy of our heart Foster 12d. |
| 194. Ditto J. Stainer 12d. | 140. Lord, in thankful love Schubert 12d. | 202. The Light hath shined Verrinder 12d. |
| 207. Blessed Lord C. Lee Williams 12d. | 79. Lord, on our offences Mendelssohn 12d. | 181. The Lord hath been Macfarren 12d. |
| 98. Bread of the world John E. West 12d. | 128. Lord, we beseech Thee Batten 12d. | 198. The Lord hath brought us Thorne 12d. |
| 17. Break forth J. S. Bach 12d. | 149. Lord, we pray Thee Chambers 12d. | 27. The Lord is in His Holy Elliott 12d. |
| 59. Christ is not entered E. Faning 12d. | 154. Love not the world Ouseley 12d. | 197. Ditto E. H. Thorne 12d. |
| 102. Come, let us worship Palestrina 12d. | 62. Master, what shall I do Bowes 12d. | 96. The Lord is King F. Iliffe 12d. |
| 40. Ditto M. Kingston 12d. | 100. Mercy and truth A. Sullivan 2d. | 88. The Lord is high Cummings 12d. |
| 173. Come, ye blessed Barnby 12d. | 176. Mine eyes are ever Hamilton 12d. | 31. The Lord is the True God Barnby 3d. |
| 108. Deliver me, O Lord J. Stainer 12d. | 212. Mock not God's Name C. Tye 12d. | 50. The Lord opened the doors F. C. Woods 12d. |
| 127. Deliver us, O Lord Batten 12d. | 94. My song shall be of mercy F. Iliffe 12d. | 83. The Lord redeemeth J. B. Calkin 12d. |
| 164. Except the Lord F. H. Cowen 12d. | 73. O Day-spring J. Stainer 12d. | 191. The Love of God Reay 12d. |
| 135. Father of all Tye 12d. | 148. O do well unto Thy servant West 12d. | 184. The pains of hell Monk 12d. |
| 25. For it became Him Oliver King 12d. | 75. O Emmanuel J. Stainer 12d. | 52. The path of the just J. V. Roberts 12d. |
| 81. For our offences Mendelssohn 12d. | 146. O God, O Firmament Richardson 12d. | 101. The Peace of God J. Rheinberger 12d. |
| 170. Forth from the dark Hooke 12d. | 136. O God of Bethel Tye 12d. | 12. The pillars of the earth Tours 12d. |
| 91. Fret not thyself F. Iliffe 12d. | 162. O God, our help C. Lee Williams 12d. | 134. The righteous souls Skeats 12d. |
| 60. Give ear unto my prayer Arcadelt 12d. | 23. O God, Whose nature A. Gray 12d. | 41. The Sacrifices of God H. Blair 12d. |
| 114. Give rest, O Christ Arranged 12d. | 214. O God, Whose nature A. Gray 12d. | 152. The Salvation of the Ouseley 12d. |
| 38. God so loved the world Kingston 12d. | 119. O harken Thou A. Sullivan 12d. | 34. Ditto Vincent 12d. |
| 1. God, Who is rich in mercy Garrett 12d. | 72. O Key of David J. Stainer 12d. | 160. The Souls of the righteous Hall 12d. |
| 227. Good King Wenceslas (arr.) Ross 2d. | 74. O King and Desire J. Stainer 12d. | 87. The steps of a good man F. Cambridge 3d. |
| 223. Grant, O Lord J. Booth 12d. | 70. O Lord and Ruler J. Stainer 12d. | 3d. There is a green hill Gounod 3d. |
| 11. Grant, we beseech Thee J. Booth 12d. | 53. O Lord, correct me J. Coward 12d. | 66. These are they which J. Goss 12d. |
| 205. Ditto C. Lee Williams 12d. | 67. O Lord, give ear W. H. Cummings 2d. | 180. These have left a name Hook 12d. |
| 141. Hark, hark my soul Oliver King 12d. | 133. O Lord, give Thy Holy Tallis 12d. | 192. This is the day Reay 12d. |
| 147. Haste Thee, O God J. Hopkins 12d. | 113. O Lord, grant the King Child 2d. | 211. Thou didst turn Thy face Attwood 12d. |
| 47. Have mercy upon me J. White 12d. | 138. O Lord, increase my faith Gibbons 12d. | 77. Thou, Lord, our Mendelssohn 12d. |
| 210. He that soweth J. B. Calkin 12d. | 159. O Lord, my God C. Lee Williams 2d. | 28. Thou shalt shew me The A. Gray 12d. |
| 130. Hide me under the shadow West 12d. | 13. O Lord, my trust King Hall 12d. | 29. To Thee do I lift up my soul Hall 12d. |
| 123. Hide not Thou Thy Face Farrart 12d. | 15. O Lord, rebuke me not H. Lahee 12d. | 16. Try me, O God C. Wood 12d. |
| 213. Ho! ye that thirst C. Tye 12d. | 132. O Lord, we beseech Thee Shaw 2d. | 99. Turn Thee again A. Sullivan 12d. |
| 107. Holy, Holy, Holy F. C. Calkin 12d. | 57. O Lord, Who hast Iggulden 12d. | 158. Turn Thy face C. Lee Williams 2d. |
| 124. How dreadful is this place Monk 12d. | 188. O Lord, who sleepest Thou Reay 12d. | 51. Watch ye and pray G. R. Vicars 2d. |
| 163. How still and peaceful C. Tye 12d. | 33. O most merciful J. W. Elliott 12d. | 172. We wait for Thy loving Arms 12d. |
| 111. I am not worthy C. Lee Williams 3d. | 225. Ditto E. Bullock 12d. | 182. Ditto Macfarren 12d. |
| 170. I am Thine, O save me Wesley 12d. | 89. O Perfect Love H. Elliott Button 12d. | 2. When my soul fainted J. F. Bridge 12d. |
| 82. I heard a Voice G. M. Garrett 12d. | 112. O praise God C. L. Naylor 2d. | 63. Wherewithall shall Alcock 12d. |
| 86. Ditto A. Gray 12d. | 43. O praise the Lord, all ye Barnby 12d. | 183. While all things were Macfarren 12d. |
| 157. Ditto C. V. Stanford 12d. | 174. O praise the Lord F. Champneys 12d. | 106. While we have time H. W. Parker 3d. |
| 92. I look for the Lord F. Iliffe 12d. | 203. O Root of Jesse J. Stainer 12d. | 6. Who are we, O Lord C. H. Lloyd 12d. |
| 54. I will arise Ch. Wood 12d. | 71. O Saving Victim J. Stainer 12d. | 68. Whom have I in heaven Elvey 2d. |
| 42. I will go forth H. Blair 12d. | 104. Ditto A. W. Wilson 12d. | 151. Ditto Ouseley 2d. |
| 189. I will go to the altar Reay 12d. | 171. O send out Thy light Arms 12d. | 110. Whom the Lord C. Macpherson 3d. |
| 131. I will go unto the altar H. Gadsby 2d. | 84. O Wisdom J. B. Calkin 12d. | 121. Why art thou so heavy Gibbons 12d. |
| 156. I will lay me down Williams 12d. | 69. O worship the Lord F. Iliffe 12d. | 109. Why art thou so C. Macpherson 2d. |
| 8. I will magnify Thee Luard-Selby 12d. | 95. O worship the Lord F. Iliffe 12d. | 221. With all Thy Hosts A. W. Wilson 12d. |
| 37. I will wash my hands A. D. Culley 12d. | 196. Ditto E. H. Thorne 12d. | 97. Worship and praise F. Iliffe 12d. |
| 85. If any man sin Thos. Adams 12d. | | |
| 103. Ditto H. Hiles 12d. | | |
| 21. If thou shalt confess C. V. Stanford 2d. | | |
| 215. In life's gay morn C. Tye 12d. | | |

(To be continued.)

" There is a green hill far away.

ANTHEM FOR SOPRANO SOLO AND CHORUS.

Words by MRS. C. F. ALEXANDER.

Composed by CH. GOUNOD.

(Arranged as an Anthem with Organ Accompaniment by JOHN E. WEST.)

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Andante moderato. ♩ = 80.

Organ accompaniment for the first system. The score is in G major, 4/4 time. The right hand (treble clef) features a melody with eighth and sixteenth notes, while the left hand (bass clef) provides a harmonic accompaniment with chords and single notes. Pedal points are indicated for the 16' and 8' stops, transitioning to the Great (Gt.) organ. Dynamics include piano (p) and crescendo (cres.).

p Gt. 8 ft.
(Sw. coupled.)

16 & 8 ft., Gt. to Ped.

cres.

Ch. 8 ft.

Sw. dim.

Gt. to Ped. in.

SOPRANO SOLO.

Vocal parts for Soprano Solo and Chorus. The Soprano Solo part begins with a mezzo-piano (mp) dynamic. The lyrics are: "There is a green hill far a - way, With-out a ci - ty wall, Where the dear Lord was cru - ci - fied, . . Who died to save us all." The Chorus enters with a piano (p) dynamic. The organ accompaniment continues with a crescendo (cres.) and then a diminuendo (dim.).

mp

There is a green hill far a - way, With-out a ci - ty wall,

Sw. Ch.

(Sw.)

Where the dear Lord was cru - ci - fied, . . Who died to save us all.

cres. dim.

THERE IS A GREEN HILL FAR AWAY.

cres. dim.

We may not know, we can-not tell What pains He had to bear,

Sw. with Oboe. Ch. 8 & 4 ft. dim.

Gt. Sw. Ped.

cres. dim.

But we be-lieve it was for us He hung and suffer'd there. He

Sw. Ch. dim.

Gt. Sw. Ped.

cres. dim.

died that we might be forgiven, He died to make us good,

Sw. dim.

Gt. Ped.

cres. f

That we might go at last to Heaven, . . Saved by His pre-cious Blood.

add to Sw. poco rit. dim. p Gt. (Sw. coupled.)

Gt. to Ped.

a tempo.
CHORUS. SOPRANO.

THERE IS A GREEN HILL FAR AWAY.

There was no o - ther good e - nough . . To pay the price of

ALTO.

There was no o - ther good e - nough . . To pay the price of

TENOR.

There was no o - ther good e - nough . . To pay the price of

BASS.

There was no o - ther good e - nough . . To pay the price of a tempo.

cres.
sin ; He on - ly could un - lock the gate Of

cres.
sin ; He on - ly could an - lock the gate Of

cres.
sin ; He on - ly could un - lock the gate Of

cres.
sin ; He on - ly could un - lock the gate Of Solo, molto espress.

Heaven, and let us in. Oh, dear - ly, dear -

Heaven, and let us in.

Heaven, and let us in.

Heaven, and let us in.

Sw. 3

Gt. to Ped. in. p

THERE IS A GREEN HILL FAR AWAY.

ly has He loved, . . . And we must love Him too, p And FULL.

And trust in p And p And trust . . . in His re-deeming Blood, and cres. trust . . . in His re-

His re-deem-ing Blood, and trust in His re-trust, . . . and trust . . . in His re-deem-ing. His re-trust . . . in His re-deeming Blood, and trust . . . in His redeem-ing Blood, And try His works to do, and try His works to deem-ing Blood. And try His works to do, and try His works . . . to deem-ing Blood, And try His works to do, and try His works to deem-ing Blood, And try His works to do, and try His works to Sw. dim. p (Sw. to Gt. in.)

Gt. to Ped. in.

THERE IS A GREEN HILL FAR AWAY.

do, We must love Him

do, We must love Him

do, We must love Him

do, We must love Him

Gt.

p Sw.

Detailed description: This block contains the first system of a musical score. It features four vocal staves (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and a piano accompaniment. The vocal parts begin with a whole note 'do,' followed by a half rest, and then sing 'We must love Him' in a half note. The piano accompaniment consists of a guitar part with eighth-note chords and a string part with a half note. Dynamics include p (piano) and p Sw. (piano swell).

too, we must love Him too, And too, we must love Him too, And

too, we must love Him too, And too, we must love Him too, And try His

Gt.

Gt.

Sw.

Ped.

Ped.

Detailed description: This block contains the second system of the musical score. The vocal parts continue with 'too, we must love Him too, And' and 'And try His'. The piano accompaniment continues with the guitar part and a string part. Dynamics include Gt. (guitar), Sw. (swell), and Ped. (pedal).

THERE IS A GREEN HILL FAR AWAY.

The musical score is arranged in two systems. The first system contains four vocal staves, each with a treble clef and a key signature of one flat (B-flat). The lyrics are: "try His works to do.". Each vocal line begins with a dim. (diminuendo) marking. The second system contains a piano accompaniment for the first system, with a treble and bass clef. It includes a dim. marking and a Gt. (Guitar) section with arpeggiated chords. The third system contains a piano accompaniment for the second system, with a treble and bass clef. It includes a p Sw. roll. (piano Swell roll) marking and a Gt. section with arpeggiated chords.

NOVELLO'S MUSIC for MILITARY BAND

ARRANGED BY

DAN GODFREY, GEORGE MILLER, MUS. BAC.

AND OTHERS.

The majority of the following pieces are so arranged that they can be played by a SMALL Military Band (13 to 16 performers).

	s. d.
BENDALL, WILFRED.—PAS SEUL	5 0
BREWER A. H.—AUF WIEDERSEHEN	5 0
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S.—FOUR CHARACTERISTIC WALTZES	15 0
— ONAWAY, AWAKE BELOVED (Cornet or Euphonium Solo)	5 0
COWEN, F. H.—FOUR ENGLISH DANCES (in the Olden Style)	15 0
— CORONATION MARCH	10 6
— MINUET D'AMOUR (from "Suite of Old English Dances"—Second Set)	5 0
CRISER, WILLIAM.—WEDDING MARCH	3 6
ELGAR, EDWARD.—CHANSON DE MATIN	3 6
— CHANSON DE NUIT	3 6
— FOLLOW THE COLOURS (Marching Song for Soldiers)	3 6
— IMPERIAL MARCH	9 0
— MAZURKA	5 0
— SERENADE MAURESQUE	5 0
— CONTRASTS (The Gavotte, A.D. 1700 and 1900)	5 0
— MEDITATION ("Light of Life")	5 0
— PLEADING	3 6
— WAND OF YOUTH. Second Suite	15 0
ELVEY, G. J.—FESTAL MARCH	5 0
FANING, EATON.—"THE QUEEN'S SONG"	7 6
— SONG OF THE VIKINGS	5 0
FLETCHER, PERCY E.—THE TOY SOLDIERS' MARCH	7 6
— VALSE LYRIQUE ("The Smile of Spring")	5 0
FORD, ERNEST.—GRAND VALSE ("Faust" Ballet)	10 6
— SCENE BACCHANALE ("Faust" Ballet)	15 0
GERMAN, EDWARD.—BOURREE AND GIGUE ("Much Ado about Nothing")	12 0
— CORONATION MARCH ("Henry VIII.")	7 6
— CORONATION MARCH AND HYMN	7 6
— GIPSY SUITE (Four Characteristic Dances)	15 0
— HARVEST DANCE (from "The Seasons")	10 0
— MASQUE (Three Dances from "As you like it" Music)	15 0
— OVERTURE TO "RICHARD III."	12 0
— THREE DANCES ("Henry VIII.")	15 0
— WELSH RHAPSODY	15 0
GLINKA.—POLONAISE ("Life for the Czar")	12 0
GOUNOD.—JUDEX ("Mors et Vita")	3 0
— Ditto. (For Brass Band)	2 0
— "MORS ET VITA" (Selection)	15 0
— MARCHE SOLENNELLE	7 6
— SIX SACRED PIECES	10 5
— "THE REDEMPTION" (Selection)	15 0
HAYNES, BATTISON.—WESTWOOD GAVOTTE	5 0
HERVEY, ARTHUR.—"ON THE MARCH"	9 0
HIGGS, H. M.—"OUR QUEEN" (Quick March)	5 0
HOFMANN, H.—"KIRMESS" (Rustic Pictures). Book I.	15 0
— "KIRMESS" (Rustic Pictures). Book II.	15 0
LEMARE, EDWIN H.—ANDANTINO IN D FLAT	3 6
LLOYD, C. H.—AN ETON MEMORIAL MARCH	7 6
MACKENZIE, A. C.—"BENEDICTUS" (from "Six Pieces for Violin"—Revised Edition)	5 0
— BALLET MUSIC ("Colomba")	15 0
— COURANTE ("Ravenswood")	12 0
— FUNERAL MARCH ("The Story of Sayid")	3 0
— LA SAVANNAH (Air de Ballet)	7 6
— "THE EMPIRE FLAG"	5 0
MACPHERSON STEWART.—ORCHESTRAL BALLAD	15 0
MILLER, GEORGE.—SOLEMN MARCH	3 6
MOLIQUE.—MARCH ("Abraham")	7 6
MORLEY, CH.—EMPEROR GAVOTTE ("Cornflower")	2 6
OUSELEY.—March ("St. Polycarp")	7 6
POPULAR PART-SONGS	7 6
RAHEAU.—GAVOTTE	4 6
ROECKEL, J. L.—"GRACEFUL DANCE"	7 6
SIX HYMN TUNES (composed for Commemorations of Queen Victoria's Long Reign)	4 6
SMART, HENRY.—FESTIVE MARCH IN D	7 6
SPINDLER, FRITZ.—"HUSARENRIIT"	7 6
SPOHR.—"CALVARY" (Selection)	7 6
SULLIVAN, A.—"IN MEMORIAM" OVERTURE	10 0
— ONWARD, CHRISTIAN SOLDIERS	2 6
— Ditto (For Brass Band)	2 6
THREE SACRED PIECES, viz.:—	7 6
"Blessed be the God and Father"—S. S. WESLEY.
"O Gadsome Light" ("Golden Legend")—A. S. SULLIVAN.
March ("Occasional Oratorio")—HANDEL.
TSCHAIKOWSKY.—MARCHE MILITAIRE	15 0
WAREING, H. W.—SUMMERGOLD GAVOTTE	7 6
WENDT, TH.—AIR DE BALLET WITH INTERMEZZO	7 6
WEST, JOHN E.—MAYPOLE DANCE	7 6
— COMMEMORATION MARCH	9 0
ZIMMERMANN, AGNES.—MARCH	7 6
SIX CLASSICAL PIECES FOR SMALL MILITARY BAND	3 0
THE MILITARY CHURCH PARADE SERVICE BOOK	1 0

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

FOUNDED IN 1844.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH.

No. 913.—Vol. 60.

Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage.

MARCH 1, 1919.

Price 4d.; Postage 1½d.

Annual Subscription, Post-free, 5s.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus.D.

SATURDAY, MARCH 1, AT 2.30 P.M.

A HYMN OF PRAISE - MENDELSSOHN.

PRECEDED BY

REQUIEM MASS - MOZART.

MISS AGNES NICHOLLS
MISS FLORENCE MELLORS
MISS GERTRUDE HIGGS
MR. WALTER HYDE
MR. GRAHAM SMART

SATURDAY, MARCH 29, AT 2.30 P.M.

HIAWATHA - COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

MISS RUTH VINCENT.
MR. BEN DAVIES.

CAPTAIN HERBERT HEYNER.

Full Chorus and Orchestra.

At the Organ: MR. H. L. BALFOUR.

Prices: Stalls, 8s. 6d.; Arena, 7s.; Balcony, 4s. 9d. and 3s.;
Gallery, 1s. 3d.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: SIR A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

Fortnightly Concerts, March 1st and 15th, at 3.

Chamber Concert, March 5th, at 3.

Orchestral Concert, at Queen's Hall, March 27th, at 3.

Edward and Anne Seguin Scholarship for Sopranos. Last day for Entry, March 27th.

Prospectus can be obtained on application.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams—"Initiative, Southkens," Tel. phone—"1160, Western"
London.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Director: PROFESSOR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc.

Honorary Secretary: M. MUIR MACKENZIE, Esq.

The MIDSUMMER TERM commences on Monday, April 28th,
1919. Entrance Examination, April 24th.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age.
Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from The Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND
(Founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c.,
may be had on application.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Sec.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD OF THE R.A.M. AND R.C.M. FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A)

Examinations in Theory held in March and November at all Centres.
In Practical Subjects in March-April at all Centres, and in the London
district and certain Provincial Centres in November-December also.
Entries for the November-December Examinations close Wednesday,
October 15th, 1919.

SCHOOL EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., June-July,
October-November, and March-April. Entries for the June-July
Examinations close Wednesday, May 7th (Irish Entries, April 30th), 1919.

Theory papers set in Examinations of past years (Local Centre or School) can be obtained on application. Price 6d. per set, per year, post-free.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at the
R.A.M. or R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from—

JAMES MUIR, Secretary,

14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

Telegrams: "Associa, London."

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

PRINCIPAL LANDON RONALD.

NEW TERM BEGAN MONDAY, JANUARY 13TH.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING
in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £7 17s. 6d. and £10 10s., comprising principal and secondary Subjects, Harmony, Sight-
Singing, and / or Orchestra.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local Schools
Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Victoria Embankment, E.C.4.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE.

SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor SIR EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A.

SESSION 1918-1919.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 23 to December 21); WINTER TERM (January 20 to April 5);
SUMMER TERM (April 7 to June 28).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra,
Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

UNIVERSITY OF DURHAM.

Examinations for degrees in Music are held as follows: Matriculation,
January, July, and October; First Mus. B., March and September;
Mus. B. and Mus. D., September only.

For particulars, apply Secretary of Examinations, University Office
Durham. Copies of former Examination Papers, 1s. 6d. per set.

ADVANCE IN PRICES.

With the exception of folio songs, all the Novello
publications were increased in price on January 1, 1918, but the charges have not been altered in
the advertisement columns.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £30. Special fee for Organ Course, £20, and for Wind Instrument Course, £15.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Lessons.

Full Orchestral Class, Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Opera, Ensemble, Elocution, Choral, and Harmony, &c., Classes. Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC, LONDON

(Under the direction of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.)

INCORPORATED 1891.

158, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W.-11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc., Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.

Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.M.

Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.

Rev. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. Oxon.

Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects, including the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M. F.V.C.M., also for the Teachers Professional Diploma in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and December.

Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition.

Local Secretaries required for towns not represented.

Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint; and all other Subjects connected with the culture of Music.

SPECIAL CINEMA COURSES in Orchestral, Piano, and Organ-Playing.

All communications to be addressed to The Secretary, Registered Office, 11, Burleigh Street, Strand, W.C.-2

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH MUSICIANS.

Founded 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI.

Victoria, Cap. cxxxi., § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.D.,
DEAN OF DURHAM.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.), LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.), ELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London and at approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

COMPETITIONS, 1919.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best ANDANTE for the ORGAN, and a SHORT ANTHEM with Treble Solo.

BRONZE MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, DOUBLE CHANT,
and KYRIE.

Organists (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Vacant
Appointments.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of Dr. LEWIS, Warden,
158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W.-11.

COMPOSERS.

THE BOARD OF ASSOCIATED COMPOSERS.

President: SUMMERS BROWN.

J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. Bac., F.R.A.M. Director of Revisions.

Composers are assured of receiving the highest professional skill for revision and completion of their works ready for publication. Address,
The Secretary, 38, Bedford Street, Strand, W.C.-2.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W.-1

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION.

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.A.M.
DR. ARTHUR S. HOLLOWAY, Mus. Doc. Oxon.; F.R.C.O.

DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.

G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Violin,
Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held in London and at over 400 Local Centres throughout the United Kingdom
in APRIL. Last day of entry, March 15.

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, may be had on application to the Secretary.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate
(A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, July,
and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A. Mus.
L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L. Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship
(F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented, either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date. For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.

Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 3870.

THE INCORPORATED LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC, 22, Princes St., Cavendish Square, W. 1.

Branches; Hampstead Conservatoire, N.W. 3, and

117, Seven Sisters Road, N. 7.

Principal: T. H. YORK-TROTTER, M.A., Mus. Doc. (Oxon.).

Rhythmic Method of Music Teaching. Special Training in Music and Elocution. Private and Class Lessons in every subject by the best Teachers.

ORCHESTRAL AND CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES WEEKLY.

Frequent Students' Concerts. Examinations in Music and Elocution,
July and December. For Prospectus and Examination Syllabus apply to the CENTRAL ACADEMY, 22, PRINCES STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.1.

THE TECHNIQUER

(THE MASTER KEY TO TECHNIQUE.)

Patented in Great Britain and U.S.A. For all instrumentalists.

Extract from a letter sent to H. L. Balfour, Esq., Mus. Bac., Organist,
Royal Choral Society.

"Royal Normal College for the Blind.

"I must frankly admit that had I been told that such surprising results as those I have obtained were possible, after using the 'Techniquer' for so short a time, I could not have believed it. My span is now no less than half an inch greater than it was. This is especially helpful in organ-playing, where one frequently comes across so many awkwardly distributed chords. Again, I have decidedly expanded my stretch between the 3rd and 4th fingers which I find greatly facilitates arpeggio playing.

"Certain exercises dealing with the arm and wrist seem specially appropriate for the needs of those of us who are 'Matthayists'—free rotary movement being absolutely essential. My friends are interested in this wonderfully simple piece of mechanism. We do work requiring muscular effort, so that any good method of helping to do away with stiffness is very acceptable.

"ARTHUR JACKSON."
Lecture demonstration, London Academy of Music, Princes Street,
W., in April (date to be announced). Chairman: HERBERT FRYER, Esq.

Send for particulars and list of testimonials. "Hand Development," 7d. post free. Secretary, Miss Cooper, 33, Orchard Street, W.-1.

TO EDUCATIONAL AND MUSICAL INSTITUTIONS.

BUSINESS MAN (twenty years' City and Colonial experience—
Accounts, Correspondence, Organization, General Management, and Negotiator); BARITONE SINGER (nine years' training, classical répertoire, good London critiques, and business references), SEEKS POST where combined experience would be useful, as SECRETARY and
TEACHER, &c.

Box 250, c/o Dawson's, 121, Cannon Street, London, E.C.-4.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, N.W.-1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir ALEXANDER C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D.

METROPOLITAN EXAMINATION, CHRISTMAS, 1918.

The following CANDIDATES have been successful:—

HARMONY, COUNTERPOINT, and COMPOSITION.

AS TEACHER.—Harold Edward Mackinlay.

EXAMINERS.—F. Corder, A. J. Greenish, Mus. Doc. Cantab., Sir A. C. Mackenzie, Mus. Doc., LL.D., D.C.L.

SINGING.

AS TEACHERS.—Florence May Bignall, Beatrice Annie Emma Collison, Evelyn Mary Chapman, Ada Katherine Gee, Ellen Elsie Louisa Hope, Kathleen Gladys Morris (née Butcher), William Hyslop Mundell, Kathleen Nicholson, Eveline May Quinlan, Percy Emerson Rendell, Isobel Milne Johnston Robertson, Florence Hannah Metcalfe Smallwood.

AS PERFORMERS.—Bruce Beveridge Blackwood, Constance Lilian Bred, Ethel Evelyn Cooper, Irene Flanders, Florence Lydia Forrow, Rispah Goodacre, Katharine Graham, Sarah Doris Kathleen Markwell, Bernard Maxfield, Eleanor Purdon Payne, Dorothy Pugh, Isabel Russell Prewer, Ethel Snape, Mabel Constance Tarrant, Beatrice Tucker, Fedora Turnbull, Ethel May Turner, Mona Alice Watson, Edith Winsome Williams, Ralph Williams.

EXAMINERS.—Henry Beauchamp, Frederick Keel, Frederic King, Agnes J. Larkcom, Selina Pitt Soper, Arthur Thompson.

PIANOFORTE.

AS PERFORMERS AND TEACHERS.—Cicely Edith Mary Attwater, Marie De Baecker, Katherine Mary Graham, Annie Claire James.

AS TEACHERS.—Lily L. Adams, Marjorie W. Agate, Doris Elizabeth Arnold, Mildred Ashley, Alice Mary Attee, Kathleen Baker, Phyllis Winifred Baker, Marian Elizabeth Balding, Doris Nellie Baldwin, Margaret Louise Band, Alice Bartle, Amy Frances Bath, Winifred Stothart Bell, Jeannie Benzie, Elsie Jean Bibby, Kathleen Ellen Bird, Mary Gertrude Bird, Wilfrid Bird, Doris Muriel Blake, Joan Fildes Bolton, Edith Mary Bourne, Kathleen Mary Bryan, Amy Bunning, Maisie Busby, Sylvia Cambridge, Bessie Campbell, Miriam Horton Chapman, Dora Clark, Joyce Clarke, Dorothy Kate Copland, Annie Kathleen Coulter, Lillian Coysh, Phebe Davies, Ethel Isabel Deacon, Doris Norman Dean, Gladys May Dobson, Stephanie Dolby, Norah Douglas-Robertson, Gladys Mary Drake, Annie McGibbon Eadie, Ethel Anne Edwards, Vera Bishop Emerton, Gwendolan Evans, Muriel Lillie Evans, Sylvia Mary Everett, Doris Mary Fairclough, Constance Grace Fielder, Violet Constance Firth, Nora Katherine Forbes, Marjorie Winifred Fyfe, Kathleen May Gathergood, Florence Mary Goddin, Marjorie Elsie Godwin, Dorothy Irene Goudie, Evelyn Mary Graves, Jack Green, Lilian Frances Gregson, Kate Madeleine Guthrie, Doris Mary Haird, Clarice Halliday, Una Lea Hargreaves, Mona Harness, Elsie Harrison, Elsie Augusta Harvey, Dorothy Adela Heale, Bertha Windie Heap, Marion Helliwell, Janet Victoria Henderson, Dorothy Hide, Annie Millicent Hill, Janet Irene Hill, Lizzie Hodgson, Alice May Holliday, Janet Beatrice Horstmann, Adeline Annie Horton, Nellie Howard, Gertrude Ethel Humphreys, Nellie Hutchison, Flora May Inch, Kathleen Innocent, Grace Adeline Ixer, Eva Katharine Mary Jackson, Doris Gertrude Jarvis, Lilian Alice Johnston, Eileen Florence Kelly, Evelyn Mabel Hay Kerr, Olive Margaret Kimbell, Dorothy Kingdon, Emelene Edwina Marian Lane, Winifred Mary Leader, Gertrude E. Lewis, Gladys May Limb, Nesta Llewellyn, Phyllis Eileen Lougher, Lydia Laura Lovill, Olivia Anne Mary Lowenthal, Nellie Violet Malson, Bennit Irene Marson, Marjorie Grace Mawer, Mary Grieve McNie, Adenia Ellen Mercer, Doris Edith Mitchell, Estelle Morris, Gladys Stewart Morton, Agnes E. Nicholson, Jane Darling Nicholson, Mary Nicholson, Monica K. Olliver, Eveline Bell Osbourne, Doris Partington, Dorothy Mary Phillips, Evelyn Ellen Kate Porter, Cecil George Price, Dorothy Pybus, Elsie Ranken, Maggie Rawlings, Lilian Grace Amy Rigg, Audrey Amelia Ross, Winifred Roughton, Frances Jeannette Rowbottom, Rosette L. V. Roey de Roy, Florence Kathleen Seely, Norah Nellie Shackell, Eileen Marjorie Sinker, Adela Janey Sinclair Skakles, Hilda May Skinner, Norah Kathleen Smyth, Marjorie Stephenson, Agnes Myles Stewart, May Ellen Stidston, Ethel Sutton, Margaret Fanny Taylor, Maud Boniwell Thomas, Margot Hilda Thomson, Agnes M. Tiptaft, Annie Elizabeth Tolfree, Mary Elizabeth Trafford, Dorothy Turney, Ethel Underwood, Gwyneth Margaret Watkin-Jones, Margaret Victoria Watton, Amy Laura Watts, Dorothy Mary Webb, Mary Webster, Marie May Wheeler, Tula Violet Infield Wilkins, Helga Margaret Wilson (Mrs.), J. Wilson, Kathleen Ivie Lee Wilson.

AS PERFORMERS.—Leslie Thomas Banks, Marion Augusta Bolander, Helena Buckman, Dorothy Carpenter, Margery Cook, Doris Evelyn Hancock, Amy Constance Head, Doris Gertrude Hobson, Marie Keen, Rosaline Moyshon, Gertrude Mary Pike, Betty Polischuk, Dorothy Charlotte Richards, Dorothy Rivett, Doris Snowden, Evelyn Maud Tyson, Florence Gertrude Doris Watkins, Muriel Adeline Wells, Anne Winifred Williams.

EXAMINERS.—Carlo Albanesi, Oscar Beringer, Victor Booth, Ambrose Coviello, Harold Craxton, H. R. Evers, Welton Hickin, W. J. Kipps, Herbert Lake, Dora Matthay, Tobias Matthay, Claude Pollard, Alfred Quaife, Charles T. Reddie, Felix Swinstead, Septimus Webbe, Cuthbert Whitmore.

VIOLIN.

AS TEACHERS: Hope W. Burns, Joyce Chapman, Phyllis Reeves, Florida Richards, Muriel Margaret Rogers, Mary Sturrock.

EXAMINERS: F. Corder, Spencer Dyke, Patterson Parker, H. Wessely, Rowsby Woof.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC—continued.

PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.

Winifred Monica Hallett, Catherine Ellen O'Brien.

EXAMINERS: F. Corder, Welton Hickin, Cuthbert Whitmore.

ELOCUTION.

AS TEACHERS: Enid Carrell, Constance Coopman, Dorice Fordred, Gwen James.

EXAMINERS: A. Acton Bond, F. Corder, Annie M. Child, Katie Thomas.

EXAMINATION IN VOICE CULTURE AND CLASS SINGING.

The following CANDIDATES have been successful:—

Frederick William Dixie (Honours), James Easson, Lyle Neave, Gertrude Mary Winstanley.

EXAMINERS.—John E. Borland, Mus. Doc. Oxon., and Henry W. Richards, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.

P. QUARRY, Acting-Secretary.

THE BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY.

Offices: 19, Berners Street, W.-1.

FOR THE FOSTERING OF BRITISH MUSIC.

Membership open to all music-lovers.

Patron: The Rt. Hon. A. J. BALFOUR.

President: THE LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.

Director: A. EAGLEFIELD HULL, Mus. Doc. Oxon.

Committee of Management:

Mr. Adrian C. Boulton
Mr. W. W. Cobbett
Mr. Alvin Langdon Coburn
Sir Edward E. Cooper
Mr. W. R. Davies
Mr. Edward J. Dent

Rev. E. H. Fellowes, Mus. Doc.
Col. W. Johnson Galloway
Mr. H. Cart de Lafontaine
Mrs. W. Lee Mathews
Mr. G. Bernard Shaw
Major Geoffrey Toye

W. R. DAVIES, Treasurer.

Particulars from the Acting-Secretary, A. Eaglefield Hull, Mus. Doc. Oxon., 19, Berners Street, W.-1.

MR. CHARLES TREE.

RECITAL-LECTURES ON EASE OF VOICE PRODUCTION.

ABERDARE MAR. 9. WOLVERHAMPTON MAR. 13. HADLEY MAR. 14.

The essence of correct singing is "Ease." When the student commences the physical side of singing, two roads are confronted, thus —, the right and the wrong. There is apparently no difference in these two roads, yet the longer the one is traversed the further is the student from the right one. Success depends on the starting point. And yet the correct way is so simple, so definite.

"How to acquire ease of voice production," by Charles Tree.

New Address: 14, Courtfield Gardens, Kensington (Western 5386).

You need not "practise" to BECOME A GOOD PIANIST

ALL necessity for "KEYBOARD DRUDGERY" has been abolished by my "From Brain to Keyboard" System. Instead of spending years in wearisome "practising" for several hours daily, you need give only a few minutes for a few months twice daily.

The mastery of the piano which my System will give you is unattainable by the slow and laborious "practice" methods, even though you spend years in diligent drudgery.

This is possible only by the aid of the well-known System

"From Brain to Keyboard"
Macdonald Smith's System
of Touch and Technique.

Improvement starts with the very first lesson, and success is certain whatever your age or proficiency. The lessons are given by post, and will be carefully adapted to your individual requirements, my personal attention being given to each student. No apparatus or special notation is used.

Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. 20,000 successful students.

SEND FOR MY ILLUSTRATED BOOK:

"Light on Pianoforte Playing."

This book fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in my Postal Course, and should be read by pianists of all grades of proficiency. When replying, please send 3d. for part war-time cost and postage, and state whether average or advanced pianist.

M. MACDONALD SMITH,

19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE, LONDON, W.C. 1

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.-2

Founder and Director: MR. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, Concerts, &c. Telephone Paddington, 5990. Sec., E. B. GOLDING.

THE

GLASGOW ORPHEUS CHOIR.

HUGH S. ROBERTON, Conductor.

PRIZES

Amounting to FORTY POUNDS are offered for

- I. Original settings for Mixed-voice Choir of certain prescribed lyrics.
- II. Arrangements for Mixed-voice Choir of certain prescribed Folk-Songs.

A choice of five lyrics and five folk-song is given in the Syllabus, copies of which, with all particulars, may be had post-free on application to the Acting-Secretary, WATSON DODS, 43, Queensborough Gardens, Hyndland, Glasgow.

GLASGOW MUSICAL (COMPETITION)
FESTIVAL ASSOCIATION.

NINTH FESTIVAL, 1919.

ST. ANDREW'S HALLS, GLASGOW, SATURDAY, 26th APRIL,
THURSDAY, FRIDAY, AND SATURDAY, 1st, 2nd, 3rd MAY.ADJUDICATORS: H. Walford Davies, Mus. Doc., London;
Ernest Newman, Birmingham.

COMPETITIONS: School Choirs and Junior Choirs; Mixed Voice, Female Voice and Male Voice Choirs and Quartets; Children's Action Songs and Singing Games; Vocal Solos and Duets; Operatic Quotations; Chamber Music.

Competitors are reminded that Entries close on March 15. An extension of one week will be allowed on payment of double Entrance Fee.

Official Syllabus (price 3d.) may be had from the Honorary Secretary, WATSON DODS, 43, Queensborough Gardens, Hyndland, Glasgow.

DANIEL MAYER & Co., Ltd.

FORMERLY

CONCERT-DIRECTION DANIEL MAYER

(ESTABLISHED 1890).

REPRESENTING THE WORLD'S LEADING ARTISTS.

Concert and Musical Arrangements under the direction of

PEDRO J. TILLET.

CHATHAM HOUSE, GEORGE STREET,
HANOVER SQUARE, W.-1.

Telegrams:—Keynote, London. Telephone, Mayfair 3017.

PIANO PEDALS with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

THE CATHEDRAL, MANCHESTER,

DEAR MR. MALKIN,

Nov. 8, 1910.

I think your Patent Pedal Attachment, which you have fitted to my Steinway, is simply splendid. I find the action absolutely silent and its touch beautiful.—Yours truly,

R. H. P. COLEMAN, F.R.C.O., Sub-Organist.

Terms: Cash, or instalments of 20s. per month.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

Works—Hanley, Staffs.

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

GRACE CLARE (CONTRALTO).

Oratorios, Concerts, &c. Parliament Mansions, Victoria St., S.W.-1.
Telephone, Victoria 6400.

LESLIE PINE (TENOR).

Oratorio, Ballad Concerts, At Homes, &c.
Woodcote, Sheredan Road, Highams Park, E.-4.

BERNARD WESTON (BARITONE).

Concerts, Oratorios, &c.
44, College Road, Kensal Rise, N.W. 10

MR. ERNEST A. FLAMBE (BASS).

Oratorio, Concerts, Passion Music, &c. (Stainer's "Crucifixion").
Address: 67, Ashbourne Avenue, Mitcham Surrey.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS
(TENOR).

Address—164, Bank Buildings, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

JOHN KIMBER
(BARITONE)

Late Lieut. R.E., now available for Cantatas, Oratorio, &c.
40, Lothair Road, Finsbury Park, N.-4.

MADAME ALBANI

Gives Lessons in Singing and Voice-Culture, and prepares Pupils for Opera, Oratorio, and Concert Work. 61, Tregunter Road, S.W.-10.

C. HUBI-NEWCOMBE.

For words of Songs, Cantatas, Libretti, Translations,
French, Italian, &c. Adaptations to Composers' Melodies.
(1,200 Songs sold. 300 Adaptations and Translations.)

STOCKTON HEATH, WARRINGTON.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal
Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique:
How it feels to Sing." 3s. 6d. each, post 3s. 10d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y.

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—Gentlewoman.

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—Eastern Morning News.

"Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald.

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury.

"Is an acknowledged authority."—Western Morning News.

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H.
Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-FOUR YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING.

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.-2

*. The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Major H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.B.
at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities,
Diplomas of F.L.C.M., L.Mus.L.C.M., A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916),
and L.R.A.M. Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes,
"Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the College of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition by Post,
to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-19 .. 136 Correspondence Pupils successful,
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-19 .. 27 " " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

TO A.R.C.M. PIANOFORTE CANDIDATES.

Mr. Allan Brown, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., L.Mus. T.C.L., gives special SINGLE lessons covering all the requirements. Many recent successes. Address: 298, High Road, Balham, S.W.-17.

MADAME B. DE LOOZE donne leçons de Chant

Français, pose de la voix, diction, répertoire musique, déclamation. 36, Disraeli Road, Ealing, W.-5.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm.,

F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 362 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey. 'Phone, Burgh Heath, 346.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS.

FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written and Works Scored for Orchestra. Address as above.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS in MUSIC

(at private residence or at West-End studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.-11

DR. ARTHUR S. HOLLOWAY, Mus. D. Oxon.,

13, Roseleigh Avenue, Highbury, N.-5, continues to PREPARE CANDIDATES for the various Theoretical Examinations. Music of any description revised or arranged. LESSONS in COMPOSITION, by post if desired.

ENGAGEMENTS ACCEPTED AND POSTAL

LESSONS given by Mr. C. T. HEAVISIDE, SOLO PIANIST, Cellist, &c., 27, Torwood Street, Torquay.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc.

Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.

Address, 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.-3

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Professor of

Singing, R. A. Music. Private Pupils received at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.-1

DR. LEWIS, Mus. Doc., F.E.I.S., Warden, Incorporated Guild of Church Musicians, gives LESSONS, Personally or by Post, in HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT. 158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W.-11.

DR. LEWIS' TEXT-BOOKS:

- HARMONY. (2 vols.) 5s. each, net.
COUNTERPOINT. 5s. net.
DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT and CANON. 5s. net.
FUGUE. 1s. 6d. net.
ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. 2s. 6d. net.
DEVELOPMENT OF ANGLICAN CHURCH MUSIC. 2s. net.
PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
MATERIAL OF MELODY. 3d. net.
IMPROVISATION. 1s. 6d. net.

The above, complete, will be forwarded (carriage paid) or £1 5s.

H. E. MACKINLAY, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L., L.R.A.M.

Correspondence lessons in "Rudiments," Art of Teaching, Harmony, Counterpoint, &c. Preparation for R.C.O., R.A.M., and all recognised Examinations. Moderate fees. "S. Cecilia," Powys Lane, Palmers Green, N. 13.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF, L.R.A.M.,

A.R.C.M., Pianist (Specialist), coaches for Pianoforte Diplomas, Paper Work by Correspondence. 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

L.R.A.M.—ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF has had September, 1917, Successes. He begs to state that he is a British-born subject. Address as in other advertisement.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for

L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes, L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd., West Kensington.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.,

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.-1.

MUS. BAC. (Oxon. and Dunelm.) University man has successful Correspondence Course for Oxford Responsions and Durham Matriculation Exams.

Address: "Oxon.," Holmfild, Burbage, Buxton.

MR. C. STEVENSON, L. Mus. L.C.M., has Special

Correspondence Courses for:—

- (1.) A. Mus. L.C.M. and L. Mus. L.C.M.
- (2.) Theory, &c., Part for A.L.C.M. and L.L.C.M. Holmfild, Burbage, Buxton.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

(Pianoforte Teacher), A.T.C.L. (Pianoforte and Vocal Teacher). Correspondence Lessons, Theory, Harmony, Form, Art of Teaching. Successes at R.A.M. and T.C.L. Metropolitan Examinations. Compiler, Musical Terms (English first), Novello, 4d. Bawburgh Vicarage, Norwich.

KING'S COLLEGE SCHOOL, CAMBRIDGE.

A Preparatory School for the Public Schools and Royal Navy. Choir School for King's College Chapel.

Inclusive Fee, 70 guineas, reduced to £20 for CHORISTERS who follow the regular curriculum.

A TRIAL OF VOICES to fill vacancies in the Choir School will be held on Thursday, March 13.

Candidates must have a good ear and good voice, and should be between 9 and 12 years of age.

For particulars apply to The Dean.

Names to be sent in not later than March 5.

CHOIR-BOYS WANTED at St. Martin's Church,

Ludgate Hill, E.C.-4. £5 per annum. Apply by letter to the Organist.

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—VACANCY for

ALTO LAY-CLERK. Salary £85. Applications, on forms to be obtained from the Chapter Clerk, The Precinct, Rochester, should be made by March 15.

ALTO WANTED, for St. Peter's, Bayswater.

Salary £20 per annum. Good reader and enthusiastic worker. Address: Leonard Butler, 28, St. Stephen's Avenue, Ealing, W.-12.

TENOR WANTED.—Church in W.C. District.

Moderate music. £10. Apply, R. W. Ready, Valmar, Crichton Road, Carshalton.

RIPON CATHEDRAL CHOIR.

There is a VACANCY for a BASS LAY CLERK. Salary £6 per annum; other work might be obtained. Candidates must be communicant members of the Church of England, and good sight-readers. Applications, with copies of three recent testimonials, should be sent at once to the Succentor, The Rev. H. R. Williams, Saint Agnes Gate, Ripon.

BACH'S PASSION (St. John), at St. Anne's, Soho.

Full orchestra. Saturdays in Lent at 3.30 p.m.; Wednesdays in Holy week, 7.30; and Good Friday at 4. For tickets send stamp.d envelope, Rector, 28, Soho Square, W.-1.

CRUCIFIXION and OLIVET TO CALVARY.

TENOR SOLOIST is Open to accept Engagements for these works. Moderate fees. Address "A. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.-1.

CLARE COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

An EXAMINATION for the vacant ORGAN STUDENTSHIP, value £65 annually as from October, 1919, will be held on March 19th in the College. Full particulars on Application to The Dean, Clare College.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED

shortly at Congregational Church, Crouch End, in succession to Mr. Josiah Booth, A.R.A.M. Stipend £100. Willis Three-Manual Organ. Apply, Hon. Secretary, Organ Committee, 147, Crouch Hill, N.-8. Copies of two recent testimonials (not returnable) may be enclosed.

ORGANIST WANTED, WESLEYAN CHURCH,

Redditch. Sunday and one week night. Applications, marked "Organist," stating salary, to Rev. B. Crosby, Redditch.

OSWESTRY PARISH CHURCH.—WANTED, about the end of April, ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER. Salary £80. Three-Manual Organ, Pneumatic Action, Electric Motor. Rebuilt, 1911, by Hill & Son. Good Teaching connection. Apply, stating age, experience, and qualifications, to Vicar.

HARLOW PARISH CHURCH.—Organist required shortly. Anglican, Communicant. Apply: Vicar.

TE DEUM in F. MAGNIFICAT and NUNC

DIMITTIS 18 F. 3d. each. By A. Toase, Novello & Co., Ltd.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

March 12th. Last day of entry for the April Examinations for Diplomas and Certificates.

March 31st. Last day of entry for the next open competition for Scholarships.

The following CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL at the HIGHER EXAMINATIONS held at the College and certain centres in January last:

FELLOW (F.T.C.L.).—Harold E. Mackinlay, F.R.C.O.

LICENTIATES (L.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Marjorie A. Brotherton, Doris R. Cocks, Emily P. Dyer, Harry Glenhill, Edith A. Harland, Florence C. Houston, Edith C. Hunter, Mabel Lee, Vera Loun, Ethel J. Marquis, Charles H. Mason, Madeleine H. Ralph, Theresa W. Rolph, Muriel F. Spurr, *Maisie G. Tidy, Harold D. Wildgoose, Gwendoline E. Williams.

SINGING.—Eugenie G. Harrison, Gwladys M. Lumley.

ORGAN.—Frederick J. Stevenson.

ASSOCIATES (A.T.C.L.).

THEORY and PRACTICE OF COMPOSITION.—Arthur Harris, Mary Pitt.

PIANOFORTE.—Harry Burbeck, Elsie D. Boylin, Marguerite Brierley, Thomas H. Carter, M. Iam Clarke, *Susan Davies, Margaret W. Dickens, Hyam Dunski, Jessie M. Edwards, Ella Fairall, Florence I. Fraser, Clarice S. Haydock, Dorothy Haltum, Francis M. Jefferys, Olive R. V. Jones, Margaret Makepeace, John H. Marsden, Annie Mather, Gladys M. Oatey, Mollie Phillips, Lily Roadley, Evelyn B. Sellick, Constance Smith, Constance E. Squires, Joseph S. Wagstaff, *Lillie H. L. Walger, Margaret M. Walsh, *Ivorna A. Ward, Dorothy A. Wheeler.

SINGING.—Caroline A. Briggs, Nora F. Gadsdon, Ruby M. Holding.

ORGAN.—William H. Davies, Florence E. Herridge, Sybil M. Wilkinson.

CERTIFICATES.

PIANOFORTE.—Constance Bristol, Ethel R. Calver, Violet W. M. Crook, Jessie J. Fiedler, Elizabeth Gowan, Dorothy H. Heap (Hons.), Albert Heeley (Hons.), Bathia Howard, Ruth G. E. Lezmore, Vera Luke (Hons.), Hannah L. Muir, Archibald Oliver, Mary Smithies (Hons.) Eva Walton.

SINGING.—Edith M. Cave.

* Including General Principles of Scientific Teaching (Hons.).

As the result of a competition also held in January, the following have been awarded Scholarships: these Scholarships are tenable at the College for one year, with a then possible renewal:—Ruth E. Butcher, Adelaide S. Collins, Annie Cross, Alec Compinsky, Richard F. Cutbush, Evelynine Davy, Gerald J. Dingley, Celia L. Downie, Sarah Fox, Eugenie Harrison, Vera L. Henkel, Leon Kitchenoff, Catherine E. O'Brien, Phyllis Pay, Gertrude A. Ramsden, Catherine I. Spalding, Alexandrina M. Stringer, Freda I. Webb. Orchestral Scholarships were awarded to:—Frank F. I. Bilbe, Lilian B. Cook, Lilian Goodfellow, Reginald F. J. Kibley, James Mason, Nicholas Roth, Winifred T. Stiles.

EXAMINERS.—R. B. Addison, Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., J. C. Bridge, Mus. D.; Percy C. Buck, Mus. D.; Sir Frederic Cowen, Mus. D.; E. d'Evry, F.R.C.O.; E. F. Horner, Mus. D.; H. A. Harding, Mus. D.; Charlton Keith; Albert Mallinson; Sir J. D. McClure; C. W. Pearce, Mus. D.; C. Vincent, Mus. D.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W. 1.

THE

OFFICE OF "TENEBRÆ"

AND

DIRECTIONS FOR SINGING

THE PASSION,

FOR USE IN

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

EDITED BY

CYRIL W. MILLER.

Price One Shilling.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

THE LITTLE SEVCIK

Complete, 3s. 6d.

Or in Three Parts, 1s. 6d. each.

The BEST VIOLIN TUTOR the World has produced. Chosen for the Associated Board EXAMINATIONS.

Full Prospectus of the Sevcik Method, complete List of Violin and Orchestral Music, and graded catalogue of Pianoforte Works sent free on application.

SEVCIK WORKS

Everyone rejoices, and we are sure PROFESSOR SEVCIK the foremost among these, that his people are now recognised as an allied nation (Czech).

FINGER TECHNIC, Op. 1, four books.

BOWING TECHNIC, Op. 2, six books.

PREPARATORY TECHNIC, Op. 7, 8, 9, four books.

VIOLIN METHOD, Op. 6, for Beginners, seven parts.

BOOK OF MELODIES Scale Manual.

BOSWORTH & CO.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods:

BERINGER'S TUTOR. WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR. HEMY'S TUTOR. WICKINS'S RAPID TUTOR. GRAHAM P. MOORE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES.

Publishers of Sevcik's Violin Method, Beringer's Daily Technical Studies. Macfarren's The Child's First Music Lesson.

The title of Sir Frederick Bridge's Reminiscences, announced as "My Musical Pilgrimage," will be changed to

A

WESTMINSTER PILGRIM

And will be published early in April.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

MARCH 1, 1919.

MODERN BRITISH COMPOSERS.

By EDWIN EVANS.

II.—ARNOLD BAX.

Among the younger British composers Arnold Bax occupies a somewhat isolated position. In the first place he suffers, perhaps more than any other composer of equal standing, from the disadvantage of being inadequately represented by his published works. He is a copious composer of important orchestral and chamber music, none of which is at present accessible in print except an early Trio for pianoforte, violin, and viola, which has ceased to be characteristic of his writing. The dozen or so of pianoforte pieces and a number of songs which are available are worthy of his pen, but fail to give the true measure of his constructive capacity, which far transcends the limits of these small works, attractive though they be. Although the English publishers have been singularly lacking in enterprise, the burden of blame must in this instance not be entirely placed upon their shoulders. Arnold Bax is of a retiring disposition, not in the least disposed to press his works on unwilling recipients, and he has suffered the fate of those who passively await recognition. It has come to him now, and with the return of normal conditions in the publishing world, it is probable that many of his most important works will come to light.

Another reason for his tardy acceptance is the apparent complexity of his works. As a student he possessed an extraordinary proficiency which made light of every difficulty, and when music like Debussy's 'Nocturnes' and Strauss's 'Heldenleben' were new, he played them to his friends from the score at sight. He could read anything. Such a thing as complexity did not exist for him, and he was unable to realise its existence in his own works when performers complained of their difficulty. As a matter of fact he was right in this matter, for the complexity of his writing, even in those early days when it was most touffu, was more apparent than real. His early proficiency tempted him to excessive elaborations, but the structure itself was simple. His music was, however, always subtle, and largely dependent upon the interpretation of nuance, for which adequate rehearsal is indispensable. That is, unfortunately, in this country a costly honour reserved for Strauss or Scriabin, and seldom accorded to a native composer until his name has become a household word. More than once a work by Arnold Bax has been announced and indefinitely postponed at the eleventh hour because the customary 'run-through' revealed that it needed looking at more than once. Hence performances of his orchestral works, except perhaps of the ten year old Festival Overture, have seldom if ever been adequate, and they show no tendency to increase as his reputation advances; whereas his chamber music, which is no less difficult, is making steady headway in our concert-rooms. At the moment of writing there have been recent performances of the 'Irish Elegy' and the String Quartet in G, and one is announced of the Pianoforte Quintet. Bax himself is almost reprehensibly passive in the matter, but there is a genial free-masonry among players of chamber music against which his reserve is less armed than against the pontifical patronage of conductors.

The seeming complexity of Bax's early works was in a large measure due to his love for harmonic decoration, which sometimes threatened to obscure the clarity of his design. In modern music one is constantly called upon to make a distinction between those who think in chromatics and those with whom chromatics are an accessory. In Bax's music they are an accessory, and if they seem at the first glance to occupy the foreground, this superficial impression is due in large part to the shortcomings of our musical notation, which is at best a cumbersome medium for modern-musical thought. As a matter of fact, stripped of all decorative accretions and left harmonically unadorned, some of his most difficult writing resolves itself into the most innocent of diatonic progressions. Moreover, far from indulging in restless modulation, he has the peculiarity of remaining in one key longer than most of his contemporaries.

It is probably from this love for chromatic decoration that arose the legend of his Wagnerism, for since 'Tristan' there have been many musicians who cannot listen to four ascending semitones without detecting an affinity with the Bayreuth tradition. In his early works there were traces of the influence which we may call Richardian, for composers of Bax's generation receive it more frequently through the intermediary of Richard Strauss than direct from Wagner himself. It is, for instance, visible in the published Trio for violin, viola, and pianoforte, which is frequently played, precisely because it is published. That work, is, however, as already stated, no longer characteristic, and the warm harmonic texture of those which followed can only be attributed to it on the plea that Wagner too loved a warm harmonic texture. This legend of supposed Wagnerism became obtrusively insistent when the tone-poem 'Christmas Eve on the Mountains' made its appearance in 1912. Even if there were any truth in the accusation in respect of this particular composition, there were certainly other elements in it, but there is a tendency among musicians to approach a new British work with the possibly subconscious intention to discover only the elements that recall something else. It may be that the inadequately rehearsed performances prevent the definite emergence of anything but the more or less familiar, and that these passages alone make any salient impression on the receptive faculty. But there is also a deplorable tendency to expect our music, with no modern national traditions, to leap parentless from the void. It is forgotten that artistic origins are obvious in all the greatest works of art, and that Wagner could not have been himself had he not been fathered by Beethoven, and the latter by Haydn.

Moreover, from 1913 or thereabouts a distinct change has come over Bax's writing. The harmony has become more incidental to the polyphonic interest, and the composer has become more of a 'horizontalist,' as Romain Rolland would say. In addition the harmonic flavour of his most recent works is becoming more rugged and even colder. There are in fact signs that the luxuriant growth of his early period may gradually subside into a dispassionate austerity, though that again may be no more than a phase in the evolution of a very remarkable composer.

A subsidiary feature of his writing, which may be a contributory cause of its apparent complexity, is his intense dislike of repetition. There is no prominent modern composer more immune from the prevailing habit of saying everything twice, especially when it happens to be contained in two bars. If he finds it necessary to repeat, it will always be with some harmonic modification, and these alterations necessarily give the page a complicated aspect, though the actual music may be in reality as simple as any ever written. Nevertheless there has been a visible process of simplification both in the actual écriture musicale, and in the curbing of the remarkable inventive fecundity which is given free play in his larger chamber works.

Arnold Bax was born in London in 1883, and entered the Royal Academy of Music in 1900, where he studied under Frederick Corder. His earliest compositions date from 1903, and include, besides the Trio which has already been referred to, 'A Celtic Song-Cycle,' both compositions being published. At an early age he came under the influence of the Neo-Celtic movement, and he has taken an absorbing interest in everything appertaining to Ireland—folk-lore, literature, music, and the glamour of the wonderful Atlantic coast. The Celtic influence is plainly visible in all his musical work, which has frequently been described as the equivalent in music to the poetry of W. B. Yeats. Its special quality is a paradoxical blend of musical thought which, however evanescent its expression, is as definite as it is concise, with a sense of mystic beauty that demands a continuous softening of outlines. The word 'atmosphere' has fallen into disrepute through being so constantly associated with nebulous writing, but here it will serve. As with most artists who have come under the fascination of the 'Celtic fringe,' Arnold Bax's musical thought is in its essence so lucid that it loses nothing by being placed in an atmosphere which would reduce ill-defined ideas to a state of solution. He can afford the luxury of surrounding it with mystic vapours because they do not obscure it, and because his sense of beauty is so keen that he can express it by hyperbole when it suits him, though his method is generally more direct. In the end his inventiveness can always be relied upon to bring to the point of his pen whatever may be necessary to counterbalance the Celtic mirage. The sense of atmospheric beauty and the inventiveness are, in fact, compensating qualities in his work. Where one tends to fuse and to decentralise, the other is always at hand to supply new elements of cohesion. It is a curious beauty, eminently sane, and yet tinged with a certain wistfulness wherein resides at once its charm and its paradoxical nature, for to be wistful and at the same time robust is a combination of qualities that falls to few. In his larger works it enables him to allow his ideas to become fluid with the full confidence that they will not lose their plastic shape, and in smaller compositions, such as his pianoforte pieces, it gives him an unusual degree of liberty in dealing with the background before which the musical idea is presented in motion. It is from this freedom in the background that the apparent difficulty of his music arose, but it is impossible not to notice that it has constantly tended to diminish.

With the exception of the 'Festival Overture,' composed in 1909, practically all his orchestral works have the Irish tinge, which assumes a 'nationalist' aspect in the fantasy 'In the Faery Hills,' the scene of which is laid in a remote part of Kerry. The middle section is suggested by a passage from W. B. Yeats's 'Wanderings of Oisín,' which tells how this human bard sings in the presence of the faery host a 'Song of Human Joy,' which is found by these immortals to be the saddest thing in the world. One of them, weeping, seizes the harp from Oisín's hands, and flings it into a deep pool, there to rest for all time. When this demon of sadness is laid, the endless revel of the Ever-young begins anew. The general mood of the music is suggested by the sombreness of the dusky mountain side, and its activities depict the hosting of the 'Sidhe,' as the Irish faery people are called.

The two quotations which follow are very characteristic of Bax's style of this period:

(a.)

'IN THE FAERY HILLS.'

Ex. 1. Allegro vivace.

Violin Solo.

Celesta.

Harp.

Fl.

Clar.

Fag. sustain.

(b.)
Fl.

pp Arpa. Fag. ppp

Str. Celli.

Fl. Arpa. morendo rit. ppp p Viole. Fag. ppp p &c.

'IN THE FAERY HILLS.'

much more so than the Concert Overture, which is of a completely different character. It reveals the festive spirit in a riotous mood, but without realism. As a piece of musical revelry it has made many friends.

'Christmas Eve in the Mountains,' to which reference has already been made, is another work with an Irish flavour. The motive of this tone-poem occurred to the composer while wandering one frosty evening in the beautiful and legendary Glen-na-Smol, in County Dublin.

Then followed a set of four orchestral pieces completed in 1912 and entitled respectively 'Pensive Twilight,' 'Dance in the Sun,' 'In the Hills of Home,' and 'The Dance of Wild Iravel.' These were first performed at the orchestral concerts given by F. B. Ellis in 1914, which were also the occasion of introducing Vaughan Williams's 'London' Symphony, and other notable works.

Bax thereupon seems to have turned to Swinburne, for the 'Nympholept' of 1912, which has not yet been performed, is almost a musical counterpart of the poem of the same name. It is an impression of a summer day in the forest, seen from a very pagan point of view. His next important work was a Symphony in four connected sections entitled 'Spring Fire.' It is an attempt to depict the first uprush and impulse of Spring in the woods, and though deriving primarily from Nature itself, the formal scheme of the composition was influenced in a large measure by the beautiful first chorus in 'Atalanta in Calydon' ('When the hounds of spring are on winter's traces'). Indeed, the exuberant and pagan qualities of much of the earlier writings of Swinburne colour the musical content of the fantasy throughout.

'The Garden of Fand' is inspired by the legend of the enchanted islands off the Atlantic shore, and penetrates more deeply into the West of Ireland mood than 'In the Faery Hills.' It is full of sea-atmosphere and of the colours of the oldest 'iomrama' or magic sea stories of Ireland. A quotation is given here:

(a.) 'THE GARDEN OF FAND.'

Ex. 2. Gay, but not hurried.

poco. f

rocking gently.

p p mf dim. pp &c.

'Tintagel' is also a sea piece, connected with the Arthurian legends.

(To be continued.)

THE CLAVIER TOCCATAS OF BACH.

BY SYDNEY GREW.

(Continued from January number, page 20.)

III.

The clavier toccata before Bach wavered between ternary and binary form. In the best examples (Froberger, &c.), it settled into a large two-part structure which reads:

Part I.—Improvisation.

Part II.—Fugue (in two sections, alla canzona).

The Clavier Toccatas of Bach appear at first glance to be either a couple of Preludes and Fugues in casual association or a work in three movements: Prelude and Fugue, Fantasia (Intermezzo), and Fugue-Finale. Close observation of the Toccatas, and application of principles of analysis gathered from a study of Bach's instrumental compositions in general, show that the different movements of a Toccata are in 'cyclic' association, not casual, and that the structure of the work is binary, not ternary.

By obeying the laws of two-part form, the five Toccatas place themselves among Bach's more characteristic and individually vital compositions. Two-part balance seems intrinsic in Bach's greater instrumental works, whether these be simple Suite movements or elaborate Preludes and Fugues for organ; and I consider that it may almost be established as a rule for the student that when binary form controls the structure of a piece, that piece may be taken as likely to prove on further study a specimen of Bach's vital and enduring work. Three-part balance is the characteristic of Bach's conventional music—that is, of music intended to please contemporary taste, as the various Concertos and certain of the Sonatas.

These in his own day formed the less vital portion of his music. To-day many of them are dead. Compared with the great organ works, the Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, and many numbers of the Well-Tempered Clavier, even so superb a specimen of ternary form as the Italian Concerto in F major is seen to lack the abounding vitality and the ever-expanding significance which are essential in perfect art. Bach uses ternary form freely, but he relegates it to a subordinate place in the general scheme of musical architecture; as when he constructs on a three-part plan one of the movements of a two-movement composition, or when he builds up a section of three phrases. He rarely uses the da capo in instrumental music. (See, however, the 'wedge' Fugue in E minor, the Fugue in the Fantasia and Fugue in C minor for organ, and the Fugue of the Prelude, Fugue, and Finale in E flat for clavier: also of course the Minuets, &c., in some of the Suites.) Binary form, on the contrary, he elevates to the highest position. He makes it the architectural principle in every department of instrumental music where his sincerer thoughts and deeper feelings find full and permanent expression. He makes the Prelude of equal weight with the Fugue. He expands the intermezzo and enlarges the Gigue until the Suite stands with a true symphonic balance:

I.—Allemande and Courante;

II.—Sarabande;

III.—Minuets, &c.;

IV.—Gigue.

He combines the Prelude with the Suite, and the combination results in a well-proportioned two-part balance. He confirms and encourages the tendency of the 17th century Fugue to adopt a two-part shape, so that in innumerable instances the Fugue contains a middle sectional cadence which—were fugal-writing other than what it is—could be enforced by a double bar and repeat marks. (I endeavour in a later section of this article to justify this statement.) The Toccatas themselves are rather elusively binary; but if we try to analyse them on any other principle, we find it impossible to reduce them to individual order or to group consistency, and are compelled to leave them as formless, arbitrary things; which is a result incompatible with the dignity of Bach or with the beauty and importance of the Toccatas.

As an instance of the way the two principles of form act and react on one another, I refer the reader to the first Fugue of the G minor Toccata, where the form is almost as puzzling to the analyst as it is pleasant to the musician.

This Fugue (written probably about Bach's twenty-fifth year) appears to be in simple ternary form: (1) bars 1-28, in B flat; (2) bars 28-42, in G minor; (3) bars 42-51, in G minor. Each of the three parts ends with a sectional full close in its respective key, and the last is a recapitulation in Fugue style of the first. But the relative length of the parts does not satisfy one's sense of balance: part 1 covers twenty-eight bars, whereas part 2 covers only fifteen, and part 3 only ten. And the character of the transition from part 2 to part 3 does not allow one's æsthetic sense to apply the ternary principle: for the music crowds so impetuously over the G minor full close, and the following B flat section commences with so impetuous a foreshortening of its initial phrase, that the mind cannot rest in bar 42 as it needs to at the point of a sectional cadence. The mind is carried forward. It is compelled to regard bars 42-51 as inseparably linked up with bars 28-42; and the analyst therefore has to place the movement among binary forms, part 1 covering twenty-eight bars and part 2 covering twenty-four.

The same Fugue contains another instance of ternary form being absorbed into binary. This second instance lies in the G minor section, bars 28-42, the construction of which is (a) bars 28-32, in G minor, to full-close; (b) bars 32-38, in D minor; (c) bars 38-42, back to G minor, and to full-close in G minor. The relative length of the three sections (5, 7, and 5 bars respectively) satisfies one's sense of balance; but one's æsthetic sense is again dissatisfied. The general flow of the music joins

(b) and (c); they present themselves to the æsthetic sense as two portions of one whole; and the analyst therefore places the passage among examples of binary form, bars 28-32 the Exposition (1), and bars 32-42 the Development and Recapitulation (2), thereby exemplifying in the section what I feel to be the structure of a Bach Fugue in the whole.

Such analyses as these, and the larger analyses I offer below, are at once tentative and individual. They are not rigid. Form is too fluid and too dependent on the way the emotional nature of the piece reveals itself to the individual musician for analyses to be exact and incontrovertible. My analyses are based on my personal understanding of the compositions. Other students whose understanding of the music is different from mine will require other analyses. They will effect good analyses and encompass the truth of the matter according to the largeness of their views on form and to their response to the poetical (I might almost say, dramatic) promptings of the music.

The Clavier Toccatas of Bach, despite the fact that each individual example is sui generis in both form and poetic design, are similar in style and character. Hence they constitute a cognate group. The group is very clearly marked off from other groups of homogeneous compositions. The Toccatas comprising it remain in their own world. They never approximate the characteristics of the works that comprise any other group. The G minor has certain Sonata features. In one minor detail the D minor also approaches the Sonata. But the G minor and the D minor are early Toccatas, a circumstance which goes a long way to explaining the exceptions; and even in the more important case of the G minor the exception is not powerful enough to disturb the intrinsic nature of the work. Speaking in the general terms that are proper to art discussion, it is to be said that a Toccata is a Toccata in the way a Suite is a Suite or a Concerto a Concerto.

There are among Bach's clavier compositions a considerable number of works that draw near to the Toccata, e.g., the three-movement Toccata in G major; the 'Fantasia con Fuga' in D major (i. Moderato and Allegro; ii. Adagio and Moderato; iii. Adagio and Fugue); the already mentioned three-movement work in E flat; the brilliant Fantasia in A minor, which commences with a passage of dancing semiquavers; and many others. These are not works of pronounced individuality. They are nondescripts or hybrids, approximating more to other forms than to the Toccata—the Toccata in G major, for example, is an Italian Concerto with a finale not in keeping with the rules of Concerto form, and the Fantasia in D is a Fantasy-Sonata. Such works confirm what is proved by the Toccatas themselves, viz., that for Bach the Toccata was a thing of definite particularity, a distinct personality in the family of musical forms, and not at all a thing of incertitude, an indeterminate mélange at the best and always something of a mongrel. The five Toccatas are demonstrably related. Their features are the same, also the accents of their deeper tones. Bach being the parent of them, and the period of their creation the period when Bach's genius for construction was at once bold and most powerful, they could scarcely be otherwise than demonstrably related.

The contrapuntal style of the Toccatas is the free instrumental polyphony of Bach, and their rhythmical style is the alert and mercurial rhythm of his first maturity. The counterpoint of his slow movements is a rich lyrical blending of parts (a legacy perhaps from the old Canzona). The melodic passages are sometimes recitative, but generally they are a firm and highly expressive line of notes above a strong bass and stately inner parts. They are never long figured melodies, and their accompaniments are never the steady uniform bass and chordal inner parts appropriate to the cantabile movements of Concertos and Sonatas. The heavy, ponderous rhythm of the French Overture (which might be termed 'the quadruple largamente rhythm in dotted notes') is not used in the Toccata. It rarely appears even in the thematic material of the fugal episodes. The corresponding triple rhythm (the 'triple rhythm animato in dotted notes') appears in the G minor Toccata, but this instance is merely one of the several peculiarities of the G minor work which cause it to stand slightly apart from its companions. 'Passage-work'—the first idiomatic characteristic of the 17th century Toccata, and the feature which chiefly distinguishes the primitive Toccata from the 17th century free Canzona—is rare in the Toccatas except as material for impetuous codas, improvisatory climaxes, and the like, or as material in phrases that are made up of fluent imitation. Dance-rhythms and dance-forms are foreign to the genus of the Toccata. There is a delightful Sarabande rhythm in the second Fugue of the D minor, and the second Fugue of the G minor is Gigue-like in rhythm; but otherwise there is no departure from this rule. Structural repeats of sections do not occur. Once or twice the 'counter-exposition' of formal Fugues may be traced; as a rule, however, this feature of Fugue-form expands into the Development. The harmonic schemes are rich and strong. In the Fantasias of the D minor and the F sharp minor the harmonic schemes are as striking (in the smaller way of the Clavier Toccatas) as the harmonic scheme of the great Organ Fantasia in G minor. The harmonic nature of the Fugues is full and broad, yet invariably (except in the second part of the first Fugue in the F sharp minor) the modulations centre upon tonic or dominant, quite rarely upon relative major. The cadences are generally Tierce de Picardie.

The Toccatas contain Improvisations, Rhapsodies, Fantasias, Adagios, and Fugues—especially Fugues, of which each work has two, in accordance with the rule that obtains throughout the history of the Canzona, the 17th century prototype of the Toccata.

The Fugues are large and fully developed in every case except in the first movement of the E minor, where the Fugue is a sort of andante meditation.

The character of the Toccatas is best shown by a contrasting of the Toccata with its prime antithesis the Concerto. These two forms are curiously antithetical. Their poetic natures are antagonistic, and their constructive characteristics diametrically opposed. What is absorbed by the one is rejected by the other. As implied above, the Toccata has nothing in common with the Suite. It has very little in common with the Sonata. But while neither Suite nor Sonata can approximate in shape to the Toccata, they can approximate to it slightly in spirit; whereas the Concerto is as essentially incongruous in spirit and mood as it is in structural design. The only point at which the Concerto may be said to expand into the structural freedom and improvisatory energy of the Toccata is at the point of the last solo passage of its first movement, where a cadenza (short or long, as the case may be) carries the music to the final tutti. Yet though the Concerto by this feature seems to be approximating to the Toccata, the outcome of its apparent approximation is a feature which the Toccata knows nothing of. When the Toccata improvises, it improvises either in the character of a Coda or to the extent and importance of a separate movement: never with such set invariability as the Concerto. (For the exception that proves the rule, see bars 125-131 of the second Fugue in the D minor.) And while the Toccata is all binary, the Concerto (except when the Concerto discards its slow movement, as in the 'Brandenburg' Concerto No. 2, where two long chords alone separate the first movement from the last),* is all ternary. The first movement of the Concerto is constructed of tutti and solo passages in regular alternation. Apart from an unusual passage in section (1) of the first Fugue in the G minor, such a method of construction is found nowhere in the Toccatas. The slow movement of the Concerto is a long, violin-like melody, on a steady bass which sometimes has such individuality as to convert the movement into a beautiful duet. As already remarked, this is foreign to the Toccata, as also is the swift, non-fugal Concerto-finale.

The Concerto is determined and restricted as to its mood or 'thought' by the demands and necessities of its form; but the Toccata reverses this order of things, and is determined as to its form by the character of its 'thought.' For all the beauty of the Concerto (and in many cases the beauty of the Concerto is exquisite, though rarely noble), it seems never to escape the mental atmosphere of its generation. Its movements never seem more than casually associated. It never seems to be constructively cyclic or dramatically cumulative. Its Finale in particular seems to be a perpetual demonstration of the idea that the hearer must be left in an easy state of mind. It seems always conventional.

It is in these respects that the Concerto stands in antithesis to the Toccata, which is essentially free, novel, universal, and from first to last a steady coalescing to one grand climactic point of many diverse, yet equally strong and impassioned moods.

Finally, the Clavier Toccata retains one tonic throughout (except for the first Fugue in the G minor and for a single introductory chord to the third movement of the D minor), while the Concerto takes up a new key for its middle movement; and the Fugue, which is impossible in the Concerto, is in the Toccata a sine qua non.

(To be continued.)

Interludes.

In our correspondence columns appears a letter suggesting that, in the case of works ending quietly a brief interval of silence should precede applause. At first sight the writer appears to be asking too much. But who can say? Not long since it seemed as if audiences could never be got to see the impropriety of handclapping after certain airs and choruses in 'Messiah,' 'The Passion,' and similar works. But it is now possible to hear these oratorios performed without applause. Unfortunately it is also only too easy to hear them spoil by the noises of folk who think first of the performer, secondly of the music, and thirdly and a very long way off) of the words. But this happens, I fancy, only where the audience have not been definitely asked to listen in silence. On the whole, there are signs that people are becoming more reasonable in the matter. We frequently hear suites, and even symphonies, played at Queen's Hall with no more than a few seconds' (silent) break between the movements. Even the encore fiend is being brought under control. I understand that at the successful series of Ballad Concerts recently started by Messrs. Enoch each performer makes one appearance only, and encores are not allowed. The time-honoured Queen's Hall Ballad Concerts used to be field-days for the encorer, who sat steadily through a long orgie of songs, and re-demanded the lot, good, bad, and indifferent. These particular concerts have recently been altered for the better, an excellent small orchestra providing relief with the best light music. As the genuine encorer has no ear (or eye) for anything but a soloist, and has never been known to encore anything concerted, the bad old tradition has had a nasty jar, and soon we may look to find a ballad concert audience as discriminating as any.

The question of applause is a vexed one. There is something to be said for a good hearty round at the interval, or at the end of the concert, with all the performers appearing together like actors taking a call. But applause during the proceedings is objectionable on various grounds. It is at best an invidious method of appraisal, in which the worthiest performers and music often receive less than their deserts, and vice versa. Often it is so unduly prolonged as to lengthen the concert, an obvious injustice to the later items and to those hearers who have to catch trains or keep appointments. It rudely dissipates the atmosphere created by the more subtle and expressive type of music. If it were awarded with discrimination, and so could be regarded as a criterion of merit, it would justify itself. But here it fails most completely, and the failure has far-reaching effects. In the first place, the applause is too often given to the performer, with little regard to the music performed. As a result it is easy for inferior works to appear constantly in programmes, to the exclusion of better ones. This happens less frequently in concerted music. A choral or orchestral piece is usually judged on its merits: a solo work on the merits or the reputation (past or present) of the performer.

* For a somewhat similar instance in Beethoven, see the slow movement of the Pianoforte Sonata in C minor, Op. 10, No. 1, where the expected development-section is reduced to a single chord that carries the music straight to the tonic again and to the recapitulation.

But even in the case of concerted works applause is a very unsatisfactory test of the value of a work. This would matter little if those responsible for the choice of music were never influenced by its reception. But we know too well the temptation to shelve a work that doesn't 'go.' Nor is applause a safe guide as to the popularity of a piece of music. Are there not many works that are intensely enjoyed by the bulk of the audience, but which are of a character not calculated to evoke much in the way of a demonstration? We frequently hear an indifferent song receive a warm welcome, thanks to a high note at the end. Similarly, many an instrumental work, owing to a brilliant coda, has its former dulness condoned. A rousing or spicy ending is like charity, covering a multitude of sins.

It would be easy to make a lengthy list of beautiful works which receive little in the way of applause. For example, who ever heard wild demonstrations of delight after quiet music of a sober or neutral tint, such as Ravel's 'Pavane pour une Infante défunte,' or after the 'Siegfried Idyll,' the Introduction to Act 3 of 'The Meistersingers,' or the 'Eroica' Funeral March? In regard to another popular work, the 'Peer Gynt' Suite, does anybody suppose that the audience really regards the last movement as the best, or even the most enjoyable, because it happens to be the only one of the four to arouse wild enthusiasm? The fact is, of course, 'In the Hall of the Mountain King,' inclines us to be demonstrative, whereas the poignancy of the dirge for Ase induces a feeling similar to that which makes a meeting pass a vote of condolence not by making sympathetic noises, but by silently standing.

More often than not, then, applause cannot be taken as a test of (a) the value of the music, or (b) its appreciation by the public, and this being so it is quite clear that its discontinuance, save in a general form at the interval or at the end, would be all to the good.

But what would the soloists say? Applause is as food and drink to them in a very real way, because their market value rises or falls with the warmth of their reception. I know few more ridiculous and at the same time pathetic sights than a performer squeezing as many recalls as possible out of the applause, dodging backwards and forwards from the artists' room with the smallest possible break between the appearances, in order that nothing be lost, and making a final disappearance to a mere spatter of tired palms. Why should the business of the gathering be held up for anything between five or ten minutes for such an exhibition?

I have seen many fourth-rate performers manage to take half-a-dozen calls, thanks to the tireless energy of a few faithful friends. And in this connection I imagine calls are taken more frequently and on slighter grounds than was formerly the case. I had written thus far, when it occurred to me that it would be interesting to know how many times Jenny Lind returned to the platform to acknowledge applause. As her American tour, I suppose, called forth the most extraordinary displays of enthusiasm, I looked the matter up in Barnum's book. He says:

The reception of Jenny Lind on her first appearance, in point of enthusiasm, was probably never before equalled in the world. As Mr. Benedict led her towards the footlights the entire audience rose to their feet and welcomed her with three cheers, accompanied by the waving of thousands of hats and handkerchiefs. . . . Towards the last portion of the Cavatina ['Casta Diva'] the audience were so completely carried away by their feelings that the remainder of the air was drowned in a perfect tempest of acclamation. Enthusiasm had been wrought to its highest pitch, but the musical power of Jenny Lind exceeded all the brilliant anticipation that had been formed, and her triumph was complete.

How many times did she re-appear after all this enthusiasm?

At the conclusion of the concert Jenny Lind was loudly called for, and was obliged to appear three times before the audience could be satisfied.

When we consider on what slight provocation performers somewhat less eminent than Jenny manage to take four or five calls, her allowance seems modest. By-the-way, do we ever hear of a soloist's agent or manager being 'called'? On this occasion, after the singer had made her third appearance, 'they then called vociferously for "Barnum," and I reluctantly responded to their demand.' Shy, retiring prince of showmen!

The only other reference to recalls is in connection with the singer's appearance at Havana, where there was a good deal of prejudice to be conquered:

Some three or four hundred persons clapped their hands at her appearance, but this token of approbation was instantly silenced by at least two thousand five hundred decided hisses. Thus, having settled the matter that there should be no forestalling of public opinion, and that if applause was given to Jenny Lind in that house it should first be incontestably earned, the most solemn silence prevailed.

Earned it certainly was. At the end of her first song not a vestige of opposition remained, but such a tremendous shout of applause as went up was never before heard. The triumph was most complete. . . . The roar and applause of victory increased. Encore! Encore! Encore! came from every lip. She again appeared, and curtseying low, again withdrew; but again and again did they call her forth, and at every appearance the thunders of applause rang louder and louder. Thus five times was Jenny Lind called out to receive their unanimous and deafening plaudits.

Barnum italicises the 'five,' so it was regarded as an unusually large number of recalls. Evidently the Nightingale was in much less of a hurry than most soloists to-day.

Returning to our main point: Can applause between the items be dispensed with? Yes; it is frequently absent (by request) from oratorio performances, and we rarely hear it at operas save between the Acts. Would its absence lead to a cold and apathetic atmosphere? Not necessarily. No doubt oratorio soloists formerly thought their work would suffer from want of stimulus if the audience were silent, but we do not find them singing less well when applause is taboo. If applause were allowed only at the interval and at the end, how could encores be obtained? They couldn't be, which is the most powerful argument for reform.

An irascible friend who frequents concerts, and often has to leave before the end because of the delay caused by applause and encores, asks angrily why he should be defrauded of an item coming at the end of the programme (often a work he is anxious to hear) because of the intrusion of an extra which not more than twenty per cent. of those present wanted. He considers that concert-halls have something to learn from music-halls in the matter of management. 'When I go to a music-hall,' he says, 'I know almost to a minute how long the show is going to last. Each performer has a certain amount of time allowed him, and his successor follows hard on his heels. If I am particularly pleased with a turn, and want to see it again, I pay the hall another visit, doing my duty at the box office like a man. When I go to a concert, I may or may not find it beginning at the advertised hour, and the time of its ending is even more in doubt. I wish applause fiends and inveterate encorists would carry their practices into the everyday world for a few days, in order to see their absurdity. Figure to yourself a group of them watching a navy mending the road, and giving him a round of applause after some specially stout or skilful bit of business with the sledge or pick. Why not? He earns it as thoroughly as the soloists, and his job is certainly not less useful. And why shouldn't the lady who does the charing receive a bouquet after a successful day's spring cleaning? As for encores, I want to see the Encore King and his family waiting en masse on their butcher, and, after due beating together of hands and stamping of feet, telling him that the steak he sent yesterday was so good that they will show their appreciation by allowing him to present them with another like it. And will he please deliver the encore in time for lunch on Thursday?"

The Editor has been good enough to send me a proof of Dr. Froggatt's reply to my comments on his article in last month's Musical Times. I have space for only a few words, but the Doctor and I differ so widely in our tastes, that columns of discussion are not likely to help us. For example, he calls Delius's new Concerto 'dreary manufactured stuff,' whereas I thought it a most beautiful work, despite a few blemishes, such as its remaining overlong in one mood and its too continuous use of the solo instrument. He enjoyed the Mozart Serenade for wind instruments: three evening papers could not save me from being bored and irritated into a kind of cold frenzy by the time the fourth—or was it fourteenth?—movement was ended. The Schumann Symphony was 'full and rich' to him: to me it was good only in parts, like most of Schumann's music when he leaves the pianoforte.

Dr. Froggatt says the pianoforte 'should surely be heard in combination with the orchestra, and not absolutely alone.' Why? Many of us think that it shows to advantage only in solo work. As to songs, I did not suggest the introduction of 'third- or fourth-rate ballads.' I had in mind the many beautiful modern songs written for voice and pianoforte (not voice, accompanied by pianoforte, but a duet for voice and instrument). Few of these are ever heard by the general public, nor will be until they are performed at concerts frequented by large numbers. Will Dr. Froggatt be able to obtain many songs with orchestral accompaniment without drawing on operas, and thus violating an article of his own creed? In regard to one-composer programmes, Dr. Froggatt mentions plays, operas, and oratorios. There is no analogy between them and a one-composer concert. The writer of a play or oratorio has a complete performance of his work in view, and if he knows his job he takes care there is no monotony. In a miscellaneous concert of two hours' duration for an average audience the necessary variety is surely most naturally obtained by including works from various composers, and of different periods.

Dr. Froggatt accuses me of suggesting that 'we should render the length of Beethoven's symphonies endurable by omitting the slow movements.' Evidently I did not make myself clear: my suggestion was merely that we should be sometimes given an opportunity of hearing a Scherzo alone, and I can assure Dr. Froggatt that the proposition was not a joke.

I was present at the Beethoven concert Dr. Froggatt mentions. It made him 'long for more opportunities of hearing similar selections.' It made me long to reach for my hat half-way through.

Finally, he points out that the object of his article was to indicate a type of programme 'calculated to educate and not merely to tickle' the public ear. But you must attract before you can educate. When Dr. Froggatt gets going with one-man and chronological programmes, or with a solid meal of symphonies, concertos, and faded operatic vocal extracts, he will no doubt be rapt into a seventh heaven, but it is a heaven into which the bulk of the public will not attempt to follow him. I, for one, will gladly remain outside.

FESTE.

MORE ABOUT THE CONCERT PROGRAMME.

BY ARTHUR T. FROGGATT.

It is a satisfaction to observe that 'Feste,' in criticising my paper on this subject which appeared in the Musical Times for January last, does not traverse my main contention, but confines himself to the discussion of certain details. The principal object of my paper was to urge that an ideal concert programme, like an ideal collection of pictures (or of any other works of art), would have in view the education of the public taste, instead of being a mere reflection of it. We all know that experts sometimes make mistakes; but, after all, experts are the best judges, be the subject what it may. For one mistake made by the expert, the non-expert makes a hundred.

But the details of my scheme are not unimportant, and as 'Feste' takes exception to nearly every one of them, I would fain make a reply. And first of all, with regard to his objection to the concerto. He begins by demurring to the inclusion of a symphony and concerto in the same programme. But even in these days of very much abbreviated concerts, has it ever occurred to anyone to compile a programme on other lines? The concerto is the link between chamber and orchestral music, and in the hands of the great masters has been productive of some of the most delightful effects to be found in the whole realm of music. To be sure, if it had given us nothing better than the dreary manufactured stuff upon which the talents of a most accomplished violinist and fine orchestra were wasted at the last Philharmonic Concert, we might well dispense with the concerto altogether. But 'Feste's' proposal is so astounding that I think the mere mention of it is sufficient to condemn it.

The arrangement of the items of a programme in chronological order is a matter of taste; and here 'Feste' and I must agree to differ. The second part of the above-mentioned Philharmonic concert was so ordered, and to me the result was eminently satisfactory. We had Bach, Mozart, and Schumann; and I had never enjoyed the fulness and richness of the latter's B flat Symphony so much before: it carried the concert to a triumphant close. But there are doubtless cases in which a strictly chronological sequence would be ineffective, as was implied in my previous article.

Then there is the question of songs with pianoforte accompaniment. I must still maintain that these are a blot upon any orchestral concert. It is, of course, quite true that the pianoforte affords a welcome relief to the sounds of the orchestra; but it should surely be heard in combination with them, and not absolutely alone. Worst of all (as sometimes happens) is it to hear a song accompanied in this way when the composer has actually provided an orchestral score.

It is as though an engraving of a picture should be hung in a gallery otherwise containing only oil paintings.

Besides, what can be more absurd than to see an orchestra sitting idle while a vocalist is interpolating some (very likely) third- or fourth-rate ballad? I have this afternoon returned from such a concert. The orchestra had already accompanied the singer in a couple of masterpieces, and later in the programme had to give way to the pianoforte. I derived some amusement from watching the gentlemen of the band. The leader assumed an air of polite interest, maintained for quite a considerable period. Another prominent performer veiled his face with one hand, his feelings being apparently too painful for exposure to the gaze of an unsympathetic crowd. A few, I regret to say, as is occasionally their habit, absented themselves from a performance in which they had no share. At many concerts, while the song with pianoforte accompaniment is 'on,' the whole body of orchestral players is 'off,' and the platform becomes the abomination of desolation.

'Feste' does not share my admiration for 'one-composer' programmes: he thinks they tend to monotony. This is an argument which would prove too much. If a programme consisting of an overture, symphony, and concerto, with one or two songs, all by one composer, must necessarily become monotonous, what about an opera or oratorio? Here, again, the analogy of the sister arts supports my view. A play by Shakespeare or Sheridan is not monotonous; neither is a collection of paintings by a great artist necessarily so. As regards the latter case, doubtless some exceptions might be named—Sydney Cooper, for instance; but I know of no great orchestral writer of whom the same could be said. Last November we had a most delightful Beethoven concert, conducted by Mr. Hamilton Harty, the programme of which was, to my mind, a model of what such a concert should provide. It made me long for more opportunities for hearing similar selections.

In my previous article I made a passing reference to Haydn's symphonies. 'Feste' is good enough to think kindly of the old gentleman, who, after all, was once young, and sometimes manifested, as a few of us may be inclined to fancy, a little of the fire and enthusiasm appertaining to youth. I ventured to suggest that at least twenty of his symphonies deserved a place in the repertory of a national orchestra. 'Feste' demurs to this, and opines that a selection of a movement or two from these would be better. Does my critic believe that there is a single symphonist now living from whose symphonies a single movement will be played a hundred and ten years after his death? I should like to think it might be so; but I very much doubt it.

But in the matter of orchestral programmes—I do not know whether he would apply the same principle to chamber music, opera, and oratorio—'Feste' is in favour of a somewhat sweeping extension of the already not unknown custom of making 'elegant extracts.' With regard to Haydn's symphonies, I would suggest that—not in respect of the finest twenty or so out of the total hundred and twenty-five, but among some of the remainder—isolated movements might be found worthy of being revived. 'Feste' goes immensely further than this, and suggests, in the first place that the concerto in general, and not merely in particular, should be treated in this ruthless fashion. Finally, taking his courage in both hands, he actually suggests that as we cannot afford to deny ourselves the pleasure of listening to the scherzi of Beethoven's symphonies, we should render the length of the said symphonies endurable by omitting the slow movements! I confess I hardly know how to reply to this proposition—assuming it not made in joke. It makes one rub one's eyes and wonder whether one can have mistaken the purport of Beethoven's symphonies after all. I will content myself with merely saying this: It would be a cruel fate to be compelled to decide between the surrender of the second or third movements in these immortal works, but if I had to make the choice there is none of the symphonies, with the possible exception of the Pastoral, in which I would not prefer to retain the slow movement.

And what is the argument which 'Feste' adduces in support of his preference for 'elegant extracts'? Merely the well-worn one of two wrongs making a right. He mentions those monstrous dramatic performances consisting of scenes from various plays. Has any object ever been suggested for them, other than that of crowding as many 'stars' as possible upon the stage in the course of one afternoon? The Choral Symphony is also mentioned—that play of 'Hamlet' with the part of Hamlet omitted. Again, extracts from Wagner's operas, with parts written for voices played by instruments; enough to make Wagner turn in his grave, were it not that he was himself the very hero of inconsistency and insincerity. Allow me to recall the fact that the object of my paper was to indicate a type of programme calculated to educate, and not merely to tickle, the public taste for orchestral music.

Occasional Notes.

Mr. Arnold Bennett's new novel, 'The Roll Call,' contains a description of a Promenade concert. We accompany the hero to Queen's Hall with interest, because of a little preliminary conversation:

Mr. Prince sighed, and said: 'I was thinking of going up to the Promenades to-night.' George took fire at once. 'The Glazounov Ballet music?' 'Glazounov?' repeated Mr. Prince, uncertainly. 'No. I rather wanted to hear the new Elgar.'

What was this 'new Elgar'?

When they [George and Marguerite] got to the Hall the band was sending forth a tremendous volume of brilliant, exhilarating sound. A vast melody seemed to ride on waves of brass. . . . Then came a final crash. . . . 'What was that piece?' she asked. 'I don't know,' he said. . . . The music resumed. He listened, ready to put himself into the mood of admiration if it was the Glazounov item. Was it Glazounov? He could not be certain. It sounded fine. Surely it sounded Russian. Then he had a glimpse of a programme held by a man standing near, and he peered at it. 'No. 4.—Elgar.—Sea-Pictures.' No. 5 was the Glazounov. 'It's only the Elgar,' he said, with careless condescension, perceiving at once, by the mere virtue of a label, that the music was not fine, and not Russian.

So the 'new Elgar' turns out to be the well-known set of contralto songs, played (on this occasion only) as an orchestral Suite! Nor could they be described as 'new.' This unique Promenade concert took place in 1901, by which time the 'Sea-Pictures' were two years old. The number of novelists who can introduce musical references without more or less coming to grief is small: the fingers of one hand will more than serve to number them. Mr. Bennett is usually so precise—even meticulous—in his detail, that we should have expected him to be the last to disqualify himself for inclusion among the elect.

When we printed Mr. Elliot Button's 'The Pendulum' in our January number, we intended it to be the first and last of such ingenuities so far as our pages are concerned—for the present, at all events. Most of the examples we have received leave us cold, but we have succumbed to the following clever trifle, by Lieutenant A. J. Sowerbutts. It will be noted that the treble and alto clefs of the middle staves become the alto and treble when the copy is reversed. Having broken our resolution and admitted a second 'stunt,' we hasten to add that there will be no third yet awhile.

WHEN IS A NOVELTY?

Apropos 'new' works by Elgar,
Punch has the following:

Sir Edward Elgar has dedicated his new orchestral work 'Polonia' to Mr. Paderewski. The report that the distinguished pianist-politician is thinking of retorting with a fugue 'Stiltonia' is not confirmed.

'Polonia' received its first performance at Queen's Hall on July 6, 1915, so it is well on the way to being a four-year-old.

ABSTRACT PROGRAMME
MUSIC.

The audience at the Philharmonic Quartet concert on February 13 were presented with a leaflet entitled 'Stravinsky's first String Quartet,' by E. Ansermet. Therein we read that the composer 'has affixed no programmes or titles to his pieces, and wishes them to be listened to abstractedly.' Having expressed this wish the writer proceeds to make it impossible for us to listen abstractedly by giving us a programme for each piece! For ourselves, we came to the conclusion that the very modest amount of interest in the music lay in its occasionally successful illustration of these programmes.

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE'S REMINISCENCES.

We understand that the title of Sir Frederick Bridge's forthcoming volume has been changed. It was to have been 'My Musical Pilgrimage,' but as that title appears to have been already used, Sir Frederick has decided to call his book 'A Westminster Pilgrim.'

Great interest is being manifested in its publication—interest which we believe, judging from a glance at the proof-sheets, will prove to be well-founded.

The author draws liberally on his store of memories, grave and gay, and as might be expected has many a good story to tell.

The volume will be illustrated by some admirable reproductions of photographs, including the choir and organ of Westminster Abbey (looking West), and Sir Frederick's house in the Little Cloisters. Among the portraits will be some of exceptional interest, e.g., those of past Abbey organists, Orlando and Christopher Gibbons, Blow, Purcell, Croft, John Robinson, Benjamin and Robert Cooke, George Williams, Thomas Greatedore, and James Turle. Sir Frederick will appear twice—in a reproduction from the original of Sir Leslie Ward's 'Spy' cartoon in Vanity Fair; and in a portrait, specially drawn for the book, by Sir W. B. Richmond, R.A.

There will be many other illustrations, among them a drawing of Mendelssohn in boyhood, never before published, and a facsimile of Captain Cooke's signature scribbled on an Abbey window, and dated 1642.

Altogether, 'A Westminster Pilgrim' promises a rich and varied feast.

The publishers of Musical Opinion announce a new series of Handbooks of Church Music to be issued under the general editorship of Captain Francis Burgess during the present year. In order to ensure the practical character of the series the authors will be drawn from those who have gained their experience at ordinary parish churches. The first volume, entitled 'The Rudiments of Plainchant,' will be issued next month, and other volumes, including 'The Church Organ as a Solo Instrument,' by Harvey Grace, 'The Organization and Training of Parish Choirs,' by Francis Kennard, and 'The Principles of Church Music Composition,' by Martin Shaw, will follow at frequent intervals.

Church and Organ Music.

A Thanksgiving and Commemoration Service for musicians was held at Southwark Cathedral on February 8. There was a large attendance. The Bishop of Kingston gave an address, and Sir Alexander Mackenzie read the Roll of Honour of Musicians killed in the war. The service consisted of Evensong, the Canticles being sung to Atkins in A. The anthem was Lloyd's 'I will magnify Thee,' and Anerio's De Deum was sung after the processional hymn 'For all the Saints' (to Vaughan Williams's fine tune). Mr. Francis W. Sutton was at the organ. Mr. E. T. Cook conducted, and at the end of the service played Franck's Choral in B minor. The service was arranged by the Incorporated Society of Musicians.

A very successful series of organ recitals has just been concluded at Newcastle Cathedral. The players were Mr. William Ellis (the Cathedral organist), Dr. Bairstow, Mr. C. H. Moody, Mr. J. M. Preston, and Mr. Alfred Hollins. The attendances have ranged between two thousand and three thousand persons. It is pleasant to hear that the clergy and Cathedral authorities gave sympathetic help. Collections were taken for various War Funds, including the 'Musicians' Gift.'

Dr. Alan Gray's Lent term organ recitals at Trinity College, Cambridge, have, as usual, programmes notable for all-round interest, ancient and modern. We should like to see more recitalists follow Dr. Gray's useful custom of printing the publisher's name under the less familiar items. There are many ways of doing missionary work for good music; this is one so simple and obvious that it ought to have been generally adopted long ago.

Organ music based on a programme received a good show at the Baptist Church, Rutherford, New Jersey, on January 26, when Mr. Frank H. Mather gave a programme by Otto Malling, consisting of three sections of 'Christus'—'The Birth of Christ,' 'From the Life of Christ,' and 'The Death and Resurrection of Christ'—twelve pieces in all. Before each work Mr. Mather read the biblical passage on which it was based,—a helpful plan.

Dr. George J. Bennett gave an organ recital at Lincoln Cathedral on February 19, in aid of the Musicians' Gift. He played Smart's Postlude in E flat, Bonnet's 'Variations de Concert,' Saint-Saëns's 'Benediction Nuptiale,' and Tchaikovsky's Coronation March. Miss Rhoda Backhouse played Franck's Violin Sonata, the 'Londonderry Air,' and Beethoven's Romance in G, and Mr. J. B. Render sang 'Be thou faithful,' from 'St. Paul.'

Mr. Harold Darke, now free from military duties, has resumed his work at St. Michael's, Cornhill, and is giving recitals on Mondays at one o'clock until April 14. The programmes are of exceptional interest.

Mr. Geoffrey Shaw has been addressing well-attended gatherings at Mayfield, Sussex, on various matters connected with Church music.

ORGAN RECITALS.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Choral Improvisation 'Jerusalem on High,' Karg-Elert; Sonata in F sharp, Rheinberger; Pastoral, Vierne; Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach.

Mr. John Pulein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Air, John Blow; Trumpet Tune and Air, Purcell; Symphonic Poem, 'The Nativity,' de la Tombelle; Fugue in C, Buxtehude; Christmas Postlude, Grace.

Mr. Frederick J. Tarris, Barking Parish Church—Imperial March, Elgar; Fantasia in F, Beethoven; Toccata in D minor, Bach; Overture in E flat, Faulkes.

Mr. Fred. Gostlelow, Luton Parish Church—Grand Chœur in G minor, Hollins; Toccata (the Doric), Bach; Arcadian Idyll, Lemare.

Mr. Francis W. Sutton, St. Saviour's, Croydon—First Organ Suite, Borowski; Sonata in D minor, Rheinberger; Postlude, Stanford.

Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary Abchurch (three recitals)—Fantasia on Christmas Carols, de la Tombelle; Christmas Postlude, Grace; Pastoral Symphony, Bach; Fantasia on Two Christmas Carols, West; Triumph Song, Baynon; Berceuse, Oliver King; Allegro con Spirito, Dupuis, At St. Mary-the-Virgin, Aldermanbury—Religious March, Perelli; Triumphal Chorus, Capocci.

Mr. W. Wolstenholme, All Hallows', Gospel Oak—Intermezzo in D flat, Hollins; Rhapsodie sur des cantiques Bretons, Saint-Saëns; Carillon in A flat, J. A. Sowerbutts; Toccata in B flat and Fantasia in E, Wolstenholme.

Mr. F. J. Buckle, Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford—Sonata in D minor, Rheinberger; Slow movement from Sonata in D, Op. 10, Beethoven; Rhapsody, Grace; Prelude and Fugue in E flat, Bach.

Mr. Percy Colley, St. Cleopas's, Toxteth, Liverpool—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Carillon, Wolstenholme; Nuptial Song, Faulkes; Offertoire No. 6, Léfebure-Wély.

Mr. William Dawes, Æolian Hall—Cantilena, Goss Custard; En forme d'Ouverture, Hollins; Andante with Variations, Mendelssohn; Postlude, Alla Marcia, Ernest Halsey.

Mr. James M. Preston, St. Nicholas', Newcastle-on-Tyne—Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Toccata di Concerto, Lemare; Rhapsody on Catalonian Melodies, Gigout.

Dr. R. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End—Fantasia and Toccata in D minor, Stanford; Arabesque in E, Debussy; Carillon, Vierne; Rhapsody, Grace; Pièce Héroïque, Frank.

Mr. W. W. Starmer, St. John's Free Church, Tunbridge Wells—Evening Song, Bairstow; Toccata, John Stanley; Festival March, Best; Allegretto, Wolstenholme; 'A Song of Joy' and Fantasia in D minor, Starmer.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas', Cole Abbey (four recitals)—Cornelius March, Mendelssohn; Sonata in E flat, Bach; Andante in G minor, Boëly; Solemn Melody, Walford Davies; Finale from Sonata in F sharp minor, Rheinberger; Canzona in D minor, Bach; Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn.

Mr. J. A. Meale, Wesleyan Church, Stratford, E.—Symphony in E minor, Holloway; Concert Studies, 'The Meeting of the Waters' and 'The Minstrel Boy,' Meale; The Bee's Wedding, Mendelssohn; In the Springtime, Hollins; Overture, 'Poet and Peasant,' Suppé. At Central Hall, Westminster (four recitals)—March Pontificale, Faulkes; 'Tipperary' Variations, Goodhart; Cantilene, Ireland; Concert March 'The Tritone,' Wolstenholme.

Mr. Matthew Kingston, St. Mary's, Woolwich—Madrigal, Lemare; Contrasts (A.D. 1700-1900), Elgar; Capriccio, Faulkes; Marche Militaire, Gounod.

Mr. George Pritchard, St. George's, Altrincham—Festal Toccata, Baynon; Fugue in D, Bach; Introduction and Allegro Agitato (Symphony in C minor), Holloway; Lyric Pieces (Op. 43), Grieg; Toccata in C minor, Halsey; Scherzo (Sonata No. 5), Guilmant; Con moto moderato, Smart.

Mr. Harold M. Dawber, St. George's, Stockport—Introduction and Allegro, John Keeble; Finale in B flat, Frank; Prelude on the 'Old 104th,' Parry; Berceuse, Vierne; Pomp and Circumstance No. 4, Elgar; First Movement from Second Concerto, Handel; Paraphrase on Handel's 'See the Conquering hero,' Guilmant.

Mr. S. Wallbank, Hexham Abbey (two recitals)—Toccata, Adagio, and Fugue, in C, Bach; Le Cygne, Saint-Saëns; Evening Rest, Hollins; Coronation March, Tchaikovsky; Fugue à la Gigue, Bach; Chant de Bonheur, Lemare.

Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool (six recitals)—Pæan, Harwood; Scherzo in B minor, Stevens; Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Fantasia in E flat, Saint-Saëns; Prelude and Fugue on BACH, Liszt; Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs, Guilmant; Festival March, Faulkes; Toccata in F, Bach; Carillon, Elgar; First Suite for Organ, Lyon; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Variations on an original Theme, Stuart Archer; Sonata No. 1, Harwood.

Dr. George Grace, St. John's, Red Lion Square—Fantasia on 'Kyrie, Gott heiliger Geist,' Bach; Idyll No. 1, Alan Gray; Cortège and Berceuse, Vierne; Toccata, Gigout.

APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. William G. James to be organist and choirmaster of St. Peter, Muswell Hill.

Mr. W. H. Steward, acting-organist of St. Matthew's, Westminster, to be organist and choirmaster of the Church of the Ascension, Lavender Hill.

Mr. H. M. G. Turnbull, to be organist and choirmaster of the Parish Church, Great Stambidge, Essex.

A CHURCH CHOIR IN MESOPOTAMIA.

[We think that choristers in England may like to know the conditions under which some of their fellow-singers 'carry on' in the Far East, so we gladly print the following, with a picture of the choir concerned.—ED., M. T.]

It may be of interest to many readers to hear of the growth and advance of Anglican Church music in Mesopotamia. I shall speak only from knowledge of what I know and is going on at the Base. First of all, allow me to draw in your imagination an idea, or a picture of our old Church. The majority of you are fully aware of the fact that when on 'Field Service' it is with great difficulty that a suitable place can be found wherein to hold Divine worship, such places as 'dug-outs,' barns, and even open fields being utilised for this purpose. In our case 'our Church' was at one time a disused building, or perhaps a more appropriate term would be warehouse, built in the same fashion as the majority of buildings in this country, with walls of mud-brick and flat roof. The whole of the roof was made of wood poles latticed together, upon which were laid reed mats and a covering of thick mud. This may be a good substitute for a slate roof in the dry season, but I will let you draw your own conclusions as to what happens in the wet season. To add to this discouraging aspect of the place, it abounded in rats, crickets, chameleons, and mosquitoes, flies, and other (to us) familiar insects, which are so numerous in the tropics. At one end a part was partitioned off and used as a store and canteen. To make this building comfortable and light (for the only light that penetrated the fabric was by way of the door and three small openings in one wall at the side), the walls were lime-washed, the interior lighted by oil lamps, and in place of fans, large 'punkahs' were fixed and swung to keep the place, or rather the worshippers, cool, when possible during the hot season, that is, when the temperature inside hovered between 115 and 125 degrees. I hope from this you will be able to gather some idea of this temporary Church, and how vastly different it is from that in which we are accustomed to worship, back in the old land. Our new Church, in which we are now established, I will deal with later.

It was at the end of last September, after many weeks of bad congregational singing, that the Chaplain then in charge called a meeting of old choristers, and others who were interested in choral work, to discuss the possibilities of forming a choir. On the following Friday fourteen officers and men attended this meeting, and during a discussion, various obstacles presented themselves. The chief difficulty with which we were faced was the absence of sopranos. Further, we had no hymnals, psalters, or music of any kind, and to buy them here, in a Mohammedan country, was an impossibility. But we were not to be daunted in our determination to form a choir, so the following Friday we met together for rehearsal, a happy band of choristers, to practise hymns which in the old days we had partly memorised. In this way we 'carried on' for a number of weeks, until the arrival of music from India. At intervals we welcomed new members, who filled the gaps caused through some being transferred to other stations, falling sick, or going into hospital, to be eventually invalided out of the country. Here lies a great obstacle which must make a conductor's task hard and difficult in a tropical country. For example, he may practise certain music for a special service, but (owing usually to sickness) he can never rely on those members who attended rehearsals being present at that special service. I may take this opportunity to make a passing remark about the instrument used for accompanying the singing: it was a three-reed harmonium, its full volume of tone not being heard above the choir and congregation. During January of this year, when the music arrived from India, we at once turned to and started practising in earnest, eventually singing the Psalms and Responses at each service.

Since Easter we have left the old Church for the new one which has been erected. In a few words I will give a description of this sanctuary, to enable you to contrast it with the former improvised building. In the first place, it is about six times the size—lofty, spacious, well-lighted by day and night, and more important still, well-ventilated. The main building is extended to form the Chancel, in which are choir stalls capable of holding forty choristers. The Chancel is Numbers to be counted from top row—left-hand corner.

1. LANCE-CORPL. LABAND, St. Luke's, Leicester.
2. PTE. R. WILSON, St. John, Londonborough, Grantham.
3. CORPL. ANTILL, Clapham Junction, S.W.
4. SAPPER W. W. CRICK, St. Thomas, Stagsley, Luton.
5. PTE. F. DAVE, St. Osmond's, Parkstone, Dorset.
6. PTE. R. H. WILMER, St. Mary's, Bognor, Sussex.
7. PTE. P. J. I. POWELL, St. Stephen's, Clapham Park, S.W.
8. R.S.M. W. V. PRINCE, St. Stephen's, Ootacamund, India.

9. CORPL. WM. LEWINGTON, St. Jude's, South Kensington, S.W.
10. PTE. A. E. WILLIAMS, St. Maryan, near Histon, Cornwall.
11. SERGT. S. A. GOUGH, St. Mary, Stepple Ashton, Herts.
12. CORPL. H. J. F. SIMS, St. Mary Magdalene, Addiscombe, Surrey.
13. LIEUT. A. C. L. SMITH, All Saints', Barry, near Cardiff.
14. LIEUT.-COL. H. STONE, S. C. F. (C. of E.), M.E.F.
15. 2nd-LIEUT. F. A. CURTIS, L.R.A.M., Shropshire School.
16. CAPT. E. G. ELLIOTT, Senior Curate, Parish Church, Bognor.

17. LIEUT. P. ANDREWS, Plaxhol, Sevenoaks, Kent.
18. LIEUT. J. SHEPHERD, Ripon Wesleyan Church.
19. SAPPER R. F. GOODFELLOW, St. Mary, Lambeth, S.E.
20. PTE. A. W. PERKINS, Christ Church, Chelsea, S.W.
21. PTE. W. VAUGHAN, All Saints', Busby, near Cardiff.
22. SAPPER G. EXTWHISTLE, St. John's, East Dulwich, S.E.
23. PTE. G. BROWN, St. James, Glossop.

well-lighted by means of hidden rows of electric lights along the beams of the roof, which gives an exquisite effect to the eye from the far end of the Church. This system of lighting can in my opinion be recommended to enhance the beautiful architecture of our Cathedrals and Churches at home. The floor of the Chancel is tiled in coloured squares, while the Nave is laid with a semi-concrete substance. The walls are built of mud-brick, made on the spot and baked hard by the sun. Both inside and outside are pleasing to the eye, and reflect great credit on the architect. To sum up briefly, it is to us like passing from a Mission Hall (the old Church) into a Cathedral (the new Church). A powerful reed-organ has also been installed. The whole of the improvements stimulate us, as a choir, to render a more efficient service than in the old days of 1917. The average attendance of the choir at evensong is nineteen out of twenty-nine on the roll. This we consider good, taking into account the trying heat of the day, temporary sickness, and various military duties.

Great credit is due to the members of the choir (who represent so many Churches in England and also India) for their enthusiasm manifested since its formation. We are fortunate, too, in being helped by a capable organist from Shrewsbury College, and a deputy-organist who is a member of the Royal Choral Society and the Croydon Harmonic Society. The various Chaplains have all done their best to raise the standard of Church music in Mesopotamia. How long it will continue after our departure remains to be seen, but we as members esteem it a privilege to be among the first to form an Anglican Church choir in this historic land.

I was rather astonished the other night when returning to my billet to hear the strains of a well-known hymn, 'Nearer, my God, to Thee' (tune, 'Bethel') being sung by a party of Arabs or Armenians in a house in the main street. There can be no doubt that we shall leave behind us many melodies and other traces of our all-British music, which, I need hardly say, still has scarcely anything in common with that of the natives.

H. J. F. S.

THE THREE CHOIRS FESTIVALS.

Discussion as to the continuance of these Festivals is no new thing. In the Musical Times of May, 1870, appeared an article by Mr. H. C. Lunn, from which we make a few extracts. Some of them are as apposite as if written to-day:

The subject of the continuance of these time-honoured musical gatherings having lately been brought prominently before the public, it becomes impossible for those who earnestly believe that they are beneficial, in the purest sense of the word, both to religion and charity, to remain silent. In ranking ourselves amongst the many who would desire to uphold these performances, we would wish it, however, distinctly to be understood that we by no means underrate the sincerity of the few who think that they should be abolished.

We are told that the performance of the grandest and most sacred works in musical art before a large assemblage of listeners in a cathedral is a 'desecration' of the building. Now, unless we are to accept this as a fact without any further inquiry, it will be necessary to understand whether it is believed that this 'desecration' arises from the nature of the compositions performed, the executants who are engaged in their interpretation, or the persons who come to hear them. Let us consider the first point. The wonderful creations of those great masters who have so glorified the words of scripture that they have sunk more deeply into the hearts of millions than they could have ever done when spoken by the most eloquent divines in a pulpit, can never, we believe, so effectually fulfil their mission as when heard within those buildings in which the massive grandeur of the architecture so perfectly harmonises with the spirit of the music.

If it be urged that the setting of the words of scripture to music is in itself objectionable, then of course the anthem sung in the daily cathedral service must be a 'desecration' to a religious edifice; indeed, if we logically trace this argument to its root, it will be found that it aims at the abolition of music altogether as an aid to religion; for if it be once allowed that the commonplace anthems constantly sung before a congregation are not only admissible, but calculated to impress the hearers with a feeling of solemnity, how much must that feeling be deepened by the performance of those immortal works usually selected for a musical Festival. But perhaps after all we are fighting shadows; for, as we have already said, the words used by the attacking party are rarely defined; and it may be, therefore, that the 'desecration' arises not so much from the compositions executed as from the presence of those who execute them. This is a subject difficult to handle; but we have no right to refuse to examine it. In the first place, then, the engagement of competent persons for the performance of an oratorio is only an extension of the system pursued in the daily routine of cathedral management. The clergy are paid, the organist is paid, the members of the choir are paid—everybody, indeed, who fulfils any office within the sacred building receives remuneration for the services he performs; and why, therefore, the mere assemblage of a larger number of professional persons for the purpose of interpreting a larger work, should be considered an innovation to be deprecated, it would puzzle us to say.

We have heard it stated that between the parts of the performance at a Festival, the cathedral is often converted into a temporary refreshment-room: viands of various kinds are produced, bottles have been seen raised to the mouth, and some of the marble monuments within reach have even been used as sideboards. Here, then, is the first real 'desecration' of the building that we have been able to arrive at. But why, we ask, should such unseemly conduct ever be permitted? Surely officers might be appointed to see that offences of this kind are not committed; and if, in spite of being cautioned, any person persisted in violating the law, he should be at once ejected from the building, as any refractory member of a congregation would certainly be from a church.

With respect to the third point—the sale of tickets—does it ever occur to those who are shocked at this that the cathedral is daily made a show of; and that a somewhat more direct method of remuneration is enforced (which benefits neither religion nor charity), for, instead of purchasing tickets, the money is paid in the building. Do we not see crowds of tourists, in travelling costume, with knapsacks on their backs, 'doing' the cathedral, under the guidance of a sanctimonious official, who, in spite of the religious fervour with which he goes through his well-studied lesson, never forgets to hold out his hand for the coin when he bows his visitors out, and never forgets to look additionally sombre when the amount of the coin does not reach his expectations. If it be wrong to sell tickets, so that well-dressed persons may enter the cathedral and quietly take their seats to hear the finest sacred music, how much worse must it be to admit throngs of people to pace about the building, in muddy boots, on the mere understanding that they are prepared to pay for the sight on leaving.

A very important point remains to be considered—the charitable object for which these Festivals were instituted. For many years the funds for the widows and orphans of the poorer clergy have been largely benefited by the sum realised by the meetings. How is this sum to be replaced? Can anybody imagine that if the Festivals were abolished, persons would come up from all parts of the country merely to hear an ordinary service somewhat better performed than usual; or that, if they were not sufficiently attracted by the music, they would send large donations to the charity, from an innate conviction that funds were needed?

And in the Musical Times for March, 1872, G. A. Macfarren, writing on 'Oratorios in Church,' begins with a brief catechism worth quoting:

What is an oratorio? Originally, a musical composition to be performed in the oratory.

What is an oratory? A place set apart for prayer in a private dwelling; a portion of a church appropriated to special uses—such as that of the meetings instituted in Rome by S. Filippo Neri, where oratorios were performed, which took their defining title from that of the place wherein they were heard.

What is a church? 'The Lord's house'; a building dedicated to public worship and to religious edification.

Since some churches include an oratory, and since the oratory gave rise and definition to the oratorio, it is at least anomalous that certain well-meaning and thoughtful persons should publicly protest against the performance of oratorios in ecclesiastical buildings.

Reviews.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Eugène Goossens's 'Kaleidoscope' and 'Four Conceits' (J. & W. Chester) evoke mingled feelings. We have abundant admiration for the uncanny cleverness behind these pieces, but our admiration is tempered by regret that the composer is mostly content with producing subtle and highly-organized imitations rather than inventions. We doubt if it would be possible to find more convincing and amusing examples of imitative writing than 'The Hurdy-gurdy Man,' 'The Punch and Judy Show,' and 'The old Musical Box.' The out-of-tune effects in the first are delightful fooling. 'The Gargoyle' and the 'Marionette Show' in the 'Four Conceits' are also fascinating examples of the bizarre. Humour in music is fairly common: wit is rare. Mr. Goossens's music at its best is witty in a sardonic way. But a little of this kind of thing is enough for most palates, and we must confess to finding the constant chromaticism and pungency rather wearying. After all, in the long run it is as fatal to satiate your hearers with discords as it is to cloy them with sweets, and the process is much less comfortable for the hearer. We confess, too, that we are old-fashioned enough to regard music as a language, and language of a kind peculiarly fitted for the expression of human feeling. It may with advantage make diversions into by-paths for an occasional sketch or impression, but in the main it must keep to the broad, high road, and say things that matter. Mr. Goossens has gone into the by-path with amusing—and amazing—results, but we hope he won't stay there.

Leo Livens's Suite, 'The Moorlands' (Winthrop Rogers), is a more modest effort in the same track. Its four pieces are called 'Somnolence,' 'Heather Bells,' 'The Lone Moor,' and 'Moonbeams.' The composer is lavish with his consecutives of various kinds, and some of his effects—notably the little chimings in 'Heather Bells'—are pleasant enough. But as a whole the Suite strikes one as elaborately saying very little. 'Moonbeams,' by-the-way, contains this note:

Solo.....

which is not on many pianofortes.

By way of refreshing and violent contrast, the next work to hand is a set of 'British Marches for Schools,' edited and arranged by Martin Shaw (Evans Bros.). There are twenty-six of them. They are easy to play, and their honest, healthy tunes will be enjoyed by both scholars and teachers.

VIOLIN MUSIC.

Frank Bridge's 'Souvenir' for violin solo (Winthrop Rogers) is a delightful cantabile with a slight, but very effective, pianoforte part. Neither are difficult.

For beginners, there are 'Eight Easy Melodies,' with pianoforte accompaniment, by Ernest Newton (Novello). Six are in the compass of five notes, and two cover an octave. They should be very useful for both solo and class performance.

SONGS.

We have lately received a large number of interesting new songs—so many that we can find space for little more than the barest mention. From Winthrop Rogers come batches by Frank Bridge and John Ireland. The quality here is excellent throughout, and we have the unusual and pleasant experience of being unable to find a weak number. The first-named composer is responsible for 'Come to me in my dreams' (Matthew Arnold), 'Thy hand in mine' (Mary E. Coleridge), 'Adoration' (Keats), 'Love went a-riding' (Mary E. Coleridge), 'Strew no more red roses' (Matthew Arnold), and 'So early in the morning, O' (James Stephens). 'Love went a-riding' has already achieved a measure of popularity. 'So early in the morning, O' is equally brilliant in its lighter way, and gives fine scope for a soprano. The setting of 'Come to me in my dreams' is warmly expressive. All these songs are attractive to the musician by reason of the wealth of harmonic interest and the skillfully-written pianoforte part, and at the same time are so expressive and tuneful as to please the layman. Speaking generally, John Ireland strikes a rougher note. As his choice frequently falls on words of a somewhat melancholy cast, this is not surprising. The touches of asperity make his songs less attractive at first hearing, but the great emotional driving-power behind the music soon takes hold of one. His more recent songs are 'The sacred flame' (Keats), 'The Cost' (Eric Thirkell Cooper), 'Earth's Call' (Harold Monro), 'Blow out, you bugles' (Rupert Brooke), 'I have twelve oxen' (Old English), 'Mother and Child' (Nursery Rhymes from Christina Rossetti's 'Sing Song'), 'Blind' (Eric Thirkell Cooper), 'Heart's desire' (A. E. Housman), and 'Spring Sorrow' (Rupert Brooke). Of these the palm must, we think, go to 'The Cost,' 'Earth's Call,' and 'Blow out, you bugles.' The first-named contains an emotional climax of tragic intensity. 'Earth's Call' is a rhapsody with an extraordinarily vivid part for the pianoforte. There is fine work here for both singer and player. 'Blow out, you bugles' contains some broad and deeply-felt writing. The Nursery Rhymes are unexpectedly sad in places. One does not look for such titles as 'The only child,' 'The blind boy,' and 'Death-Parting' in a collection of the kind. Even 'The Garland,' the last of the eight which make up the set, ends with a reference to death:

'Dusky pansies, let them be
For memory;
With violets of fragrant breath,
For death.'

The music throughout is appropriately simple, but full of interesting harmonic touches, including some dallying with the modes. Altogether a fascinating set of delicately-finished trifles.

From Winthrop Rogers comes also Martin Shaw's 'Refrain (of One in a Far Country),' a broad and impressive setting of a poem by Arthur Shearley Cripps. Geoffrey Shaw gives us a jolly song in 'Roundabouts and Swings' (Ascherberg, Hopwood & Crew). Like most folk-song enthusiasts, the Shaw brothers have the knack of writing good, direct tunes. It is an interesting speculation as to whether such composers are attracted to folk-song because of their melodic gift, or whether they owe the gift to their folk-song studies. Perhaps it's a case of a bit each way.

A pronounced dash of national idiom is used with good effect in two songs by Sir Charles Stanford—'St. Andrew's Land' and 'Wales for Ever' (Enoch). In the latter it takes the form of quotation from 'The Bells of Aberdovey' and 'Men of Harlech.'

Messrs. Enoch send also an album of five songs by Landon Ronald, 'Songs of Springtime.' The composer is a past-master in the art of writing songs which are just not too good for amateur human nature's daily food. Another matter for speculation: Do such songs improve public taste by being so much better than the average 'shop' ballad, or do they retard it by being good enough to please both lay and trained ears without rising beyond a high-class superficiality? 'Songs of Springtime' will certainly be a popular success, though neither their singers nor hearers will experience the occasional clutch at the vitals that one gets from John Ireland's songs. But the bulk of the public, we suppose, prefers that its vitals should be soothed rather than clutched.

Granville Bantock's 'From the Tomb of an unknown woman' (Elkin) is a setting of some centuries-old words on a Chinese tomb. The music is effective, especially in the simple section at the end. The opening made us think of 'A Lover in Damascus,' and other rather inexpensive essays in musical orientalism. Prof. Bantock can do better than this.

We have received many other songs from various publishers. Most of them contain all the elements that make for popularity, including the names of eminent singers who are acting as platform agents. They therefore call for no words from us, especially as we have no wish to say uncomfortable things.

Musings and Memories of a Musician. By Sir George Henschel.

[Macmillan & Co.]

A volume of reminiscences from the pen of so versatile a musician as Sir George Henschel can hardly fail to be interesting. When we say that his book just satisfies this somewhat negative requirement, we have fairly indicated its weakness. For weak it is, if we look to it for illuminating thought on the many musical questions about which the author is well qualified to speak. We could have been spared many of the pages devoted to intercourse with some (nominally) great folk. In their place we should have been glad of a chapter or two more about such men as Brahms, and more than one or two containing Sir George's views on musical things in general. The Brahms chapters are very interesting, though they do not add much to our knowledge of the composer. But they have the right intimate touch, showing us Brahms enjoying his swim, his food and drink, and generally conducting himself in an attractively human way. By-the-way, Sir George repeats the story of Brahms and the composer who wished for his opinion on a MS. violin concerto. The composer played the work through, whereupon Brahms went to the pianoforte, felt the manuscript between his finger and thumb, and remarked, 'Where do you buy your music-paper? First-rate!' Sir George calls this good-natured sarcasm. We should find a much harder name for it. There is an excellent account of the founding of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the conductor's successful struggle against opposition from Press and public. This chapter is one of the few likely to be of value for reference purposes. The bulk of the book will be read with placid enjoyment. Readers will be duly grateful therefor; but they will regret that the author, out of the fulness of his experiences, has given them a volume which is merely a casual meal: it might so easily have been a standing dish.

French Music of To-day. By G. Jean-Aubry. With a preface by Gabriel Fauré. Translated by Edwin Evans.

[Kegan, Paul.]

This book consists of papers and lectures written, with one exception, before the War. The articles appeared in various foreign journals, and the lectures have been given in England, Belgium, Switzerland, and France. M. Jean-Aubry occupies an unique position as a kind of international musical apostle, and it would be difficult to overestimate the value of his work in breaking down the barriers of ignorance and chauvinism where music is concerned. 'French Music of To-day' covers a good deal of ground: 'French music and German music' (this is the post-war chapter); 'The French foundations of present keyboard music'; 'Studies and physiognomies' (dealing with Massenet, Fauré, Debussy, Ravel, and Roussel); 'Sketches for portraits' (ten vivid little studies of modern French composers); 'Music and poetry' (Baudelaire and music; Verlaine and the musicians; Operatic poets); 'Three performers,' and 'French music in England.' There is now such widespread interest in French music that the volume appears at a good moment. It is enjoyable from cover to cover, and has a literary quality all too rare in books on music. Not the least interesting of its contents is the translator's preface, in which, after giving particulars of M. Jean-Aubry, Mr. Evans tells us how he himself first became an enthusiast for modern French music twenty years ago, viâ Borodin and other Russians. Since then he has written and lectured much on the subject. On the whole, however, he has perhaps done no better service to French music than by his translation of M. Jean-Aubry's admirable book.

Worship and Music: Suggestions for Clergy and Choir-masters. By George Gardner, M.A., Mus. B., Archdeacon of Aston.

[S.P.C.K.]

Church Music. By Sydney H. Nicholson.

[The Faith Press.]

Archdeacon Gardner's book will provide a wholesome and stimulating shock to many who are apparently perfectly satisfied that all is as it should be in the conduct of our church services. In the opinion of the author, whose duties as an archdeacon have given him wide opportunities for hearing services of all sorts both in town and country, the state of things from a musical point of view is, generally speaking, very unsatisfactory. Accordingly Archdeacon Gardner—who, it should be noted, is a qualified musician—sets himself out to answer the question, 'How can the art of music be used to most advantage in the services of our ordinary churches?' He considers that 'one of the most fatal hindrances to a wise use of music in parochial services has been the notion that every small church must attempt something in the style affected by cathedrals.' This mistaken idea has, he thinks, been fostered by choral festivals, 'which have thrust upon village choirs a kind of music altogether unsuited for their home performance.' Instead of being content to do small things really well, many parish churches unfortunately prefer to do big things badly, or to inflict upon us 'pretentious and weak compositions that are only a weariness to any true lover of music.' Broadly speaking, the author advocates a simpler style of music and a more careful discrimination between that which is strong and dignified and the weak, sentimental type which has had such a wide vogue for so many years past. There are some trenchant criticisms on the words and music of many hymns in common use, and some valuable remarks on the treatment of this branch of the church's music, with a view to securing a more varied and artistic rendering. The many shortcomings so commonly met with in the singing of the Psalms, especially when sung to Anglican chants, are also dealt with. In regard to the Communion Service, the author pleads for the adoption of a severer type of music than that generally used. He would also like to see the congregation taking a greater share in the singing of this service.

Mr. Nicholson's little volume is above all temperate and practical. We do not recall any book on Church music in which these qualities are so strikingly in evidence throughout. We are glad, too, to see a cathedral organist so able and willing to consider the needs of the ordinary parish church. The chapter dealing with 'Types of Musical Service' sets forth what should be attempted in village church, parish church, and cathedral. There is a good deal of sound advice on choir-training, a candid chapter on 'The Power of the Clergy,' guidance as to the choice of music, consideration of 'Possibilities of Reform,' and an appendix containing a brief description of the character, degree of difficulty, &c., of some settings of the service. There is also a chronological chart of English Church music composers. We are tempted to quote and discuss some of the many interesting points raised by Mr. Nicholson. Lack of space, however, forbids, and we must content ourselves with a warm recommendation of a book full of wise counsel.

The Musical Quarterly. Vol. v., No. 1.

[Schirmer.]

This excellent magazine begins its fifth volume with a number well up to its standard. Henry F. Gilbert writes on 'Originality,' Victor Walter contributes some reminiscences of Anton Rubinstein, and O. G. Sonneck treats of Guillaume Lekeu, in a lengthy and interesting article. Julien Tiersot gives a selection of Gounod's letters, and there are also papers dealing with Hungarian Music, Co-ordination of Musical Studies, the Chevalier de Saint-George, Negro Music, the Minuet in Handel's 'Messiah,' &c.

Letters to the Editor.

'THE QUESTION OF FESTIVALS: A PLEA FOR THEIR CONTINUANCE.'

SIR,—I have read with special interest Mr. Klein's article on 'The question of Festivals' in your current issue. May I point out an important omission in the list of first performances of new works? In 1889, Sir Alexander Mackenzie's beautiful work, 'The dream of Jubal,' was written for and performed for the first time at the Jubilee of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society, on which occasion I had the honour of undertaking the very important recitation part, which I have given since at almost every performance of the work. It is believed to contain some of Sir Alexander's very finest music, and has been given between fifty and sixty times (including five performances in Canada), a somewhat exceptional circumstance in the case of modern cantatas.—Yours, &c.,

CHARLES FRY.

64, Eaton Avenue, N.W.-3,
February 1, 1919.

WHEN TO APPLAUD.

SIR,—It has struck me often while listening to a musical performance, that the outburst of applause which greets the close of the piece jars on the atmosphere created by the performer. This is most marked in works which make for a morendo finish. Such an ending creates an atmosphere of mystery, and the silence which follows has in it something of a spell. Surely such an effect should be given every chance to impress the audience. This, one feels, could be very easily contrived, if it were to become a point of musical etiquette for the audience to withhold their applause for a few moments after the close of a performance. This would allow time for the dramatic effect of Silence following on Sound to be fully appreciated, and would not only please the musical audience, but also the performer. I would very much like to know what other readers of the Musical Times think on this subject.—Yours, &c.,

97, St. George's Road,
Pimlico.

MARGARET GORDON.

AN OBSCURE WORK OF BALFE'S.

SIR,—In reply to your correspondent, Mr. Paul Jerrard, it may interest him to know that I once had a copy of Balfe's Opera. It was a complete work—a large quarto, printed in Vienna and entitled 'Vier Hamons Kinder.'

There is much good work in the early Balfe style. I also possessed a book of the words when it was produced at the Princess's Theatre under the title of 'The Castle of Aymon.' The song 'Sentinel' was sung by Leffler, and became popular at the time. Charles Horn (son of C. E. Horn) was in the cast, as well as a Miss Connel, whose ability seems to have been of no account.—Yours, &c.,

BURNHAM W. HORNER.

[Several letters are unavoidably held over.—ED., M. T.]

Obituary.

We regret to record the following deaths:

RICHARD ALEXANDER STREATFIELD. He was born in 1866, and educated at Oundle, and Pembroke College, Cambridge. In 1889 he was appointed assistant in the Printed Book Department of the British Museum. From 1898 to 1912 he was music critic for the Daily Graphic. He wrote several books on musical subjects—'Masters of Italian Music,' 'The Opera,' and 'Handel.' As literary executor to Samuel Butler, he brought out the posthumous novel 'The Way of All Flesh' (1903), Butler's essays on 'Life, Art, and Science,' and miscellaneous writings.

MRS. EMIL BEHNKE, widow of the late Emil Behnke. On the death of her husband, Mrs. Behnke carried on his voice-training practice. She made a close study of stammering, and wrote a treatise on the subject; and was author also of a book on 'The Speaking Voice' which has been widely read. She continued active work until a fortnight before her death at the age of eighty-five. During the past few years she had generously given her services to hospital patients and soldiers and sailors.

THE MUSICIANS' Y.M.C.A. GIFT.

This is a scheme for providing additional musical facilities for the members of His Majesty's Forces in the 2,600 Huts and Centres of the Y.M.C.A. at home and abroad.

Committee.—The Editors of all the Musical Papers of the Country.

Hon. Treasurer.—Major H. Walford Davies, Mus. Doc.

Organizing Secretaries.—Percy A. Scholes, Mus. Bac., A.R.C.M.; Katharine E. Eggar, A.R.A.M.

Assistant Organizing Secretary.—Miss Edna Palmer.

Hon. Organizer of National Collection of Instruments and Music.—Herman Darewski.

Office.—Y.M.C.A., Universities House, 25, Bloomsbury Square, W.C.-1.

Total collected to January 31, 1919	£	s.	d.
Total from January 12 to February 11th, 1919 ..	3	27	16 0
	115	11	11

(a) PROCEEDS OF CONCERTS AND ENTERTAINMENTS FROM JANUARY 12 TO FEBRUARY 11, 1919.

Cheltenham	Mr. C. A. Morris, concert during his Collection campaign	£	s.	d.
Crouch End	Miss Bessie Jones's Concert	27	0	0
Grantchester	Mr. W. R. S. Wray, Recital	27	1	6
Huntingdon	The Huntingdon Carol-Singers, per Mr. A. Lacy	0	16	6
Liverpool	Mr. W. E. Bridson, Concerts and Recital ..	5	14	9
London	Miss E. M. G. Reed's Montague House Choir (Messrs. Evans Bros.), Collections at Christmas ..	13	12	0
Wanstead	Miss Florence Snell: Pupils' Musical Evening ..	15	10	11
		10	0	8
		£92	16	4

(b) ORGAN RECITALS.

Mayfield	Mr. E. Coppard	£	s.	d.
Newport	Mr. R. M. Tait	3	13	7
Wisbech	Mr. W. H. Sparrow ..	5	0	0
		4	0	0
		£12	13	7

(c) DONATIONS OR COLLECTIONS.

Mr. J. L. Lewens	£	s.	d.
Mr. Adam Scott	5	0	0
Leach & Co. (per Mr. Erlebach)	2	2	0
Enoch & Sons (2nd Donation)	2	2	0
Miss M. V. Emanuel	1	1	0
Mr. E. W. Shackel	1	1	0
Miss E. B. Allen	1	1	0
Mrs. J. E. Tully	1	1	0
Miss J. Reckitt	1	1	0
J. K. U.	1	1	0
Mr. F. Midlane	0	10	6
Miss W. Bennett	0	10	0
Mrs. M. A. Hollings	0	10	0
Miss S. Burns, L.L.C.M.	0	5	0
Corporal J. Muir-Johnstone, R.A.M.C. ..	0	5	0
Miss B. D. Clark, Sale of Waste Paper ..	0	5	0
Miss S. M. E. Boucher	0	2	6
Mrs. Simpson	0	2	0
	£20	2	0

ORGAN RECITALS IN AID OF THE MUSICIANS' GIFT.

LONDON.

- March 1, at 6.30, All Saints', Tooting Graveney, Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson.
 March 8, at 5, St. James', Muswell Hill, Mr. J. D. Cunningham.
 March 8, at 3, Holy Trinity, Sloane Street, Mr. H. L. Balfour.
 March 15, at 5, Congregational Church, Lyndhurst Road, Hampstead, Mr. W. Wolstenholme.
 March 24, at 8, Park Chapel, Crouch End, Mr. Reginald Goss Custard.
 March 24, at 8, Brixton Independent Church, Mr. H. G. Ley.
 March 25, at 8, Parish Church, Croydon, Mr. H. Leslie-Smith.
 Four Tuesdays, at 1-15, St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate, Dr. Borland (dates not yet decided upon).

PROVINCES.

March 3, at Southwell Cathedral, Mr. H. W. Tupper.

Among recitals announced to take place during February were the following:

Christ Church, Malvern, Mr. A. Ruddock.
Ripon Cathedral, Mr. Moody.
Lincoln Cathedral, Dr. Bennett.
St. Deny's Church, Southampton, Mr. Herbert Deavin.
Hereford Cathedral, Mr. Percy Hull.
Baptist Church, Colne, Mr. E. Latham.
Holmwood Parish Church, Miss G. M. Pike.
St. Aidan's Church, Leeds, Mr. Matthias Turton.
St. Sebastian's Church, Mellow, Derbyshire, Mr. J. K. Zorian.

Madame Bertha Moore, O.B.E., has very kindly consented to work for the Musicians' Gift. She will give her Song and Story Recital and Lecture, and make an appeal for the fund if a hostess will provide a drawing-room, audience, and an accompanist.

Ladies who would like to give their friends a most delightful entertainment, and at the same time benefit the Musicians' Gift, cannot do better than invite Madame Bertha Moore. Where large drawing-rooms are not available, several hostesses might combine to take a hall or induce the Mayor to lend a room. For particulars of the scheme and a specimen programme and invitation card, application should be made to Miss Katharine Eggar, Musicians' Gift, 25, Bloomsbury Square, W.C.-1.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

A students' recital of organ music was given in the Duke's Hall on Monday afternoon, February 3, at which an excellent and well varied programme of solo organ music, interspersed with vocal and violin solos, was rendered. The recital opened with an admirable performance of Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in C minor by Miss Florence Cook. Other items worthy of special mention were the first movement from Rheinberger's Sonata in D minor, played by Allan D. Bush, and Mr. Charles Macpherson's Prelude and Fugue in A flat played by Ronald Chamberlain, the winner of the La Fontaine prize at the recent A.R.C.O. examination. An interesting and rarely heard composition was the first movement of Rheinberger's Trio for organ, violin, and 'cello, played by Miss Frances Scott, Miss Chalmers, and Miss Phillips.

A chamber concert was given on Monday, February 17, when the programme included the first movement from Brahms's String Sextet in B flat, a movement from a String Quartet by Verdi, the variations from Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonata in E (Op. 109), Liszt's Concert study in D flat, and songs by Frederick Keel and Harry Isaacs, and other items.

On Monday and Tuesday evenings, February 24, 25, two short one-Act operas were performed under the direction of Mr. F. Corder and Mr. Henry Beauchamp. One of these, 'The Nightingale and the Rose,' was composed by the late Cuthbert Nunn, a former student, and the other, entitled 'Drinos and Cassandra,' by Arthur Sandford, a present student. The programme also included scenes from a ballet, 'Princess Gioia,' written by Colin Macleod Campbell, an ex-student, and produced under the direction of Madame La Foy.

The announcement of the death of Mr. Henry R. Evers, who passed away in his sleep on January 13, was doubtless read with deep regret by many past students of the R.A.M., as well as by many of the present ones. In length of service Mr. Evers was the senior professor at the R.A.M., he having been a pupil of Sir George Macfarren, and afterwards his assistant. For over thirty years he had charge of the sight-singing and ear-training classes, and by this means came into contact with most of the students. He had an intimate knowledge of the doings at the Academy in early times, and his mind was a storehouse of its traditions and customs. He was highly esteemed both by professors and students.

The St. George's Glee Union, founded in 1869, has recently given its six hundredth consecutive monthly concert—a wonderful record, of which the singers and their conductor, Mr. George McCann, may well be proud.

ENGLISH-MADE VIOLINS.

As our readers know, a very interesting competition was decided at Æolian Hall on January 4, when Mr. W. W. Cobbett's prize for the best English-made violin was awarded to Mr. Arthur Richardson, of Crediton. Opinion was unanimous as to the excellence of the instruments submitted. We quote the following from Mr. Cobbett's speech in announcing the result:

British violin-makers have a future if England so wills it. Frankly she has not always willed it, where arts and crafts are concerned. She is keenly appreciative of what comes from abroad, and I will not say that is a bad thing (if not overdone), but she is often blind to what is happening, if you will excuse the vulgarity, under her very nose. Some of the violins submitted to me are among the best new instruments I have yet played upon, yet there is at present no real school of violin-making in this country. The bulk of our makers have had no professional training whatever, but have begun as self-taught amateurs, groping their way from the dark to the light, but achieving, in spite of that drawback, remarkable results. Were there an Academy of Violin Making in existence, guiding young hands the right way to go from the first, encouraging them to study acoustics, wood-carving in all its branches, decorative art work and so forth, were they helped by the possessors of master violins willing to lend their instruments from time to time as models—in short, were empirical replaced by scientific methods, British luthiers should be able to supply the musical world with what it wants, new violins in great numbers of distinguished tonal quality and artistic workmanship to take the place of the old which are gradually wearing out. Already there are not enough to go round.

Following the presentation of prizes, the winning violin was sold by auction for £33, being bought by Sergt. H. J. Unwin, of the Canadian Army. The money was handed to the Music in War-time Committee. Mr. Cobbett purchased the 'runner-up.' A detailed account of Mr. Richardson's violin, with other particulars of interest, appeared in the February number of The Strad.

Sixty Years Ago.

From the Musical Times of March, 1859:

SATANELLA.—Miss Louisa Pyne's celebrated Ballad, 'The Power of Love.' Price, 2s. 'Anything more affecting and beautiful we have never heard.'—Morning Chronicle. 'Tuneful, mysterious, charming.'—Athenæum. 'The most charming melody Mr. Balfe has ever written.'—Daily Telegraph.

Boosey & Sons' Musical Library, 28, Holles Street.

FIRST VIOLIN STRINGS that will not break even if tuned up to LA; never turning false, even from perspiration, and always in tune. One returned for 6 stamps, or six for 24, sent to Mr. Youens, Assembly Rooms, Poplar, E.

(Footnotes to article 'Voice and Vocal Art,' by Sabilla Novello):

The most extraordinary example of steady intonation occurred within my hearing during the rehearsal of a new opera, at the Scala Theatre, in Milan, Clara Novello being prima donna. A finale, consisting of a double quartet and chorus, was to be performed without orchestral accompaniment; it commenced—gradually the chorus sank, and the soli voices began to be dragged down also, with the exception of the principal treble, which continued its course at unaltered pitch. The effect on the ear became excruciating as the large body of voices and the predominant soprano part progressed simultaneously at the distance of half a tone. The first violin, himself partly misled, and fancying the prima donna might be getting sharp, sounded her note upon his instrument, but found, to his delight, that it was in perfect unison. A murmur of applause ran through the orchestra at this wonderful proof of independent intonation. The piece was rehearsed again and again, but was ultimately changed into a quintet, it being found impossible to keep the chorus steadily up to proper pitch.

The singing of recitative is too much neglected in the modern school of music. Such singers as Malibran, Pasta, Duprez, Lablache, and others, produced some of their most thrilling dramatic effects by recitative; indeed, very few bars of this musical declamation will enable cultivated listeners to recognise at once a true and able artist. It is deplorable to witness how, in the present day, recitatives are either entirely omitted, or executed with negligent indifference, as something unimportant in vocal art.

Oyes! has any found a lad.

March 1, 1919.

SET FOR FOUR VOICES

BY

THOMAS TOMKINS, 1622.

Transcribed by H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Comodo.

SOPRANO. f O - - - yes! Has an - y

ALTO. f O - yes! Has an - y found a lad, a lad, . .

TENOR.

BASS.

Comodo. ♩ = 120.

f

(For practice only.)

found a lad, a lad, has an - y found a lad, has a lad, has an - y found a lad, a f Has an - y found a lad, has an - y found a lad, has f O - - -

an - y found, has an - y found . . . a lad, With pur - ple wings fair lad, has an - y found a lad, With pur - ple wings an - y found a lad, a lad, With pur - ple wings

- yes! Has an - y found a lad, With pur - ple wings fair

f

paint - ed, fair paint - ed, fair paint - ed,

fair paint - ed, . . . fair paint - ed, fair paint - ed, fair paint - ed, fair paint - ed, fair paint - ed, In paint - ed, fair paint - ed, fair paint - ed,

mf p mp

mp legato. In na - ked beau - ty clad, in na - ked, na - mp legato. In na - ked beau - legato. na - ked beau - ty clad, in beau - ty clad, mp legato. In na - ked beau - ty clad, legato.

First system of the musical score. It features a vocal line and a piano accompaniment. The key signature is one sharp (F#), and the time signature is 4/4. The vocal line begins with a melodic phrase in the treble clef, followed by a rest in the second measure, and then continues with a descending line. The piano accompaniment consists of a bass line in the bass clef and a treble line in the treble clef, both providing harmonic support. The lyrics are: "ked beau - ty clad, in na - ked, na - ked, na - ked beau - ty clad, With ty clad, in beau - ty clad, in na - ked, na - ked beau - ty clad, With beau - - ty clad, in na - ked beau - ty clad, With". Dynamic markings include mf (mezzo-forte) at the beginning and end of the system.

Second system of the musical score. The vocal line continues with a series of eighth notes and rests, emphasizing the lyrics. The piano accompaniment features a steady bass line and a treble line with chords. The lyrics are: "bow and ar - rows, bow and ar - rows, With bow and ar - rows, with bow and ar - rows, with bow and bow and ar - rows, with bow and ar - rows, with bow and ar - rows, bow and ar - rows, with bow and ar - rows, with bow and ar - rows, bow and ar - rows, with bow and ar - rows, with bow and ar - rows". Dynamic markings include mf (mezzo-forte) and f (forte).

Third system of the musical score. The vocal line concludes with a phrase that ends in a question mark. The piano accompaniment provides a final harmonic setting. The lyrics are: "ar - rows taint - ed, bow and ar - rows, ar - rows taint - ed? ar - rows taint - ed, bow and ar - rows taint - ed? taint - ed, bow and ar - rows taint - ed? ar - rows taint - ed, bow and ar - rows taint - ed?". Dynamic markings include f (forte).

p legato.

Here, a - las, here, a - las, here

p legato.

Here, a - las, here, a - las, here close,

p legato.

Here, a - las, here, a - las, here close, here close.

p legato.

Here, a - las, a - las, here, a - las, here

close, here close he li

here close, . . . here close he li eth.

he li

close, here close he li

mf

eth. Take him quick be - fore he fli - - eth, be - fore he . . .

mf

Take him quick be - fore he fli

mf

eth. Take him quick be - fore he fli eth, eth.

fli - - - eth,
poco cres.
 - - - eth, take him, take him quick be - fore he fli - - -
poco cres.
 be - - - fore . . . he fli - - -
poco cres.
 take him quick be - fore he fli - - -
poco cres.
 take him quick be - fore he fli - - - eth,
 eth, take him quick be - fore he fli - - - eth, take him quick be - fore he fli - - - eth,
 eth,

First system of the musical score. It consists of four staves. The top two staves are vocal parts with lyrics: "fli - - - - - eth, take him quick be - fore he" and "eth, be - fore he". The bottom two staves are piano accompaniment. The key signature is one sharp (F#) and the time signature is 2/4. The piano part features a rhythmic melody in the right hand and a supporting bass line in the left hand.

Second system of the musical score. It consists of four staves. The top two staves are vocal parts with lyrics: "fli - - - - - eth, be -" and "be - fore". The bottom two staves are piano accompaniment. The key signature is one sharp (F#) and the time signature is 2/4. The piano part continues the rhythmic melody from the first system.

- fore he fli - eth, take . . him quick be - he fli - - - - eth, take him quick be - fore he fli -
 . . he fli - - - eth, be - fore he fli - - - eth, be -
 - - - - eth, he fli - - - - - eth,

Allargando.

fore he fli - - - eth, be - fore he fli - - - eth.
 - - - - - eth, be - fore he . . . fli - eth.
 - fore he fli - - - eth, be - fore he fli - - - eth.
 be - fore he fli - - - - - eth.

Allargando.

London Concerts.

QUEEN'S HALL.

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.

A very large audience attended the Symphony concert on January 25. The outstanding feature was a fine performance of Brahms's C minor Symphony, after which Schelling's 'Fantastic' Suite for pianoforte and orchestra cut a rather poor figure. Only an exceptionally good specimen of the lighter kinds of music could be heard to advantage in such circumstances, and the Schelling Suite is a long way from being that. M. Moiseiwitsch played brilliantly, but we wished he had found something less superficial on which to lavish his gifts. Those of us who were drawn by the prospect of hearing Ravel's 'Valse nobles et sentimentales' were disappointed, the composer's 'Pavane' being substituted. No announcement of the change was made, so we were not surprised to hear some of the less sophisticated members of the audience crediting Ravel with curious ideas as to waltz-rhythm. In the absence of Miss Louise Dale, Madame Alvarez appeared, singing operatic excerpts by Massenet and Debussy. Sir Henry Wood conducted.

An enjoyable programme was submitted at the Symphony Concert on February 8. The Orchestra played Haydn's Symphony No. 13, and the Prelude to Act 2 of 'The Wreckers,' Madame Calvé sang 'Voi che sapete,' Duparc's 'L'Invitation au voyage,' and an encore from 'Carmen.' Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto was delightfully played, with Mr. Leonard Borwick at the keyboard. There was a very large audience. Sir Henry Wood conducted.

ROYAL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

At the second concert of the season, on January 30, the interest was centred in Delius's new Violin Concerto. This work breaks fresh ground in several respects. It is in one movement, and the solo instrument is employed almost continuously. Of development there is little. The work is a long soliloquy by the soloist, against a delicately-beautiful harmonic background. The mood is perhaps too consistently reflective for a work of such length, and we felt, too, that a little more rest for the soloist would have conduced to variety. He was sometimes kept busy without any proportionate result. For example, the section in which the orchestra plays a kind of dance measure was not helped by the somewhat fidgety figuration given to the solo instrument. But when all is said, there remains the impression of a work full of singular and often haunting beauty. Mr. Albert Sammons played it as if he loved it, and Mr. Adrian Boult and the orchestra provided the right delicate and flexible accompaniment. The composer received an ovation. The balance of the programme was made up of Elgar's Funeral March from 'Grania and Diarmid,' played in memory of Prince John, Vaughan Williams's 'The Wasps' Overture, Mozart's rather tedious Serenade for wind instruments (five movements—four too many!), Bach's ever-green Third 'Brandenburg' Concerto, and Schumann's B flat Symphony. Mr. Adrian Boult conducted throughout admirably.

WIGMORE HALL.

Mr. Frederic Lamond's return to the London concert-platform was welcomed by a crowded audience on January 25. The great pianist was in his best form, and his playing of Franck's 'Prelude, Choral, and Fugue,' Beethoven's 'Appassionata' Sonata, and Chopin's B flat minor Sonata, was something to be remembered.

Mr. Harold Samuel is a pianist who should be more frequently heard. At his recital on January 28 he delighted his hearers with some remarkably good playing. His programme was well off the beaten track, giving us a group of old pieces by Couperin, Dandrien, and Paradies, with the 'Goldberg' Variations of Bach, and some Debussy. The Variations are so rarely played that many musicians have come to regard them as merely monuments of skill, like the 'Art of Fugue.' Mr. Samuel showed that they are as purely musical as the best of Bach. He is to be commended, first, for his courage in playing so unfamiliar and lengthy a work (it takes forty minutes to play), and second, for his skill in maintaining the interest throughout. So far from his audience being sated with Bach, they demanded more, and got it in the shape of a Choral Prelude.

After three years' absence in Australia and America, Miss Katharine Goodson made a welcome re-appearance on February 1. In a programme that included a Grieg Ballade, Grovlez's 'Fileuse,' Debussy's Toccata, Brahms's F minor Sonata, Schumann's 'Scenes of Childhood,' and an attractive group of pieces by Arthur Hinton, Miss Goodson displayed once more the gifts that have long since placed her in the front rank of pianists of to-day.

The London Chamber Concert Society gave the second of a series of concerts on February 4. Mr. Albert Sammons, Madame Guilhermina Suggia, and Mr. William Murdoch gave fine performances of Beethoven's Trio, Op. 97, and Tchaikovsky's Trio in A minor. Miss Olga Haley's singing added much to the success of the occasion—none the less because her songs were of native origin.

On February 6, Miss Myra Hess gave a recital that was in all respects delightful. She played Franck's 'Prelude Choral, and Fugue,' Schumann's 'Papillons,' a Mozart Sonata, Ravel's 'Pavane' and 'Alborada,' and Bax's 'Maynight in the Ukraine.' There was a large audience.

Mr. Lamond followed up his re-appearance with a Beethoven recital on February 8, repeating the programme two days later, and playing on each occasion to a crowded hall.

Mr. Murray Davey's unusual gifts as a singer-composer were shown to advantage at his recital on February 11, in a programme drawn from Mozart, Flégier, Harold Samuel, &c., with some original songs of his own. Mr. Harold Samuel played solos and accompanied.

The Philharmonic Quartet gave the first of three subscription concerts on February 13. They opened with a jolly Haydn Quartet, and then gave the first performance of Arnold Bax's 'Irish Elegy,' for string quartet, English horn, and harp, a beautiful and deeply-felt work which made a great impression and should be heard again soon. The other novelty was a set of three pieces by Stravinsky. They proved to be essays in discord, mercifully brief. The audience laughed indulgently, but the admirers of 'Petrouchka' and 'L'Oiseau de Feu' shook their heads. The pieces will be played at the next two concerts, presumably in order that they may be thoroughly understood. We wish the time could be better spent—on a repetition of the Bax 'Elegy,' for example. The concert ended with York Bowen's attractive Quartet in D minor. There was a good attendance, and the playing was admirable.

ÆOLIAN HALL.

Mr. Plunket Greene gave his hearers a feast of good things on January 22. As usual, he introduced some new songs. The novelty on this occasion was a set of six Irish songs by Charles Wood, two of which met with so much approval that they were repeated. The composer accompanied. The programme included also songs by Quilter, Parry, Stanford, and Walford Davies, as well as some folk-songs. Mr. S. Liddle accompanied perfectly.

On February 1 the London String Quartet gave the first performance of the revised version of Delius's Quartet. As a result of the overhauling, the work should be assured of frequent performance. The players gave also a brilliant performance of Schumann's Quintet, in which they were joined by Miss Irene Scharrer.

STEINWAY HALL.

A new String Quartet by Cyril Scott was produced at Mr. Isidore de Lara's concert of British Music on January 30. It proved to be very attractive, especially the delightful Scherzo and the eloquent slow movement. The Philharmonic Quartet did it justice. Mr. Scott played pianoforte pieces of his own, Mr. Louis Fleury gave some flute solos, and Mr. Philip Ritte sang Vaughan Williams's fine cycle 'On Wenlock Edge.'

ALBERT HALL.

THE ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' attracted an enormous audience on February 1, despite wretched climatic conditions. The soloists were Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Gervase Elwes, and Mr. Frederick Ranalow. Sir Frederick Bridge conducted, and Mr. H. L. Balfour was at the organ. With all giving of their best, the familiar music proved as appealing as ever.

By way of tribute to Paderewski, Mr. Landon Ronald played Elgar's 'Polonia' on February 2. Many Poles were present, and the work was warmly received. Why is it so rarely heard?

ALEXANDRA PALACE CHORAL SOCIETY.

This fine body of singers performed Elgar's 'Caractacus' at the Northern Polytechnic on February 1. The soloists were Miss Florence Mellors, Mr. Alfred Heather, Mr. Frederick Norcup, and Mr. Fraser Gange. Under Mr. Allen Gill's direction, the choir sang with notable skill and vitality.

OTHER CONCERTS AND RECITALS.

Miss Silvia Parisotti gave a recital at Æolian Hall on January 25, with a programme consisting almost entirely of British songs. She is at present inclined to let her temperament get the better of her. With more control, she should go far. Amongst the best of her songs were five by Mr. William Murdoch and two by Miss Ellen Tuckfield, who shared the accompaniments and played solos.

The Society of Women Musicians honoured the memory of their founder, Liza Lehmann, on January 27, by giving a memorial concert at Æolian Hall, the programme being drawn from Madame Lehmann's most attractive music. There was a very large audience, and the concert was repeated on February 3.

Mlle. Evelyné Brélia, of the Nice Opera, showed herself to be a clever, if somewhat unequal, singer at Steinway Hall on January 28. She was excellent in songs by Ravel, Chausson, Debussy, and Rousset. Mrs. Norman O'Neill provided pleasant relief with solos by Scarlatti, Debussy, and others. Mlle. Ophélie Vertroost accompanied.

Mr. Ernest Whitfield gave an enjoyable violin recital at Wigmore Hall on January 30, playing Mozart's Concerto in A, an unaccompanied Bach movement, and Ireland's second Sonata, the last-named with Mr. Herbert Fryer at the pianoforte. Miss Amy Grimson accompanied the Concerto.

Miss Beatrice Bellini made a successful début at Æolian Hall on January 31, her programme including Schumann's 'Carnaval' and pieces by Chopin, Henselt, Ireland, Arthur Somervell, Tausig, and her teacher, Amina Goodwin, who joined Miss Bellini in Bach's C minor Concerto for two pianofortes.

Miss Helen Bidder gave a recital at Æolian Hall on January 31, showing neatness and delicacy in pieces by Ravel ('Sonatine'), Schumann, Bach, Leo Livens, Paul Harrow, and herself. With Mr. Lionel Tertis she played the Romance from Dale's Suite for viola and pianoforte.

At Bromley, on February 1, Madame Suggia joined Miss Gwynne Kimpton's Ladies' Orchestra in a successful performance of Saint-Saëns's A minor Cello Concerto. The orchestra played Elgar's 'Dream Children' and Balfour Gardiner's 'Shepherd Fennel's Dance.' Miss Mildred Allingham sang.

Miss Evelyn Jansz, a pianist from Ceylon, gave a recital at Steinway Hall on February 1. She played in capital style works by Chopin, Cyril Scott, MacDowell, and Scriabin, and some effective pieces of her own composition—a Barcarolle, Intermezzo, Caprice, and a couple of Oriental 'Souvenirs.'

On the same day the Strolling Players' Orchestra gave a very attractive concert at Westminster Central Hall, in aid of the Y.M.C.A. 'Musicians' Gift.' Mr. George Baker sang, and Mr. Joseph Ivimey conducted.

Mr. Harry Field gave a Liszt recital at Steinway Hall on February 1. He showed the requisite strength and brilliance, as well as an appreciation of the oft-forgotten fact that Liszt at his best is more than mere virtuoso-fodder. We hope, however, that Mr. Field, when choosing his next programme, will remember that Liszt is not one of the very few composers who come well out of the one-man-programme test.

Miss Zoë Addy gave her first violin recital at Wigmore Hall on February 2, playing Sonatas by Brahms and Joseph Gibbs, both in D minor. Her performance showed her to be very much in earnest—perhaps a little too much so. She would be well advised to include a group of light pieces in future recitals. Miss Helen Guest joined her in the Brahms work, and also played solos very tastefully.

Miss Winifred Small and Miss Katharine Doubleday gave a recital of Sonatas for violin and pianoforte at Æolian Hall on February 3, playing admirably in examples by Brahms, Saint-Saëns, McEwen (a delightful work), and two movements from a Suite by York Bowen.

Miss Dorothy Brook, a violinist, made a first appearance at Æolian Hall on February 4, showing promise in Bach's Concerto in E major (accompanied by the Philharmonic Quartet), a Sonata by Festing, and some smaller pieces.

Mr. Joseph Coleman, a young Russian violinist, made a successful début at Queen's Hall on February 12.

Mr. Martin Shaw announces a concert of his own songs (including some new ones) at Æolian Hall on April 1, at 2.45. The singers will be Miss Ursula Greville and Mr. George Parker, with Mr. Shaw at the pianoforte.

Pergolesi's 'La Serva Padrona' has been successfully revived at the Lyric, Hammersmith, under the English title 'The Maid turned Mistress.'

ENGLISH SONG AND DANCE.

Sir Henry Hadow was chairman at a meeting held in Wigmore Hall on January 21 to discuss folk-music propaganda. The speakers were Mr. Plunket Greene, Dr. Arthur Somervell, Mr. Granville Barker, and Mr. Cecil Sharp, who dealt respectively with the value of folk-songs to the public singer, their educational importance, the place of folk-song and dance in a democracy and their possibilities in the drama, and the way in which they might permeate the national life.

Lady Mary Trefusis, President of the English Folk-Dance Society, announced messages of sympathy from numerous influential persons, including Sir Frank Benson, Mr. Adrian Boulton, the Poet-Laureate, Mr. G. K. Chesterton, Mr. Ben Greet, Mr. Rudyard Kipling, Mr. E. V. Lucas, Mr. John Masefield, Sir Henry Newbolt, Sir A. Quiller Couch, Miss Ellen Terry, and many leading lights in various departments of music, among them being Professors Allen, Bantock, and Buck, Dr. Ethel Smythe, Mr. Benjamin Dale, Major Walford Davies, and Dr. Bairstow. The following motion was carried unanimously:

'If the English Folk-Dance Society is prepared to enlarge its activities, and is ready to organize an appeal for funds to secure a suitable headquarters in London (to further the dissemination of folk-music and folk-dances, to establish a reference library and a centre for practice, experiment, and instruction), this meeting appoints an advisory committee of the E.F.D.S. to consider ways and means.'

To this committee the names of Messrs. W. W. Cobbett, Geoffrey Shaw, Percy Scholes were added.

Music in the Provinces.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

BIRMINGHAM.

The re-organization of the local Police Band was discussed at a meeting of the Birmingham Watch Committee, and the result has been that Mr. T. Appleby Matthews has been appointed bandmaster at a commencing salary of £250 per annum. In order to provide an efficient band it was estimated that at least forty-five performers would be required. The Judicial Sub-Committee stated that fifty-one applications were received to the advertisement for a bandmaster. The appointment came as a great surprise to all local musicians, and whether Mr. Matthews will be able to fulfil all his professional duties without sacrificing some of his engagements is doubtful. Hitherto the local Police Band has consisted of a brass and reed band of about twenty-five musicians, and probably under the new conditions strings will be added. A part of the scheme in connection with the re-organization is that free popular concerts shall be given on Sunday evenings weekly in the Town Hall during the winter months and possibly in the summer.

Mr. Appleby Matthews's Sunday Evening Concerts at the Scala Theatre are still in full swing, and the house is as a rule crowded. The band has now reached the artistic stage, and if more rehearsals could be allotted the results would be very advantageous, especially in the treatment of the symphonies by the great classical masters. These concerts have now been given without a break since the beginning of October last year, and will be continued until Easter, a remarkable achievement for Birmingham.

In place of the annual Pantomime, the Prince of Wales Theatre again gave a five weeks' season of Sullivan operas, which commenced on Boxing Night and terminated at the end of January. The famous D'Oyly Carte Opera Company were of course the exponents as usual, every opera being represented on traditional lines and with that charm of completeness in every detail that has always characterised their efforts. The business done throughout the season was phenomenal.

Mr. Wassell's second orchestral concert of the current series was given at the Town Hall on January 26, the chief items on the programme including the Overtures to 'Ruy Blas' and 'Tannhäuser,' Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, the Andante Cantabile from Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony, Ravel's dainty 'Pavane pour une infante défunte,' Massenet's 'Scènes Pittoresques,' Berlioz's 'Marche Hongroise' from 'Damnation of Faust,' and Delibes's Pizzicato and Valse from the 'Sylvia' Ballet. Mr. Wassell had under his beat an efficient and well-selected rank and file of our best local instrumentalists, and he also specially secured the services of the well-known horn-player Van der Meerschen for the various horn solos embodied in the compositions performed during the evening. There is certainly a great future for Mr. Wassell, not only as an orchestral conductor but also as a choir-trainer and conductor, and each time he comes before the public considerable progress is noticeable in matters of rhythm and phrasing. The vocalist on this occasion was Madame Jeanne Jouve, of the Paris Opéra House, a deep contralto whose artistic singing of 'Mon cœur s'ouvre à ta voix,' from 'Samson and Delilah,' denoted an experienced artist.

The Birmingham Choral Union's performance of 'Elijah' at the Town Hall on February 8 attracted a large audience in spite of the many Saturday night counter-attractions. The singing of the choir was excellent and telling, and once more the beautiful and ringing tone-quality of the sopranos proved a distinctive feature. Mr. Wassell conducted the oratorio quite on traditional lines, and he secured perfect attack and ensemble and nobility of expression. In the matter of tempi he took a medium course between those adopted by Costa and Richter. The principal artists were Madame Laura Taylor, Miss Maud Sherringdan, Mr. Sydney Halliley, and Mr. James Howell, an excellent quartet of soloists. Mr. C. W. Perkins presided at the organ.

Mr. Hubert S. Brown was fortunate to secure M. Arthur de Greef, the eminent Belgian pianist, for his second concert of the season, which took place at the Midland Institute on February 8, and attracted a crowded assembly that completely filled the large Lecture Theatre. The whole programme was devoted to a recital of Grieg's best-known pianoforte pieces, interpolated by some of Grieg's finest songs excellently sung by Miss Margaret Harrison and Miss Mary Foster. M. de Greef is undoubtedly the greatest living exponent of Grieg's pianoforte music, for nothing escapes him. He makes every note and phrase intelligibly and clearly defined, and his interpretations are free from exaggeration of any kind. No wonder the audience went into raptures and received every piece he played with unbounded enthusiasm. The only concerted item was the Sonata for violin and pianoforte in C minor, the violinist being Mr. Howard Rutter. The concert-giver ably accompanied the songs on the pianoforte.

One of the most delightful and enjoyable musical functions of the season was Madame Minadieu's third Matinée Musicale given at the Grosvenor Room, Grand Hotel, on February 8. The feature of the concert was the virile and truly grandiose reading of Tchaikovsky's gigantic Trio for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, in A minor, Op. 50, dated Rome, January, 1882, and composed to the memory of his friend Nicholas Rubinstein, who died at Paris in 1881. This masterwork is divided into two principal sections—No. 1, Pezzo Elegiaco; No. 2, Air with variations in two parts.

The whole work absorbed three-quarters of an hour in its performance. M. Zacharewitsch, as the violinist, was a powerful and masterly coadjutor, having for his helpmates Miss Florence Smith, an excellent pianist, and Mr. J. C. Hock, violoncellist, who evidently were inspired by Zacharewitsch's temperament, the whole Trio being given with almost orchestral effect. Equally masterly were the violin solos, Moffat's exhilarating arrangement of three 18th century dances, Bach's Aria on the G string, and Paganini's Variations on 'Non più Mesta,' which embraces every form of violin technique, including double-stopping in harmonics. The latter is purely a bravura show piece, such as only few violinists venture to perform in public. Miss Florence Smith and Mr. Hock also contributed pieces on the pianoforte and 'cello with complete artistic success. The vocalist was Miss Ida Kiddier, and the accompanist Mr. Appleby Matthews.

A notice of the Festival Choral Society's concert, which took place at the Town Hall on February 19, will appear in the next issue of the Musical Times.

BOURNEMOUTH.

With the advent of mid-January the first half of the series of Symphony Concerts was completed, and did space permit of a general summing-up of the achievements of the orchestra during that period it would be possible to deduce ample proof of the eminently satisfactory position of affairs. But we must be content with expressing our unalloyed pleasure at the combined artistic and financial success of the season, so far as it has gone. Only the indefatigable efforts of Mr. Dan Godfrey and his orchestral associates have rendered such artistic efficiency possible throughout the War period and these present days of armistice, and it must be a source of gratification to them that their endeavours have met with an increased appreciation.

It must be admitted that Bournemouth audiences hold conservative views, musically speaking. Their inclinations are mainly for those well-tried works which long ago won acceptance, compositions of a more experimental kind being regarded with a slight show of suspicion. It is not surprising, therefore—although Mr. Godfrey takes good care that his reputation for producing new music should not suffer—that the mainstays of the Symphony Concert programmes are those symphonic compositions that have been acclaimed as the representative works of their particular age or country. During the past month, accordingly, we have listened approvingly to much music that has become thoroughly familiarised by frequent repetition, though it has not lost its savour. Thus the list of recent performances comprises such compositions as Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic,' Beethoven's seventh, and Mozart's E flat Symphonies, Svendsen's Norwegian Carnival, the 'Carnaval Romain' Overture by Berlioz, Brahms's F major Symphony, and the less frequently played Sinfonietta on Russian Themes by Rimsky-Korsakov.

On the other hand, novelties have not been lacking, the pick of these being César Franck's Symphonic-Poem 'Les Éolides,' a work of rare delicacy and charm, which was presented most effectively. Next in interest was Herbert Howell's Suite, 'The B's,' a work of much ingenuity, and full of life and colour. Chaminade's 'Callirhoë' Suite did not impress us greatly, despite a moderately attractive waltz movement.

The soloists at these concerts have been: (1) Mr. Sascha Lasserson, who furnished us with an artistic reading of the somewhat ungrateful Glazounov Violin Concerto; (2) Miss Rachel Owen, who in D'Albert's decidedly pleasing and unhackneyed Pianoforte Concerto in E, Op. 12, revealed herself as a temperamental performer of considerable promise; (3) Miss Nanette Evans, another distinctly clever young artist, and one not afraid to challenge criticism in such an exacting work as the Elgar Violin Concerto—an ordeal from which she emerged with flying colours. This performance was equally successful from the orchestral standpoint, the playing of all the instrumentalists reaching a very high level. Then Mr. Ioan Lloyd-Powell, whose appearances here are always looked forward to with pleasure, gave us some very finished playing at the nineteenth concert in Saint-Saëns's Pianoforte Concerto in C, No. 4. Lastly, on February 13, Miss Adelina Leon paid a return visit, playing on this occasion Lalo's Violoncello Concerto in D, and confirming the excellent impression she made earlier in the season.

The only visiting conductor has been Signor Giovanni Clerici, who, at the fifteenth concert, directed a performance of his 'Armida' Tone-Poem, an expressive though somewhat conventional composition that was originally produced at Bournemouth last winter.

BRISTOL.

The two principal male-voice choirs have continued their agreeable meetings this season, and on March 1 the Bristol Royal Orpheus Glee Society is appearing at Colston Hall for the concert which is given in place of the Ladies' Night, for many years one of the great musical and social events. The Bristol Madrigal Society found itself unable—owing to the Victoria Rooms being engaged and because of the absence of many members and associates on Army service—to arrange the usual Ladies' Night, but a number of friends who met by invitation at the Montague Hall for a limited Ladies' Night spent a memorable evening. It was at this hotel that the Society was formed eighty odd years ago, and where the first Ladies' Night was held. Now, as then, the Chief Magistrate of the City and the Sheriff were present. A unique feature in the programme was the inclusion of two Elizabethan and Early Stuart pieces with lute accompaniment by the Rev. Dr. E. H. Fellowes. A number of these old-time compositions which found a place in the programme at the first Ladies' Night, once more exercised their charm. The second portion comprised eight items, representing one composition from music added to the repertoire of the Society in each of the eight decades from 1838. Two of the composers were present. Dr. Basil Harwood (president) and Dr. Charles Harford Lloyd. It was a delightful evening, and the choir, under Mr. Hubert Hunt, gave excellent interpretations of the various compositions. The solos of Mr. Theodore Hook and Mr. T. A. Gass, and the beautiful singing of the fifty-six boys, were also most praiseworthy.

Pachmann exercised his customary sway over the emotions of a large audience at Colston Hall on February 12. His quaint asides and verbal explanations are always appreciated by those in the vicinity, and his playing was as charming as ever. As a renowned exponent of Chopin it was not surprising to find the whole of the central portion devoted to specimens of this favourite composer's works, and the fluency, grace, and daintiness displayed in their perfect interpretation drew forth spontaneous applause. A fine reading was given of Schubert's Impromptu (Op. 142. No. 4). Liszt and Schumann were also among the composers included in the scheme. Additional examples were graciously given by the veteran pianist in response to the enthusiastic demands of the audience at the close of the programme.

The Bristol Post Office annual concert is always a popular and successful event, and it will be possible again to hand over a substantial sum to the Postmen's Benevolent and War Funds as a result of the concert at Colston Hall on February 7. Encores were frequent, and the artists had no cause to complain of lack of enthusiasm. The Ladies' Choir, under the direction of Miss Bradfield, contributed many pleasing numbers. Miss Glory Devon, Miss Gilda Gordon, Mr. Ivor Thomas and Mr. Topliss Green were the soloists, in addition to Mr. George Bolton, whose sketches at the pianoforte were very popular. Mr. W. E. Fowler was the accompanist.

The large congregation at St. Mary Redcliff Church whenever an organ recital is announced gives cause for regret that more facilities are not given in the City for recitals of this kind. Mr. Arthur S. Warrell, organist of St. Nicholas, submitted an attractive programme on February 10, in connection with the St. Mary Redcliff series, his interpretation of selections from the works of Rheinberger, MacDowell, Harvey Grace, Bach, and other composers leaving little to be desired.

Mr. Ivan Phillipowsky gave a successful pianoforte recital at Kinnaird Hall, Dundee, on February 19, playing Schumann's 'Carnival,' Glazounov's Sonata in B flat minor, and pieces by Chopin, Scriabin, and Saint-Saëns.

DEVON AND CORNWALL.

DEVON—EXETER.

The lack of opportunity for musical education at Exeter is deplorable in the extreme. There are at present no series of concerts, orchestral, choral, or ensemble. The one choral association, the Oratorio Society, has just decided not to give a performance until the Autumn (the last one was in the Spring of 1918); the smaller classes—two ladies' choirs—are semi-private and seldom appeal to the public. Credit must be given to the female choir attached to the University College, which, under Mr. F. I. Pinn, has done more in this direction than any combination. Few concerts of any kind take place, and these are chiefly of the miscellaneous ballad order for charitable purposes, thus calling for the exercise of charity in two directions. Of orchestral combinations there are none at present, those—also semi-private—which were occasionally heard before the war having lapsed. A new one, for ladies, has recently been formed, but for purposes of practice only. Yet there are many good musicians at Exeter, also teachers beyond count, who ought to justify their existence for the public good. The standard of public performance, particularly of vocal music, is low, yet strangely enough the standard of appreciation compares well with any other centre in the two counties. Wake up, Exeter!

Mr. Allan Allen, having resigned the post of organist and choirmaster of St. Sidwell's parish after twenty years' service, and having accepted a similar post at Exeter School, has been presented by the clergy, choir, servers, church officers and friends in the congregation with a testimonial in the form of a cheque and a framed photograph of the altar. A presentation of a water-colour picture by Aitken and a gold watch was made to Mrs. Passmore by the choir and congregation of St. Sidwell's Wesleyan Church on her resignation of the post of organist and choirmaster also after twenty years' good work.

Music formed an important feature of Bethlehem tableaux at the end of the year, Mr. Pinn being responsible for the selection of instrumental pieces by Mendelssohn, Ysaye ('Kève d'enfant'—violin solo by Mrs. Mortimer) and Mackenzie, and of carols and vocal quartets appropriate to the scenes.

The choir of St. Mary Major Church gave two performances of a Cantata, 'From Manger to Throne' by C. F. Manney, with Mr. W. A. Cole at the organ. Mr. Bishop and Mrs. Cole sang solos, organ music was played by Messrs. Dobbs and Reid, and violin music by the Misses Wyatt and Tayler.

On January 15 Miss Winifred Owen gave a pianoforte recital assisted by vocalists and a violinist; on January 26 Mr. Pinn gave an organ recital in St. David's Church (including Bach's G minor Fantasia and Fugue), and a vocal quartet sang pieces by Stainer, Gounod, and Ferris Tozer. Mr. Pinn arranged a concert on January 30, at which the chief feature was the 'cello playing of Mr. S. W. Moyle (Boëllmann's 'Variations Symphoniques'), and songs were sung by Mr. Bishop and others.

PLYMOUTH.

At their annual Boxing Day concert the Orpheus Male Choir (conductor, Mr. David Parkes) sang songs by Bantock, MacDowell, Neumann, Reichardt, and Saint-Saëns, and were assisted in the programme by Miss Madeline Collins (vocalist) and Miss Marjory Bentwich (violin). A great success was attained by the Choir on February 12 in part-songs by Elgar, Fletcher ('The Sailor's return'), Vaughan Williams ('Ward the pirate'), Boulanger, and Parkes. Madame Suggia played beautifully a Minuetto by Haydn, and Allegro Spiritoso by Senallie-Salmond, a Spanish Serenade by Glazounov, and other pieces by Tartini, Schumann, and Fauré. A young pianist with decided gifts, chiefly on the delicate and refined side, was Mlle. Lilia Kanevskaya, who played music by Mendelssohn, Rosenbloom, Palmgren, and Debussy. Capt. Herbert Heyner achieved much success as singer and interpreter in songs by Hedgcock, Wallace, Stanford, and Leoncavallo.

Sunday concerts in the Theatre Royal have included ballad programmes with Miss Dorothy Robson as vocalist, Corporal Busfield as violinist, and Gunner Norman as pianist, a special programme by the Temple Quartet (Miss Elsie Shortt and Mr. Frampton Jeanes, vocalists, Miss Yolande McNair, violin, and Miss Constance McDermott, pianoforte); a pianoforte, violin, and vocal recital by Miss Chilton Griffon, Miss Jean Butt, and Miss Cynthia Harris, the former playing music by Brahms, Alkan, Chopin, and Liszt; and the appearance of the Welsh Eclipse Octette from Cwmelinfach, comprising vocal and instrumental artists.

At the Guildhall concerts the band of the R.M.L.I., Plymouth Division, has played Hamish MacCunn's Overture 'Land of the Mountain and the Flood,' German's Welsh and Norwegian Rhapsodies, a Poème Symphonique by Massenet, a Petite Suite by Coleridge-Taylor, and (with the Borough organist) a Concerto for organ and strings by E. Bossi. Vocalists who have appeared have included Madame Maria Yelland, Miss Meta Murray, Madame Laura Evans-Williams, Miss May Kearsey, and Miss May Keene.

The R.M.L.I. bands of Plymouth and Portsmouth Divisions amalgamated at Plymouth on January 16. The unity of the occasion was secured by its being unprecedented, and by the fact that the conductors—Mr. S. P. G. O'Donnell, of Plymouth, and Mr. B. W. O'Donnell, of Portsmouth, are brothers. The Overtures were Elgar's 'Cockaigne,' Dvorák's 'Carneval,' and the 'Tannhäuser.' Grainger's 'Mock Morris,' Sibelius's tone-poem 'Finlandia,' and Tchaikovsky's 'Capriccio Italien' were also in the programme.

At the Globe Theatre, R.M. Barracks, on January 26, a departure was made in giving Sunday concerts consisting of solos from 'Messiah,' 'Elijah,' 'Samson,' with the band, and other vocal and instrumental solos.

Plymouth Ladies' Choir, conducted by Mr. Percy Butchers, on January 29 sang part-songs by Nimmo Christie ('The Galway Piper'), Ethel Boyce ('Corinna'), Elgar ('The Snow'), F. N. Löhr, and Schubert. Their blend and tone-quality were good, but enunciation and phrasing were matters that require more careful attention.

Mr. A. P. Gaud having resigned the post of organist and choirmaster of St. Paul's, Stonehouse, which he has held for thirty-four and a-half years, has been presented with a gold watch by the parishioners. His successor is Mr. A. Griffith, a youth of sixteen.

A party of artists from the Military Hospital at Crownhill, on February 10 and 11, gave two miscellaneous concerts, including a scene from 'The Maid of the Mountains,' the conductor being Sergt. H. Tiplady.

OTHER TOWNS.

Madame Fifi de la Côte was the principal vocalist at two concerts at Ashburton on December 30, given by local artists.

In Torquay Pavilion a large audience enjoyed a symphony concert on New Year's Day, given by the Plymouth R.M.L.I. band, when Mr. S. P. G. O'Donnell obtained a delightful interpretation of Schubert's 'Unfinished,' and of music by MacCunn, Debussy, Svendsen, Saint-Saëns, Massenet and Lacombe.

An excellent little string quartet was made at Dawlish by Mrs. Houghton, Miss Phyllis Smith, Miss A. Westenra, and Mrs. Bowden, on January 15, to play the instrumental portion of two musical sketches performed on behalf of St. Dunstan's Hostel, and a scratch choir sang admirably at Marwood on the same date.

The Rev. H. E. Lewis, a blind F.R.C.O., gave an organ recital at Dodbrooke on January 22, and at Fremington on January 29 a choir, trained by Mr. Butler, sang the cantata 'In the snowdrift,' with Mr. G. Bale at the organ.

Colyton Amateur Operatic Society gave its fourth annual performances on January 29 and 30, the work being 'Pearl, the Fisher-maiden,' by C. Ward, in three Acts.

A choral society which we are glad to hear has been revived is that at Northam, which has benefited by the temporary residence there of Mr. Clifford Grout, whose labours as conductor secured a very good double performance of 'Messiah' on January 22. The solo vocalists were the Misses A. Fulford, N. Keene, May Keene, Messrs. Dean-Trotter, and S. J. Bishop, and a small orchestra was supplemented ably by Miss Mary Prior at the organ. The choral singing was so excellent that it is greatly to be hoped that its work will continue after Mr. Grout's departure.

A string band and party of glee-singers severally took part in a concert at Modbury on February 7, Mr. J. S. Coleman conducting.

Mr. W. C. Wreford has resigned the post of organist of Poltimore Parish Church after a remarkable career. From 1855 to 1865 he was a chorister at Ottery St. Mary and afterwards at St. Mary Clyst, then becoming organist at the latter church. In 1873 he was appointed organist at Poltimore, and thus has held the post for fifty-four years. He was the first to institute and organize bell-ringing in the parish.

CORNWALL.

Cornwall is the traditional land of carol-singing, and Truro Cathedral led the way with an elaborate and interesting service of such music, and indoor and outdoor singing was general in such districts as St. Day, Tuckingmill, Falmouth, St. Columb, Devoran (girl guides), St. Ives, Treburley, Gorran, Redruth, Penzance, Queens, and Fraddon.

In connection with Falmouth Women's Social Institute, Miss Edith Blight has organized and trained an excellent choir of thirty-five voices. The aims of the class are commendably high, and the standard of music selected is one of merit. The singers have now in their repertoire part-songs by Balfour Gardiner and Elgar, among others, and are putting in rehearsal a choral work of larger scope.

A new Society, known as Camborne Choral, Orchestral, Operatic and Dramatic Society, has been formed under the conductorship of Mr. H. C. Tonking. We wish this broad-minded and ambitious combination equal success in all its undertakings.

EDINBURGH.

The Edinburgh Classical Concerts have been revived under the direction of Mr. J. R. Simpson. A pianoforte recital by Mr. Leonard Borwick was given on January 18, when his classical style was greatly appreciated. The programme was most attractive: Sonata, Op. 57, Beethoven; a group of Chopin pieces; a fine transcription of 'L'après-midi d'un Faune'; pieces by Stravinsky, Scriabin, Palmgren, Rachmaninoff and Moszkowski. The next concert of this series was given by the London Trio on January 25, the outstanding items of the programme being the Tchaikovsky Trio in memory of Nicolas Rubinstein, and the F sharp major Trio of César Franck. All the artists—Madame Amina Goodwin, Mr. Albert Sammons, and Mr. Whitehouse—showed that admirable restraint necessary to produce perfect ensemble effects. On February 15 (the fourth concert of this series) Mr. William Murdoch took the place of Mr. Alfred Cortôt, who was unable to reach Edinburgh in time owing to difficulties of travel. Mr. Murdoch added to the high reputation he had already obtained in the city, with his fine readings of César Franck's 'Prelude, Fugue, and Variations,' Debussy's 'Reflets dans l'eau,' 'La Soirée dans Grenade,' 'La Cathédrale engloutie,' 'Minstrels,' and the Arabesque in G. He gave ample proof that he was at home with the moderns. John Ireland's 'Island Spell' and 'Ragamuffin,' with Frank Bridge's 'Sea Idyll,' were also beautiful.

Prof. Tovey gave the first of the Reid Orchestral Concerts on February 8. The programme included 'The Conscription of the House,' Beethoven, Dvorák's Symphony No. 1, and the 'Siegfried Idyll,' Wagner. The feature of the concert, however, was the playing of M. Louis Fleury (flautist). A Sonata for flute and figured bass by General Reid, and the Concerto for flute and orchestra in D by Mozart, gave him ample scope for displaying his powers.

The Fellowes Quartet gave their third concert on February 14. Debussy's Quartet was beautifully played, as also was Beethoven's No. 5 in A major. Two Quartet movements—'Molly on the Shore,' by Percy Grainger, and 'Londonderry Air,' by Frank Bridge, made all wish for more British music.

The Classical Concert Society's fourteenth series will begin on March 5, and will comprise concerts at Wigmore Hall on every Wednesday, alternate evenings and afternoons, until April 9. The programmes will include a good proportion of works by composers who have not found it necessary to die in order to be considered classical.

GLASGOW.

Under Mr. A. M. Henderson, the organist to the University, an attractive recital of a cappella Church music was given on January 29 in Westbourne Church by the choir of the Church, augmented by the University Chapel choir. The pieces sung represented composers from the 16th century to the present time, and included fine examples by Tallis, Palestrina, Henschel, Walford Davies, Tchaikovsky, and others. Mr. Henderson contributed two groups of organ solos.

The drawing powers of 'Messiah' were again evidenced at the popular performance given by the Choral Union (Mr. D. Stephen, conductor) on February 1. Familiarity with a work often leads to slackness in performance, but on the present occasion the Union's interpretation was generally above the average, and especially good in 'Surely He hath borne our griefs.' Mr. Fellowes led the band, which, with Mr. Herbert Walton's indispensable aid at the organ, sustained the accompaniments. Of the solo vocalists Mr. Maurice D'Oisly bore the honours. The programme of the third and last of the Fellows Chamber Concerts, on February 13, included two strongly contrasted numbers, viz., Schubert's Quartet, 'Death and the Maiden,' and Debussy's Quartet No. 1, Op. 10, both of which received splendid treatment by Mr. Fellowes and his colleagues. Miss Nancy Weir, a highly promising young local soprano, sang songs by Debussy and Roger Quilter with acceptance, accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. Joseph Hannah. What looks like becoming an annual concert was given by Glasgow Select Choir on February 8, under the baton of Mr. Percy Gordon. The Choir maintains its reputation for expressive choral singing.

The only other events to be recorded are two concerts by the students of the Athenæum School of Music, and a month's performances by the Royal Carl Rosa Company at the Theatre Royal.

LIVERPOOL.

At the fifth concert of the Philharmonic Society on January 18, the full orchestra was dispensed with, and as an instrumental alternative Schubert's Octet in F major, Op. 166, was performed after many years' silence. On this occasion Mr. Arthur Catterall, as leader, was associated with other fine players in Mr. J. S. Bridge (2nd violin), Mr. F. S. Park (viola), Mr. H. Hatton (cello), Mr. A. Stott (double-bass), Mr. E. Mills (clarinet), Mr. A. L. Camden (bassoon), and Mr. A. Gagg (horn). The extreme length of the gracious music was mitigated by the division of the work into two sections separated by the interval, an arrangement specially agreeable to the wind-instrument players. The perfect ensemble of the playing left nothing to be desired in this direction, and the music in its spontaneity and cheerful prolixity took one in spirit back to less strenuous and more spacious days. As a revival, the performance was a happy idea, especially when so much chamber-music is a sealed book.

Miss Adela Verne played delightfully in Schumann's 'Papillons,' and also in Debussy's 'La Cathédrale engloutie,' music of widely divergent material which found in her a ready and expressive interpreter. A tenor singer, M. Mischa Léon, again found favour here. He was heard in a wide range of artistically-sung songs which included two Chansons Polonaises (Chopin), 'Snow' (Lie), 'A toi' (Bemberg), and 'Uncle Rome' (Homer). Mr. Walter Bridson was an able accompanist. The Choir contributed several expressively-sung part-songs, which included Stanford's idyllic, 'The Blue Bird' and two part-songs, 'Infant Joy' and 'To Sylvia,' by Dr. A. W. Pollitt, who conducted the singers he so ably trains. Dr. Pollitt in these settings of Blake and Ben Jonson has quite caught the spirit of the quaint words. In both instances the music moves in suggestive harmonies and vocal parts of a type appreciated by choralists.

The forthcoming performance of 'The Dream of Gerontius,' which the composer himself will conduct, on March 15, will no doubt find the fine choir well prepared. Dr. Pollitt was also largely concerned with the success of the choral items which took the place of the usual chamber music at the concert of the Rodewald Society on January 27. Under his direction a small choir of picked singers was heard in Bach's cantata 'God's time is the best,' followed by Elizabethan madrigals including Morley's 'My bonny lass' and 'Nolo Mortem,' Byrd's 'Lullaby,' and Gibbons's 'The Silver Swan.' The golden age when England was really a musical nation, and all gentle folk were able to sing their parts in a glee or madrigal, will never return. We may at least be permitted to hope that such a choral evening may be of more frequent occurrence. In the programme Brahms's lugubrious 'Three Serious Songs' might well have been omitted. The singer was Mr. W. H. Cross, a baritone of considerable vocal gifts.

The choral resources of a great centre like Liverpool, which require some special occasion or dominating personality to weld them together, were evidenced by the superb male-voice choir—two hundred strong—which assembled at the call of the Masonic brotherhood to take part in the Masonic Musical Festival held on January 23, 24, 25, and 26, in the Philharmonic Hall in aid of the British Red Cross and Freemasons' War Hospital. An orchestra conducted by Mr. Ingram, with a great array of well-known soloists from the H. B. Phillips, Carl Rosa, and Beecham Opera Companies also gave distinction to the programmes, but to those who revel in choral splendours nothing was more thrilling than the singing of the powerful and finely blending male-voice choir, in whose ranks were to be found leading local singers doing laudable service in an undistinguished way. Conducted by Mr. J. T. Jones—of local male-voice choir fame—it was a delight to hear this great array of trained throats singing de Rille's 'Martyrs of the Arena,' Cooke's 'Strike the Lyre,' Sullivan's 'The long day closes,' Adam's 'Comrades' Song of Hope,' and the 'Song of the Jolly Roger' (Cavendish). When the younger men return from the colours to supplement this notable collection of oldsters the idea is to form a permanent choir. What a vista of possibilities is thus opened up!

Pianoforte recitals are still the order of the day, and in Rushworth Hall and Crane Hall we have heard many good players and interesting programmes. Notable of course was the recital given by Moiseiwitsch in the Philharmonic Hall on February 1, when the great player exhibited his caring touch and exquisite sense of tonal proportion in pieces of the romantic and atmospheric order—notably in Ravel's extraordinary and epoch-marking 'Jeux d'eau,' of which a marvellous performance was given, as also of Debussy's 'La Cathédrale engloutie' and 'Minstrels.' His interpretation of the 'Appassionata' Sonata was too refined and restrained, and lacked strength of outlook and the sense of masterful force. It was not Beethoven paying par excellence. It was satisfactory to find Moiseiwitsch devoting his attention to British music in John Ireland's 'Rhapsody,' a characteristic example of this composer's individuality and modernity.

Schumann's pianoforte music receives increasing attention, and notable recent performances include the 'Papillons' by Miss Adela Verne, the 'Carnaval,' masterfully played by Mr. Joseph Greene, in Crane Hall, on January 29, and in the same locale on February 12, the 'Etudes Symphoniques' by Mr. Anderson Tyrer, another master-player whose sure fingers are governed by clear vision. As a composer Mr. Tyrer has something to say, and his Prelude and Scherzo, also the Phantasy Miniature, are extremely clever pieces in which the influences of modern harmonic idioms are not oppressively paramount. Mr. Tyrer is evidently an admirer of John Ireland, whose Rhapsody found in him an able and compelling interpreter. At this recital songs were well-sung by Miss Hilda Cragg-James, accompanied by Mr. A. E. Workman.

Recitalists at the popular mid-day Wednesday functions in Rushworth Hall have included Lieut. T. P. Fielden, R.F.A., who played very well in Franck's Prelude, Chorale, and Fugue, and in Scriabin's Etudes, Op. 42, Nos. 4, 5, and 8, and Sonata, No. 5, Op. 53. On January 29 the Tobin Trio gave a second performance by request of Eugène Goossens's 'Five Impressions of a Holiday,' which deepened favourable impressions of these clever and individual little pieces; and we were also indebted to Mr. John Tobin (pianoforte), Mr. John Lawson (violin), and Mr. Walter Hatton (cello) for a first performance of John Ireland's 'Phantasia Trio' in A minor, a work in one movement in which the melodic interest is specially well sustained.

A violin recital was given on February 5 by Mr. J. P. Sheridan, and on February 12 Miss Gladys Scollick appeared as solo pianist with Mr. Austin Carnegie as vocalist.

The highly-successful revival of Barrie's 'The Little Minister' was interesting also on account of the well-chosen incidental music, which included Sir A. C. Mackenzie's delightful Overture, the 'Keltic Suite' by J. H. Foulds, and the 'Idylle Ecossaise' by Saint-Saëns, in which the excellent little orchestra, directed by Mr. Joseph Smith, added to the enjoyment of musical playgoers.

The local members of the Music Teachers' Association assembled in Rushworth Hall on January 25 to hear a thoughtful address on 'Music in Education' by Prof. E. T. Campagnac, of Liverpool University; and on February 15 Dr. Eaglefield Hull addressed them on 'British music: old and new,' a stimulating subject which was ably handled.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.

Manchester has been swept along on the full flood of opera enthusiasm—seats unobtainable; standing room exhausted; members of the company reduced to finding refuge on the stairs of the circle. Such has been the daily (on Thursdays and on Saturdays twice daily) experience for seven and a half weeks. Whether it was 'Trovatore' or 'Coq d'Or,' 'Tristan' or 'Samson,' the whole place has been gripped as in a vice. One's café waitress announces quite casually, 'I'm going to "Valkyrie" to-morrow'; shop-girls and clerks in train or tram are overheard discussing—not pantomime or the 'Southern Maid' (in which José Collins has been singing since before Christmas), but grand opera at the Queen's Theatre. Of course all this absorbing zest for opera has reacted favourably on the players and singers. Only at Blackpool last summer, where everybody was clearly feeling the tonic effects of a month's seaside change, have these people performed, nay, lived their parts, with such gusto. Twice one member of the Company has been stopped in the streets by complete strangers, and with transparent sincerity thanked for the delights of the previous evening. Opera has entered into the life of the community in a very real sense when simple folk, quite unaffected by any prevalent rage for theatrical celebrities, will break through their habitual reserve in this way, and one may well believe that such recognition, even more than many 'curtains' and thunders of applause, sends the artist on his or her way rejoicing.

Sir Thomas Beecham has not conducted at all, so that success cannot be attributed to the magnetic influence of any one conductor. Messrs Percy Pitt, Goossens, père et fils, and Wynn Reeves have borne the brunt of the conducting, while Mr. Julius Harrison has been present on three or four occasions. The local choral contingent has been under the efficient control of Mr. Arthur Lomas. The season has witnessed two productions for the first time by the Beecham Company—'Manon Lescaut' and 'Falstaff,' and in both the workers behind the stage have merited as much recognition as those on or beneath the stage—too often they are apt to be overlooked amid the glamour of fine acting, singing, or playing. Equal expression of appreciation is also due to the artist in control of the lighting.

A very general commentary on the season now ended is that in practically all parts the dramatic feeling has been more than ever before spontaneous. In such widely contrasted operas as 'The Bo'sun's Mate,' 'Tosca,' 'Valkyrie,' 'Coq d'Or,' 'Othello,' the principals always seemed in my judgment to get right inside the skin of their several parts. A year or two back these were rather put on or off as a garment might be. This complete identification with the rôle has naturally produced greater intensity of lyrical effect, besides giving some people's imagination a higher degree of satisfaction where acting, rather than musical effect, was the more appreciated. The three performances of 'Coq d'Or' witnessed a curious development of impressions. All one's preconceived notions went by the board. There were no standards of previous experience available. We were too far away to appreciate any subtleties of Russian political satire in the plot or story. The stage action was as grotesque as any current extravaganza, or more so; the scenery, colour, and costumes prolonged the note first sounded in 'Boris' and 'Ivan the Terrible.' Not even in those wonderful schemes of colour was there anything quite comparable to the rich pavilioned splendour of this second Act. The orchestration had the same exotic, luxuriant quality; the audience sipped this new wine, too hesitant to quaff it joyfully. But they came again, and there appeared to be a greater relish. They became more as little children in their attitude to the fairy story—imagination was more vividly stirred; the orchestra soon acquired greater abandon, and this enhanced freedom of handling spread to the stage. By the time of the third performance we were all ready to drink a bumper of 'vin Rimsky-Korsakov.' There is quite a Kubla Khan-ish quality about this opera's second Act, and when Queen Shembakin begins to sing, one's mind flies at once to 'the damsel with the dulcimer.' One may well wonder whether this kind of thing will ever be really assimilated and become as much part of our musical experience's stock-in-trade as, say, Wagner, Puccini, or Verdi. The adaptability of the Beecham cast can rarely have been so severely tested, but there were no misfits, and Mr. Percy Pitt's conducting seemed to acquire a new power. He was the first to conduct 'Scheherazade' at Manchester years ago, and a predilection for subjects of this type has been exemplified in his own orchestral work. In this work he seemed to have lost entirely the tendency of a too inelastic rhythm which has sometimes dimmed one's enjoyment.

A considered judgment would probably place Mullings's Othello on a higher plane than his Tristan. One is not so sure that Miss Brola's Desdemona is sufficiently frail to serve as the perfect foil to Othello's jealous rage. As the fierce wintry blasts sweep down the Lakeland heights into the vale below, the trees bow to its fury, save a sturdy oak or sentinel fir-tree. I recall Miss Mignon Nevada's Desdemona as swaying and falling like some silver-birch on the hillside, but Miss Brola's braved the storm of Othello's mad rage as do the oak and the fir in the height of the gale. The former conception seemed to me the truer one. Austin's Iago and Scarpia, along with Brola's Tosca in the portrait gallery of the Beecham Opera, have all the distinctive characteristics which mark the Orpen portraits in that branch of contemporary art.

No more striking indication of the gradually maturing quality of the Beecham operatic art is likely to be found than in the revival of Ethel Smyth's 'The Bo'sun's Mate.' There is a surety about it now—Ranalow, Heather, Rosina Buckman, the tipsy sailors' chorus—all these and more are to the life, never over-stressed, and the comedy never degenerates into farce. Of the production of 'Falstaff' I cannot write, as the management could not place the customary facilities at my disposal.

Under Dr. Keighley's guidance the Manchester Vocal Society is carrying a stage further the practice inaugurated under its late conductor, Mr. Herbert Whittaker, of giving cantatas with orchestral accompaniment instead of with one or two pianofortes. Mr. Whittaker confined his efforts to a string band. The new conductor is trying a small complete orchestra; it may be hoped that the higher expense will not prove an obstacle to its continuance. On February 12 Hubert Bath's 'Shon Maclean' and the conductor's choral ballad 'March, March, Etrick and Teviotdale' had the benefit of this orchestral assistance. Better results will probably be obtained with added experience in such association.

Late in January the Children's Concert Society had a first-rate display of dancing organized by Miss Madge Atkinson and assisted by a small band conducted by Mr. E. Isaacs and led by Mr. Rawdon Briggs. Bach's B minor Suite was the vehicle for displaying the spirits of Dancing, Music, Poetry, &c. What a beautiful way of learning Bach! Lucky youngsters, who took part and listened!

NORWICH.

On Thursday, February 13, the third and fourth of the present series of Philharmonic concerts took place in St. Andrew's Hall, and proved a success in every way. At the afternoon concert many people were unable to gain admission to the Hall, so great was the demand for places. The programme included Beethoven's second Symphony and Rachmaninov's Concerto No. 2, in C, for pianoforte and orchestra, the soloist being Miss Myra Hess, who gave a splendid reading of the work and was again and again recalled. She was most ably supported by the orchestra. The vocalist was Miss Olive Sturges, who was most successful with Ambroise Thomas's 'Je suis Titania,' which she sang with orchestra, and a group of songs with pianoforte accompaniment. The programme for the evening concert included Elgar's 'The Spirit of England,' admirably sung by the Norwich Choral Society, with Miss Sturgess as soloist. In order that those who were unable to gain admittance to the afternoon concert might hear the Rachmaninov Concerto, as also for the benefit of the soldiers and their funds, for which object the concert was given, Miss Myra Hess most kindly stayed for this concert, and received an ovation. Dr. Frank Bates conducted, and is to be congratulated on a great success.

SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

The fifth of the Sheffield Subscription Concerts was notable for the convincing and characteristic playing of Mr. Moiseiwitsch in a programme which opened with Chopin's Sonata in B flat minor. This was played with all the nicely poised minutiae of expression which the brilliant young Russian pianist cultivates, plus aspects of tenderness which are coming more and more into his interpretations. The Funeral March has rarely been given a more deeply felt, moving reading, nor has the Scherzo, with its exquisite middle section, been more idealised, even by Pachmann himself. John Ireland's Rhapsody was less successful. Re-hearings of this undeniably clever work lead to the impression that from one point about midway through, cleverness displaces inspiration. Mr. Moiseiwitsch was again at his clearest and best in Brahms's Capriccio in B minor, and at his most phenomenal in the same master's Paganini Variations—a mixed set compiled from both books. Balakirev's 'Islamey' Fantasia and some picture-pieces by Palmgren and Debussy completed a model programme. Miss Carrie Tubb gave her familiar highly-emotionalised performance of Verdi's 'Salce' ('Othello'), besides singing with her wonted versatility songs by Harty, Annie Miller ('Tears' and 'In a Lond in Park'), and Stanford's 'Cuttin' Rushes.' Miss Ethel Robinson was an ideal accompanist.

The afternoon concerts of the Misses Foxon, now transferred to Fridays, have furnished a few performances of outstanding interest. Brahms's Sonata in D minor for violin and pianoforte was played with surprising insight and sincerity by two young musicians—Miss Zoë Addy and Miss Helen Guest—who later were joined by Mr. Maurice Taylor in Tchaikovsky's familiar Trio in A minor. Brahms's 'Liebeslieder' Waltzes—sung by Misses Parker Machon and Ena Roberts, and Messrs. Markham and Platts—were made piquant and sufficiently contrasted in mood, despite an ensemble that lacked correct balance. A gifted singer was discovered in Mr. Joseph Markham, who sang with marked intelligence in Brewer's Elizabethan Songs.

At the third concert Sterndale Bennett's Trio, Op. 26, and John Ireland's Phantasy Trio in A minor, were fluently and expressively played by Miss Minnie Wilson and Messrs. Allan and Collin Smith.

Mr. John Dunn and Mr. Anderson Tyrer gave a successful violin and pianoforte recital, playing among other things two movements from Elgar's Violin Concerto. Mr. Dunn's vivid tone and the element of dash and picturesqueness in his style made his treatment of the solo part full of interest. Mr. Tyrer played strongly and with insight in Ireland's Rhapsody and a group of Debussy pieces.

YORKSHIRE.

LEEDS.

Just now the Choral Societies are, after the customary Christmas 'Messiah' performances, preparing for a new attack, and I hear that their forces are being materially strengthened by soldiers who are returning home, but in the meantime I find only one choral concert of any importance to chronicle, at Scarborough—of which more anon. At Leeds the chief concerts of the month have been two of the Saturday Orchestral series, which seem to have really secured favour with all classes, judging by the crowded and enthusiastic audiences that fill the Town Hall. Nothing, I may say, augurs better for the future of music than the fact that the best orchestral music—necessarily to a great extent of a familiar character—is proving really popular with a Saturday night audience. On January 25 Beethoven's seventh Symphony was played under the direction of Mr. Hamilton Harty, who realised well its abundant vigour and rhythmical energy. Miss Kathleen Frise Smith was the soloist in MacDowell's D minor Pianoforte Concerto, which was a novelty to Leeds, though it has been heard at the Summer concerts in the neighbouring town of Harrogate. She played brilliantly, and Miss Kathleen Moorhouse, an accomplished young violoncellist, played Max Bruch's 'Kol Nidrei' with great charm of tone and style. The first set of Dvorák's 'Slavonic Dances,' and the 'Hebrides' and 'Tannhäuser' Overtures, were also included in a programme which may be taken as a fair sample of the series, save in one respect, for both the soloists on this occasion were local musicians, and it was the more satisfactory to find a programme attractive that did not depend upon a 'star' to make it popular. At the concert on February 15 Mr. Julian Clifford was the conductor and Mr. Ivor Foster the vocalist, the programme including Tchaikovsky's E minor Symphony, Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Capriccio Espagnol,' and Butterworth's 'Shropshire Lad' Rhapsody, each hearing of which intensifies one's regret at the premature death of a composer of such exceptional promise.

The Leeds Bohemian Concert on January 29 had, because of some misunderstanding, to migrate from its accustomed haunt at the Metropole Hotel to an ordinary concert-room, and lost some of its pleasant, intimate character in consequence. Mr. Alex. Cohen's quartet was heard in the second of the Rasoumovsky Quartets in E minor and Schumann's Quartet, by comparison with which Glazounov's 'Slavonic' Quartet (Op. 26) suffered, chiefly because it lacked variety of mood, for it is well-constructed and finely wrought, and it was particularly well played by the quartet party. Mr. Cohen resumed his very interesting 'Sonata Recitals' on February 7, when he and Mr. Anderson-Tyrer played Violin Sonatas by Beethoven (in F, Op. 24), Richard Strauss, and John Ireland (in A minor) with distinction. The mid-day recitals at Leeds University have been resumed. On January 21 Mr. Stanley Kaye, a youthful pianist from Sheffield, played the 'Appassionata Sonata' and pieces by Debussy, Scriabin, Rachmaninov, and others with remarkable freedom and facility of execution. On February 4 Miss Purdon and Mr. Levine (who is on the staff of the University) played Beethoven's Violin Sonata in F (Op. 24) and some solos, and on February 18 Mr. W. Hayle gave an interesting vocal recital, with Mr. L. Hartley as pianist. An interesting lecture on 'British Chamber Music from Elizabethan Times' was given by Dr. W. H. Frere, who is a recognised authority on music of a still earlier date, on January 21. One imagined that for some centuries 'Chamber music in England' would be almost as rare as 'snakes in Ireland,' but the lecturer and Mr. F. H. Fulford, whose family quartet party, with Mr. W. Walker as pianist, gave the illustrations, had managed to unearth some interesting examples—or exceptions, as one might say—from even the 18th century. Still it was not till we got to the Andante from Stanford's Pianoforte Quintet that we came to the blossoming of this late fruit.

OTHER TOWNS.

Tchaikovsky's 'Romeo and Juliet,' Glazounov's 'Slavonic Festival,' and the 'Finlandia' of Sibelius, formed an interesting series of pieces in the programme of the Bradford Permanent Orchestra's Concert on January 18, which Mr. Julian Clifford conducted. One could not help feeling, however, that in spite of its antiquated form Haydn's Violoncello Concerto in D gave more profound satisfaction, in that it attains its comparatively modest aim more completely. It had the advantage of a very refined and artistic soloist in Miss Kathleen Moorhouse, whose name has already appeared above. At the Subscription Concert on February 7 Mr. Felix Salmond and Miss Ida Bellerby gave a singularly finished performance of Beethoven's Violoncello Sonata in A minor. Miss Bellerby is a young West Riding pianist, who has profited greatly by Miss Fanny Davies's instruction, and she gave a most artistic interpretation of Busoni's transcription of B. ch's Chaconne, which is really more satisfying in this version than in its original form, for after all the violin can interpret contrapuntal music only in a sketchy fashion. Two of the Bradford Free Chamber Concerts which Mr. S. Midgley runs with such energy have taken place during the past month. On January 27 Sinding's Violin Sonata 'in the old style' was coupled with two similar works by native composers—Walford Davies's D minor Sonata and J. B. McEwen's 'Little Sonata,' both charming and unpretentious compositions. Mr. Edgar Drake and Miss Nellie Chapman were the players, and some pleasing vocal trios were sung by Miss Cockcroft, Miss May Midgley, and Miss Dorothy Parkinson. On February 10 three other modern Violin Sonatas were played by Mr. Hugo Lenearts, a Belgian violinist, and Mr. Midgley—Pierné in D minor, Grieg in F, and César Franck's fine work. Miss Patti Clayton was the vocalist.

The Scarborough Philharmonic Society, which Dr. Ely has raised to a degree of choral efficiency hitherto seldom if ever realised in the town, has been 'going slow' during war-time, but managed to give two unfamiliar native works at its concert on February 6. Hubert Bath's 'Wake of O'Connor' is a work which demands much nicety and variety of expression, and it was sung with excellent finish, the soloists—Miss Rhoades, Miss Cragg James, Messrs. Brearley and Hayle, contributing towards the excellent ensemble. Mr. Bensley Ghent, a dexterous violinist, played several solos. At Hull, Mr. Janssen's Subscription Concert season came to a close on January 25, when both the instrumentalists relied on Bach for their principal solo pieces, Miss Dorothea Vincent playing d'Albert's transcription of the Prelude and Toccata in F, which makes a capital pianoforte piece, and Mr. John Dunn, though not at his best, giving the Prelude and Fugue in G minor for violin alone. Miss Ethel Peake, a soprano with a markedly dramatic manner, was the vocalist.

[The following fragment appears to be the title-page and preliminary draft of portions of a recently-published volume of reminiscences. The MS. was rescued from the author's dustbin. Knowing his liberal views in regard to etiquette and privacy, we think it unnecessary to ask his permission to publish the matter.]

'NOTHING EXTENUATED.'

A BOOK OF REMINISCENCES,

BY GERALD LUMBERCAND.

'Do I mis-state? Very well, then, I mis-state.

(It really matters little,

For I can easily climb down in second and subsequent Editions.

Allons, then, Camarados !).

Walt Whatman.

Like every musician who is worth his salt, I have a deep-rooted antipathy to organists. They stand for all the things I am up against—asceticism, religiosity, narrowness of intellect, physical coldness, ordered habits—in a word, all that makes life intolerable to a man of spirit. It was therefore with no very pleasant anticipations that I set out one morning to interview Dr. Cecil Nodes, the organist of Much Hadham Cathedral. He greeted me with an oleaginous smile, and gave me a glutinous hand-grasp of the genuine church musician brand, which annoyed me vastly.

We had not talked long before it was clear to him that I regarded organists as quite outside the pale. He took me to task, reminding me that Bach, Purcell, Orlando Gibbons, Franck, Saint-Saëns, and a host of other not inconsiderable musicians had been organists. He gave me also a surprising list of clever native composers of to-day who hold, or have held, posts as parish church organists without becoming stodgy.

'The fact is, Lumbercand,' he said, wagging a fat admonitory finger at me, 'you and your would-be smart fellow-critics seem to think that all organists are sticks-in-the-mud, just as you figure all curates as milkshops. The average properly-qualified organist has more ability in one hand and foot than most of you critics have in all your anatomy. And there are plenty of curates, who, so far from being milkshops, could in vulgar parlance, "put it across" you without turning a hair. Yet you use the terms "organist" and "curate" in a disparaging way pretty much as you say a person or thing is "suburban" when you wish to be crushing. But, after all, there are only a handful of Londoners who don't live in the suburbs. Probably you yourself do not dwell in the heart of the city. I know some very brainy folk who live at Tooting; there are very likely lots of other keen intellects in that pleasant suburb. But if you wish to "sit on" anything, you think the word "Tooting," followed by a sniff and a lift of the eyebrows, is scarifying. My dear fellow, it's simply conventional. Nothing in suburbia is so cheap and futile as the inexpensive satire you and such as you indulge in at its expense.'

I was bound to admit that this was true enough. I have relatives, who in spite of the fact that they live at Ball's Pond, and are regular church-goers, are really decent people, and by no means unintelligent. But as I pointed out to Dr. Nodes, we journalists have to study our market. The market which I supply demands that frequent and scathing reference should be made to Upper Tooting, Cricklewood, Ball's Pond, and the like, so I deliver the goods. Sometimes I provide a variation by referring to a country town, such as Bacup or High Wycombe. In moments of exceptional brilliance, I have even invented names for country towns. Thus I remember scoring heavily with 'Bluzzerby-on-Stream.' But if invention flags, I neither wait nor worry. My motto is, 'when in doubt, say Tooting.' And I say it. Often.

My interview with Dr. Nodes was only a qualified success. I must admit that the old gentleman discovered an unexpected vein of good sense, and his opinions on music were at least two centuries ahead of what I had expected. As a matter of fact, I don't mind confessing that he was able to tell even me a thing or two about the more modern developments of the art. When the interview was published, I found that I had somehow omitted this side of our talk. Nodes took it absurdly ill, and wrote complimenting me on 'a truly remarkable talent for misrepresentation.' On the whole, he is a capital old fellow, and I have really nothing against him but his profession.

Edgar Buffle I have met only once. Strictly speaking, we hardly met. I stood behind him in a queue at Gower Street Station booking-office one foggy day. He seemed to be in a vile temper, and I remember there was a dispute with the booking-clerk about the change—or was it a bad half-crown? . . . He strode angrily away before I could introduce myself, but in his slightly rounded and expostulating shoulders (a few stitches had gone from the seam of the left, I observed), I knew him for the aloof and lonely soul that cries out with such piercing expression in his music. Like most men of his stamp, he is a tremendous egoist and a monumental poseur. A friend of my Ball's Pond uncle told me that he (the friend) had heard of a letter written by Buffle describing his emotions when putting on paper the closing bars of his symphonic-poem, 'Wails from Tophet.' My memory in such matters is unreliable, but I never allow a little haziness to hinder me from quotation. I have no doubt of there being a good sporting chance that the letter very probably ran pretty much as follows:

. . . 'Wails from Tophet' is finished! It is 3.29½ a.m.

I have worked several hours without break, and with no food but a cut from the joint and two veg. I must have put on paper many dozens—even thousands—of notes. But 'Wails from Tophet' is an accomplished fact. I am exalted, enthused, elated! I soar! I go now to the bath-room, to put my burning brow under the cooling, sobering tap. As I go I make comparisons between the composer of 'Wails from Tophet' and Beethoven, Wagner, and others, remembering, however (for my sense of fair play is keen, even before I reach the tap), that they did their best.

A great composer is Buffle, a very great composer. But you would never suspect it from his argumentative methods with a truculent Gower Street booking-clerk.

Although I object to cathedral cities because they are pervaded by Deans and such-like objectionable folk, I have pleasantest memories of musical festivals held in them. What a gathering of critics there used to be! Toover, Pettingell, Manktelow, Bundy, Ramsbotham, Burls, Mobbs, Baverstocke,—good fellows all, who enjoyed themselves vastly. As might be expected when so many wits met, there was much excellent jesting. Sometimes this took a practical shape at the expense of the good folk of the city.

I remember, as a typical instance, how Toover and Burls ('Buster' Burls, prince of good fellows! Where are you now? 'Where are the snows of yesterday?' or words to that effect), how Toover and Burls, I say, at Wexford, in 1909, ran a fine wire about a foot above the ground across the High Street one dark night. We were vastly entertained at the spectacle of the simple Wexfordians coming to grief. There was a fat Canon, who, as he rose from biting the dust, showed himself brilliantly able to dispense with the services of a layman in the provision of appropriate remarks . . . And there was an obese old woman . . . with a basket of eggs . . . Eggs! . . .

In 1910 I was in London, slinging ink in all directions,—a paying game if you keep on slinging and are not too particular. In order that you may realise my versatility, I may mention—not vaingloriously, but as a fact that cannot fail to be of interest—that I was writing red-hot articles for 'The Red Flag,' and at the same time contributing closely reasoned leaders for a prominent Tory daily. Why not? Like the sword of the mercenary of old, my pen was for any body's hiring. I would have lampooned my Ball's Pond uncle with gusto for a consideration. The lampoon duly published, I would with equal gusto have written a crushing answer on behalf of my uncle—for another consideration. The world was, and is, my oyster: I opened it, and am still opening it, with my pen. This is journalism, a calling in which brains and scruples are much less important than glibness. I am one large glib. Nor should a journalist be retiring or modest. I am not modest, and I have never yet retired.

Few, if any, journalists have known more than I of the Bohemian side of London life. Like Mercutio—or was it Falstaff?—I have heard the chimes at midnight. I have been—hush! tell it not in Tooting!—I have been to a night club! . . . More than once! . . . Well do I remember one riotous night when I and a half-dozen boon companions sat in the 'Golden Calf' from seven till well after ten o'clock. We had a bottle of Epernay, and sat at it till not a drop remained. As we went mellowly forth into the night, I collided with an entering customer who took it ill, and (not for the first time in my doggish life) I seemed likely to be in for a fight. My opponent was an immense fellow—six feet eight, and with a fist like a leg of mutton—and I must confess that I viewed his proportions with diminishing ardour. By the time our friends had placed us, coatless, vis-a-vis, I noted that he, too, showed a want of enthusiasm. I forget who suggested it, but in the upshot we submitted the dispute to arbitration, and putting on our coats, went back to the 'Calf' for 'another one.' It was after eleven when I left, and yet I strode down Coventry Street vastly elated and full of vim. Nothing came amiss to me in those heady days,—work, play, dissipation, fighting . . . I warmed both hands at the fire of life. Both hands? Aye, and feet as well. In fact, I basked, and glowed all over . . . Never was such a devil of a fellow!

Of the music critics mentioned above, perhaps the outstanding genius of a band of geniuses is Bundy, who has one of the finest and most quickly-functioning brains in Europe. His wit is positively scarifying. Well do I remember his saying one day (with that little droop of an eyelid which always warned us that something good was coming): 'An organist is like a tenor—not a man, but a disease.' Then (like a flash from that lightning-functioning brain) he added, 'or rather he is a tenor, for just as it takes nine tailors to make a man, it takes ten organists. See it, Gerry?' he added, thrusting an eighteenpenny flor de cabojos between my lips—a quite unnecessary question, for with my inborn quickness I saw it almost at once, and was vastly amused. I remember too . . .

[But here, while we are still waiting for a record of something that matters, the manuscript breaks off.]

The Music Club are arranging to entertain Sir Frederick Bridge at a public dinner on April 1. Lord Ernle, the Minister of Agriculture, will take the chair.

Musical Notes from Abroad.

ROME.

PUCCINI'S NEW TRILOGY.

On the evening of January 11, at the Costanzi Theatre, a crowded audience witnessed the first performance of three new one-Act pieces by Puccini, entitled respectively 'Il Tabarro' (The Cloak), 'Suor Angelica,' and 'Gianni Schicchi.' Although announced as a trilogy, performed consecutively, and published in the same volume, these works have no common nexus, not even that of time or place, unless maybe the author has desired to illustrate by three entirely distinct episodes drawn from three widely distant centuries the old adage that 'Human nature is always the same,' or, as the Italian proverb has it, 'Tutt' il mondo è un paese' (All the world is a village).

'IL TABARRO.'

Puccini has scored an undoubted success in this opera. One of its most notable pages is the dance played by the organ-grinder in the early part of the work, in which the orchestra reproduces with farcical exactitude the dissonant waltz supposed to be played on the itinerant musician's instrument. The melodic design is based on two diverse tones, which proceed enharmonically in diminished octaves, the motive being entrusted to the flutes, with accompaniment of clarinets, and the effect is extremely realistic. It is interesting to note that the critics widely disagree as to whether Puccini has been happier in the treatment of the organ-grinder's waltz than Stravinsky in the same subject in his 'Petrouchka.' Probably, however, the solution is entirely subjective.

Another successful piece of incidental melody is the aria of the song seller; and the song 'For thee thy bread is earned in sweat' (Il pane lo guadagni col sudore) was followed with keen interest and roused considerable enthusiasm. From this point of the drama the public enthusiasm was evidently awakened, great appreciation being accorded the song of La Frugola, 'A tiny cottage is my dream' (Ho sognato una casetta).

This enthusiasm reached its culminating point in the duet between Luigi and Giorgetta, in which the anxiety and fear of the lovers, and the secrecy of their plotting, are admirably reproduced in the music. The long monologue of Michele did not evoke the same appreciation, owing to the fact that the greater part of the piece is written somewhat too low for the baritone; but this defect is redeemed in the last couplet, in which the singer has ample opportunity to make full use of his powers. The musical interest fails again, however, after this point, and the tragedy works itself out to the accompaniment of a music sober and void of any particular interest.

'SUOR ANGELICA.'

It must be confessed that the second work of the trilogy does not entirely answer to the expectations which had been aroused. The author's predilection for this production was well known, and the public had prepared itself (unconsciously perhaps) to assist at a representation in which Puccini had surpassed himself. This expectation was not realised, and consequently the barometer of public opinion fell a little too much—perhaps even below the level of just appreciation. Certainly the incidental character of much of the work unnecessarily prolongs the interest, and although the mise en scène was magnificent—with the Gothic cloister, the hidden voices of the nuns, the sound of the Angelus bell, &c.—it was precisely the insistence upon the presentation of the convent interior, with its consequent restriction of voices to soprano and contralto, which somewhat tired the audience. It is only with the arrival of the Princess that the music takes on a more vigorous character. The romanza, 'Dead, my baby' (Senza mamma bimbo, tu sei morto), was awaited with that exaggerated expectation of which I have spoken, and if it did not succeed in realising this artificial ideal, the fault must be attributed more to the mistake made by those who had allowed themselves to form such anticipatory judgment than to any intrinsic lack of inventiveness; and certainly not to the superb interpretation of the primadonna. The finale of the operetta, with the vision of the Virgin, and the Latin hymn (accompanied by an internal orchestra of organ, pianoforte, drums, and bells), was a grand success both musically and dramatically. It is not to be doubted that 'Suor Angelica' will add another to the favourite works of Puccini amongst the public.

'GIANNI SCHICCHI.'

Here there is no division of opinion. In this miniature opera-buffa Puccini has scored a pronounced and lasting success. The great quality which all long for in music is spontaneity, and particularly in operatic music—at least in Italy—this is the criterion by which it is judged. 'Gianni Schicchi' is a continuous fount of spontaneous melody: and scene upon scene is developed with an inspiration and geniality which were a cause for wonder even to the most confirmed of Puccini's admirers. 'Up till now,' one of them writes, 'we did not know Puccini as a comicist except in some isolated examples; "Schicchi" was histrial fire, and he has come out triumphant.' A more appreciative judgment was that overheard in the corridor of the theatre, in the remark made by one of the habitués of the Costanzi, 'So beautiful and so thoroughly Italian is "Schicchi," that were it of greater proportions it would undoubtedly take its place in music with "Falstaff" and the "Barbiere."' Amongst the scenes particularly worthy of record, are the air of Lauretta, 'O mio babbino caro,' sung by Gianni's daughter, when she fears the loss of her lover, and the 'Adieu to Florence,' sung by Gianni as a solemn warning to the relatives.

As a matter of interest, I give the names of the principal singers on the above occasion: 'Il Tabarro'—Michele, Carlo Galeffi; Luigi, Di Giovanni; La Frugola, Matilde Sadun; Giorgetta, Maria Labi. 'Suor Angelica'—Gilda, Dalla Rizza. 'Gianni Schicchi'—Gianne, Carlo Galeffi; Lauretta, G. Dalla Rizza.

For the first time since the beginning of the War, the Royal box was occupied, the King and Queen with the Royal Family assisting at the representation. The author was present, though he did not direct the orchestra; but he was repeatedly and clamorously applauded, and received by the King in the Royal box.

TCHAIKOVSKY.

On January 21, under the patronage of Lady Rennel Rodd, the English Ambassadors, the Philharmonic Society of Rome gave a concert in commemoration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the death of the Russian master. Amongst his works performed on this occasion, a 'Romanza' and 'Theme with variations' for the pianoforte, 'Serenata' and 'Scherzo' for violin, 'Chanson triste' for violoncello, and the Trio in A minor for pianoforte and violin, held the principal places.

THE AUGUSTEUM.

I have space to record only very briefly the doings at the Roman 'Queen's Hall.' The most interesting concerts have been those of January 5, when Tina Filippone-Siniscalchi, a young pianist of sixteen years, presented the following programme:

Concerto No. 14, in D minor, for pianoforte and orchestra Mozart
Preludio, Aria and Finale, for pianoforte solo César Franck
Concerto in B $\flat$ minor, for pianoforte and orchestra Martucci

On January 12 the director of the Accademia Sta. Cecilia presented a programme which, along with the fifth Symphony of Beethoven, included the 'Petrouchka' of Stravinsky, and the recently published 'Pagine di guerra' (War impressions) of Alfred Casella, the young composer of which something has recently been said in the Musical Times. This composition has for sub-title, 'Five musical films,' and later I hope to be able to give a description of the composition. For the present, I note that the work met with grave disapproval at its hearing at the Augusteum.

On January 26 Vittorio Gui directed a concert with the following programme:

Overture, 'Egmont' Beethoven
Fourth Symphony Schumann
Concerto in F major Handel
Impressioni dal Vero—I Malipiero
(See G. Jean-Aubrey's article in the Musical Times for January.)

Concerto, 'Le Carnaval de Paris' Svendsen

LEONARD PEYTON.

Miscellaneous.

THE BRITISH MUSICAL SOCIETY.

On Wednesday, January 22, the Newcastle-on-Tyne committee of the above Society was constituted. It comprises a representative local body of amateur and professional opinion, and it was decided to strengthen the position of the Society by inviting members from all the chief musical societies in the district to co-operate. The chief aims of the committee will be propaganda on the subject of British music, past and present, by means of lectures, recitals, &c., particularly drawing attention to native works which are being produced by local bodies, and to interesting music which has not yet been heard in the district. Mr. W. Deans Forster was elected chairman of committee, and Miss Annie Lawton, Music Studios, Claremont Buildings, Barras Bridge, Newcastle-on-Tyne, secretary and treasurer. The meeting was followed by a public lecture on 'Music in Ruhlben,' delivered by Mr. Edgar L. Bainton. Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill will lecture on 'The Music of Sir Hubert Parry' on March 8, and Dr. Eaglefield Hull on 'British Music' on March 26. Before the lecture, Mr. W. G. Whittaker, the local representative of the Society, explained the objects and needs of the new organization, and appealed for an active and numerous body of supporters.

Dr. W. H. Harris's 'The Hound of Heaven' received its first performance at Birmingham recently. We quote the following from Mr. Ernest Newman's sympathetic notice in the Birmingham Daily Post:

In his setting of 'The Hound of Heaven' Dr. Harris has done one strikingly new thing: he has phrased English poetry with the nicest ear for its rhythms, its varied footfalls, its changing cadences. The accuracy of the prosody is remarkable; it is not the least exaggeration to say that no other English work, for solo voice or for chorus, shows anything like the same combination of elasticity of musical phrasing and regard for the natural rhythm of the spoken line.

The Christmas Term number of the R.C.M. Magazine is full of interest for admirers of the late Sir Hubert Parry. It contains two admirable portraits, 'A Tribute' from Sir Charles Stanford, articles on 'Sir Hubert as Teacher,' by Dr. Walford Davies, 'The Literary Work of Sir Hubert Parry,' by Mr. J. Fuller Maitland, 'Parry at Play,' by Dr. C. H. Lloyd, 'The First President of the R.C.M. Union,' by Miss Marion M. Scott, 'Our Director,' by a Present Pupil, 'The Funeral of Sir Hubert Parry,' by Mr. Herbert Howells, and 'How Sir Hubert worked,' by Miss Emily Daymond, who also writes an informing account of 'The Vision of Life.' The Magazine is deserving of a place on a musician's bookshelf.

Instrumental players (wind, string, and keyboard) who are frequently in difficulties in regard to turning the pages of their music, will be interested in the Empire Music Leaf-turner, an ingenious contrivance which we have tested, and found to do all that is claimed for it.

At a recent Court of the Musicians' Company, Dr. W. G. Alcock and Mr. Charles Macpherson were admitted to the Livery.

Hearty congratulations and good wishes to Sir Charles Santley, whose eighty-fifth birthday was on February 28.

Answers to Correspondents.

EX-GUNLAYER.—Dr. Kennedy's 'Dictionary of Musical Terms' (Curwen, 1s.) gives the pronunciation of foreign words.

INQUISITOR.—Goetz's Sonata in G minor is published abroad: it may be obtained through Novello. Waddington's Suite for four hands is published by Stainer & Bell.

CONTENTS.

	Page
Modern British Composers—II. Arnold Bax. By Edwin Evans ...	103
The Clavier Toccatas of Bach—III. By Sydney Grew	106
Interludes ...	108
More about the Concert Programme. By Arthur T. Froggatt ...	111
Occasional Notes ...	112
Sir Frederick Bridge's Reminiscences ...	113
Church and Organ Music ...	113
A Church Choir in Mesopotamia (Illustrated) ...	114
Three Choirs Festivals ...	116
Reviews ...	117
Letters to the Editor ...	119
Obituary ...	119
The Musicians' Y.M.C.A. Gift ...	119
Royal Academy of Music ...	120
English-made Violins ...	120
Sixty Years Ago ...	120
London Concerts ...	128
English Song and Dance ...	129
Music in the Provinces ...	129
'Nothing Extenuated' (A Fragment) ...	136
Musical Notes from Abroad ...	137
Miscellaneous ...	138
Answers to Correspondents ...	138

MUSIC:

'Oyes! has any found a lad.' Set for Four Voices (transcribed by H. Elliot Button). By THOMAS TOMKINS (1622) ... 120

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this number:—

'In our waking hours.' Vesper Hymn. By Ernest Harrison.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BUTCHER, J. W.—"Cast thy burden upon the Lord." A Short Anthem. 3d.

HARRISON, ERNEST.—"In our waking hours." Vesper Hymn (No. 960, Novello's Parish Choir Book). 1d. Words only, 1s. 6d per 100.

HOLBROOKE, JOSEF.—Three Dramatic Songs. Op. 69 For Soprano (or Tenor) Voice, String Quartet, and Pianoforte. 5s.

JOLLEY, C. E.—"A Hymn of Peace." 1s.

LOYD, C. H.—"Awaked from sleep" Three-part Anthem for Treble Voices (No. 64, Novello's Chorister Series). 3d.

MARKS, J. C.—"Sleep, Baby." Arranged as a Trio for Female Voices (No. 467, Novello's Octavo Edition of Trios, &c.). 3d.

NUTTER, J. P.—"Evening Chimes." For the Organ. 2s 6d.

PARRY, C. H. H.—"After tumult, rest." Tenor Solo from "War and Peace." 2s.

PEPPER, W.—"Through the day Thy love has spared us." On card. 1½d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 321), contains the following music in both notations:—"A Change Wanted." Unison Song, by G. F. COBB. "To the Absent One. Two-part Song, by MENDELSSOHN. 1½d

SMART, GEO. RISELEY.—"The West Land." Song. 2s.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

COKE-JEPHCOTT, NORMAN.—Te Deum laudamus in C. (20 cents) 1s.

DICKINSON, CLARENCE.—"Roads." Song. (60 cents) 2s. 6d.

FREEMAN, H.—The Office for the Holy Communion, in F.

MATTHEWS, J. S.—"The Blessed of Freedom." Song. (60 cents) 2s. 6d.

MCOLLIN, FRANCES.—"He is risen." Easter Carol. (15 cents) 3d.

WILL BE PUBLISHED MARCH 7.

SONATA

FOR

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

Op. 32.

Price Six Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE

ELEMENTS OF PIANOFORTE TECHNIQUE
ARRANGED UPON A RHYTHMIC BASIS

BY

DR. R. H. BELLAIRS.

Strongly recommended by the highest authorities.

More work can be done with Dr. Bellairs' Method than with any other.

Eliminates Mechanical Drudgery.

Interests the pupil from the very beginning.

List of companion works and testimonials on receipt of a post-card.

Price 2s. 6d. net. Of all Musicsellers.

ENOCH & SONS, LONDON.

Enoch House, 58, Great Marlborough Street, W.1.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED, for St. Peter's Episcopal Church, Peterhead, N.B. Salary £60. Good field for competent teacher of Vocal and Instrumental Music. Apply, D. Troup, Solicitor, Peterhead.

PIANISTE WISHES TO MEET Violiniste or other Instrumentalist for Practice and Concerts. E. L., 20, Lambourn Road, Clapham.

SOPRANO (Lead). Miss CLARA BRYANT (Certificated by John Cross, the successful Church trainer), available for Lenten Services, or permanent Sunday duty. Please address, J. C., Rogers' Studios 60, Berners Street W.-1.

STAINER'S "CRUCIFIXION" OR PASSION MUSIC.
BASS-BARITONE SOLOIST,

Thoroughly experienced, has vacant dates. For terms, &c., Apply, J. HENRY, 26, Crossfield Road, West Green, N.-15.

THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SCALE OF TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.-1, not later than

THURSDAY, MARCH 20, (FIRST POST).

TO MUSIC PUBLISHERS.—DR. ARTHUR W. MARCHANT desires post in London as Musical Adviser (Revising, Arrangements, and general Editorial Work). Vocal, Instrumental, and Educational works published by Novello (3 Primers), Bosworth (8 Educational Works), Boosey, Chappell, Augener, Enoch, Ashdown, Weekes, &c. Address: 10, Giebe Crescent, Stirling, Scotland.

'CELLIST (Amateur) SEEKS OPPORTUNITY for String Quartet practice. Crouch, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.-1.

PUPIL-ASSISTANT (Pianoforte) required at School of Music (London). L.T.C.L. or A.T.C.L. preferred. Preparation for A.R.C.M. State age and experience to "Principal" c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.-1.

WANTED in MAY, full-time MASTER responsible for Music of North-Country Grammar School. Some other subjects, including Phonetics, required. Piano not essential. Good disciplinarian with experience and keenness. Salary Departmental Committee's Report Scale. Music regarded as important subject in curriculum. Apply, "Y. S.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.-1.

ABBOTT'S ORCHESTRAL SCHOOL for VIOLINISTS, PIANISTS, ORGANISTS, &c. Finest Cinema Training School in London. Classes daily, £1 1s. Twelve lessons. Appointments found. 47, Uxbridge Road, Shepherd's Bush.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

SEVERAL TWO-MANUAL ORGANS, with pedals, various sizes, suitable for CHURCHES, COLLEGES, &c., built on entirely new principles of specially constructed action, recently introduced, at minimum of cost. Apply W. E. Richardson & Sons, Organ Builders, Manchester, S.W.

ORGAN, by CHICAGO, FOR SALE, £35 or offer. Apply, Box "H," c/o Gordon & Gotch, Ltd., 15, St. Bride Street, London, E.C.-4.

FOR SALE, A POWERFUL HARMONIUM, by ALEXANDRE ET FILS, in handsome Rosewood Case. Good condition, 12 stops, &c. What offers? Lane, Oakhurst, Dorchester.

'CELLO BY GOOD MAKER WANTED.—State price, &c. Crouch, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, London, W.-1.

VIVIER (THE VIRTUOSO) CLARINET Reeds. Superior quality; moderate price. Marvellous sonority, 4d. each; 3s. 6d. per dozen: 20s. half gross; 38s. gross. 59, Cavendish Avenue, Eastbourne.

£1,000 SONG COMPETITION (London Magazine).—For spirited verses apply, EDWARD OXENFORD, Haddenham, Bucks.

TENORS should buy set of Two Songs: "I think on thee" and "Absence" (Oakley). Compass E flat to G. Price 1s. 6d. the set. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.-1.

BASSES and BARITONES should buy set of Three Songs: "The Churchyard"—"A Dirge"—"Winter" (Oakley). Compass B flat to D. Price 1s. 6d. the set. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.-1.

WANTED, to HIRE or BUY, one or two COPIES of Edward MacDowells' Concerto in D minor, Op. 23, Pianoforte and Orchestra. State price. Apply: Stanley Kaye, 383, City Road, Sheffield.

GUIDE TO CANDIDATES FOR THE A.R.C.M. DIPLOMA PIANO TEACHERS' EXAMINATION.

Price 1s. 2d. post free.

By A. H. FILLINGHAM, A.R.C.M.
3, THE CRESCENT, ROUNDHAY, LEEDS, YORKS.

"Candidates want advice of this kind."—Musical Herald.
"Most original and encouragingly helpful."—J. H. Thomas, Esq.
"I shall highly recommend it."—A. M. Craven, A.R.C.M., and others.

MUSIC FOR LENT

BY REV. T. C. LEWIS.

THE STORY OF THE CROSS 2d.
WHEN MY FEET HAVE WANDERED, (Litany of the Passion). (Words only. 2s. per 100) 2d.
THE REPROACHES 3d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ROYAL NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD OF WALES, BARRY.

AUGUST 2nd—7th, 1920.

The following prizes are offered for
MUSIC COMPOSITION.

- (1.) £40 for the best setting for Chorus and Orchestra of Sir Henry Newbolt's Poem, "He fell among thieves."
- (2.) £10 10s. for a Tone-Poem for Orchestra, based on Welsh Airs or Welsh Folk-Songs.
- (3.) £5 5s. for the best Anthem to words expressing Thanksgiving for Peace. (English or Welsh Words.)
- (4.) £5 5s. for the best Glee. (English or Welsh Words).

Nos. 1, 3, and 4, are limited to Welsh composers. No. 2 is open.

All compositions to be sent in by October 31, 1919. The successful competitions will be performed at the Eisteddfod Concert.

Further particulars may be obtained from the Music Secretary, Mr. W. M. Williams, 9, Old Village Road, Barry, Glam.

D. ARTHEN EVANS, General Secretary.

No. 90. NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

COMBINED COUNTERPOINT IN THREE PARTS,

AND

FLORID AND IMITATIONAL COUNTERPOINT

IN THREE AND FOUR PARTS WITH EXAMPLES,

BY

GEORGE J. BENNETT,
Mus. Doc. CANTAB.

Price Three Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE CHANT COMMUNION SERVICE WITH EUCHARISTIC HYMNS.

The Creed, and Gloria in Excelsis, arranged in verses and pointed both for Anglican and Gregorian chanting.

SUITABLE FOR MISSION, VILLAGE AND PARISH CHOIRS, OR
FOR A CONGREGATION WITHOUT THE AID OF A CHOIR.

Arranged by the

REV. C. W. A. BROOKE, M.A.

Price Fourpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Just Published.

AFTER TUMULT, REST

TENOR SOLO

FROM

WAR AND PEACE

COMPOSED BY

C. H. H. PARRY.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CANTATAS FOR LENT.

LAST NIGHT AT BETHANY

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY

JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 2s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
String Parts, 8s. 6d. Wind Parts, 15s. 6d. Full Score, MS.
Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

GETHSEMANE

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY

JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 2s. 6d. String Parts, 10s. 6d. Wind Parts and Full Score, MS.
Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

IN THE DESERT AND IN THE GARDEN

FOR

SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI
AND CHORUS

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND SELECTED BY

VIOLET CRAIGIE HALKETT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

FERRIS TOZER.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 2s. 6d.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.
Parts for Strings and Timpani may be had on hire.

THE CRUCIFIXION A MEDITATION

ON THE

SACRED PASSION OF THE HOLY REDEEMER

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

W. J. SPARROW-SIMPSON, M.A.

SET TO MUSIC BY

J. STAINER.

Vocal Score, paper cover, One Shilling and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 2s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 9d.
Words only, with Hymn Tunes, 2d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 2d.
Words, complete, 10s. per 100; Words of Hymns, 5s. per 100.

THE DARKEST HOUR

FOR

SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI
AND CHORUS

WITH

HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS SELECTED, AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED, BY

HAROLD MOORE.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 2s. 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 9d.
Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100. String Parts, 6s. 6d.
Wind Parts and Full Score, MS.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST

WORDS SELECTED FROM THE HOLY SCRIPTURES, INTERSPERSED WITH APPROPRIATE HYMNS, BY

W. MAURICE ADAMS

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling.
Tonic Sol-fa Edition, 6d. Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

THE STORY OF CALVARY

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence. Paper boards, 2s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 9d.
Words only, 10s. per 100.

IS IT NOTHING TO YOU? AN EASY CANTATA

For use during the Season of Lent, and on Good Friday, specially adapted for Country Choirs

BY

E. V. HALL, M.A.

Price Eightpence.

Tonic Sol-fa, 3d. Words, with Music to the Hymns, price 2d.

VIA DOLOROSA A DEVOTION

FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS

Suitable for the Seasons of Lent and Passiontide

THE WORDS DERIVED MAINLY FROM ANCIENT SOURCES

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

E. CUTHBERT NUNN.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence. Paper boards, 2s. 6d.
Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

OLIVET TO CALVARY

FOR

TENOR AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS
INTERSPERSED WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY
THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 2s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 9d. Words only, 10s. per 100.
String Parts, 11s. Wind Parts, 13s. 6d. Full Score, MS.

AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS (STABAT MATER)

FOR SOLI, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

ANTON DVORÁK.

(Op. 58.)

THE ENGLISH ADAPTATION BY FRED. J. W. CROWE.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 5s. per 100. Vocal Parts, 9d. each.
String Parts, 10s. Wind Parts, &c., 20s. Full Score (Latin words), 45s.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

PENITENCE PARDON AND PEACE J. H. MAUNDER.

The Musical Times, 1/1/99: "An admirable example of a commendable class of Church music. Consists of writing of that melodious and effective nature for which the composer is so widely famed."

Musical Opinion, 1/2/98: "A fine Church composition."

Musical News, 15/1/98: "We have no hesitation in cordially recommending it."

Musical Standard, 5/3/98: "Deserves considerable popularity."

Organist and Choirmaster, 15/2/98: "For the music we have nothing but praise."

Birmingham Post, 5/3/98: "The music is of a high artistic value."

Liverpool Courier, 2/8/98: "A work of great merit in every respect."

Manchester Courier, 9/3/98: "It will doubtless be used in many 'quires and places where they sing.'"

Newcastle Leader, 23/2/98: "A well-written work."

Western Morning News, 25/3/98: "A good composition. Striking and original."

Chester Chronicle, 16/4/98: "A beautiful work, very tuneful, and exceedingly effective."

Lichfield Mercury, 4/2/98: "Extremely effective, containing some really beautiful music."

Journal of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, 1/2/98: "A well-written work. We can strongly recommend it."

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 2s. 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words, 2s. per 100.

Band Parts may be hired or purchased from Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb, 34, Percy Street, W.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE Solitudes of the Passion. A PASSIONTIDE CANTATA

FOR
SOLO VOICES (TENOR AND BARITONE) AND CHORUS

WITH HYMNS FOR CHOIR AND CONGREGATION.

THE WORDS SELECTED BY

E. A. WELCH,
Vicar of Wakefield.

THE MUSIC BY

ALBERT HAM

(Organist and Director of the Choir, S. James Cathedral, Toronto, Canada).

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

The Musical Times says:—

"A useful addition to the store of choral works for use in Lent and Passiontide is Dr. Albert Ham's Cantata, 'The Solitudes of the Passion.'"

"The words are Biblical and well selected."

"The music is devotional and very singable."

Other Press Notices:—"The beautifully arranged words have been treated with fine devotional feeling."

"The score reveals the gifted musician, one well versed in the traditions of the Church."

"The Tenor Solo, 'Who did no sin,' is pure inspiration."

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND ELEMENTARY HARMONY
(In the Press.)

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE LORD'S PRAYER

COMPOSED BY

BORTNIANSKY

Arranged for use in St. Margaret's, Westminster,

BY

EDWIN STEPHENSON.

Price 4d. net.

J. & W. CHESTER, 11 Great Marlborough Street, London, W. 1.

MUSIC FOR LENT AND EASTER.

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, MUS. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES.

Venite (special music setting in G)	...	...	2d.
Te Deum in E (Chant Form)	...	...	3d.
Benedicite in E	...	...	2d.
Benedictus and Jubilate in E (Chant Form)	...	...	3d.
Cantate in E and Deus Misereatur in E	...	...	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in E	...	...	3d.
Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa	...	...	1½d.

ANTHEMS.

Lead me in Thy Truth (Lent)	...	...	3d.
If we believe (Easter)	...	...	4d.
Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa	...	...	1½d.
The Good Shepherd	...	...	3d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW ANTHEMS, ETC.,

By CALEB SIMPER.

*REJOICE AND BE GLAD. New Easter	...	...	4d.
Fine Choruses. Rolling Passages. Grand Bass Solo.	...	...	...
*AWAKE! ARISE. New Easter. 4th Edition	...	...	4d.
Full of melody and effect. Vigorous Choruses.	...	...	...
*O WELCOME PEACE. New. 3rd Edition	...	...	4d.
For Peace Thanksgiving Services. A Vicar says: "I am sure it will appeal to my people." A Choirmaster writes: "Simply delightful."	...	...	...
GOD IS OUR REFUGE. Occupies about ¼ hour	...	...	8d.
Intensely expressive Solos for the different voices, with Choruses of inspiring and stirring effect.	...	...	...
*FIVE CHANT TE DEUMS (for Victory and Peace)	...	...	3d.
THREE QUADRUPLES and TWO SETS of THREE DOUBLES, COMPLETE.	...	...	...
Those marked * can also be had in Tonic Sol-fa.	...	...	...
London: WEEKES & Co., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.-1.	...	...	...

POPULAR EASTER ANTHEMS

COMPOSED BY EDWYN A. CLARE.

Not difficult, but very interesting and effective.

*HALLELUJAH? KING OF KINGS	...	...	28th 1000 3d.
*HE IS RISEN. A great favourite	...	...	36th 1000 3d.
*CHRIST SHALL GIVE THEE LIGHT	...	...	29th 1000 3d.
*THANKS BE TO GOD (with a fine Bass Solo)	...	...	24th 1000 4d.
*WHY SEEK YE THE LIVING AMONG THE DEAD	...	...	28th 1000 3d.
*NOW IS CHRIST RISEN	...	...	17th 1000 3d.
*HALLELUJAH! CHRIST IS RISEN	...	...	26th 1000 3d.
*THE BLESSING OF PEACE. New	...	...	4th 1000 3d.
For Peace Thanksgiving Services. Expressive Solo for Soprano or Tenor; soft and loud Choruses; interesting and imitative.	...	...	...
*THE LORD REIGNETH (Festival)	...	...	18th 1000 3d.
PRaise THE LORD, O JERUSALEM (Festival)	...	...	44th 1000 3d.
FAVOURITE MAGNIFICAT and NUNC DIMITTIS IN D	...	...	28th 1000 4d.
Full of flowing melody. Sung at a Choral Festival.	...	...	...
*BENEDICTUS IN D. Quadruple Chant	...	...	8th 1000 2d.
Varied Acc. for Boys' verses and Men's or Unison verses.	...	...	...
*NEW BENEDICTUS IN B FLAT	...	...	5th 1000 2d.
Very effective changes. No monotony.	...	...	...

Those marked * are also issued in Tonic Sol-fa.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.-1.
New York: THE H. W. GRAY Co., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

JUST PUBLISHED.

EIGHT EASY MELODIES

FOR YOUNG BEGINNERS

FOR

VIOLIN

With Pianoforte Accompaniment

COMPOSED BY

ERNEST NEWTON.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

The pieces are suitable for Solo or Ensemble playing.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

A NOVELTY TO-DAY. A NECESSITY TO-MORROW.

THE EMPIRE MUSIC LEAF
TURNER

THE MOST STARTLING PATENTED NOVELTY OF THE CENTURY

A Simple Device for Turning the Leaves of Music by the Breath

21/-

(PATENT APPLIED FOR)

PRICE COMPLETE

21/-

PREVENTS THE POSSIBILITY OF A SPOILED PERFORMANCE

Some of the Advantages Claimed for this Instrument

Can be placed instantly and without any previous fixing on any Piano or Music Stand. : : : : :

Can be used while playing any Instrument, as the Mechanism is operated by the BREATH or a touch of the finger. : :

Can be packed into any ordinary Music Case and carried with the Music. : : : : : : : : :

EQUALLY USEFUL TO THE LEARNER AND
TO THE PROFESSIONAL WHILST MEMORIZING.

Made in any finished wood to match all Pianos, with all metal parts heavily plated.

This Machine is a unique specimen of British Workmanship, and an ornament to any Piano.

Sole Manufacturers and Owners of British Patent Rights :-

THE BRITISH INDUSTRIES ASSOCIATION,

SOUTHAMPTON HOUSE, 317, HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON, W.C. 1.

TEL. ADDRESS: IBRITOSSA, HOLB., LONDON.

TELEPHONE: HOLBORN 5064.

EVERY MACHINE GUARANTEED.

AGENTS WANTED.

NOVELLO'S POPULAR PIANOFORTE ALBUMS FOR YOUNG PERFORMERS.

HUBERT BATH DOLL'S-HOUSE SUITE

Price Two Shillings.

FRANCESCO BERGER EIGHTEEN LITTLE PIECES

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN HAPPY THOUGHTS

Price Two Shillings.

ARNOLD KRUG TEN LITTLE PIECES

Op. 109.

In two Books. Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

ARNOLD KRUG SCENES FROM FAIRY-LAND

In two Books. Price Two Shillings each.

TH. KULLAK TWENTY-FOUR PIECES

Op. 62 AND 81.

In four Books. Price One Shilling each.

MAX MAYER BAGATELLES

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

MENDELSSOHN SIX CHRISTMAS PIECES

Price One Shilling.

ERNEST NEWTON WOODLAND DANCES

Price Two Shillings.

HUBERT G. OKE THREE PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

SCHUMANN PIECES FOR THE YOUNG

Part I., Price 1s. ; Part II., Price 1s. 6d.

SCHUMANN THREE PIANOFORTE SONATAS

(Part III. of Pieces for the Young).

Price One Shilling.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING OUR VILLAGE IN SUMMER

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

E. A. SYDENHAM SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

TSCHAIKOWSKY CHRISTMAS ALBUM

In three Books. Price One Shilling each.

FRANCESCO BERGER FIRST STEPS AT THE PIANOFORTE

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

A WESTMINSTER PILGRIM

BEING A
RECORD OF SERVICE
IN CHURCH, CATHEDRAL, AND ABBEY
COLLEGE, UNIVERSITY, AND CONCERT-ROOM
WITH A
FEW NOTES ON SPORT

BY
SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE

*Commander of the Royal Victorian Order
King Edward Professor of Music in the University of London
Gresham Professor of Music
Emeritus-Organist of Westminster Abbey*

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.
NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

* * * An Illustrated Prospectus will be sent on Application.

Three-hundred-and-sixty pages, Large Demy 8vo, with a Frontispiece in Colour by Sir Leslie Ward, numerous Illustrations, and a special Portrait of the Author by Sir William Richmond, K.C.B., R.A.

CLOTH, GILT. SIXTEEN SHILLINGS NET.

PREFACE.

THE Canterbury Pilgrims, many years ago, probably passed through the streets or in the immediate neighbourhood of the old City of Rochester as they wended their way to and from the Shrine of Thomas à Becket. Their journeys lay through a diversified and beautiful country, and though toilsome could not have been without many happy days. Through the streets of the same old City of Rochester, nearly seventy years ago, I used to pass to and fro to attend to my duties at the Cathedral, starting on the Pilgrimage recorded in the following pages. My journey has been a long one, my experiences very diversified. I have had as companions, like the Canterbury Pilgrims, a varied Company of all Professions and Ranks of Men. My life's work has been attended with many joys and some sorrows. . . . The notes of my life which I have been tempted to put on record contain nothing very remarkable,—of that I am quite conscious. But the duties which have fallen to me in connection with many important functions at the Abbey will be of some little interest to my friends at least. . . . The difference between the present time, with its opportunities for young musicians, and the distant time of my own youth is immense. Then, there was only one Musical College, the Royal Academy of Music; there was only one scholarship (outside the R.A.M.) available for young musicians—the Mendelssohn; there were no Local Examinations in Music. . . .

Most of my life has been devoted (though not exclusively) to the service of the Church. As boy and man I have served under seven Deans, I have worked with eleven Precentors, while Canons, Vicars-Choral, and Choristers are too numerous to mention. Outside the Church I have laboured at my Profession as Conductor, Teacher in Colleges, Lecturer, and University Professor. In all these various ways I have tried to serve the cause of Music. Whether I have done all that in me lay, readers of the following pages must decide. But, at any rate, I can conscientiously say I have done my best to fulfil worthily the duties of any position to which I have been called.

In our waking hours.

VESPER HYMN.

ACTAU.

ERNEST HARRISON.

♩ = 66. p

dim. pp A-men.

- 1 In our waking hours, and sleeping,
 Holy Jesu, be Thou near;
 Have us in Thy care and keeping—
 Safe from fear.
- 2 With Thy love and mercy bless us;
 Ere we leave Thy house to-night
 Make Thy face to shine upon us,
 God of Light.
- 3 May Thy Presence still go with us,
 E'en though now our worship cease;
 In our latest hour protect us.
 God of Peace. Amen.
 (Copyright.)

Words only, 2s. per 100 net.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

MADE IN ENGLAND

In our waking hours.

VESPER HYMN.

ACTAU.

Doh = E². M. 66.

ERNEST HARRISON.

p	r	:-	.s		f	:	m		r	:-	.m		r	:	d		f	:	l		s	:	d
	d	:-	.d		d	:	d		t ₁	:-	.t ₁		t ₁	:	d		d	:	d		d	:	d
	s	:-	.t		l	:	s		f	:-	.s		f	:	m		f	:	f		m	:	m
	d	:-	.d		d	:	d		s ₁	:	s ₁		se ₁	:	l ₁		l ₁	:	f		s	:	l

B².t.

f.E². dim.

r	:-	.m		r	:-	d ¹ f	:-	.f		m	:	r		r ¹ l	:	s		s	:	f
d	:-	.d		d	:	d ¹ f ₁	:-	.l ₁		se ₁	:	t ₁		l ₁ m	:	m		d	:	d
l	:-	.l		r	:	m l ₁	:-	.r		t ₁	:	m		f d ¹	:	t		l	:	la fe	:-	.fe		s ₁	:-	l ₁ r ₁	:-	.r ₁		m ₁	:	se ₁		l ₁ m	:	m		f	:	f

pp

r	:-		:-	:	m		d	:-		:-	:		f		m
d	:-		t ₁	:-		d	:-		:-	:		d		d
s	:-		:	f		m	:-		:-	:		l		s
s	:-		s ₁	:-		d	:-		:-	:		f ₁		d

A - men.

1 In our waking hours, and sleeping,
Holy Jesu, be Thou near;
Have us in Thy care and keeping—
Safe from fear.

2 With Thy love and mercy bless us;
Ere we leave Thy house to-night
Make Thy face to shine upon us,
God of Light.

3 May Thy Presence still go with us,
E'en though now our worship cease;
In our latest hour protect us,
God of Peace. Amen.

(Copyright.)

Words only, 2s. per 100 net.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CHORISTER DAYS.

3

after the trial, while my father was talking to Mr. Hopkins, she provided with an orange and various other delicacies. Many years after, when I was organist of Manchester Cathedral, Dr. Hopkins (who was then the organist of Trinity College, Cambridge) came to stay near Manchester where I also was a guest. As we walked about our host's grounds I recalled this little episode to him: "Ah!" said he, "if I had rejected you then, how different might have been your career." Dr. Hopkins was himself a chorister in Westminster Abbey, and I often think how much he would have been interested in seeing the post of organist filled by the little boy whom he started on his musical career; unfortunately, he died before I was appointed.

And thus began my chorister days and musical life. Twice daily we attended the Cathedral Service, the practising boys or probationers sitting near the choir, but not wearing surplices. We were taught the rudiments of music by one of the Vicars-Choral, who was wont to correct our bad production by pulling our ears—and pretty hard he pulled, too! I gave much trouble by holding my head a little to one side, a fault which caused my poor ears many a pang! This was doubtless owing to defective vision of one eye, which was in after years discovered and thenceforth corrected by the use of spectacles. A chorister in spectacles would have been looked upon as an impossibility in my young days; nowadays we attend to such matters, and correct imperfections in other ways than by pulling ears! Besides music, we received of course a general education, our school-master being also a Vicar-Choral. This education was not very wide in its scope, but our master taught well enough all that was expected of him. "You'll learn enough here to carry you through the world," he often said, and it must be admitted that a goodly number of the boys he taught have done well

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE

..(EMERITUS-ORGANIST OF WESTMINSTER ABBEY).

WESTMINSTER ABBEY with its historic associations, the noble splendour of its stately architecture, the fragrant memory of its illustrious dead, and the affecting strains of its echoing music, is ever a source of magnetic attraction and delightful contemplation. The ordinary writer rarely seeks out those pleasant nooks and corners which exercise such a fascinating spell upon those who can appreciate their characteristic quaintness. One such secluded spot is known as the "Little Cloisters," which, with its fountain-centred and tree-shaded quadrangle, is environed with an old-world charm of peculiar interest. Entering, from the dark cloister, the narrow doorway of the ancient Littlington Tower, we are within the pleasant habitation of the Abbey's chief musician.

Sir Frederick Bridge is a musician of remarkable versatility. His daily work at the Abbey has been too well known to be described. As a teacher—not only in the organ-loft of the Abbey, but especially at the National Training School of Music, and now at the Royal College—it is sufficient to state that he has trained a number of young men who, in occupying important spheres of work, have done him infinite credit. As a lecturer he has had remarkable success, and many thousands of people have derived keen enjoyment at his popular Gresham lectures. We must also refer to his excellent work in the examination room of the Royal College of Organists, the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Durham, and Victoria University. Nor, too, has he been idle with his pen, as is evidenced in his output of numerous Festival choral works—oratorios, cantatas, ballads, &c.—and well-known anthems and services. His setting of Tennyson's "Crossing the Bar" is a notable composition, while his educational works on Counterpoint, &c., have had an extraordinary success.

Now, in the plenitude of years and accumulated honours, in relinquishing to younger hands the more arduous duties of the Abbey services, he turns with unabated ardour to those other pursuits a full recital of which is contained in the pages of his book.

“A WESTMINSTER PILGRIM,” as the Author felicitously calls his delightful retrospect, is a narrative that flows with little apparent effort. The tale is told with much grace and charm of bubbling humour: while many humanising touches reveal the characteristic philosophy of the writer, none the less forceful because not austere. Yet beneath all this can be seen the man of abounding zest and ardour, pursuing no chimera, but always—in art, in sport, in whatsoever his hand finds to do—playing a chivalrous, purposeful part in the great scheme of life as he sees it.

He is never tiresome. His smaller and more intimate moments have a latent suggestion of the Author's great kindness and simplicity; and now and then an illuminating touch peoples again many a forgotten stage. Sprung seemingly almost from antiquity, because of the reach of his glance down so many dim corridors of memory, he has the power of inspiring in who will listen the sense that so obviously is his own of contact with events that one by one have passed away. Yet no mere dreamer is Sir Frederick, standing solitary in a new age: rather is he a cicerone whose years are constantly renewed from the youth of every fresh inquirer into the lore that he treasures.

Simply, as becomes him, he seems to take the hand of those who seek, and to say, "Come, I can show you many things." Which, as the pages of his book will prove, he proceeds to do in absorbing fashion.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

FOUNDED IN 1844.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH.

No. 914.—Vol. 60.

Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage.

APRIL 1, 1919.

Price 4d.; Postage 1½d.
Annual Subscription, Post-free, 5s.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., MUS.D.

GOOD FRIDAY, APRIL 18, at 2.30 p.m.

MESSIAH ————— HANDEL.

MISS AGNES NICHOLLS

MADAME KIRKBY LUNN.

MR. FRANK MULLINGS.

MR. ROBERT RADFORD.

Full Chorus and Orchestra.

At the Organ: Mr. H. L. BALFOUR.

Prices: Stalls, 8s. 6d.; Arena, 7s.; Balcony, 4s. 9d. and 3s.;
Gallery, 1s. 3d.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

MIDSUMMER TERM begins April 28th.

Entrance Exam., April 25th, at 2.

A Junior Department is now open.

Prospectus can be obtained on application.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c.,
may be had on application.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Sec.

Kensington Gore, S.W.-7

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.-7

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams—"Initiative, Southkens," Telephone—"1160, Western."
London."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Director: PROFESSOR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc.

Honorary Secretary: M. MUIR MACKENZIE, Esq.

The MIDSUMMER TERM commences on Monday, April 28th,
1919. Entrance Examination, April 24th.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age.
Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from The Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND
(Founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Lessons.
Full Orchestral Class, Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras,
Opera, Ensemble, Elocution, Choral, and Harmony, &c., Classes.
Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

BACH'S PASSION (St. John), at St. Anne's, Soho.
Full orchestra. Saturdays in Lent at 3.30 p.m.; Wednesdays in Holy week, 7.30; and Good Friday at 4. For tickets send stamped envelope, Rector, 28, Soho Square, W.-1.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD OF THE R.A.M. AND R.C.M. FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Examinations in Theory held in March and November at all Centres.
In Practical Subjects in March-April at all Centres, and in the London
district and certain Provincial Centres in November-December also.
Entries for the November-December Examinations close Wednesday,
October 15th, 1919.

SCHOOL EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., June-July,
October-November, and March-April. Entries for the June-July
Examinations close Wednesday, May 7th. (Irish Entries, April 30th), 1919.

Theory papers set in Examinations of past years (Local Centre or School) can be obtained on application. Price 6d. per set, per year, post-free.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at the
R.A.M. or R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from—

JAMES MUIR, Secretary,

14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.-1.

Telegrams: "Associa, London."

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC, VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C. 4.

PRINCIPAL LONDON RONALD.

NEW TERM BEGINS MONDAY, APRIL 28TH.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING
in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £7 17s. 6d. and £10 10s. per term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects,
Harmony, Sight-Singing, and / or Orchestra.

Weekly Orchestral Practices.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local Schools
Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Tel.: Cent. 4459.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE. SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A.

SESSION 1918-1919.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 23 to December 21); WINTER TERM (January 20 to April 5);
SUMMER TERM (April 7 to June 28).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra,
Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

UNIVERSITY OF DURHAM.

Examinations for degrees in Music are held as follows: Matriculation,
January, July, and October; First Mus. B., March and September;
Mus. B. and Mus. D., September only.

For particulars, apply Secretary of Examinations, University Offices,
Durham. Copies of former Examination Papers, 1s. 6d. per set.

ADVANCE IN PRICES.

The prices of certain of the Novello publications are again advanced but the charges are still unaltered in the advertisement columns.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £30. Special fee for Organ Course, £20, and for Wind Instrument Course, £15.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC, LONDON

(Under the direction of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.).

INCORPORATED 1891.

153, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W.-11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc., Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.

Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.M.

Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.

Rev. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. Oxon.

Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects, including the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M. F.V.C.M., also for the Teachers Professional Diploma in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and December.

Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition.

Local Secretaries required for towns not represented.

Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint; and all other Subjects connected with the culture of Music.

SPECIAL CINEMA COURSES in Orchestral, Piano, and Organ-Playing.

All communications to be addressed to The Secretary, Registered Office, 11, Burleigh Street, Strand, W.C. 2.

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH MUSICIANS.

Founded 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI.
Victoria, Cap. cxxxi., § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.D.,
DEAN OF DURHAM.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.), LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.), ELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London and at approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

COMPETITIONS, 1919.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best ANDANTE for the ORGAN, and a SHORT ANTHEM with Treble Solo.

BRONZE MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, DOUBLE CHANT,
and KYRIE.

Organists (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Vacant
Appointments.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of Dr. LEWIS, Warden,
153, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

THE TECHNIQUER

(THE MASTER KEY TO TECHNIQUE.)

Patented in Great Britain and U.S.A. For all instrumentalists.

Copy of testimonial received from the great pianist,

FREDERIC LAMOND, ESQ.

"I consider your invention, The Techniquer, is admirably designed for stretching the hand, and especially useful with regard to flexibility and development of the finger muscles."

For Lecture-demonstration, April 14, see separate announcement.

Send for particulars and list of testimonials. "Hand Development," (3rd edit.), 7d. post free. Secretary, Miss Cooper, 33, Orchard St., W. 1.

THE INCORPORATED LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

22, Princes St., Cavendish Square, W. 1.

Branches; Hampstead Conservatoire, N.W. 3, and

117, Seven Sisters Road, N. 7.

Principal: T. H. YORK-TROTTER, M.A., Mus. Doc. (Oxon.).

Rhythmic Method of Music Teaching. Special Training in Music and Elocution. Private and Class Lessons in every subject by the best Teachers.

ORCHESTRAL AND CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES WEEKLY.

Frequent Students' Concerts. Examinations in Music and Elocution,
July and December. For Prospectus and Examination Syllabus apply to the CENTRAL ACADEMY, 22, PRINCES STREET, CAVENDISH
SQUARE, W. 1.

THE BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY.

Offices: 19, Berners Street, W.-1.

FOR THE FOSTERING OF BRITISH MUSIC.

Membership open to all music-lovers.

Patron: The Rt. Hon. A. J. BALFOUR.

President: THE LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.

Director: A. EAGLEFIELD HULL, Mus. Doc. Oxon.

Committee of Management:

Mr. Adrian C. Boulton

Mr. W. W. Cobbett

Mr. Alvin Langdon Coburn

Sir Edward E. Cooper

Mr. W. R. Davies

Mr. Edward J. Dent

Rev. E. H. Fellowes, Mus. Doc.

Col. W. Johnson Galloway

Mr. H. Cart de Lafontaine

Mrs. W. Lee Mathews

Mr. G. Bernard Shaw

Major Geoffrey Toye

W. R. DAVIES, Treasurer.

Particulars from the Acting-Secretary, A. Eaglefield Hull, Mus. Doc.
Oxon., 19, Berners Street, W. 1.

THE GLASGOW ORPHEUS CHOIR.

HUGH S. ROBERTSON, Conductor.

PRIZES

Amounting to FORTY POUNDS are offered for

I. Original settings for Mixed-voice Choir of certain prescribed lyrics.

II. Arrangements for Mixed-voice Choir of certain prescribed Folk-Songs.

A choice of five lyrics and five folk-song is given in the Syllabus, copies of which, with all particulars, may be had post-free on application to the Acting-Secretary, WATSON DODS, 43, Queensborough Gardens, Hyndland, Glasgow.

ROYAL NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD OF WALES, BARRY.

AUGUST 2nd—7th, 1920.

The following prizes are offered for
MUSIC COMPOSITION.

- (1.) £40 for the best setting for Chorus and Orchestra of Sir Henry Newbolt's Poem,
"He fell among thieves."
- (2.) £10 10s. for a Tone-Poem for Orchestra, based on Welsh Airs or Welsh Folk-Songs.
- (3.) £5 5s. for the best Anthem to words expressing Thanksgiving for Peace.
(English or Welsh Words.)
- (4.) £5 5s. for the best Glee.
(English or Welsh Words.)

Nos. 1, 3, and 4, are limited to Welsh composers.

No. 2 is open.

All compositions to be sent in by October 31, 1919. The successful compositions will be performed at the Eisteddfod Concert.

Further particulars may be obtained from the Music
Secretary, Mr. W. M. Williams, 9, Old Village Road,
Barry, Glam.

D. ARTHUR EVANS, General Secretary.

South London Philharmonic Society.

Conductor WILFRID BRUN.
BACH'S "MATTHEW PASSION MUSIC" will be rendered with FULL ORCHESTRAL ACCOMPANIMENT on Wednesday, April 16, 1919, at 7.30 p.m., at the GOLDSMITHS' COLLEGE, NEW CROSS, S.E.
IDA COOPER. HOPE JACKSON.
JOSEPH REED. TOPLISS GREEN.
 Admission free. Silver Collection.
 (All profits to St. Dunstan's Hostel for Blinded Sailors and Soldiers.)
 Hon. Sec. and Treasurer, John W. Waterer, 19, Adelaide Road, Brockley, S.E.-4

Stratford and East London Musical Festival, May 10 to 24.

OPEN CONTESTS.

Ladies', Men's and Mixed Choirs, String Orchestras, Professional and Amateur Pianists (Seniors and Juniors separately), and Solo Singers. Also 75 Local Contests, at Conference Hall, Stratford.
 Syllabus (free) from JOHN GRAHAM, Secretary, 74, Park Hall Road, East Finchley, N.-2. Entries close April 12.

MR. CHARLES TREE.

Mr. H. NICHOLSON, Oakham, February, '19: "I have been using your excellent book on voice production, and have been most successful in all musical competitions. I have won eight out of nine firsts with my boys' choir, thanks to the advice you give."

Wolverhampton Express, March 14, '19: "The key-note of his highly interesting and educative lecture-recital was the value of simplicity. He clearly demonstrated the truth of this. Mr. Tree sang a programme of songs all of which were admirable models, enabling him to show what is required in correct production of the voice. Whether it was a light number or a more serious one, one could not but be impressed by the truth of his method. An instructive lecture."

Mr. Tree's book on voice production, published by J. Williams. Concerts, &c., 14, Courtfield Gardens, Kensington (Western 5386).

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.-2

Founder and Director: MR. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, Concerts, &c. Telephone Paddington, 5990. Sec., E. B. GOLDING.

NATIONAL CONSERVATOIRE

INST., 1895. OF MUSIC, LTD. INCOR., 1900.

149, Oxford Street, London.

Council: Professor ALEXANDER PHIPPS, Mus. Bac., Warden.

W. H. Paltridge, Esq., Mus. Doc., Dunelm.

F. W. Haydock, Esq., Mus. Doc., T.C.D.

LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, all Towns. April-July

(Medals awarded).

DIPLOMAS, ASSOCIATE, LICENTIATE and FELLOW Granted. Educational Department thorough Course (all Subjects) for Amateurs and Teachers.

COMPOSERS.

THE BOARD OF ASSOCIATED COMPOSERS.

President: SUMMERS BROWN.

J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. Bac., F.R.A.M., Director of Revisions.

Composers are assured of receiving the highest professional skill for revision and completion of their works ready for publication. Address, The Secretary, 38, Bedford Street, Strand, W.C.-2.

PIANO PEDALS with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supercedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

"Orrisdale," 418, Chorley Old Road, Bolton.

DEAR SIRs.—I have opened many organs by various builders, but I wish to say this: That I have never played on a finer Pedal Board than the one which you make.

ARTHUR E. JONES, F.R.C.O., L.T.C.L.

Terms: Cash, or instalments of 20s. per month.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

Works—Hanley, Staffs.

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

THE TECHNIQUER.

A LECTURE-DEMONSTRATION and SHORT PIANOFORTE-RECITAL will be given by the inventor, Mr. R. J. Pitcher, at the L.A.M., Princes Street, Cavendish Square, W., on Monday, April 14, at 8 p.m. Chairman: Herbert Fryer, Esq., Professor and Examiner of the Pianoforte, R.C.M. Admission free.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

GRACE CLARE (CONTRALTO).

Oratorios, Concerts, &c. Parliament Mansions, Victoria St., S.W.-1.
 Telephone, Victoria 6400.

LESLIE PINE (TENOR).

(late Q. W. Rifles, Imperial Star)
 Ballad Concerts, Masonics, &c. (Stainer's "Crucifixion").
 Woodcote, Sheredan Road, Hale End, E.-4.

MR. ERNEST A. FLAMBE (BASS).

Oratorio, Concerts, Passion Music, &c. (Stainer's "Crucifixion").
 Address: 67, Ashbourne Avenue, Mitcham Surrey.

MR. HERBERT RANDLE (BARITONE SOLOIST).
 "Crucifixion," &c. Expenses only. Organ Recitals, Concerts, Oratorios, &c. Moderate terms. 7, Gainsborough Road, N.-12.

STAINER'S "CRUCIFIXION" OR PASSION MUSIC.

BASS-BARITONE SOLOIST,
 Thoroughly experienced, has vacant dates. For terms, &c.,
 Apply, J. HENRY, 26, Crossfield Road, West Green, N.-15.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS

(TENOR).

Address—r64, Bank Buildings, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

FRANCIS JARRETT,

(BARITONE).

(Late Soloist, St. Peter's, Vere Street, &c.).

Open to receive engagements for Stainer's "Crucifixion," Maunders' "Olivet to Calvary," &c. Good Friday and Easter vacant. Also now available for appointment as bass soloist at Church in West End, Hampstead, or district. Good reader, and thorough knowledge of Church music. Address—22a, Kingdon Road, West Hampstead, N.W. 6.

C. HUBI-NEWCOMBE.

For words of Songs, Cantatas, Libretti, Translations, French, Italian, &c. Adaptations to Composers' Melodies. (1,200 Songs sold. 300 Adaptations and Translations.)

STOCKTON HEATH, WARRINGTON.

MR. AMBROSE COVIELLO

Associate and Professor of the Royal Academy of Music, is now demobilised, and arranging times for Private Tuition in Pianoforte Playing and Teaching, at his studio (Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W. 1.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
 TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique: How it feels to Sing." 3s. 6d. each, post 3s. 10d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y.

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—Gentlewoman.

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—Eastern Morning News.

"Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald.

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide and accurate; what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury.

"Is an acknowledged authority." . . .—Western Morning News.

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H. Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

MUSICAL REVISOR TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-FOUR YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING.

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W. 2.

*. The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Major H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.B. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of F.L.C.M., L.Mus.L.C.M., A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916), and L.R.A.M. Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, "Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the College of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.
Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-19 .. 136 Correspondence Pupils successful,
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-19 .. 27 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester

SPECIAL COURSE OF CORRESPONDENCE

LESSONS for Teachers of Music desiring to specialise in Singing, with view to qualifying for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Diplomas—as Teachers of Singing. Apply, particulars:—

T. B. EVERARD, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (as Teacher of Singing).
"Harlaw," St. Margaret's Road, Lowestoft.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 302 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey. 'Phone, Burgh Heath, 346.

DR. HARRIS REVISES AND PREPARES MSS FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written and Works Scored for Orchestra. Address as above.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS in MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.-11

ENGAGEMENTS ACCEPTED AND POSTAL LESSONS given by Mr. C. T. HEAVISIDE, SOLO PIANIST, Cellist, &c., 27, Torwood Street, Torquay.

DR. ARTHUR S. HOLLOWAY, Mus. D. Oxon., 13, Roseleigh Avenue, Highbury, N.-5, continues to PREPARE CANDIDATES for the various Theoretical Examinations. Music of any description revised or arranged. LESSONS in COMPOSITION, by post if desired.

MR. T. W. HOLGATE, Professor of Singing, 99A, Queen's Gate, South Kensington, S.W.-7. Voice Trial and Advice free by appointment.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address, 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.-3

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Professor of Singing, R. A. Music. Private Pupils received at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.-1

DR. LEWIS, Mus. Doc., F.E.I.S., Warden, Incorporated Guild of Church Musicians, gives LESSONS, Personally or by Post, in HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT. 158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W.-11.

DR. LEWIS' TEXT-BOOKS:

HARMONY. (2 vols.) 5s. each, net.
COUNTERPOINT. 5s. net.
DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT AND CANON. 5s. net.
FUGUE. 1s. 6d. net.
ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. 2s. 6d. net.
DEVELOPMENT OF ANGLICAN CHURCH MUSIC. 2s. net.
PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
MATERIAL OF MELODY. 3d. net.
IMPROVISATION. 1s. 6d. net.

The above, complete, will be forwarded (carriage paid) or £1 5s.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes, L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd. West Kensington.

H. E. MACKINLAY, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L., L.R.A.M. Correspondence lessons in "Rudiments," Art of Teaching, Harmony, Counterpoint, &c. Preparation for R.C.O., R.A.M., and all recognised Examinations. Moderate fees. "S. Cecilia," Powys Lane, Palmers Green, N.-13.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., begs to intimate to all concerned that his name was changed by Deed Poll granted August 13, 1918, to that of Arthur Ellarshaw. He also desires to state that he has returned from Active Service with the B.E.F., France, and is prepared to resume his professional duties forthwith. Advanced pianoforte pupils; theory lessons by post. Sunday duty taken for Organists. Moderate fees. Cole Bank School of Music, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.-1.

ABBOTT'S ORCHESTRAL SCHOOL for VIOLINISTS, PIANISTS, ORGANISTS, &c. Finest Cinema Training School in London. Classes daily. £1 1s. Twelve lessons. Appointments found. 47, Uxbridge Road, Shepherd's Bush.

CLIFTON COLLEGE.—Classical, Mathematical, Modern Language, Natural Science, and Music Scholarships, value from £25 to £100 a year. Examination in June. There are also several "War Exhibitions" of £60 a year. Particulars from the Secretary, Clifton College, Bristol.

THE INCORPORATED LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC, 22, Princes Street, Cavendish Square, W.-1. RHYTHMIC METHOD OF MUSIC TEACHING, Holiday Course for Teachers, April 22 to 26.

SOLO BOYS.—Three or four first-class Solo Boys (Treble and Alto) will shortly be required, to travel, and sing in Mr. G. T. Pattman's Organ Performance. A trial of voices will be held in London. Boys must be between the ages of 13½ and 15 years, and must be fair readers. Travelling Expenses, Board and Lodging, and Education provided; together with Salary of from £25 to £100 per annum, according to qualification. Apply, enclosing two testimonials as to singing qualifications, and character, to Mr. G. T. Pattman, 74, Falsgrave Road, Scarborough.

TENOR WANTED, for the Church of the Ascension, Balham. £12. Address, Adolphus Antoine, 43, Alderbrook Road, S.W.-12.

ALTO and BASS Required, £12 each. Church near Sloane Square, Chelsea. Light duties. Write A. H. B., 63, Oakley Street, S.W.-3.

TENOR AND BASS WANTED. £12. Also two Lady CONTRALTOS. Write Choirmaster, St. Andrew Undershaft, St. Mary Axe, City.

JESUS COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

ORGANIST SCHOLARSHIP.

An Organist Scholarship of the value of £80 per annum will be filled up early in May, 1919, if candidates of sufficient merit present themselves.

Candidates are requested to send their names with testimonials of character and of musical qualifications not later than April 25th, 1919, to the Dean, the Rev. A. Nairne, D.D., Jesus College.

A selected number of candidates will be asked to present themselves for examination.

The examination will include the playing of pieces selected by the candidate and playing at sight, extemporising, accompanying the service, and Choir training.

The candidate selected will be required to come into residence in October, 1919.

His duties will include playing at all the services and training the Choir.

He will be expected to take an active part in the musical life of the College.

A candidate must produce evidence that he will be able to pass the Previous Examination, if not already exempted, and the selected candidate will be required to read for the B.A. degree (Musical Special Examination) or the Mus. Bac. Examination.

The candidate will be required to reside in Cambridge and perform his duties as Organist Scholar during that part of the Long Vacation in which services are held in Chapel.

The selected candidate must place his name on the boards at once, and begin residence in October, 1919.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED

for June 1, 1919, for First Presbyterian Church, Ballymoney, Co. Antrim (Three-Manual Organ). Salary not less than £60. Good opening for thoroughly competent teacher, Pianoforte and Singing. Applications, with references, to be sent to Rev. A. H. Dill, Ballymoney, Co. Antrim.

ORGANIST, fully qualified, for Bunyan Meeting (Congregational Church), Bedford. For application form apply, A. S. Palmer, 4, Rothsay Place, Bedford.

AMERICAN CHURCH OF THE HOLY TRINITY, PARIS.

An ORGANIST will shortly be REQUIRED. Fine organ, daily Cathedral service, Choir-school; opportunities for outside work in the American and English Colony: a considerable number of weddings, &c. Salary £250-300.

Intending applicants should send their names, with those of three references (no testimonials) to Dr. P. C. Buck, West Hill House, Harrow-on-the-Hill, before May 18, 1919.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED, for Barclay Church, Edinburgh. Applications, enclosing testimonials, to be sent on or before April 10 to Alexander Middleton, 12, Succoth Gardens, Edinburgh.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED, St. Mary's, Beddington. Salary £75. Apply to Rev. Hugh A. Hodgson, Rectory, Beddington, Surrey.

OFFICER shortly being demobilised, 4½ years' service, desires Post as ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER in or near London. Recitalist and successful Choir-trainer. Address, "A.R.C.O.," 112, Motherwell Road, Bellshill, Lanarkshire.

DURHAM MATRIC. 1919. July—Oct.
(Postal Tuition.) 1920. Jan.—July—Oct.

AFTER THE 6TH LESSON.

"There is such a DIFFERENCE IN METHOD compared with his former teacher that it is my firm belief he could have GONE ON FOR YEARS before getting even to the STANDARD you have him now."

FOR ONE FEE I GUARANTEE A PASS.

A. McALISTER, B.A., 209, Castle Boulevard, Nottingham.

CRUCIFIXION and OLIVET to CALVARY. TENOR SOLOIST is Open to accept Engagements for these works. Moderate fees. Address "A. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

WANTED by Gentleman (R.C.), ENGAGEMENT in London or suburbs, Bandmaster, Organist, Teacher (Tonic Sol-fa and Staff) in School or Institution; or in Music Warehouse. Thoroughly experienced in all branches. Replies, W. K., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, London, W. 1.

LADY ACCOMPANIST wishes to meet Violinist or other Instrumentalist or Professional Singer, for Practice and Concerts. F. V. C., 25, Cautley Avenue, Clapham Common, S.W.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

STANDARDISED ORGANS (Pipe).—TWO-MANUALS and Pedals, as built to order, by Richardson's, specially to meet the requirements of the times. 100 to 500 guineas; in nine sizes. Entirely new introduction. These Organs are voiced and toned and adapted according to size, &c., of Church. Specifications and Estimates, W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

WANTED, REED PEDAL ORGAN, two or three-Manuals. 9, Shelton Road, Merton Park, S.W. 19.

ORGAN TUNER WANTED.—Good wages to suitable man. Apply, Mr. G. T. Pattman, 74, Falsgrave Road, Scarborough.

FOR SALE.—PIANO (Second-hand) COTTAGE, by Jn. Broadwood. In good condition. £40. Mrs. G., Oaklands, Bishopswood Road, Highgate.

J. STANDFIELD DESIRES One or Two days' PIANO TUNING, 256, Essex Road, Islington, London.

£100 SINGING, £50 PIANO SCHOLARSHIPS, SOUVENIR CUP, MEDALS, AND CASH PRIZES. Mr. CLIFTON COOKE'S Competition, May 3rd and 10th. Prospectus, Secretary, 26M, Guilford Street, W.C. 1.

THE SINGER'S GUIDE. By Marie Witt. Natural Voice-Training Method, with well-graded exercises. Novello & Co., 2s. 6d. net. Mrs. Witt receives pupils, 5, Blomfield Road, Maida Vale, W.

LIMITED NUMBER.—100 Copyright Songs by MacDowell, Delius, Sibelius, Reger, Weingartner, &c. 7s. 6d. carriage paid. Sample dozen, 3s. 6d. Kingsley, 43, Southdown Avenue, Brighton.

30 YEARS' "MUSICAL TIMES" FOR SALE, unbound. Offer wanted. W. W. F., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 100, Wardour Street, W. 1.

TE DEUM in F. MAGNIFICAT and NUNC DIMITTIS in F. 3d. each. By A. Toase, Novello & Co., Ltd.

PIANO PLAYING KEPT UP without keyboard practising.

Not the least of the many benefits which the use of my System confers upon pianists is that of being able to keep "in practice" without keyboard practising.

Even when circumstances make keyboard work impossible for several months, definite progress is often made in touch, increased powers of execution, and in general command over the keyboard.

This is one of the many reasons why pianists of all grades of proficiency should take my Postal Course.

Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 10,000 successful students add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard" Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated booklet, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average or advanced pianist, and enclose 2d. in stamps for part cost and postage.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C.1.

FOR SALE.—PNEUMATIC PIANO Pedal Attachment by Norman & Beard. Straight shape. Cost £11. Offers? Miss Dawney, West Heslerton, York.

FOR SALE, TEACHING CONNECTION (piano and singing) in Central Suffolk. Good scope. Teaching in both departments at High School in the town. Apply to Miss N. Paisley, L.R.A.M., Stowmarket, Suffolk.

FOR SALE.—HARP, eight Pedals, in very good condition, with wooden case and some spare strings; also Music Stand, both by Erard, and inlaid satin wood. What offers? Mrs. Yates, Kingston House, Yeovil.

FOR FESTIVALS AND CELEBRATIONS.—Scena, "VICTORY AND THANKSGIVING," Walter Partridge. Ready orch., mil., and brass bands and bells, choral finale optional (colossal effect); also "OUR EMPIRE'S AIM" chorale-featured J. A. MEALE organ recitals, Great Success. Massed Guards Bands, Clara Butt Concert, Royal Albert Hall and Silver Wedding Service, St. Paul's Cathedral. Piano organ copies, 2s. Partridge, 32, Stockwell Road, S.W. 9.

CHOIRMASTERS wishing something entirely new should obtain
TE DEUM and BENEDICTUS in F.
TE DEUM in D. By D. R. MUNRO.
Sung where hitherto only chants allowed.
Selling in thousands. Twopence each.
London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TO TEACHERS AND TRADE.

GREAT SALE OF MUSIC.—Large Stock of Breitkopf & Härtel, Peters, Universal, Costallat and other Continental Music Publishers by the leading Classical and Modern Masters, comprising band, orchestral, trios, quartets, quintets, violin solos, violin duets, violin and piano, piano solos, piano duets (two pianos, four and eight hands), 'cello solos, 'cello duets, organ, harmonium harmonium and piano, mandoline, mandoline and piano, operas (vocal and piano scores), songs, choruses for mixed voices, full orchestral scores, Gregorian music, Catholic Church music (Latin words), &c., at greatly reduced prices. Parcels sent on approval.

KINGSLEY, 43, Southdown Avenue, Brighton.

DEATH.

Rogers, March 7. After a serious operation, Edmund Rogers, of 45, Alma Square, N.W., the beloved husband of H. Bertha Rogers, and son of the late Edmund Rogers, of Devaux House, Salisbury, aged 67. For thirty years Organist and Choirmaster at St. Michael's, Star Street. R.I.P.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC

GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W.-1.

FOR MUSICAL EDUCATION AND EXAMINATIONS.

PATRON—HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

PRINCIPAL—DR. F. J. KARN, MUS. BAC. CANTAB.

DIRECTOR OF EXAMINATIONS—G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, ESQ.

HIGHER EXAMINATIONS, 1918.

The following is a List of SUCCESSFUL CANDIDATES at the DIPLOMA EXAMINATIONS held in London and at Provincial and Colonial Centres for the half-year to December, 1918 :—

DIPLOMAS IN PRACTICAL MUSIC.

LICENTIATES (L.L.C.M.).

PIANOFORTE PLAYING.—Lilian Adamsen, Lillian E. Armond, Edward William Bla k, Monica Byrne, Lillian Butterworth, Ivy G. Bulcock, Alice L. Blatch, Norman J. Bell, Evelyn Bradley, Winifred V. Brown, *Eva Clinch, Percy C. Chambers, Mabel M. C. Ion, Elsie Cottle, Edna Clarke, Edith M. Collett, Muriel Cooper, Margaret Doyle, Olive M. Denton, Clara Davis, Bridie Dowd, Monica Dooley, Rosie Von Drehnen, Dorothy Day, Emily Ellison, Winifred Ferry, Olive E. Fewins, Nellie Fairhair, Henry J. Frater, Jean K. Forrest, Audrey A. R. Francis, Florence I. Field, *Lydia M. Gilbert, Evelyn Gallagher, Edith Gordon, Nellie Grace, Olga D. Greentree, Constance M. Glassey, Dorothy Grievie, Edith Goynne, Irene R. Gill, Hilda M. Hinchcliffe, Nora Hannan, Doris M. Hall, Bessie Herring, Mary L. Hosty, Irene Heaney, Doreen Harding, Marie Horne, Violet Howard, Florence Hook, Alvina Hall, Florrie Hargreaves, Netta Harris, Olive Ingram, Edith Jones, Gladys Jones, Jessie Johnson, Gwendoline M. Jenkins, Erica Johnson, Nellie Knuckey, Nellie Knowles, Margaret A. Kent, Thelma Kerrigan, Edith B. Knott, Dorothy Laight, Gladys I. Llewellyn, Aline M. Lycette, Phyllis C. Lawwood, Mary Lee, Lilian Love, John Morgan, Jessie Mather, Agnes B. Marrin, Hannah M. Moore, Rose McKell, Nellie McCarthy, Stella Marsden, Thelma Mitchell, Olive M. Murnane, Elsie McAlicie, Gertrude Naylor, Lilian M. Needes, Teresa P. Nihil, Annie E. Neave, Lily O'Mara, Bryan O'Loughlin, Mona O'Brien, Eileen M. C. O'Connor, Hilda Pugh, Hilda E. Park, Dorothy Price, Eva Potter, Florence M. Phillips, Lilian M. Porter, Ruby Penrose, Ella Rogers, Ivy Spowart, Evelyn Smith, Florence M. Speake, Eleanor A. Stokes, Lilian B. Smith, Dorothy E. Sheldon, Kitty B. Sunderland, Irma E. Struthers, Elizabeth Sayer, Jean Scott, Elizabeth Steven, Florence Sheppard, Mabel Sarahfield, Winifred M. Southan, Irene A. Sawle, Annie M. Terrett, Elvira V. Thompson, Nora Treacy, Grace O. Theow, Vera Turnley, Albert Unsworth, Doris Valentine, Dorothy Wyatt, Ethel G. Worrall, Elsie Wolfindin, Doris C. Walter, Mary A. Williams, Annie Walker, Doris M. Webster, Florence M. Winshury, Polly Walton, Hannah Woolf, Florence I. Worland, May Westlake.

VIOLIN PLAYING.—Dollie Correll, Rona Cone, Emma J. Clarke, Millicent O. V. Garnett, Emerald A. Hills, James E. Moate, Vera Reeves, Elsie Smith, Edward Trebilco, Jack West.

SINGING.—Vera L. Axford, Mary Baldwin, Martha Cogan, Annie H. Hedges, May Hughes, Florence O. Pyke-Underhill.

ELOCUTION.—Cecil Blundell, Frances Heater, Eva J. Hall, Nellie Veitch.

TEACHERS' DIPLOMA.

PIANOFORTE PLAYING.—Audien Cameron, Dorothy Grieve, Mary Hackett, Chrystabel McRae, Aileen Roper, Linda R. Wood.

ELOCUTION.—Marguerite M. Aujard, Renie Bartley, Ettie Hogan, Harriet I. Lee, Mary McVann.

VIOLIN PLAYING.—Olga Slinning.

ASSOCIATES (A.L.C.M.).

PIANOFORTE PLAYING.—Gladys Austin, Florence K. Anketell, Dorothy A. Allen, Cora Adams, Alice A. Aspin, Jessie M. Ackroyd, Margaret Atkinson, Doris W. Armitage, Ann Allport, Gertrude Anderson, Miriam Adams, Myra Adams, Eva Alexander, Alida Allen, Doris Adams, Doris M. Arnold, Constance E. Ahern, Pauline Abraham, Eileen Allison, Winifred L. Bloomfield, Harry Baker, Leonard L. Beckett, Matilda S. Bohan, Alice Bloudege, Gwendoline Bennett, Catherine M. Brosnan, Alice Brangan, Jeanie F. Biennet, Polly Burton, Muriel R. Beesley, Sadie Brinton, Nancy Beckett, Annie J. R. Brenner, Elsie Booth, Gladys Baylis, Robert Burtonwood, Thelma Browne, Elizabeth Barbour, Mary Bell, Audrey Barrett, Kathleen Bird, Florence Barlow, Stella M. Brett, Valeria Buckley, Imelda Bell, Constance D. B. Browne, Viola Bonnette, Vera Blatch, Roy Booth, Emmeline Butterworth, Nellie Brown, Minnie Bilton, May Bird, Mary J. Bradstreet, Kathleen Beasley, Eleanor Blyth, Priscilla Baker, Florence B. Bailey, May Bulluss, Kevin Bradley, Mabel J. Black, Cora D. Brown, Josephine Carleton, Ethel G. Carpenter, Jeanne Collard, Henrietta V. M. Carter, Hilda D. Clark, Phyllis L. Chadwick, Isabel E. Clifford, Lilian W. Cooke, Beryl A. Clark, Eveline F. Carr, Christine G. Chapman, Gladys W. Clewett, Elwyn Christopher, Edna Charlton, Ethel I. Cornish, Olive Clines, Hannah M. Covell, Daisy E. Carr, Edith Clancey, Kathleen Colls, Sarah J. Chittick, Muriel Colner, Molly Crowe, Mavis Coleman, Doris Caldwell, Katherine Cronin, Essie Chantler, Dulcie Conroy, Hazel C. Chapman, Muriel A. Chick, Clarice Camper, Freda Cohen, Elizabeth G. Cameron, Annie I. Carmichael, Violet M. Cartmel, Marie Canny, Margaret Clarke, Mary Carlin, Mary Connell, Ruth H. Chandler, Lilian Chenworth, Maudie Dunn, Violet B. A. Denham, Annie Davies, Josephine R. Davies, Maudie Dunster, Sophia E. M. Deacon, Violet A. Dawes, Daisy E. Dobbyn, Winifred D. Douglas, Evelyn Davies, Charlotte C. Douglas, May Davies, Violet Dickson, Sylvia Dunlop, Lily Dart, Muriel Dear, Mary H. Dickson, Irene Demond, Violet Dunster, Mary Donohoe, Marjory E. Dunston, Ethel E. Davis, Mary C. Drake, Alice Dignan, Linda Dwyer, Dorothy G. Daniel, Millie Dee, Ida Daly, Ruth E. Evans, Kathleen M. Evans, Morfydd A. Evans, May Edmunds, Ena A. Easson, Laura Ellison, Norah Edmondson, Henry Evans, Ruby D. Ewing, Dorothy Edwards, Gladys Ellershaw, Annie Easton, Irene Edwards, Margaret S. Edwards, Lilian M. Flook, Mary Frizzell, Irene Francis, Lucy M. Flack, Irene V. Fowler, James L. Farrell, Ethel E. Fisher, Gladys R. Fisher, Eva Firth, Mary Fanning, Reita Fleming, Agnes M. C. Flett, Jessie Fennessy, Alma Fawcett, Grace Fowler, Olga Frost, Margaret Falk, Madge Fisher, May Fairlie, Olive Falcke, Dorothy Frawley, Mary Fitzsimons, Hazel M. Fouracre, Mabel C. Goldson, Teresa M. Green, Winnie Grills, Frank Gallin, William A. Gill, Dorothea M. George, William G. Greene, Olive Gray, Margaret D. Green, Frances M. Glover, Mildred M. Godby, Lilian M. George, Beulah Grigg, Rose Gellie, Melba H. Goodenough, Susa Gleeson, Constance A. Gardener, Annie Green, Laura B. Grey, Hilda A. Gasson, Aileen Graves, Miriam L. Glasson, Marjory Goodwin, Pansy I. E. Gray, Annie Gray, Edina Gilchrist, Walter J. Griffiths, Edith G. Glass, Victoria A. Gill, Nonie Gardiner, Greta M. Green, Una Gledhill, Evelyn M. Hall, May Horton, Doris Hale, Olive H. High, Margaret N. Hopkins, Edith Hensman, Florence Hunter, Rose E. L. Hodges, Violet Hutton-Mills, Edith M. Hodgins, Sarah Hill, Florence H. Harris, Elizabeth M. Haack, Kathleen A. Hart, Elsie N. Hoddle, Gertrude Haake, Phyllis H. Herivel, Mabel Howard, Hazel Hamblin, Beatrice Howard, Leola Hodges, Minnie Hartley, Edith M. Hancock, Emmie Harris, Doreen Hayes, Dora Hollinshead, Phyllis Hurst, Doris K. Hooper, Doris Hebblewhite, Vera M. Henry, Kathleen Harrington, Edith L. Honeychurch, Alice M. Heide, Irene Hart, Pearl Hussey, Florence E. Hatt, Ruby Hodges, Viola Huff, Myrtle Healey, Alison Hodgson, Kathleen O. Hagan, Daisy B. Ingold, Ettie Irvine, Nellie Jackson, Meirionwen Jones, Ceinwen Jones, Gladys I. Jeffs, May Jaques, Kathleen Johnston, Iris M. Jones, Elsie M. Judd, Edna W. Johnston, Gwynne Jay, Flora C. Jolly, Lizzie Johnson, Daphne Jeffers, Myr le Jeffrey, Sylvia Johansen, Alexandra Knight, Irene King, Harr ett T. Kemp, Ruby H. Keech, Heather Kinnaird, Etheldreda W. Kent, Eva Kortlang, Kitty N. Kelly, Mary C. King, Doris Kilmartin, Christina Kingsford, Maisie Loughnan, Alice Lewis, Marion Lyall, Ruby F. Leijonhjelm, Ellie Lee, May S. Leijonhjelm, Doris Lindley, Eileen Lane, Jennie Ludford, Leslie S. Leadbeater, Novella Locke, Mary Lewis, Gladys A. Locke, Kathleen M. Langfield, Florence A. Lord, Mehetabel L. Law, Lily Longden, Gladys M. Llewellyn, Eileen Lobb, Ruby Lanskey, Eileen V. G. Lyons, Lily Lawrence, Marion E. Love, Doris Lloyd, Kathleen Lonsdale, Grace Leighton, Dorothy J. Lee, Daphne Leaney, Jeanie M. Munton, Helene J. Meyer, Grace M. Morris, Ernest H. Mizon, Kathleen Monks, Edith de la Mare, Mary Morris, Ella M. Mather, Jessie G. Murray, Mary McKenna, Winifred Moore, Arthur G. May, Helen McKee, Doris H. McCormack, Dorothy Mestre, Winifred E. M. Massey, Clarice M. McKee, Eileen McCarthy, Edward McDonald, Doris Milgate, Olive M. Merick, John McIlroy, Dorothea Mates, Adelaide M. Martin, Grace McKenzie, Barbara McIndoe, Sarah McKervey, Lily Maloney, Jacoba A. Mostert, Queenie D. McCullum, Gertie Marron, Ruth P. M. Moore, Irene Moore, Mary McKenna, Gladys E. Morris, Mary V. Meyers, Ella McCollough, Barbara McCarthy, Catherine L. Montfort, Margaret Malone, Ronnie Maher, Susa Mahony, Blanche McPhee, May Moon, Jessie McPhee, William E. McMahon, Ivy Muno, William Moate, Edith M. Munby, Henrietta Newman, Amy Nixon, Alice Noad, Constance M. Neelsen, Gertrude M. Noonan, Mary W. E. Ollier, Florrie O'Connell, Nellie O'Malley, Doris O'Malley, Ivy Oehlman, Nita O'Brien, Frances O'Brien, May E. O'Neal, Rhonnie O'Grady, Alna Oakes, Molly O'Brian, Mary O'Brien, Mary Osland, Mary E. Parry, Daisy Porter, Alicia M. Phillips, Doris M. Padfield, Rosie I. Pearson, Violet Port, Rose L. E. Pring, Ivy Potter, Sister Patrick, Doris Prothero, Hilda R. Pope, Irene G. Parnley, Millicent L. Poole, Laura Poulsen, Evelyn Powell, Emma Perkins, Susan Pengilly, Isabella L. Perry, Myrtle Penman, Nora I. Procter, Irene Piper, Alma Pickles, Meta M. Prior, Charles L. Payne, Jean Prowse, Nora Parkin, Leone D. Percival, Gladys Pearson, Viola B. Parry, Iside Pellegrini, Frank C. Perkins, Robert Poole, Walter H. Pritchard, Kathleen P. Rawlings, Laura Redford, Muriel Rathjen, Jessie G. Rankin, Edith M. Rendle, Amanda A. Riley, Amy D. Rogers, Annie E. Robinson, Frederick H. Roe, Monica Reynolds, Isabella Ramsey, Eileen Ryan, Lily Ridge, Rhoda R. Raymond, Ima Reed.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

ASSOCIATES (A.L.C.M.)—Continued.

Lucy Rowley, Alice E. Rees, Irene Roberts, Lillias E. Ross, Doris L. M. Rethman, Florence M. Ross, Hazel M. I. Russell, Jean E. Row, Alice Rogan, Beatrice A. Sewell, Mabel L. Spearman, Grace G. Sharp, Gladys M. Symmons, Mabel Snell, May Shortall, Reginald Shaw, Janet F. Scott, Gladys Spencer, Christine E. Spanton, Olive R. M. Scott, Nora Stirzaker, Emma Speakman, Edith M. Shaw, Florence M. Senior, Eleanor S. Scott, Patti Sweeney, Ella Symes, Doris Smith, Jean Scott, Julie Scully, Hilda Shipp, Amy Sinclair, Basil Schaaf, Lucy Smith, May Snew, Violet Steel, Dora Stirzaker, Myrtle Sandow, Mary Arthur E. Shankland, Mavis I. V. Spurrell, Doris M. Stuart, Amy Jean Simpson, Jeannette Silling, George C. Stephen, Maude Sennett, Eileen Saunders, Beryl Turton Smith, Jane Taggart, * Dorothy Tranter, Nellie A. Torode, Reuben Taylor, Maggie Thomas, Robert L. Tippet, Nellie Taylor, David H. Thomas, Gladys Taylor, Nellie Taylor, Irene Timms, Ethel Tonkin, Tanner, Gladys Trevenar, Ellen G. Toomey, Freda Taylor, Thelma D. Thomas, Gladys Taylor, Enid O. Wintmore, Alice L. West, Evelyn E. Wilson, Eric Williams, Sarah Walmsley, Hilda Waters, Annie Winrow, Mabel Williams, Lily D. White, Lillian F. Wright, Fanny Walker, Estra Walker, Osnagh D. P. Williams, Mabel G. Wright, Vivian Webb, Muriel Wales, Mildred Willey, Cissie Wilson, Dorothy A. White, Doylah Woods, Irene Warren, Bernice Walshaw, Ada Webb, Vivian B. Walker, Coral A. H. Wood, Marie S. Wilson, Margaret Waters, Violet Emily Webb, Constance Winson, Aileen Woodman, Bere White, Isis V. Williams, Veronica F. Walle, Elizabeth C. Wahnner, Henrietta V. H. Young, Frank Yates, Bertha W. Young, Olive M. Young.

SINGING.—Elizabeth Brauning, James Barnes, Winifred M. Chapman, Norah Dignam, Winifred Funsford, Enid F. Dunster, Raymond W. Dunster, Mary Guernsey, Arthur L. Humphreys, Mabel Harwood, Albert Hawkins, Eva Hooker, Reginald C. Longmire, May C. Maguire, † Lily M. Priddey, Gladys Richards, Edith Savory, May E. Scott, Mary Shaw, Rachel Zwar.

VIOLIN PLAYING.—Arthur B. P. Amies, Edgar Baker, Alfred Copp, Catherine M. Cocks, Eileen Correll, Mary A. E. Davies, Lena D'Albora, Annie W. Wilton-Fuller, Robert C. Godfrey, Willie Galloway, Alex. Gordon, Irene Hart, Lily Hopkins, Cecilia Hopkinson, Stella Henderson, Dora V. Knight, Florence A. Lansell, Gladys McPhail, Sarah McLoghlin, Rose M. McDevitt, Eva D. Mansley, Gertrude Mannes, May O'Donnell, Dorothy M. O'Connor, Pelham H. Richardson, Percival H. Smith, Mary Strong, Anita Spear, Isabella E. M. Scott, Annie Sander, Lillie Tobin, Constance Whitlow, Ruby S. Wise, Doris Whiteley.

ORGAN PLAYING.—Charles Watson.

VIOLONCELLO PLAYING.—M. Alice Cook.

CORNET PLAYING.—John R. Jarrett.

ELOCUTION.—Thelma Anderson, Emily Bickerton, Daisy B. Barnes, Maud Blackburn, Blanche Clarkson, Kathleen M. Crocker, William J. Cairns, Hilda Emonson, Gertrude Fryberg, Harriet Gregson, Dorothy F. Gilding, Agnes L. Gilroy, Margaret Jerome, Jean Jamieson, Jessie Marks, Nellie Popay, Hazel Skinner, Joyce A. Thistleton, Lily Ward.

DIPLOMAS IN THEORETICAL MUSIC.

ASSOCIATES IN MUSIC (A.Mus.L.C.M.).

Grace E. Blencowe, Arthur T. Cullen.

* Gold Medalist.

† Silver Medalist.

The examiners were: Algernon Ashton, Esq.; Horton Allison, Esq., Mus. Doc. Dublin, Mus. Bac. Cantab., F.R.A.M.; Alfred W. Abdey, Esq., Mus. Doc., Oxon., F.R.C.O.; Edward R. G. Andrews, Esq.; S. Bath, Esq., Mus. Doc. Dublin, Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O.; L.R.A.M.; Chas. T. Corke, Esq., Mus. Bac. Cantab., A.R.A.M.; Evan P. Evans, Esq.; Leonard N. Fowles, Esq., Mus. Doc. Oxon.; David Gillam, Esq., Cuthbert Harris, Esq., Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.; A. H. Howell, Esq.; George Hooper, Esq., A.R.A.M.; Arthur S. Holloway, Esq., Mus. Doc. Oxon.; G. Augustus Holmes, Esq., Director of Examinations; George Herbert, Esq.; Charles E. Jolley, Esq., Mus. Doc. Oxon.; Aug. W. Juncker, Esq., D. J. Jennings, Esq., Mus. Doc., T.U.T.; F. J. Karn, Esq., Mus. Doc., T.U.T., Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Geo. E. King, Esq.; D. J. Montague, Esq.; Henry W. Newbould, Esq., Mus. Bac. Cantab.; P. Planche-Plummer, Esq.; G. D. Rawley, Esq., Mus. Bac. Lond.; Roland Rogers, Esq., Mus. Doc. Oxon.; J. Howlett Ross, Esq.; R. Walker Robson, Esq., Mus. Doc., Dublin, Mus. Bac. Oxon., L.R.A.M.; Sydney Scott, Esq., Mus. Doc. Dublin, Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.; G. Gilbert Stocks, Esq., Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.; W. H. Shinn, Esq.; Reginald J. Shanks, Esq.; W. E. Thomas, Esq., Mus. Doc. Oxon.; C. Reginald Toms, Esq.; John Thornton, Esq.; Harold E. Watts, Esq., Mus. Doc. Oxon.; T. C. Webb, Esq.

There were 1,089 Candidates for Diplomas, of which number 761 passed, 300 failed, and 28 were absent.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the DIPLOMAS of ASSOCIATE (A.L.C.M.) and LICENTIATE (L.L.C.M.) are held in London and at certain Provincial and Colonial centres in APRIL, JUNE, JULY, and DECEMBER; and for the DIPLOMAS of ASSOCIATE IN MUSIC (A.Mus.L.C.M.), LICENTIATE IN MUSIC (L.Mus.L.C.M.), the TEACHER'S DIPLOMA (L.C.M.), and FELLOWSHIP (F.L.C.M.) in JUNE, JULY, and DECEMBER.

The NEXT LOCAL EXAMINATION in all branches of practical and theoretical music will be held in Scotland and Ireland in JUNE and at all other centres in JULY, the last day of entry being May 15 and June 14 respectively.

REPRESENTATIVES are required to form LOCAL CENTRES in vacant districts in Great Britain and all other parts of the world. Ladies or gentlemen willing to undertake the duties should apply to the Secretary for particulars. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

GOLD, SILVER, and BRONZE MEDALS and BOOK PRIZES are awarded at the Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations. Full details will be found in the Syllabus.

The TEACHING DEPARTMENT of the College provides COMPLETE MUSICAL EDUCATION for Students, Amateur or Professional. PRIVATE LESSONS are given in Pianoforte, Singing, Violin, Harp, Organ, Harmony, Counterpoint, and Musical Composition (including Fugue, Orchestration, and Musical History), Mandoline, Guitar, and Elocution; also in Violoncello, Flute, Clarinet, and all other orchestral instruments. LESSONS MAY COMMENCE FROM ANY DATE.

There are CLASSES in Pianoforte, Singing, Violin, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint, Ear Training, Sight Singing, &c.; also SPECIAL COURSE OF TRAINING for Teachers of Music, and PROFESSIONAL COURSE for Pianists, Violinists, and Vocalists. Fine THREE-MANUAL ORGAN (38 stops) in the College Concert Hall, available for lessons and practice.

The College is open from 9.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. The staff consists of over 90 professors.

The ORCHESTRA, OPERA CLASS, LADIES' CHOIR, STRING QUARTET CLASS, DRAMATIC CLASS, and CONDUCTORS' CLASS meet each week.

The 241st Students' Concert took place in the Concert Hall of the College on March 25th.

The Opera Class have in rehearsal "Princess Ida," by Gilbert and Sullivan.

Full particulars of both Education and Examination Departments of the College, together with Syllabus and Forms of Entry, can be obtained on application to

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.

Telephones: Central 3870 and Gerrard 3948.

Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg, London."

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

April 28th.—Summer Term begins.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Any number of subjects—from one to the Full Course—may be entered for. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student.

Approved complete Courses for the University of London Degrees in Music under recognised Teachers of the University.

Students are prepared for the Degrees in Music of the London and other Universities, the Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, Trinity College of Music, &c.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College students for other subjects.

All modern systems of Technique (whether for the Pianoforte, Violin, or other instrument) and of Vocal Training are taught by qualified professors.

The Class for Training Boys or Cathedral Choirs is held on Saturday mornings.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

Students not older than 16 years are admitted to the JUNIOR SCHOOL at reduced fees.

There are Thirty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music of the London University and are open only to Students who have satisfied the Matriculation requirements of that University.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, on application to the undersigned,

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1

GRANVILLE BANTOCK.

SONGS FROM THE CHINESE

A FEAST OF LANTERNS. B flat, C (E to G), and D.

FROM THE TOMB OF AN UNKNOWN WOMAN. G, A (B to F), and B.

ADRIPT. A, B (F sharp to G), and C.

YUNG YANG. D (D to F) and E.

Price, each, 2s. net.

"For once in a way songs do not outnumber the rest of the musical publications put together. Among such as there are, there is only one good one—Granville Bantock's 'A FEAST OF LANTERNS.'—The Times."

"'FROM THE TOMB OF AN UNKNOWN WOMAN' is charming. It might be well if promoters of British Concerts would give us more of such things."—Daily Telegraph."

CYRIL SCOTT.

SECOND PIANOFORTE ALBUM.

Contents:—

RUSSIAN DANCE.

ASPHODEL.

INTERMEZZO.

CAVATINA.

ODE HEROIQUE.

Price 3s. 6d. net cash.

"Would that every teacher of music in the country would be induced to give his pupils such artistically satisfying fare as that found in Cyril Scott's Pianoforte Music."—Musical Opinion."

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.
AND OF ALL MUSICSELLERS.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & Co.

CONSTRUCTIVE HARMONY.

YORKE TROTTER.

PART I.

TWO SHILLINGS.

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION.

This book is an attempt to make the study of Harmony and of Construction as practical as possible. With this object in view the student is taught to recognise the sound of the various chords and progressions, to be able to play on the pianoforte any chords, to resolve discords, and to harmonize melodies at sight. Moreover, from the very beginning he is made to do things for himself; to invent melodies, to put together chords, and to make little compositions as exercises and so become a real musician. Experience has shown that students who have been taught to regard harmony as inseparably bound up with melody and rhythm rapidly acquire the power of making compositions of their own on a given harmonic basis.

BOSWORTH & CO.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods:

BERINGER'S TUTOR. WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR. HEMY'S TUTOR. WICKINS'S RAPID TUTOR. GRAHAM P. MOORE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES.

Publishers of Sevcik's Violin Method, Beringer's Daily Technical Studies. Macfarren's The Child's First Music Lesson.

READY MAY 1.

A

WESTMINSTER PILGRIM

BY

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE

PRICE SIXTEEN SHILLINGS NET.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.
NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

APRIL 1, 1919.

ADVANCE IN PRICES.

In consequence of the continued increase in the cost of production, Messrs. Novello & Co. have to announce that a further adjustment of prices of certain of their publications is necessary. The amended rates will apply only to publications which were originally issued at prices ranging from 1s. to 12s. (folio songs excepted), and on and after March 31 the scale of charges will therefore be as under:—

Original Price		Price on January 1, 1918		Present Price
1d.	...	1½d.	...	1½d.
1½d.	...	2d.	...	2d.
2d.	...	3d.	...	3d.
3d.	...	4d.	...	4d.
4d.	...	6d.	...	6d.
6d.	...	8d.	...	8d.
8d.	...	10d.	...	10d.
9d.	...	1/-	...	1/-
1/-	...	1/4	...	1/6
1/6	...	2/-	...	2/3
2/-	...	2/6	...	3/-
2/6	...	3/-	...	3/6
3/-	...	4/-	...	4/6
3/6	...	4/6	...	5/-
4/-	...	5/-	...	6/-
4/6	...	5/6	...	6/6
5/-	...	6/6	...	7/6
5/6	...	7/-	...	8/6
6/-	...	7/6	...	9/-
6/6	...	8/6	...	9/6
7/-	...	9/-	...	10/6
7/6	...	9/6	...	11/-
8/-	...	10/-	...	12/-
8/6	...	11/-	...	13/-
9/-	...	11/6	...	13/6
9/6	...	12/-	...	14/-
10/-	...	12/6	...	15/-
10/6	...	13/6	...	15/-
11/-	...	14/-	...	15/-
11/6	...	14/6	...	15/-
12/-	...	15/-	...	16/-

LONDON: NOVELLO & COMPANY, LIMITED.

NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

'A WESTMINSTER PILGRIM': A NOTE ON THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

In our last issue we gave a few particulars of the pictures which will be an important feature of Sir Frederick Bridge's forthcoming book. We are now able to give something like a complete list.

The book is very strong on the portrait side. We have first a fine picture of Sir Frederick, specially drawn in pastel by Sir W. B. Richmond, R.A. There is also an excellent full-length portrait of the author in his Doctor's robes, reproduced from a photograph by Sir Benjamin Stone. Twelve past Abbey organists—the two Gibbons, Blow, Purcell, Croft, John Robinson, the Cookes, Thomas Greatorex, George Williams, and James Turle—form an interesting little gallery. They are reproduced in two sets of seven, in small ovals, in an ornamental design. Manchester folk will be pleased to see a photograph in which three organists of their Cathedral figure—Dr. Kendrick Pyne, Sir Frederick Bridge, and Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson. Other portraits are of Samuel Sebastian Wesley (a fine one), Miss Maria Hackett, 'the Choristers' Friend,' Doyle's familiar line drawing of Garcia and Hallé playing chess, John Hopkins and John Larkin Hopkins, a hitherto unpublished portrait of Mendelssohn as a boy, one of the author à la 9, a reproduction of 'Spy's' cartoon of 'Westminster Bridge,' and a photograph of a contemporary bust of Handel.

Sir Frederick's house in the Little Cloisters appears, of course, but we are more attracted by the picture of his Highland home, Cairnborrow Lodge, in Aberdeenshire. With such a retreat to fly to, holidays should never be long enough. Mention of the Scotch home reminds us that the author's sporting side is shown in two pictures. In one he has just landed a fish, and the other shows him with his gun and a couple of pheasants he has brought down. Architecturally, the outstanding pictures are a very fine photograph of the Choir and organ in Westminster Abbey (looking West), and an old engraving of Manchester Cathedral, showing the Father Smith organ in its original position. The detail in both is wonderfully clear. Readers of 'Edwin Drood' will be interested in the reproduction of a water-colour drawing by S. Aveling of the Great West Door of Rochester Cathedral, over the quotation 'Old Cathedral—earthy smell.'

There are also pictures of the Chapter House Doorway, Rochester, and 'The Six Poor Travellers,' in the High Street.

Photographs of a very curious bass trombone, the figurehead of H.M.S. 'Cressy' (which Sir Frederick saw launched at Chatham in his boyhood), the Silver Rose-water Dish presented to the author by the Samuel Pepys Club, the Medal of the Worshipful Company of Musicians, and a diamond pane of one of the Abbey windows with Captain Cooke's signature scratched thereon ('Henry Cooke, 1642'), make up the sum of a collection of illustrations sufficiently interesting and valuable to confer distinction on any volume.

MODERN BRITISH COMPOSERS.

BY EDWIN EVANS.

II.—ARNOLD BAX.

(Continued from March number, page 105.)

'November Woods' is a picture of storms and driving leaves and the sere and dank atmosphere of autumn. Mingled with this is the mood of human loneliness and regret, which is finally absorbed in the restlessness and turmoil of nature. The composer himself regards it as his best orchestral work, and the one by which he would elect to be represented if asked to make a choice.

To complete the survey of Bax's orchestral works it only remains to mention two ballets, 'Between Dusk and Dawn' and 'The Frog-Skin,' the former of which was performed at the Palace Theatre a year or two ago.

His vocal music includes two important cantatas, 'Enchanted Summer,' from Shelley's 'Prometheus Unbound,' and 'Fatherland.' The former is for two solo soprani, and the latter for tenor solo, both supported by chorus and orchestra. His songs are numerous, but not more than a quarter of them have been published, and these are mostly of early date. Among them one has attained to considerable popularity: it is a setting of William Allingham's 'The Fairies.' It is possible that one of the causes that have hindered the publication, in a country where song is the staple of the music world, of some fifty songs by one of the most interesting composers, has been the difficulty of many of his accompaniments. It is curious that, at a time when songs of the most complex texture have become not only common, but even especially favoured in our concert-rooms, many of our publishers should still apply the standard of the young person who strums. That Bax is a brilliant song-writer could be established by one work alone, the Six Poems from 'The Bard of the Dimbovitza,' originally with orchestral accompaniment, but available also with pianoforte. These songs belong to the best in modern British music.

Arnold Bax's chamber music can be divided into two groups, the one comprising early compositions which are still open to the reproach of complexity and diffuseness, and the other the maturer works which may be considered representative of his present style. In consequence, however, of the discarding of works which do not satisfy riper judgment, the former category has been whittled down to three—a Phantasy for viola which was one of the earliest compositions inspired by the playing of Lionel Tertis; the Trio for pianoforte, violin, and viola to which reference has been made; and a String Quintet of such difficulty that an adequate performance has seldom if ever been possible. The first Violin Sonata, begun in 1910 and completed in 1915, may be said to form a bridge between the two periods, especially as it covers the year 1913, which is the turning point in his style; but revision has inevitably placed this work definitely among those of his later manner.

The culminating point of Bax's chamber-music is a monumental Pianoforte Quintet of such richness of invention that it would be an ornament to the musical literature of any country or period. It is long, but without longueurs, for the constant infusion of fresh musical interest holds the attention to the end. A complete contrast is supplied by the String Quartet in G, which is of lighter calibre and possesses great charm, notably in its slow movement. The two Elegies—the one a Trio for flute, viola, and harp, and the other an 'Irish Elegy' for cor anglais, harp, and strings—deserve prominent mention. The latter in particular has a quiet meditative beauty that is very characteristic of Bax's best work. The most individual work of this period is, however, the second Violin Sonata, which has never been played in public. The personal note is so strong that it might almost be the musical translation of a year's diary. Here is an extract from the Scherzo ('The Dance of Death') :—

EX. 1.

VIOLIN.

PIANO.

For the pianoforte Arnold Bax has written a Sonata in one movement which has been beautifully played by Myra Hess, and a Concerto which still awaits a public performance. Available for pianists are a number of short pieces which will well reward their attention.

Leaving on one side a Concert Waltz in E flat, which is an early work of little significance, there are 'The Princess's Rose Garden' (nocturne), 'Sleepy Head,' 'Apple-Blossom Time,' 'The Maiden with the Daffodil' (idyll), 'A Mountain Mood' (melody and variations), 'Dream in Exile,' and 'Winter Waters' (tragic landscape).

A few bars from 'A Mountain Mood' will serve as an example of characteristic figuration of a simple melody :

Moderato.

Ex. 2.

pp
PIANO.
A little prominent.

In 1910 the composer paid a brief visit to Russia which made a lasting impression. Of this he has left a record in three pianoforte pieces: a nocturne entitled 'May Night in the Ukraine,' a 'Gopak,' and a remarkably vivid descriptive piece entitled 'In a Vodka Shop,' the popularity of which with pianists has assumed such proportions that it threatens to overshadow his more delicate work. It is one of those instances where success may become inconvenient, especially as the piece, apart from its native cleverness, has nothing in common with its composer's characteristic work. This is far better exemplified in a composition which is reserved for final mention.

Although the writing of duets for two pianofortes has never enjoyed great popularity, most composers have at one time or another been attracted by it. Unfortunately the result has too often been a set of variations, which may afford a field for ingenuity but seldom appeal to the imagination. Arnold Bax has gone to the other extreme and written a highly imaginative Irish tone-poem for two pianofortes entitled 'Moy-Mell, or, The Happy Plain.' This work, fortunately, is published, and for those who wish to become acquainted with Arnold Bax's music, it serves the double purpose of furnishing an example of his pianoforte writing and supplying the key to the imaginative mysticism which permeates practically the whole of his orchestral works.

There is always a special interest in a composer's own preference for certain of his works. It is not always endorsed by outside criticism, nor is it reasonable that it should be, as the composer's judgment is swayed by considerations known only to himself, such as whether the work in question is a faithful interpretation of the mood in which it was written, to which the music is the only key for the outside world. Moreover, there are moods and moods, and among them some which, faithfully interpreted, would find little favour. In recording Bax's preferences there is no occasion for such reservations, which are of more general significance. He regards the Pianoforte Sonata, the two Violin Sonatas, the Pianoforte Quintet, and 'November Woods' as the most characteristic of his compositions. It is perhaps not surprising that he should omit the Concert Overture, although it seems to possess a special attraction for conductors, but one would have expected to find the Irish tone-poems among his favourites. The fact is, however, that Bax, whilst a master of picturesque and fanciful description, is essentially a musician of subjective inclinations, and to have produced a convincing piece of abstract musical thought will always give him more pleasure than even the most faithful delineation of his beloved Irish scenery and folk-lore.

Following is a complete list of Arnold Bax's works :

ORCHESTRAL.

'Into the Twilight'	1908
'In the Faery Hills'	1909
Festival Overture	1909
'Christmas Eve on the Mountains'	1912
Four Orchestral Pieces	1912-13
(a) 'Pensive Twilight'
(b) 'Dance in the Sun'
(c) 'From the Mountains of Home'
(d) 'Dances of Wild Iravel'
'Nympholept'	1912
'Spring-Fire'	1913
Scherzo	1913
'The Garden of Fand'	1913
Variations for Pianoforte and Orchestra	1916
'In Memoriam'	1917
'Tintagel'	1917
'November Woods'	1917

CHOIR AND ORCHESTRA.

'Fatherland' (Poem by J. I. Runeberg) (Cary & Co.)	1907
'Enchanted Summer' (Act 2 Sc. 2, 'Prometheus Unbound' (Shelley) (Riorden)	1909

BALLET.

'Between Dusk and Dawn'	1917
'The Frog-Skin'	1918

CHAMBER MUSIC.

Fantasy for Viola and Pianoforte	1904
Trio for Violin, Viola, and Pianoforte (Cary)	1906
String Quintet, in G	1907-08
1st Sonata for Violin and Pianoforte, in E ...	1910-15
Quintet for Pianoforte and Strings, in G minor	1914-15
Legend for Violin and Pianoforte (Augener) ...	1915
2nd Sonata for Violin and Pianoforte, in D ...	1915
Four Pieces for Flute and Pianoforte	1916
Trio for Flute, Viola, and Harp (Elegy)	1916
Ballade for Violin and Pianoforte (Chester) ...	1917
'An Irish Elegy,' for Cor Anglais, Harp, and Strings	1917
String Quartet, in G	1918
'Folk-Tale,' for 'Cello and Pianoforte	1918
Quintet for Strings and Harp	1919

PIANOFORTE SOLO.

Symphonic Fantasy	1910
'Valse de Concert' (Boosey)	1910
'May-Night in the Ukraine' (Williams)	1911
Gopak (Williams)	1911
'Mask'	1912
Capriccio	1913
'The Happy Forest'	1913
Passacaglia	1914
'The Maiden with the Daffodil' (Williams) ...	1915
'In a Vodka Shop' (Augener)	1915
'Sleepy-Head' (Augener)	1915
'Apple-Blossom Time' (Augener)	1915
'The Princess's Rose-Garden' (Augener)	1915
'A Mountain-Mood' (Chester)	1915
'Winter-Waters' (Chester)	1915
'Dream in Exile' (Chester)	1916
'Ideala'	1918
'On a May Evening'	1918
'Love-Song'	1918

FOR TWO PIANOFORTES (FOUR HANDS).

'Magh Mell' (An Irish Tone-Poem) (Chester)	1917
--	------

VOICE AND ORCHESTRA.

Six Poems from 'The Bard of the Dimbovitza' 1914-15

SONGS WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.

'A Celtic Song-Cycle' (Cary)	1904
'The Faeries' (William Allingham) (Cary) ...	1905
'Golden Guendolen' (William Morris) (Cary)	1905
'From the Uplands to the Sea' (William Morris)	1905
'When we are Lost' (Anon.)	1905
'Green Branches' (Fiona McLeod)	1905
Magnificat (Cary)	1906
'The White Peace' (Fiona McLeod) (Chester)	1906
'A Hushing Song' (Fiona McLeod)	1906
'The Magic Fiddler' (Anon.) (Chester)	1906
'I fear thy kisses, gentle maiden' (Shelley) ...	1906
'The Two Corbies' (Border Ballad)	1906
'The Kingdom' (Rückert)	1907
'Milking Sian' (Fiona McLeod) (Chester) ...	1907
'Song in the Twilight' (Freda Bax)	1907
'Isle' (Fiona McLeod)	1908
'Heart o' Beauty' (Fiona McLeod)	1908
'Longing' (Fiona McLeod)	1908
'The Hills of Dream' (Fiona McLeod)	1908
'Landscape' (J. P. Jacobsen)	1908
'O dewy flower' (J. P. Jacobsen)	1908
'The Flute' (Björnsen)	1908
'The Wood-Lake' (H. Leuthold)	1908
'Shieling-Song' (Fiona McLeod) (Chester) ...	1909
'A Lyke-Wake Dirge' (Border Ballad)	1909
'Marguerite' (William Morris)	1909
'The Garden by the Sea' (William Morris) ...	1909
'Ideala' (R. Dehmelt)	1909

'Love-Ode' (O. E. Hartleben)	1909
'Beloved, even in Dreams' (Rückert)	1909
'Home' (R. Dehmelt)	1909
'The Dance-Ring' (O. Bierbaum)	1909
'Enlightenment' (R. Dehmelt)	1909
Lullaby (S. McCarthy)	1910
'To Eve' (James Cousins) (Chester)	1910
Christmas Carol (15th century) (Chester) ...	1910
'The Journey' (R. Dehmelt)	1911
'Flight' (R. Dehmelt)	1911
Folk-Song	1911
'The Dead Child' (J. P. Meyer)	1911
'Spring Showers' (Rückert)	1911
'Faith' (Rückert)	1911
'Freimund' (Rückert)	1911
'The Bridal Prayer' (R. Dehmelt)	1911
Three Roundels (Chaucer) (Chester)	1914
'O mistress mine' (Shakespeare)	1916
'A Leader' (Æ.)	1916
'Parting' (Æ.)	1916
'I know myself no more my child' (Æ.)	1916
'The splendour falls on castle walls' (Tennyson)	1917
'Go, lovely Rose' (Waller)	1917
'Green grow the rushes O!' (Burns)	1918
'Far in a Western Brookland' (A. E. Housman)	1918
'When I was one and twenty' (A. E. Housman)	1918
'Midsummer' (Clifford Bax)	1918

Interludes.

A Belfast reader sends a wrathful protest against my suggestion as to occasional performances of detached movements of symphonies. He says that 'our leading musical paper should not be allowed to air such views unrebuked.' But musical papers exist for something more than the mere chronicling of events; they should give publicity to views the soundness of which can be tested only by thought and discussion. There ought to be no public for a journal conducted on the comfortable assurance that the existing state of affairs is bound to be right. What our friend needs, apparently, is not a 'leading' musical paper, but one which follows.

Musically, he is clearly out for the strict observance of law; everything must be played exactly as written by the composer. 'Beethoven,' he says, 'is a better judge of what should follow what than Mr. John Jones, conductor of the local symphony orchestra.' We may credit Beethoven for knowing 'what should follow what' in his own period, but it is quite conceivable that to-day Jones may be a better judge in some cases. For example, when Beethoven put repeat marks at the end of a movement, he was following a custom of the period, and probably gave little thought to the matter. He was right in putting them in, but Jones is just as right in leaving them out.

And why this snifty reference to Jones? He is (we will assume) unable to compose a symphony, but he is none the less (perhaps all the more) able to make a good job of performing somebody else's. If in view of local conditions he decides to perform a portion of a work (such portion being of course complete in itself), there is no need to start waving blackthorns. Nobody objects to the performance of a movement from a Bach or Handel Suite: why should the Suite's successors, the Sonata and the Symphony, be sacrosanct? I am at one with my correspondent so far as respect for the actual text is concerned; not a note should be altered. But in regard to omissions of sections, or disregarding of repeat marks, the modern performer should be allowed reasonable latitude.

My Belfast friend says he is not a 'devout Beethovenite.' None the less, his critical faculties seem to be in abeyance when that composer is being discussed. He 'flatly denies' that any movement of Beethoven's symphonies is capable of boring us, adding, 'I am prepared to take off my coat and go through the nine Symphonies in detail.' Even this is not too much for the compleat whole-hogger. He goes on, 'And if 'Feste' is not satisfied, I am prepared to take off my waistcoat and go through the thirty-two Sonatas, and in fact I will take off anything'—don't start! for he adds with caution we should hardly expect in one so impulsive, 'in reason, for the cause.'

Instead of discussing this outburst I will merely show how much genuine appreciation of musical value lies behind it, by pointing out that this Beethoven enthusiast, who can find no weak movement in all the composer's Symphonies and Sonatas, thus airily disposes of Haydn and Mozart: 'My idea is that the public is not prepared to support the Symphonies of Haydn and Mozart, not because certain movements bore them, but because all the movements bore them, and that the public is quite right.' In other words, the worst of Beethoven is better than the best of Haydn and Mozart, e.g., Beethoven's first Symphony is better than Mozart's 'Jupiter,' or G minor!

Such differences of personal taste are not worth discussion as a rule, and I have said so much only because this case is one of many signs that some of us are at the parting of the ways so far as Beethoven is concerned. One sheds enthusiasms with regret. Ten years ago I could read Grove's panegyric on the Symphonies, and say 'hear, hear' all the time. I was thrilled by No. 5, and excited by No. 7. Why am I thrilled and excited no longer? I should not think the question sufficiently important to put on paper if I did not know that many other musicians find themselves growing out of these and other masterpieces, and are wondering why. Let us see if we can find an answer, and perhaps suggest a remedy.

In the first place, I do not think we shall be wrong if we assume that the causes are not solely musical. Something is surely to be ascribed to the unrest that we see in every department of life. Our old standard of values is undergoing drastic revision. The plainly expressed distaste for ordered and leisurely methods in social and political affairs is hardly likely to leave art untouched. The phase may be—and probably is—merely temporary, but there can be no disputing the fact that a very considerable proportion of musicians are finding certain of the classics out of touch with the age. As this dissatisfaction is chiefly felt with works in which the excellences are largely formal, and which consist mainly of lengthy development of not always very important material, we need not be surprised if a considerable proportion of Beethoven's works seem likely to lose a good deal of their popularity in the near future. If this cloud were due entirely, or even mainly, to what may be called social reasons, I believe it would soon pass. But there are certain musical considerations that are far more serious.

Some years ago, when he was more given to provocative utterances than he is to-day, Mr. Josef Holbrooke said that the Beethoven orchestra was dead. I was among the many Beethovenites who regarded the statement as a kind of reflection on the master, and foamed at the mouth accordingly. But can any musician to-day honestly say that he prefers the Beethoven orchestra, with its deficient wind (and especially brass) departments, to the splendid and sonorous bands to which we are now accustomed? And although the fundamental principles of orchestration were fixed by Beethoven, can it be denied that composers of to-day have so developed the art in the directions of richness and sonority that Beethoven's scheme seems grey and bleak in comparison?

These modern developments are not all due to the improvement and invention of instruments. By skilful disposition of parts, division of strings, and so forth, the scorer of to-day can obtain from a small band a sonority undreamt of by Beethoven. But we need not go so far back as Beethoven: it is hardly an exaggeration to say that there are dozens of young musicians still in the pupil stage who could show Berlioz a thing or two in regard to orchestration. In no department of the art, save perhaps those of organ-building and playing, has there been so much advance during the past two decades.

As no living composer would dream of writing a Symphony for the Beethoven orchestra, are we wrong in saying that, for symphonic or other big purposes, it is obsolete? And if this premise is granted, we must expect the further question, In how many of Beethoven's orchestral works is the musical interest strong enough to overcome the handicap of a medium unsatisfactory to the modern ear?

Let us hastily glance at one or two other reasons why some of us are 'going off' Beethoven just now. Something must be laid at the door of performers and conductors who show so little discrimination in their choice of the master's works. Why should we be compelled to listen to such unrepresentative examples as the Turkish March from 'The Ruins of Athens,' the Rondino for wind instruments, the Violin Romance in G, the Pianoforte Andante in F, the Fantasia in G minor, the 'Ruins of Athens' Variations, and other examples of Beethoven a long way below his best? One of our greatest pianists recently played the three above-named pianoforte works in recitals confined to the composer. And at a recent Beethoven concert vocal relief was provided by a batch of the composer's songs. Now, I have never yet seen any claim put forward that Beethoven was other than a failure as a song composer. The songs on this occasion fell flat, even with a Beethoven audience. I felt sorry for the singer, and even sorer for Beethoven, whose shade may well say, 'Save me from my devotees.' Why give one-man programmes if there is not enough of his best work to fill a scheme? And if there is enough (as there surely is in this case), why include the admittedly second-rate? There is a wealth of fine music by other composers waiting for a hearing. The composer of to-day has a hard enough fight for a place in competing with the best of the classics. Nobody will complain of that. It is one of the disabilities of belonging to the great men's posterity. But every time admittedly inferior music is played because of the name on the title-page, our composers (and public) have a right to throw things. If any of the works mentioned above had been signed by Hummel or Ries should we ever hear them to-day?

As a good example of the homage paid to a name, take the following. Liszt, in one of his letters, tells us that a favourite trick in his youth was the playing of a piece 'at one time as of Beethoven, at another of Czerny, and, lastly, as my own.' When he played it as his own, he received encouragement, being told that it was not bad for his age. The day he played it as by Czerny he was not listened to, but when he played it as a composition of Beethoven he was certain of the 'bravos' of the whole assembly. In later years he made an even more striking experiment. After mentioning that Beethoven's 'colossal name' was used to 'crush all contemporary writers,' he says:

I this winter devoted several musical performances almost exclusively to duets, trios, and quintets of Beethoven. I made sure of being wearisome; but I was also sure that no one dare say so. There were really brilliant displays of enthusiasm: one might easily have been deceived, and thought that the crowd were subjugated by the power of genius; but at one of the last performances an inversion in the order of the programme quickly put an end to this error. Without any explanation a Trio of Pixis was played in the place of one by Beethoven. The 'bravos' were more numerous, more brilliant than ever; and when the Trio of Beethoven took the place assigned to that of Pixis, it was found to be cold, mediocre, and even tiresome; so much so, indeed, that many made their escape, pronouncing that it was a piece of impertinence in Monsieur Pixis to presume to be listened to by an audience that had assembled to admire the masterpieces of a great man.

If this Pixis Trio could be smuggled into a Beethoven programme to-day . . .

Beethoven suffers also from his date. He is regarded as a modern, and we listen to him as such. Had he worked at least half a century earlier, we should have looked on him as a kind of semi-antique, approaching him in a suitable frame of mind. But he is just modern enough to challenge comparison with later composers who, with much less genius, are able to make a stronger appeal to us by virtue of the wealth of colour (harmonic and instrumental) and the enormously increased idiomatic and other resources at their disposal.

Nor is the question of date the only one that affects Beethoven's appeal to us to-day. If Bach wears better than Beethoven, as I think he does, it is probably due to the fact that his idiom is so largely contrapuntal. Good counterpoint stands the test of years better than anything else in music (save a good tune) because of the interesting harmonic touches that happen en route. Partly for that reason, and partly because he was a pioneer in harmonic matters, the best of Bach sounds strangely modern, while most of the Viennese classical school, with their insistence on tonic and dominant, and their perpendicular rather than horizontal methods, are becoming antiquated.

A generation ago Bach suffered from having written so much in the fugal form. So many dull folk had made the fatal discovery that it is easy to write a fugue—of sorts—that the very name stank. To-day the fugue is recognised as one of the most vital of forms, and Bach's fame gains as a result. A fine fugue is a splendid and satisfying affair because there is no repetition, and the interest is cumulative. (Fugues with a da capo are so rare as to be negligible. I can recall only two in the whole of Bach.) Because of the infinite variety of his fugues, the vitality and animation of his counterpoint, his harmonic enterprise, and his wealth of melody, both expressive and jolly, Bach appears to have more of a future than Beethoven.

That there is likelihood of Beethoven's fame suffering, at least for a time, is proved by the following extract from Sir Henry Hadow's lecture on Beethoven,* delivered to the British Academy on June 20, 1917:

At the present day we are confronted with two musical problems of great interest and difficulty; and while they are in process of solution it is impossible to judge how far the direct influence of Beethoven's works will remain paramount. The first is the extraordinarily rapid change in the vocabulary and idiom of music which has come about during the past twenty years: a change as important and as fruitful in possibilities as the substitution of the diatonic scale for the ecclesiastical modes. Our ears have grown accustomed to accepting the chromatic interval as the unit, with the result that in melody, and more especially in harmonic texture, we can gain the keenest delight from successions and combinations of notes which would have been unintelligible or excruciating half a century ago. No doubt this new idiom has been turned to account by a certain number of light-hearted and irresponsible composers who have mainly used it for the manufacture of catchwords. But it itself is an important step in musical progress, and we cannot yet determine how much of past music it will render obsolete and how much by force of genius and sincerity will survive as classic. The other problem is raised by a marked divergence, more clearly defined than ever before, between the two chief aims of musical composition. To one school the ideal is first to set a general pattern of æsthetic beauty and then to fill it with all the emotional content that it will hold. The other, which may be exemplified in many great works by contemporary French composers, aims at reducing the claims of formal beauty to a minimum and allowing the music to follow the course of emotion, expressing it point by point but treating with apparent disregard the structural principles of the whole. And there seems every sign that for some years to come, at any rate, the latter of these two ideals will hold the pre-eminence.

* Humphrey Milford, Amen Corner, E.C.4.

If this was true two years ago, it is even more so to-day. Composers are now, to an unprecedented extent, the spokesmen of their fellows. They are expressing the complexities of modern life in terms of music. The result may not be pleasing to all of us, but we have no right to turn a deaf ear. I honestly believe that many of our musical conservatives go on preferring the older classics from sheer sloth. It is much easier continually to renew our acquaintance with an old symphony than to get at the heart of a new one. Modern music makes great demands on the genuine listener because of its curious mixture of reticence and complexity. The older writers were simpler, and left nothing to be taken for granted. You know all the time that everything will be according to Cocker. The modern composer rashly credits his public with an alert intelligence and makes big demands on it. He avoids full closes, leaves discords and suspensions floating round unresolved or with the resolution deferred, asks himself what will be expected at such a point, and, tongue in cheek, does something else, uses instruments in such a way that they are hardly identifiable at times—in a word, for composer, player, and hearer, the work is a high adventure. In regard to repetition, the difference between the past and present methods is suggestive of the old yarn of the parson who, reading the lesson descriptive of Nebuchadnezzar's image, grew impatient at repeated references to 'the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, dulcimer, and all kinds of musick,' and, the list having been once read, contented himself thereafter with saying 'the band as before.' The classicists—partly, I suppose, because of the more leisurely spirit of their time, and perhaps to save themselves trouble—made no bones about repeating matter in full as it came round. 'What time ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, dulcimer, and all kinds of musick,' they said, complacently putting in repeat marks, da capo, and making the most of reprises: 'the band as before,' says the modern composer, waving his hand impatiently, and passing on to something fresh. This kind of thing means hard work all round, and, as I said above, too many of us take the line of least resistance and swear by the old composers—and at the new ones.

Apropos changing values, the following passage is significant:

As for the Adagio, it seems to elude analysis. Its form is so pure and the expression of its melody so angelic and of such irresistible tenderness that the prodigious art by which this perfection is attained disappears completely. From the very first bars we are overtaken by an emotion which towards the close becomes so overpowering in its intensity that only amongst the giants of poetic art can we find anything to compare with this sublime page of the giant of music. Nothing in fact more resembles the impression produced by this Adagio than that experienced when reading the touching episode of Francesca da Rimini in the 'Divina Commedia,' the recital of which Virgil could not hear without sobbing bitterly, and which, at the last line, causes Dante to fall like a dead body. This movement seems as if it had been sadly murmured by the Archangel Michael on some day when, overcome by a feeling of melancholy, he contemplated the universe from the threshold of the Emyrean.

This panegyric is sung by Berlioz* over the slow movement of Beethoven's second Symphony. Can the most ardent admirer of Beethoven deny that it is mere hyperbole to-day? When we have made due allowance for Berlioz's tendency to rhapsodise, the extract provides convincing proof of the extraordinary way in which certain classical types are losing their appeal. In the case of slow movements this is chiefly due to the fact that modern composers have accustomed us to greater intensity of emotion. We demand much more to-day than a pleasant stream of tune, with fresh embroideries at each reappearance. The expressive and descriptive side of the art could not be developed so marvellously as it has been without detriment to much old music that had no claim to be considered as anything but a pleasing, well-organized series of sounds. The only slow movement in Beethoven's Symphonies with anything more than slender emotional significance is the 'Eroica' Funeral March. In the Pianoforte Sonatas the more definitely expressive music is in the quicker movements. The Sonata in D (Op. 10, No. 3), with its tragic Largo, is an outstanding exception.

Nor are musical considerations the only ones to be considered. As music becomes more and more the expression of our time and race, a Briton of to-day may say, without the least irreverence to one of the world's greatest men, that he finds his musical needs less and less adequately met by the century-old thought and idiom of a Teutonized Fleming. As a concrete example, I find it infinitely more interesting to hear Howard Carr's musical conception of Warneford V.C., than Beethoven's of Napoleon. The question of musical value is a side issue—though here the Howard Carr work, by virtue of its doing in a most convincing way what it sets out to do, is worth its place in the best of company. And, coming to abstract music, the two Symphonies of Elgar have far more appeal to some of us than the first eight of Beethoven. If the Elgar Symphonies did not need much more rehearsal and vastly more listening to than the Beethoven works, we should hear them more frequently. The line of least resistance again! Here I must stop, reserving for future discussion a matter touched on above—the instrumentation of Beethoven's Symphonies.

It may be well, however, to add that what I have written must not be regarded as an attack on Beethoven. We may have the deepest admiration for him, as man and musician, without being barred from frank consideration of the position his music is likely to occupy in the near future. And I should like to make it clear that if the views expressed above were merely my own, I should not regard them as sufficiently important to publish. But, as a result of conversations with musicians whose opinions are worth a good deal, I know that I am merely saying what many feel, so I say it, cheerfully running the risk of being called an irreverent and impudent iconoclast.

* 'A Critical Study of Beethoven's Nine Symphonies' (Reeves)

FESTE.

THE CLAVIER TOCCATAS OF BACH.

By SYDNEY GREW.

(Continued from March Number, page 108.)

The Improvisation in a Bach Clavier Toccata may be short or long, a brief brillante flourish, a luxuriant Fantasia, or a Prelude in two sections.

descending figure, four beats long, which is four times stated in successively lower registers, and which (expanded at the last statement) expands itself in a massive Adagio cadence:

Ex. 3. Allegro. f

Adagio.

In the D minor it is a piece in two parts. The first part is orthodox 'Toccata'—quavers of the type that make up the subject of the Fugue of the D minor Organ Toccata, brilliant running figures, broken chords, and the like. The second part is a passage of strict four-part writing of recitative emotionality; its close is orthodox 'Toccata' again, più mosso, strong and very impassioned. The Improvisation in the E minor comes after the first Fugue, the Toccata opening with a quiet Prelude in rolling quavers. This Improvisation is a strong and highly-nervous Fantasia. Its phrases are short, though without bringing about a quality of abruptness or ruggedness. It contains a good deal of the 'Toccata' 'melisma' (i.e., the rich flowering of melody at moments of supreme emotional poignancy), as in bars 10-13, bars 14-21, bar 26, &c. Its broken chords have a beautiful sostenuto, and its emotionality (or 'thought') is as clear as that of the 'short' Organ Prelude in E minor:

Ex. 4. Adagio.

(Bar 26.)

In the F sharp minor, the Improvisation is of the same form as in the D minor, but of less rhapsodical nature. In the C minor, also, it is in two sections. This C minor Improvisation is the most important of the Improvisations. Its first section is a strong and urgent Fantasia. Its second is a piece of free Fugue Adagio, very clear, and of nobly-aspiring mood:

Ex. 5. (a) Moderato. (b) Adagio.

The movement in the C minor, as frequently in other Sonatas, closes in fantasia.

The Adagio or Lento movements of the Toccatas are mostly small in dimensions, but large in effect. They may stand as Preludes to Fugues, as Codas to movements, or as part of a movement in ternary form.

The first Adagio in the G minor is developed recitativo, moving over rich accompanying obbligato parts:

Ex. 6. Adagio.

The second Adagio of this work (complementary to the first, and Coda to the Fugue in the way the first is Prelude to the Fugue), is an astonishingly definite piece of recitative :

It ends brillantemente. The Adagio of the D minor is Prelude to the second Fugue. It is for the first four bars improvisatory ; for the rest it is a very intensive treatment in Fantasia of the following theme :

The theme recurs ten times in bars 4-13, as quoted, and then develops itself through the remaining twelve bars of the movement. The Lento of the F sharp minor is an example of Bach's lyrical Counterpoint. I quote the opening sentence :

The subject of the second Fugue of the F sharp minor Toccata is the same (altered to 6-8) as the subject of the Lento. This instance of thematic relationship is a survival of the old plan (once as regular in the Clavier Toccata as in the Canzona) of using the same subject for the two main portions of the piece. Other instances of cyclic reference to former material occur in the Toccatas ; but these are not so much survivals of former custom as demonstrations of the true emotional continuity of the poetic thought at the back of the compositions.

The Adagio of the C minor has already been referred to (see Ex. 5).

The Fantasia between the two Fugues may fulfil any one of four functions.

In the C minor it is reduced to a link between what is in reality the two parts of one great piece, this Toccata having the advanced feature of its two Fugues combined into one. In the G minor it is reduced to the proportions of the already described Adagio conclusion of the first movement. In the D minor, as mentioned in the preceding paragraph, it stands as Prelude to the second Fugue. In the E minor, though occupying the same position as in the D minor, it becomes the weightiest section of the first movement.

In the F sharp minor the position of the Fantasia is ambiguous. It might be set out in analysis as a separate movement, for in effect it is a strongly dramatic episode. But something in the poetic nature of the Toccata compels me to regard it as Prelude to the second Fugue. Its character of passionate energy puts it in strong contrast with the Fugue in true Prelude style. Its enormous concentration demands such a sequel as the more widely-spread Fugue. I have therefore in the following analysis shown it as a Prelude.

I offer here an attempt to show the binary structure of the five Toccatas, postponing to the next section of this article a short description of the Fugues :

G MINOR.

Improvisation, 24-16—6 bars, full close (minor).

I. (a.) Prelude, Adagio, 3-2—12 bars, to half-close (in G minor) ;

(b.) Fugue (in B flat), 4-4—51 bars, to full-close in B flat interrupted into G minor ;

(c.) Fantasia (in G minor), Adagio e accel., 3-2—11 bars, to full-close (major 3rd).

II. Fugue, 4-4 (12-8)—110 bars, to full-close (minor 3rd).

Improvisation, 24-16—6 bars, to full-close (major).

D MINOR.

I. (a.) Improvisation (Prelude), 4-4—(1.) Fantasia, 15 bars, to half-close ; (2.) Quasi-Andante, 18 bars, to full-close (major) ;

(b.) Fugue, 4-4—89 bars, to full-close (major).

II. (a.) Fantasia (Prelude), Adagio, 4-4—25 bars (commences in B flat and G minor) to half-close in D minor ;

(b.) Fugue, 3-4—151 bars, to full-close (major).

E MINOR.

I. (a.) Prelude, 3-2—13 bars, full-close (major) ;

(b.) Fugue, 4-4—28 bars, to full-close (major) ;

(c.) Fantasia (Improvisation), Adagio, 4-4—29 bars, to full-close (major).

II. Fugue, 4-4—72 bars, to full-close (major).

F SHARP MINOR.

- I. (a.) Fantasia (Impromptu), Moderato, 4-4—18 bars, to full-close (major);
 (b.) (1.) Improvisation, 2 bars, to Supertonic Major Triad; (2.) Lento (Fantasia), 3-2—27 bars, to full-close (minor);
 (c.) (1.) Recitative, 4 bars, to half-close; (2.) Fugue, 4-4—60 bars, to full-close (major).
 II. (a.) Fantasia (Prelude, or Intermezzo), Moderato, 4-4—29 bars, to full-close (major);
 (b.) Fugue, 6-8—65 bars, to full-close (major).

(To be continued.)

C MINOR.

- I. (a.) Improvisation, Allegro, 4-4—12 bars, to half-close;
 (b.) Fantasia, Lento, 4-4—22 bars, to full-close in dominant (major 3rd);
 (c.) Fugue, 4-4—47 bars, to full-close (minor).
Improvisation, 4-4—6 bars, to full-close in dominant (major).
 II. (a.) Fugue (on same subject as the Fugue in I.)—86 bars, to full-close interrupted;
 (b.) Impromptu, Adagio e presto—5 bars, to full-close (major).

ELGAR'S VIOLIN SONATA.

A work of this type has long been overdue from a composer who was himself a violinist, and who has shown such insight into the possibilities of the instrument, especially in the fine Allegro for string orchestra and in the Violin Concerto.

The Sonata under notice is not Elgar's first essay in the form, an early work, marked Opus 9, being still in MS. The new one is Opus 82, and is dated 'Brinkwells, 1918.' It opens with a vigorous theme announced by the violin:

Ex. 1.

This having been stated in full, is repeated in modified form, the instruments exchanging parts. A brief bridge-passage leads us to an expressive new

Ex. 2.

A few bars' treatment of the beginning of the first subject brings us to a mysterious passage, the violin playing widespread arpeggi from which a simple four-note motive emerges, the pianoforte responding pp. The remainder of the movement consists of developments of this material, with an energetic and exciting Coda.

The second movement is entitled 'Romance,' and its three first pages have much of the character of a anciful improvisation. The key then changes abruptly from A to B flat, and the violin sings a broad cantabile subject which is gradually worked up to a climax. This having died down, a resumption of the opening matter brings a fascinating movement to an end.

The Finale well maintains the tuneful standard set up by the first and second movements. Much delightful work for both instruments is evolved from the opening theme:

Ex. 3.

It is followed by a vigorous subject, the first bar of which :

does good service later.

Contrast is provided by a pleading little two-bar subject in B minor. From its second half is developed a passage of great harmonic interest.

After lengthy treatment of this material, the time changes from $\frac{4}{4}$ to $\frac{3}{4}$, and the violin delivers pp the cantabile theme of the Romance, a big climax being again the result. This brings us to the Coda, based on the first subject of the Finale and the vigorous second subject, followed by brilliant passage-work leading to the unconventional final cadence :

Ex. 5. largamente.

The Sonata shows the composer in a very attractive vein. There is abundance of melodic interest, and the working-out is so spontaneous that the interest never flags. There should be a warm welcome for a work with so much appeal to both players and hearers.

Occasional Notes.

Mr. Ernest Newman has lately devoted two columns of the Birmingham Daily Post to what he calls 'poking fun' at the League of the Arts for Civic and National Ceremony. The result would have been more amusing had not Mr. Newman allowed himself to spoil it by a mixture of bad temper and bad manners. There are a few points in the second article (entitled 'On rejoicing to order') that seem to us to call for comment. First, however, let us remark that the League, at its inception, concerned itself solely with London. So many provincial choralists and conductors have written expressing approval, and desiring to be identified with it, that it seems likely to develop on wider lines than its founders intended. Primarily, however, it was, and is, a London affair.

Writing on provincial musical festivals, Mr. Newman recently attempted to 'sit on' one or two London writers who had dared to express their views. The Birmingham Festival, he said, 'is purely a Birmingham question, and must be settled in and by Birmingham . . . Mr. Klein, Sir Charles Stanford, and the rest of the gentlemen who are kind enough to give us the benefit of their Metropolitan wisdom, must, with all politeness, be put in their proper places . . . which he proceeded to do, with a minimum of politeness. The request that London should mind its own business comes quaintly from one who, condemning provincial festivals as a whole, had previously been kind enough to give Hereford, Worcester, Gloucester, Sheffield, Leeds, and other cities the benefit of his Birmingham wisdom. As he is now conferring the same doubtful blessing on a Metropolitan organization, he must not be offended if some of us hint, 'with all politeness,' that we need no meddling from the Midlands. If any Birmingham people are so misguided as to set up a branch of the League, Mr. Newman is at liberty to deal faithfully with them. So far as other towns are concerned, he is in this matter what he said Mr. Klein was in regard to the Birmingham Festival—'a mere outsider.'

CRITICISM
WITH A KNOBKERRY.

Mr. Newman devotes a half of his article to the first musical publication of the League—'The Motherland Song-Book.' Here are a few of his critical flowers of speech :

'Only people utterly destitute of a sense of humour could have compiled such a book. I pass over the fact that most of the words are the merest doggerel, and most of the music the merest commonplace, and that it is monstrous to expect us to offend the pure air on Peace Day with such pitiful stuff. . . . We could not sing some of the words without bursting into laughter. . . . I can hardly see any Briton with a grain of humour in him seeing anything but a roaring joke in this "Motherland Song-Book." Even the British public, fool as it sometimes is, is surely not such a fool as to spend what will probably be a fine Summer day in bawling these ineptitudes? It would be much happier round a cricket pitch.'

The best comment on this outburst is supplied by a list of the men providing the 'pitiful stuff' and 'ineptitudes.' Here are those responsible for the 'doggerel': Dryden, Shakespeare, Moore, Burns, Laurence Binyon, Tennyson, Kipling, F. L. Hosmer, John Addington Symonds, G. K. Chesterton, G. K. Menzies, Arthur O'Shaughnessey, Edward Carpenter, A. P. Graves, Julia Ward Howe, and Blake. The composers and arrangers of the 'commonplace' music are Purcell, Martin and Geoffrey Shaw, Kennedy Scott, Sir Charles Stanford, Granville Bantock, John Ireland, Rutland Boughton, Vaughan Williams, Gustave Holst, Sydney Nicholson, W. G. Whittaker, and Parry. Never, surely, have so many clever people been disposed of (or 'put in their proper places') in so few words! We are reminded of the bloody-minded monarch in a hurry, who wished that all his people had but one neck, so that he might behead them at a blow. Mr. Newman's critical method does not require a communal neck: he takes a couple of dozen of our best writers and composers, spits on his hands, swings his knobkerry, and—biff! lays the lot out at a blow.

As a good example of Mr. Newman's 'fun,' take this tasteful comment:

'If the President and officials of the Divorce Court are there, they will of course sing with full conviction these lines from Tennyson's "There is no land like England":

"There are no wives like English wives,
So fair and chaste as they be."

WHY NOT REJOICE TO ORDER? Mr. Newman seems to have an objection to organized singing as a method of rejoicing. But we fail to see why it should be more absurd to show our joy by singing in an organized manner than by lighting bonfires, or letting off steam in any other of the various ways that are now being arranged officially. It is ridiculous to suggest that organization necessarily destroys spontaneity and genuineness. For example, let us wildly suppose that a gathering of the Folk-Song Society, or the British Music Society, wishing to show their appreciation of Mr. Newman's efforts on behalf of our native music, decided to sing 'For he's a jolly good fellow.' Would their choral tribute to his jolliness and goodness be the less real if, instead of striking up the tune in half-a-dozen keys and at as many different rates, they allowed one of their number to give them the note and conduct them?

It is quite clear that, in the view of at least one man, the population tends to fall roughly into two classes, (a) Newmanites, and (b) Fools, after the manner of the famous classification of another jaundiced prophet, Carlyle. Mr. Newman's readiness to describe as fools those who do not see eye to eye with him is characteristic. Thus, those who elect to use the League's song-book will be ipso facto fools. And in a recent number of the Observer he pleasantly remarked that for the past few years England has been governed mainly by 'fools and flappers.' No doubt we suffered galling restrictions, and mistakes enough were made—by fools, flappers, and others—but the solid fact remains that as the result of four years of tremendous effort this country was the main factor in winning the war. This result (an annoying one to folk whose musical and spiritual home is in Germany) could not have been achieved by a misgoverned country. Misgoverned countries don't win long wars: as we have lately seen, they lose them. This by the way.

One aspect of the case remains to be touched on. The League and its publications are the outcome of a great deal of time and money spent by a committee (most of whose members are at least as eminent in music and literature as is Mr. Newman himself) on behalf of an ideal. The ideal may prove to be impracticable—in view of the difficulties of organization in a city so vast and with so little corporate feeling as London, we are by no means sanguine—but at least it is an ideal, worked for unselfishly. It is fatally easy to ridicule the results of months of voluntary labour, and to a writer under contract to deliver a weekly tale of bricks however limited the available straw, the temptation to 'poke fun' for a couple of columns must be strong. His pen is likely to be stayed only by a two-fold consideration: first, the sympathy and tolerance that are due to voluntary effort, however misguided; and second, regard for his own position as a writer. On this latter point we must frankly express our regret at the rapidity with which a musical littérateur of international repute has degenerated into a shrill, intolerant scold.

Mr. E. J. Dent, like Mr. Newman, is a strong anti-nationalist, and therefore no friend to the League. MEAN, — AND CHEAP.

We commend to Mr. Newman this remark from Mr. Dent's article thereon in the Cambridge Magazine of March 15: 'Mr. Shaw and his friends are determined to make a beginning, and it would be a mean thing not to applaud their courage and idealism.' If a merely negative attitude is 'mean,' what is the fitting adjective for Mr. Newman's attack? By way of coda, we may add that Mr. Newman must not be offended at anything we have said. Indeed, we feel sure that a writer who during the past few years has laid about him so vigorously must in view of reprisals have cultivated a hide of due toughness. He may even be pleased when we explain that we have been merely 'poking fun' at him. We have paid him the compliment of following (humbly and haltingly, perhaps, for the method is new to us) the latest and best Birmingham model.

There is a great opening for THE MUSICIANS' educational musical work in GIFT. connection with our Army of Occupation on the Rhine. The Music Section of the Y.M.C.A. is establishing six Centres under the charge of qualified musicians. Each Centre will have its music library, and will provide opportunities for study, lectures, recitals, &c. A choir and sight-singing classes have been formed at Cologne, and an orchestra will soon commence operations. The men show great eagerness in the matter. Sixty large parcels of music (weighing nearly six cwts.) have just been sent to Cologne. The parcels contain almost every possible kind of music, from oratorio to ragtime. We hope our readers will continue to help the committee by gifts of money, music, and musical instruments. The need is still great, and will be so for many months to come.

Our Liverpool correspondent A HARRY EVANS MEMORIAL. informs us that at last the long-deferred memorial to the late Harry Evans has been definitely launched. The intention is to mark the resting-place of the famous conductor of the Welsh Choral Union by erecting a suitable monument over his grave, and a committee of members of the choir has been formed to take the matter in hand. Already they have received promises of support from many influential citizens, and there should be no difficulty whatever in raising a sufficient sum of money not only to erect a stone, but also to found a Welsh Musical Scholarship to perpetuate his name and cherished memory. In his case no 'storied urn or animated bust' could increase the feelings of affection which remain in the hearts of those who knew his gifts as a musician and his qualities as a man. It is meet, however, that the proposed memorial should be carried through in a way that will creditably represent the resources not only of the great Welsh community in Liverpool, but also of the Welsh nation, in whose musical service he spent his too-short life with such usefulness and distinction. Among prominent musicians who have promised their support are Sir Edward Elgar, Sir Frederic Cowen, Prof. Bantock (whose unaccompanied choral work, 'The Vanity of Vanities,' was written for and inscribed to Harry Evans and the famous Welsh Choral Union), and Mr. Edward German. The hon-treasurer is Mr. H. Humphreys Jones, 18, Colquith Street, Liverpool.

ROISING: AN IMPRESSION.

BY EDWARD LEWIS.

I happened on a concert in which Rosing and Moiseiwitsch shared the programme. It would be difficult to imagine a more striking contrast than that between the entrance of these two men on to the platform. Moiseiwitsch, severe, solemn, sedate, self-absorbed, walks straight to the pianoforte, apparently heedless of the applause which greets him. His preliminary bow is correct, formal, professional. So might a self-possessed youth appear for examination before an audience of academy professors; so might a professor, far-famed and erudite, introduce himself to an assembly of critical students; or, even, so might an aristocrat place himself for the moment at the service of the herd. Has he schooled himself to be thus strict, taut, concentrate, in order that he may be like the well-strung instrument to which he is about to devote himself?

The entrance of Rosing is in another manner altogether. There is something democratic, bourgeois about it. It is almost jolly. So might one of the company at a smoking-concert leave a group of friends in the auditorium to take his turn in entertaining his fellow-guests. Anything less professional could scarcely be conceived. At the first sound of a cheer his face turns to the audience and breaks into answering smiles. His line of route to his position at the centre of the platform is as negligé as his costume. There he stands, acknowledging the warmth of his reception with deep, swaying bows, his clasped hands rising and falling with his laughing face and traversing a perpendicular line from waist to knees. It is all very engaging. By sheer friendliness and exuberance he gets 'across the footlights' at once. We who see him for the first time find ourselves giving him our hands with enthusiasm, swelling the volume of his welcome, smiling with him, captivated by his simplicity, his unaffectedness, his boyish generosity and freedom.

Moiseiwitsch may play to the delight of students and critics; Rosing will sing to friends. Moiseiwitsch will play to us, but we shall sing with Rosing. He draws his hands slowly over his face, clasps them again breast-high, and he is ready. He will sing Beethoven's 'Tears of Love'; he will sing Duparc's setting of Baudelaire's 'L'invitation au voyage'; and he will sing Frank Bridge's 'Isobel.' When the song is ended and the spell broken, the question emerges in the mind as to wherein his unquestionable power and charm lie. These are known songs. They are favourites in a hundred repertoires. One has heard them before, but not quite as one hears them now. Why is this? Is it the singer's voice, the mere organ and mechanism of sound-production? Have we been tricked into sympathy with a 'love ill-fated,' or decoyed into the rapture of a Universe in which 'tout n'est qu'ordre et beauté, luxe, calme et volupté,' by mere flexibility of voice, purity of tone, skill in phrasing, wealth of local colour?

This can hardly be the secret, for during these songs it is precisely his voice which awakens criticism. It would ill become me, who am inexpert, a mere wandering picker-up of seeds of pleasure, to discuss a matter of technique; nor do I intend to do so. It seemed to me that Rosing produced his voice in a manner as unusual—I had almost said as heterodox—as the rest of him. Apparently there was no attempt to place the voice forward in the mouth, a method which, if I remember rightly, my old singing-master used to insist upon as the very alpha and omega of good voice-production. Indeed, Rosing did not seem at all anxious to place it anywhere! He sang as if he intended to say, 'The breath is everything. The breath is the song. Get control over the pillar of breath; sustain it, whether voluminous as a water-spout or slender as a string of pearls; stop it here or there as the notes require, forcibly if necessary, or impressing it as lightly as the violinist lays his finger on the string when he will play harmonics; maintain it steady and pure; nothing else really matters; the breath is the thing.'

This is probably the truth; but whether it is the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, let experts dispute among themselves. Certainly it seemed to at least one member of his audience that in fortissimo passages the long notes were hollow, lacked resonance, and were less effective than they would have been had they been brought forward towards the hard palate and the teeth; and in pianissimo passages the high notes were scarcely distinguishable from falsetto, and had all the unsatisfactory quality of falsetto.

It would appear therefore that Rosing's secret does not lie in his voice, extraordinary though it be, and produced in a manner out of the ordinary. We may perhaps come much nearer to it if, taking our cue from the theory we have just attributed to him, namely, that the breath is the song, we remember the mystical significance which from very ancient times has attached to the idea of the breath. Breath is Atman, Ruach, Spiritus, Anima. It is the Soul, the Self. Indeed, in Rosing's case, the sequel seems to prove that this is the root of the matter and the key to the explanation of his power. For it was significant that such questionings and incipient criticisms as arose in our mind as we listened to him found occasion and room only when he was singing songs born of the spirit of a race other than his own. Ever in these songs his profound sympathy and understanding were obvious; his power to place himself as it were within the song and to identify himself genuinely with the emotion or the idea expressed in it—more than this, his power to bring his audience also within the song and to make us hear and feel it from the inside. Particularly was this so in the case, for example, of such a song as 'Tears of Love'; for Russia has a genius for suffering, especially for love—suffering whether in its social or its religious aspect, and the spirit of Russia readily identifies itself with the sufferer whatever his race or creed or experience may be. And so it was not difficult for Rosing to clothe himself with Beethoven's music and yet remain himself. On the other hand, Duparc's 'L'invitation au voyage' was the least successful of his songs, for the reason that a Russian must find it very hard wholly to understand, or fully to sympathise with, Baudelaire's view of the Universe which is the song's theme. We are suggesting that if Rosing sang these songs—these foreign songs—somewhat less than perfectly, the defect was due to a psychological inability—the inability to enter completely into their spirit: in other words to make the breath—himself—the song. This defect created a flaw in the spell which the singer laid upon us, and permitted us to stand a little distance apart from him and ask questions of one sort or another about his voice.

But when he came to sing Russian songs—frankly it did not matter then the toss of a farthing whether his voice was in his throat or his head or anywhere where it ought or ought not to have been according to the canons of orthodox vocalism. Then was his audience divided into two portions, between which a deep gulf was fixed; on the one side, those whom he carried with him to stand within the throbbing heart of Russia, and on the other side the hardened sinner of a critic who dwells in outer darkness, who can 'botanise on his mother's grave,' and for whom there is no hope. Russia was there with all its contradictions—its faith and its fatalism; its passion and compassion; its rage and its tenderness; its formlessness and its humanity; its despair and its hope; its realism and its idealism; its passivity and its longing; its self-torture and its infinite capacity to partake of pain; Russia, grim, patient, wild, visionary, nascent and uncouth, aspiring and portentous. Russia was there, as Rosing sang; in the tones of his voice, in his gestures and postures. Surely no artist on the concert-platform could live before the public for a month and allow himself such attitudes as Rosing assumes—unless he had something extraordinarily big within him and behind him, something which would demonstrate them to be not tricks and mannerisms but part and parcel of the total expression of the spirit which, in singing, had possession of him. Such justification Rosing certainly has, and to a triumphant degree; and it goes a long way to justify his vocal theory: The breath is the song; the breath is Rosing; and Rosing is Russia.

It is quite possible that Rosing is a greater artist than he is a vocalist. Rank him where you will among the vocalists—and that, surely, save from the professional point of view, is a small matter; but indubitably he is a genius. Nor is he simply a genius from Russia; when he sings the songs of his race he is the embodied genius of Russia.

After all, and especially in these days, what we are in search of is not merely beguiling performances, but chiefly visions and pulses which will create within us sympathy and understanding for all human kind.

The fine three-manual organ in St. James's Church, Hope, Manchester, built by Messrs. Hill & Sons, London, has lately been renovated and extended by the local firm of Wadsworth Bros., under the supervision of the organist, Mr. Rayner Clark, a conspicuous feature of the alteration being the Choir organ, which is now separate from the main instrument and faces the south aisle. In connection with the re-opening the first of a series of recitals was given by Mr. Isaac Davidson, Master of the Music at Henshaw's Blind Asylum, when the programme included Dubois's 'Verset de Procession'; the Minuet in E flat from Beethoven's 18th Pianoforte Sonata; Guilman's 'Lamentation'; Parry's Prelude on 'Even tide'; and Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E minor; variety being lent to the occasion by an admirable rendering of Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' by the choir of the church.

Church and Organ Music.

The Annual Spring Festival of the London Sunday School Choir will be held on April 12, at 6.30, in the Royal Albert Hall. The choir and orchestra will consist of 1,200 adult performers. The soloists will be Miss Carrie Tubb, Madame Margaret Layton, and Mr. Charles Tree. The programme will include miscellaneous short choral works, selections from 'Messiah' and 'Samson,' and orchestral items by a band of a hundred and forty. The conductors are Mr. Wesley Hammet (orchestra) and Mr. William Whiteman (choir). Mr. Horace G. Holmes will be at the organ, and Mrs. Mary Layton at the pianoforte.

A memorial service for members of the R.A.M. and R.C.M. who have fallen in the War was held at the Temple Church on March 19. The Master of the Temple officiated, and read the Roll of Honour. The music was arranged by Dr. H. W. Richards and Major Walford Davies, the latter directing its performance. Included were Byrd's 'Justorum animæ,' Corder's Elegy for twenty-four violins (played by students of the R.A.M.), Parry's 'Song of Farewell' (sung by students of the R.C.M.), and a Postlude, 'In Memoriam,' specially written by Sir Alexander Mackenzie.

At an oratorio service in Christ Church Cathedral, Dublin, on March 13, Dr. C. H. Kitson directed performances of Elgar's 'Go, song of mine,' Kitson's 'Song of Victory,' Elgar's 'For the Fallen,' and Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens' and 'The Glories of our Blood and State.'

Mr. George T. Pattman, the ex-cathedral organist whose playing at the London Coliseum and other variety houses has been a successful feature during the past few years, advertises in this issue for solo boys, with a view to adding vocal interest to his performance.

At a Social Evening of the London Road Congregational Church, Chelmsford, held in the Shire Hall on March 12, Mr. F. E. Swan was presented with a silver tea-service and cheque for £83 in recognition of his services as organist of the Church for the past twenty-five years.

Mr. David Strong, the well-known tenor, is shortly resigning his post as a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal after more than thirty-two years' service.

The West Middlesex Plainsong Guild has published a setting of Te Deum, to viii-i and i-iv, the first of a series under the title 'The Church's Music for the People.'

Crediton parishioners, having decided to procure a new organ for the Church as a War memorial, have already secured over £1,600 towards this object.

Mr. E. T. Cook's 'Musicians' Gift' recital at Southwark Cathedral, postponed through illness, will take place on April 23, at 6.

Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion will be sung at Southwark Cathedral on April 5, at 3.

ORGAN RECITALS.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Choral Song and Fugue, S. S. Wesley; Choral Improvisation, 'In dulci jubilo,' Karg-Elert; Allegro and Allegretto (from Sonata in G), Elgar; Prelude 'St. Mary,' Charles Wood; Fantasy-Prelude, Charles Macpherson.

Mr. J. Pulein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Concerto in A. Handel; Prelude, Fugue and Variation, Frank; Prelude, Air, and Gavotte, S. Wesley; Villanella, Ireland; Carillon, Faulkes.

Mr. Arthur Warrell, St. Mary Redcliff—Sonata No. 16, Kleinberger; A D. 1620, MacDowell; Lament, Harvey Grace; Pæan, Julius Harrison; Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Bach; Cantabile and Alleluia, Bossi; Rhapsody No. 3, on Breton Folk-Tunes, Saint-Saëns; Finale from Sonata in F, Silas.

- Mr. R. Buchanan Morton, House of Hope Presbyterian Church, St. Paul, Minn.—Symphony No. 6 (First Movement), Widor; Sonata Eroica, Stanford; Autumn Réverie, Jongen.
- Mr. Herbert Ellingsford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool (six recitals)—Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Fantasia Concertante, Petravi; Variations on an Original Theme, E. H. Thorne; Passacaglia, Bach; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Overture in D, Smart; Rhapsodie Catalane, Bonnet; Coronation March, Frederic Cliffe; Dithyramb, Harwood; Introduction and Air with Variations, Hatton; Variations on an Old English Melody, Stuart Archer.
- Mr. Paul Rochard, Hinckley Parish Church (two recitals)—March in G, Elgar; Variations, Op. 1, Bonnet; Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Valse Triste, Sibelius; Concert Toccata in D minor.
- Dr. William A. Hall, All Saints', Eastbourne (four recitals)—Introduction and First Movement from Sonata in E minor, Rheinberger; Triumphal March, 'From Crag to Sea,' Liszt; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Solemn Melody, Walford Davies; Fugue 'St. Ann's,' Bach; Allegretto Grazioso, Hollins; Cantilène Nuptiale and Toccata in G, Dubois; Sposalizio, Liszt.
- Mr. A. B. Garrard, Christ Church, Penge—Sonata No. 1, Lyon; Imperial March, Elgar; Prelude on 'St. Michael,' West; Alla Marcia, Ireland (Collection in aid of St. Dunstan's Hostel, £4 15s.).
- Mr. Bertram Hollins, Beckenham Congregational Church—Introduction and Allegro, Henniker; Allegro Cantabile (Symphony No. 5), Widor; Meditation, Bonnet; Prelude on 'Rockingham,' Parry; Fantasia in E minor, Silas.
- Mr. J. A. Meale, Wesleyan Central Hall, Westminster (three recitals)—Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Aubade, Bernard Johnson; March on a Theme of Handel, Guilmant; Triumphal March, Hollins.
- Mr. Spencer Shaw, Wesleyan Central Hall, Westminster—Overture to 'Poet and Peasant,' Suppé; Grand Chœur (alla Handel), Guilmant.
- Mr. W. Henry Maxfield, St. John's, Altrincham—Air with Variations, Hesse; Chanson Orientale, Schumann.
- Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (four recitals)—Funeral March, Tchaikovsky; Prelude and Fugue on BACH, Bach; Marche Pontificale, de la Tombelle; Pièce Héroïque, Franck; Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Fugue in G minor, Bach; Air with Variations and Finale Fugato, Smart.
- Dr. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End (five recitals)—Allegro (Sonata No. 1), Bach; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Allegro (Symphony No. 6), Widor; Toccata in C, Rheinberger; Scherzo in E, Gigout; Marche Solennelle, Borowski; Allegro (from Sonata), Elgar; Passacaglia in C minor, Bach; Idyll, Vierne.
- Mr. H. Matthias Turton, St. Aidan's, Leeds—Allegro (from Sonata Cromatica), Yon; Pensée d'Automne, Jongen; Allegretto Maestoso, Intermezzo, and Finale (from Symphony No. 3), Vierne; Intermezzo (from Op. 5), Barté; Sonata No. 1, Stanford; 'Ariel,' Chant du Printemps, Pastorale and Rhapsodie Catalane, Bonnet.
- Mr. Frank Butler, All Saints', Hove—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Scherzo in F minor, Sandiford Turner; Finale (2nd Suite), Boëllmann.
- Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary-the-Virgin, Aldermanbury (four recitals)—Senerade, P. Mansfield; Festal Postlude, Gladstone; Minuet, Musette, and Italian Rhapsody, Lyon; Moto Perpetuo, Ford; Minuet and Trio, Wolstenholme; March in F, Ireland; Overture, Smart.
- Mr. Allan Brown, St. Michael's, Wandsworth Common—Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs, Guilmant; Fugue, Reubke; Finale in B flat, Wolstenholme.
- Mr. Frederick J. Tarris, Barking Parish Church—Grand Chœur in D, Guilmant; Prelude and Fugue in C, Bach; Toccata in G, Dubois.
- Mr. Arthur R. Saunders, St. Stephen's, Wandsworth (three recitals)—Fantasia and Toccata in D minor, Stanford; Rhapsodie No. 3, Saint-Saëns; Toccata and Fugue in C, Bach; Chanson Rustique, P. Mansfield; Triumph Song, Baynon; Choral in A minor, Franck; Festival Toccata, Wolstenholme.
- Mr. Gerald W. Spink, St. John's, Roundhay—Toccata in F, Bach; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Cantilène in A flat, Hollins; Pastorale in A, Jongen.
- Mr. W. Cyril Tapson, St. Mary-the-Virgin, Charing Cross Road (three recitals)—March from 'Occasional Oratorio'; Madrigal, Lemare; Marche Solennelle, Borowski; Grand Chœur, Hollins.
- Mr. Harry Wall, St. Paul's, Covent Garden (three recitals)—Andante and Fugue (Symphony No. 4), Widor; Andantino, Frank Bridge; Berceuse and Legend, Vierne; Chant de bonheur, Lemare; Intermezzo, Reger; Preludes on 'Deck thyself, my Soul' and 'We all believe,' and Trio in C minor, Bach.

APPOINTMENTS.

- Captain Felix E. Baker, principal tenor, St. Anne's, Soho.
- Mr. Edward W. Bolton, to be organist and choirmaster of Finchley Presbyterian Church.
- Mr. Hubert Gresham, organist and choirmaster, St. Michael and All Angels, Ladbrooke Grove.
- Mr. L. J. G. Marsh, organist and choirmaster, Christ Church, Clapham.
- Mr. Gilbert P. Matthews, to be organist and choirmaster of Wemyss Castle, Fifeshire.
- Mr. C. F. Mottram, to be organist and choirmaster of St. Ambrose's, Edgbaston.
- Mr. H. S. V. Shapley, to be organist and choirmaster of St. John's, Darwen.
- Mr. Cyril E. Tapson, to be organist and choirmaster of Holy Trinity, Claygate.
- Mr. Arthur F. Tate, to be organist and choirmaster of Central Baptist Church, Bloomsbury.

THE POINT OF PERFECTION IN XVIIth CENTURY NOTATION.

On February 11 the members of the Musical Association had the privilege of hearing a paper on the above subject from Miss Townsend Warner, who began with some remarks on the growth of notation. She observed that modern composers were beginning to find our time-notation inadequate to their needs. It was because of the richness and variety of rhythm displayed in their polyphonic work that the 16th century musicians made so much use of the point of perfection. Their use of it was exceedingly interesting and significant. It was in form a small dot or stroke, commonly placed above the notes affected, and slightly to the right of them. Its various functions could be grouped into three main divisions: arithmetical, mensural, and extra-mensural.

In the first of these, it indicated the perfection, that is to say, the triplicity of a single long, breve, or semibreve, either standing by itself or in ligature. In this case only was the dot placed on the same level as the note. This was the baldest and least significant use of the dot. It referred solely to the preceding note, without defining the rhythmic flow, and hence, having a mere arithmetical meaning instead of a mensural one, it could be used for this purpose equally well in perfect or common time. It was essential to a comfortable understanding of the point of perfection to grasp the difference between it and the dot of augmentation. The latter was always placed on the same level as the note it augmented, whilst the point of perfection was placed above the note it referred to. It was only when the point of perfection was used in its arithmetical sense that there was a risk of confusing it with the point of augmentation. They were, however, absolutely distinct in purpose, the function of the one being to show the perfection of the preceding note and thus to complete it, whilst the other showed that the note it followed was not complete in regard to the rhythmical structure of the phrase. Needless confusion had been caused by that arbitrary belief, not yet deservedly confuted, to the effect that the present day dot of augmentation was a modern use of the point of perfection, and derived from it.

The second function of the point of perfection was a mensural one. Here it dealt no longer with single notes, but with the rhythmic flow, and it did this in a number of ways. It might be used to define or to establish the completion of a measure. It could also be employed to mark the completion of a measure when the notes involved seemed on the minus side. When a breve was followed by a minim only, with a dot placed after the minim, the measure was filled out by the breve equalling five minims. In the greater prolation the semibreve and the semibreve rest equalled three minims. Sometimes one found that where a measure of breve and semibreve was followed by a measure of semibreve and breve, or conversely, a dot was placed between these measures. The Dot Divisio Modi was intended to preserve the integrity of the Rhythmic Modes. This invention of Rhythmic Modes was an early mensural system devised out of the combination of the triple prolation with the poetic metres. After describing these, Miss Warner went on to speak of alteration, which was the final subdivision of the mensural use of the dot, and gave various examples from 16th century compositions.

The extra-mensural use of the dot had not been mentioned by any of the early musical theorists. It was found pretty frequently in such a position that it could not be taken to refer to the perfection of the note, or to the definition or completion of the measure, or to the regulation of grouping in the greater prolation: neither was it necessary for the purpose of alteration, or for division of the Rhythmic Modes. The lecturer had come to the conclusion that it was employed for expressing the catalexis which might occur in imitational music, and thus to ensure the proper accentuation of the words. It would thus reduce a triple measure to a duple. That beautiful effect of rhythmical substitution, familiar to us in the music of Brahms, where a measure of perfect time was inserted in the flow of imperfect time with the greater prolation, was so common in music of the period as to need little comment. Musicians of the 16th century used effects such as these freely and with mastery, with the definite knowledge of their value in breaking up and embellishing the rhythmic flow.

Miss Warner concluded by enlarging on the point of perfection and bar feeling, which she said was no modern growth but an integral force in the evolution of music. When it was called periodicity, this fact was recognised at once. Man was a rhythmical animal, so constructed that when he heard a succession of equidistant sounds he would insensibly arrange them in groups of two's or three's provided they were within the circuit of his rhythmical comprehension. There was clear evidence that the bar feeling was recognised by our Tudor and Elizabethan composers. It was not only in music that contemporary mastery of rhythm manifested itself: one could parallel the cross rhythms of Byrd and Whyte in the blank verse of Shakespeare and Webster. The freedom and subtlety of rhythm which we found in the work of this great age did not come to it through lawlessness, but through liberty. They could not have broken the rules so well if they had not had them first by heart.

Reviews.

O Light Everlasting. By Archibald W. Wilson.

Awakened from sleep. By Charles H. Lloyd. (Chorister Series, Nos. 63 and 64).

O Thou Sword of the Lord. By Myles B. Foster. (Short Anthems, No. 231).

Rule, Britannia. Arranged by W. P. Rivers. (Part-song Book No. 1332).

In Royal Robes of Splendour. A Hymn of Apostles and Martyrs. By J. Lionel Bennett.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Anthems for treble voices have been in great request during the War, and have been so much appreciated that we believe they will continue to be a feature in choirs where capable trebles are available. Mr. Wilson's example is for three voices, the lowest being for treble, not alto. It is tuneful and straightforward. Dr. Lloyd's anthem requires rather more independence from the singers, but is by no means difficult, the entries being free from awkwardness and the writing throughout grateful for the voices. In both anthems the organ part is admirably designed with a view to adding an interesting background without swamping the voices.

Mr. Myles Foster has written a short, vigorous introit for four-part chorus and organ, with orchestral parts ad lib. It is specially suitable for use at services of thanksgiving for peace.

Arne's best-known song is usually pitched in too high a key for popular use. Mr. Rivers's version is in G, and is for a solo voice, with three arrangements of the chorus—S.A.T.B., S.S.A., and T.T.B. A very useful edition, the pianoforte part and vocal harmonies being alike excellent.

The Rev. Lionel Bennett's hymn is a very elaborate affair, for use as processional or anthem. It consists of a fine, vigorous tune, with varied treatment—free organ part, fauxbourdon, &c. In its complete form it demands a big and capable choir, but the composer has suggested cuts and other expedients in order to make it available for more modest forces. It can also be sung as an ordinary hymn. The writing throughout is free and effective, and the varied organ parts are full of interest. Orchestral parts may be hired.

Reminiscences of Henry Coward.

[J. Curwen & Sons.]

In the story of British music of the present generation there are few more striking examples of self-help than Henry Coward, the boy who, undeterred by poverty and disadvantages of every conceivable kind, made himself one of the most famous of choral conductors. The musical aspirant of to-day who has his path smoothed by scholarships, doles, and short cuts, will find wholesome reading in this volume of reminiscences. Dr. Coward abates nothing in the record of his early poverty, but there is none of the arrogance of the average self-made man—merely a proper pride at having been able to rise superior to an environment that would have swamped all but the most indomitable.

He divides his book into four parts, dealing respectively with 'Boyhood,' 'The workshop,' 'The School,' and 'Musical Profession.' The school was Zion School, Attercliffe, where young Coward, then in his twenty-third year, obtained a post as pupil-teacher at a salary of £20 per annum. He had previously worked at the cutlery trade from his ninth year. These two facts will show something of the mettle of the man.

The book is one into which musicians, and especially choralists, will dip with profit. We wish we had space for a few extracts, but after all it is fairer to refer readers to the volume. They will find it far more engrossing than many books with more pretensions to literary style. For example, the naively simple passages on pages 31-33, descriptive of his religious experiences, will move all but the cynic.

Dr. Coward has no intention of becoming inactive yet awhile. He says, 'I began my musical activities in connection with the Church, and I am in the hope that I shall finish my work by doing still more in the direction of raising the standard of Church praise.' There is plenty for him to do, and we wish him many happy years of life in which to do it.

'After tumult, rest.' Tenor solo from 'War and Peace.' By C. H. H. Parry.

Hark! Hark! my sou. Sacred song. By Percy E. Fletcher.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

It would be difficult to find a song more suitable for peace celebrations than the extract from Parry's 'War and Peace,' a characteristic setting of these words:

'After tumult, rest; after tempest, calm;
Earth, like a weary child, is gently press'd
In the enfolding arm.

Where the battle roar'd
Round the trench'd height,
Steals a dewy fragrance, softly pour'd
From the lips of night.

Creeps the gathering rust
O'er the broken gun,
Fort and bastion crumble into dust,
Now their task is done.

A WESTMINSTER PILGRIM

BEING A
RECORD OF SERVICE
IN CHURCH, CATHEDRAL, AND ABBEY
COLLEGE, UNIVERSITY, AND CONCERT-ROOM
WITH A
FEW NOTES ON SPORT

BY
SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE

*Commander of the Royal Victorian Order
King Edward Professor of Music in the University of London
Gresham Professor of Music
Emeritus-Organist of Westminster Abbey*

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.
NEW YORK : THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Three-hundred-and-sixty pages, Large Demy 8vo, with a Frontispiece in Colour by Sir Leslie Ward, numerous Illustrations, and a special Portrait of the Author by Sir William Richmond, K.C.B., R.A.

CLOTH, GILT, SIXTEEN SHILLINGS NET.

* * * An Illustrated Prospectus will be sent on Application.

PREFACE.

THE Canterbury Pilgrims, many years ago, probably passed through the streets or in the immediate neighbourhood of the old City of Rochester as they wended their way to and from the Shrine of Thomas à Becket. Their journeys lay through a diversified and beautiful country, and though toilsome could not have been without many happy days. Through the streets of the same old City of Rochester, nearly seventy years ago, I used to pass to and fro to attend to my duties at the Cathedral, starting on the Pilgrimage recorded in the following pages. My journey has been a long one, my experiences very diversified. I have had as companions, like the Canterbury Pilgrims, a varied Company of all Professions and Ranks of Men. My life's work has been attended with many joys and some sorrows. . . . The notes of my life which I have been tempted to put on record contain nothing very remarkable,—of that I am quite conscious. But the duties which have fallen to me in connection with many important functions at the Abbey will be of some little interest to my friends at least. . . . The difference between the present time, with its opportunities for young musicians, and the distant time of my own youth is immense. Then, there was only one Musical College, the Royal Academy of Music; there was only one scholarship (outside the R.A.M.) available for young musicians—the Mendelssohn; there were no Local Examinations in Music. . . .

Most of my life has been devoted (though not exclusively) to the service of the Church. As boy and man I have served under seven Deans, I have worked with eleven Precentors, while Canons, Vicars-Choral, and Choristers are too numerous to mention. Outside the Church I have laboured at my Profession as Conductor, Teacher in Colleges, Lecturer, and University Professor. In all these various ways I have tried to serve the cause of Music. Whether I have done all that in me lay, readers of the following pages must decide. But, at any rate, I can conscientiously say I have done my best to fulfil worthily the duties of any position to which I have been called.

CHORISTER DAYS.

3

after the trial, while my father was talking to Mr. Hopkins, she provided with an orange and various other delicacies. Many years after, when I was organist of Manchester Cathedral, Dr. Hopkins (who was then the organist of Trinity College, Cambridge) came to stay near Manchester where I also was a guest. As we walked about our host's grounds I recalled this little episode to him: "Ah!" said he, "if I had rejected you then, how different might have been your career." Dr. Hopkins was himself a chorister in Westminster Abbey, and I often think how much he would have been interested in seeing the post of organist filled by the little boy whom he started on his musical career; unfortunately, he died before I was appointed.

And thus began my chorister days and musical life. Twice daily we attended the Cathedral Service, the practising boys or probationers sitting near the choir, but not wearing surplices. We were taught the rudiments of music by one of the Vicars-Choral, who was wont to correct our bad production by pulling our ears—and pretty hard he pulled, too! I gave much trouble by holding my head a little to one side, a fault which caused my poor ears many a pang! This was doubtless owing to defective vision of one eye, which was in after years discovered and thenceforth corrected by the use of spectacles. A chorister in spectacles would have been looked upon as an impossibility in my young days; nowadays we attend to such matters, and correct imperfections in other ways than by pulling ears! Besides music, we received of course a general education, our school-master being also a Vicar-Choral. This education was not very wide in its scope, but our master taught well enough all that was expected of him. "You'll learn enough here to carry you through the world," he often said, and it must be admitted that a goodly number of the boys he taught have done well

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE

(EMERITUS-ORGANIST OF WESTMINSTER ABBEY).

WESTMINSTER ABBEY with its historic associations, the noble splendour of its stately architecture, the fragrant memory of its illustrious dead, and the affecting strains of its echoing music, is ever a source of magnetic attraction and delightful contemplation. The ordinary writer rarely seeks out those pleasant nooks and corners which exercise such a fascinating spell upon those who can appreciate their characteristic quaintness. One such secluded spot is known as the "Little Cloisters," which, with its fountain-centred and tree-shaded quadrangle, is environed with an old-world charm of peculiar interest. Entering, from the dark cloister, the narrow doorway of the ancient Littlington Tower, we are within the pleasant habitation of the Abbey's chief musician.

Sir Frederick Bridge is a musician of remarkable versatility. His daily work at the Abbey has been too well known to be described. As a teacher—not only in the organ-loft of the Abbey, but especially at the National Training School of Music, and now at the Royal College—it is sufficient to state that he has trained a number of young men who, in occupying important spheres of work, have done him infinite credit. As a lecturer he has had remarkable success, and many thousands of people have derived keen enjoyment at his popular Gresham lectures. We must also refer to his excellent work in the examination room of the Royal College of Organists, the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Durham, and Victoria University. Nor, too, has he been idle with his pen, as is evidenced in his output of numerous Festival choral works—oratorios, cantatas, ballads, &c.—and well-known anthems and services. His setting of Tennyson's "Crossing the Bar" is a notable composition, while his educational works on Counterpoint, &c., have had an extraordinary success.

Now, in the plenitude of years and accumulated honours, in relinquishing to younger hands the more arduous duties of the Abbey services, he turns with unabated ardour to those other pursuits a full recital of which is contained in the pages of his book.

“A WESTMINSTER PILGRIM,” as the Author felicitously calls his delightful retrospect, is a narrative that flows with little apparent effort. The tale is told with much grace and charm of bubbling humour: while many humanising touches reveal the characteristic philosophy of the writer, none the less forceful because not austere. Yet beneath all this can be seen the man of abounding zest and ardour, pursuing no chimera, but always—in art, in sport, in whatsoever his hand finds to do—playing a chivalrous, purposeful part in the great scheme of life as he sees it.

He is never tiresome. His smaller and more intimate moments have a latent suggestion of the Author's great kindness and simplicity; and now and then an illuminating touch peoples again many a forgotten stage. Sprung seemingly almost from antiquity, because of the reach of his glance down so many dim corridors of memory, he has the power of inspiring in who will listen the sense that so obviously is his own of contact with events that one by one have passed away. Yet no mere dreamer is Sir Frederick, standing solitary in a new age: rather is he a cicerone whose years are constantly renewed from the youth of every fresh inquirer into the lore that he treasures.

Simply, as becomes him, he seems to take the hand of those who seek, and to say, "Come, I can show you many things." Which, as the pages of his book will prove, he proceeds to do in absorbing fashion.

Sleeps the silent glade,
Sleeps the lowlit wood :
Nature's healing hands are softly laid
On the fields of blood.
Hush'd the sounds of war,
Earth may rest awhile,
Rest in loving patience, wearied sore,
Sleep, and sleeping, smile.'

The beautifully-expressive music gives fine scope to a soprano or tenor, especially in the sustained high notes of the last two pages.

Mr. Fletcher's effective setting of Faber's familiar hymn should find favour with vocalists who are called on to provide items at organ recitals, sacred concerts, and similar occasions. The accompaniment is of a type that is easily adapted to the organ.

The Musical Directory for 1919.

[Rudall Carte & Co.]

The sixty-seventh annual issue of this book is now ready. No more need be said in regard to a publication that has long since been regarded as indispensable.

Letters to the Editor.

WANTED—BOOKS ON MUSIC.

A SPRING-CLEANING TIME APPEAL.

SIR,—I have just returned from a visit to the Army of Occupation in Germany, and want to make a special and urgent request to your readers. You have been very good in the past in making known to your readers the needs of our Musicians' Fund of the Y.M.C.A. (of the committee of which, along with the Editors of the other musical papers of the country, you are a member), and also of the National Collection of Instruments and Music for the use of the troops. The Fund still needs money, and the National Collection still needs music and instruments, and I hope your readers will continue to do what they can to contribute both; but a special need which I have discovered amongst our troops in Germany is that of books upon music—text-books of every kind (elementary and advanced), histories of music, biographies of musicians, &c. The men now have leisure, and I have been encouraged to find that hundreds of them are prepared to undertake quite serious study of music.

I think we may say that every musician in this country has upon his shelves some books which are no longer of great service to him. Such books should immediately be sent to me at the Music Section, Y.M.C.A., 25, Bloomsbury Square, London, W.C. 1. They will at once be acknowledged, and I think I can promise that the day after we receive them they will be on their way to our newly-formed music libraries in Germany.

I have come back from my journey encouraged by the thought that, by the education of a section of our manhood now abroad, we have a real opportunity of making ours a more musical country. I sincerely hope that we shall make use of this opportunity to the full.—Yours faithfully,

March 10, 1919.

• PERCY A. SCHOLES.

MR. HAROLD SAMUEL AND BACH'S 'THIRTY VARIATIONS.'

SIR,—In your very appreciative notice of Mr. Harold Samuel's pianoforte recital of January 28, you fail to draw attention to what I think was a very subtle little joke on the part of the pianist. Bach's 'Thirty variations' were, of course, the principal item in the programme, and, as is generally known, they were written to order for the purpose of lulling to sleep Baron Kaiserling, who, a sufferer from insomnia, wished for some piece of music that might soothe him when lying awake. Well, this being the case, it seemed to me a very playful piece of humour on Mr. Samuel's part to play, as an extra, the fine Choral Prelude on 'Sleepers, wake.'

F. M. MANN.

[We regret being compelled to hold over several letters.—
ED., M.T.]

Obituary.

We regret to record the following deaths:—

ARTHUR O'LEARY, in March. Born in 1834, he studied the pianoforte at Leipzig, where he made the acquaintance of Moscheles, Mendelssohn, and Joachim. As professor of music at the Royal Academy of Music, he gave lessons to Arthur Sullivan and Charles Stanford. His editions of pianoforte works were well known.

HORACE WILLIAM PETHERICK, the well-known violin connoisseur, vice-president of the Cremona Society, author of works on Guarnerius and Stradivarius, on March 8, at the age of eighty.

CHRISTOPHER WILSON, on February 18, composer of Shakespearean music that has earned much popularity. A biographical and critical notice is given below.

W. FRYE PARKER, F.R.A.M., on February 20, the well-known professor of the violin; for many years leader of the Royal Philharmonic Society's Orchestra.

MISS AMY WOODFORD-FINDEN, on March 13, the composer of the familiar 'Indian Love Lyrics.'

JOHN ADCOCK, for many years conductor of the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society.

CHRISTOPHER WILSON.

When Christopher Wilson published his master-song, 'Come away, Death,' in 1901, The Times said of it that it was 'all that such a song should be—fantastic, yet deeply pathetic, and as musically as a work by a Mendelssohn scholar ought to be.' The words italicised remain true of all that this gifted composer left us; and the pity of it is that for various reasons, some of which will appear in the present notice, so little of his work has been printed.

'Chris' Wilson, as he was known to hosts of friends in Bohemian circles, was born at Melbourne, in Derbyshire, on October 7, 1874. He came of a musical stock, both his grandmother and his mother being brilliant pianists—the latter a pupil of Sterndale Bennett; while his father was a devoted amateur of the art, and his uncle, Mr. Frank Devonport, professor of harmony and composition at the Royal Academy of Music. Many stories, based on undoubted fact, are current as to the boy's proficiency on the pianoforte, even before he reached his 'teens'; and while at Derby School, where his headmaster was T. R. Sterndale Bennett, a son of the composer, he played for the eleven—a somewhat rare combination of talents. There was never a doubt as to young Christopher's future calling; and his brilliant career at the Academy more than fulfilled his early promise. He carried off no fewer than thirteen bronze and three silver medals, and was at the end of his third year awarded three certificates: for the pianoforte, harmony, and sight-singing. He also gained the Agnes Zimmermann Prize. Wilson received every encouragement from the Principal, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, while his professors for harmony and composition, pianoforte, and viola (his second subject) were his uncle, Mr. Oscar Beringer, and Mr. Walenn, respectively. No one was surprised when he capped all his previous successes by carrying off the Mendelssohn Scholarship in 1895. He went abroad—as winners of the British Prix de Rome usually do—and studied under Wüllner at Cologne, von Herzogenberg at Berlin, and Widor at Paris. His gifts were appreciated by his foreign teachers as they had been at home. The beautiful Suite for strings (since published by Schott) was performed at Cologne at one of the principal concerts—a compliment that had been paid to only one young Englishman before him—Arthur Sullivan. Moreover, he was selected by Wüllner to 'coach' a tenor at the Opera in the part of Tristan—no small distinction. There can be no question that Wilson brought back to England one great asset*: he had heard all the great operas over and over again, and it was as a composer and conductor for the theatre that he was destined to make his mark. His sense of the stage and of atmosphere, and his love for everything relating to the theatre were remarkably keen; so his success in this sphere was not surprising. His gifts were quickly recognised by Sir Frank Benson, Mr. Oscar Asche, Miss Ellen Terry, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Terry, Mr. Otho Stuart, Mr. Wally, and others; for the two first-named he acted as musical director for well over ten years. Apart from the numerous Shakespearean productions for which he wrote the music, his most striking successes were obtained in 'Kismet,' the 'Pied Piper of Hamelin' and the Greek plays. In these latter he made no more use of the ancient modes than Mendelssohn had done; but the result was highly effective and true to atmosphere. Opinions are bound to differ as to the comparative merit of the music written for the Shakespeare plays: on the whole, perhaps, 'Richard II.,' 'The Taming of the Shrew,' 'Much Ado about Nothing,' 'The Merchant of Venice,' and 'Measure for Measure' mark his highest level of achievement. Wilson was, of course, acquainted with all the traditional music, of which he availed himself whenever he considered it suitable; the numerous gaps he filled up with unerring taste and skill. Future searchers in the British Museum Catalogue may consider his output relatively small, in spite of the fact that he died in his forty-fifth year. But it should be remembered that incidental music of this kind, apart from the lyrics, mostly remains in MS. One may rest assured, however, that its spirit and traditions will live on, and that much of it will be handed on by successive conductors for the enjoyment of future generations.

* Another natural result of his stay in Germany was that his interest in the folk-songs of that country was stimulated; and he edited for Messrs. Boosey the volume of 'German Folk-Songs' in their Imperial Edition, the English versions being by his friend Paul England. Wilson's accompaniments and harmonies to these are models of what such things should be, and a notable feature of the collection is that it contains a large proportion of songs that had never been translated into English.

His published works include, besides those mentioned elsewhere in this column, settings of 'It was a lover and his lass,' 'Take, oh take those lips away,' 'On the ground'; two songs set to words by Harold Begbie and Eric Broad; 'The Singer' (Swinburne); three duets and a song from 'Kismet'; an 'Ave Maria'; and a 'Novellette' for the pianoforte. Of the unpublished works, the most important are a 'Wordless play,' 'Inconstant Pierrot' (the Scenario by Sidney Dark); a second Suite for strings; a Mass; a Pianoforte Quartet; two String Quartets; two Violin Sonatas; and a number of lyrics (several of them Shakespearean). He also wrote the music for two pageants.

During the last year of his life, when his health was beginning to fail, Wilson worked much at the British Museum on a series of papers for The Stage, dealing with Shakespeare and the host of composers who have set him to music: here his knowledge and experience, if not unrivalled, were certainly unsurpassed. Of these articles five had appeared up to the time of his death: (1) and (2) Introductory and 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' (October 31 and November 7, 1918); (3) and (4) 'Macbeth' (December 5 and December 27, 1918); (5) 'Romeo and Juliet' (February 6, 1919).^{*} The last of the series was published eleven days before the end came suddenly—for 'Chris' died of heart failure in the early morning of February 17; a few hours before he fell asleep he was asked to write the music for the forthcoming production by Miss Doris Keane of this same play of 'Romeo and Juliet'—a pathetic coincidence!

Anyone anxious to form some faint idea of 'Chris' Wilson's delightful personality, his kindness to all, his utter selflessness and child-like simplicity of nature, and his humour, should read the two articles on his experiences as a conductor which he contributed to The Stage in 1917. But it is the humbler members of his orchestra who probably know more of his goodness of heart than even his most intimate friends; and it is their testimony he would have valued most highly. It should be added that he was a widely-read man, and possessed a sound knowledge of art and of architecture.

A fine tribute to his memory was paid him by his brother Savages—among whom he had spent so many happy hours—on the Saturday night of the week in which he died, when Mr. George Baker sang his 'Come away, Death,' with an effect that will never be forgotten by those who were present. It is to be hoped that a permanent memorial may attach to him in due course by the issue in one volume of his Shakespeare Lyrics—both published and unpublished.

H. O.

^{*} It was the intention of the editor of The Stage to reprint this scholarly series, when completed, in book form; and it is a real loss to the history of music and literature that this scheme has been frustrated by the writer's premature death.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The second chamber concert of the Lent Term was given in the Duke's Hall on Wednesday afternoon, March 5, when a programme of exceptional variety and interest was presented by the pupils. The Junior Orchestra, of which Mr. Spencer Dyke is the conductor, opened the concert with an admirable performance of the late Sir Hubert Parry's 'Lady Radnor' Suite for Strings, while 'Ole Olsen' Suite (Op. 50) for Pianoforte and Strings was performed by the same orchestra later in the concert. An item of especial interest was two movements from a MS. Quartet for flute, two clarinets, horn, and pianoforte, by Edmund T. Jenkins (scholar), the composer playing one of the clarinet parts, while two movements from a String Quartet by Ernest Chausson brought the concert to a close.

Among the miscellaneous items were two Recitations with music, some songs by Sir Charles Stanford and Ernest Walker, pianoforte solos by Chopin and Schumann, and the Romance and Scherzo from Widor's Suite for flute and pianoforte.

The R.A.M. Club held a social and musical meeting at the Duke's Hall on Saturday evening, March 8. An excellent performance of Saint-Saëns's Violin Concerto in B minor was given by Mr. Spencer Dyke, who also contributed a Sonata by Leclair and several shorter pieces by Rowsby Woof, J. B. McEwen, and Peggy Cochrane. The accompaniments were admirably played by Mr. Victor Booth. In addition to the instrumental solos an interesting selection of Italian, French, Russian, and English songs were contributed by Miss Olga Haley, who was accompanied by Mrs. Edward Haley.

The news of the death of Mr. Frye Parker, who passed away on February 20 at the age of sixty-three, was received with deep regret by his many pupils and friends. Entering the R.A.M. as a student in 1867, he was appointed a professor in 1882, and for many years held a distinguished position amongst English violinists and teachers of the violin. He was the leader of the Royal Philharmonic Society, and also conductor of the Colet Court Orchestral Society and of the Civil Service Orchestral Society. Both as an able and painstaking teacher and a sound and widely cultured musician he was highly esteemed by a very large circle of brother musicians.

The death of Mr. Arthur O'Leary, which took place on March 12, has removed a greatly respected personality from the musical world. Many of Mr. O'Leary's pupils achieved fame in their profession, amongst them being Sir Arthur Sullivan and Sir Charles Stanford. For many years he was a professor and an examiner at the R.A.M., where he was held in the greatest esteem.

The following awards have recently been made: The Sterndale Bennett Prize (for the best performance of a work by the late Sir William Sterndale Bennett) to Desirée MacEwan. The Goldberg Prize, for soprano vocalists, to Gwladys Partridge.

THE BEECHAM OPERA SEASON.

We regret that the date, March 19, of the opening of Sir Thomas Beecham's season of opera at Drury Lane forbids more than a brief reference to the first night. Sir Thomas, who was warmly greeted by a large audience, conducted Dr. Ethel Smyth's 'The Boatswain's Mate' and Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Le coq d'or.' The English work, with its humour, folk-song lilt, and clever scoring was well performed by Miss Rosina Buckman, Mr. Alfred Heather, and Mr. Frederick Ranalow, and was keenly enjoyed. In the bizarre and fascinating 'Coq d'or' the cast of English artists—Miss Sylvia Melis, Miss Edith Clegg, Miss Doris Lemon, Messrs. Foster Richardson, Sydney Russell, William Michael, Herbert Langley, and Frederick Blamey—showed with what thoroughness, spirit, and artistry a difficult work can now be presented without the traditional help from the Continent. Sir Thomas Beecham and an excellent orchestra displayed the glittering colours of Rimsky-Korsakov's score without stint and with thorough mastery.

The performance of 'The Marriage of Figaro' on March 21 was a triumph of presentation—entrancing in its beauty, naturalness, and humour.

The first week's programme included also 'Boris Godounov,' 'La Bohème,' and 'Aida.'

If the Lord Himself had not been on our side.

ANTHEM FOR THANKSGIVING AFTER VICTORY, OR GENERAL USE.

Psalms cxiv. 1—7, cxiii. 2.

Composed by HUGH BLAIR,
M.A., Mus. D., Cambridge.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegro con brio.

TENORS. mf If the

BASSES. mf If the ORGAN. Allegro con brio. ♩ = 108.

f Gt. mf Sw.
Ped. Gt. coupd.

Lord him - self had not been on our . . side, now may

Lord him - self had not been on our . . side, now may

Sw. coupd.

SOPRANOS. f

ALTOS. f If the Lord Him - self had

If the Lord Him - self . . had

Is - rael say; . . if the Lord Him - self had

Is - rael say; . . if the Lord Him - self . . had

f Gt. Sw. coupd.

Copyright, 1919, by Novello and Company, Limited.

(1)

not been on our side, when men rose up a - gainst us ;

not been on our side, when men rose up a - gainst us ;

not been on our side, when men rose up a - gainst us ;

not been on our side, when men rose up a - gainst us ;

mf

mf

They had swal-low-ed us up quick, when they were so wrath - ful - ly dis -

Sw.

senza Ped.

- pleas - ed at us. . .

mf

Yea, the wa - ters had drown - ed us, and the

mf

Yea, the wa - ters had drown - ed us, and the

mf

Ped. (2)

The deep wa - ters of the proud had gone

The deep wa - ters of the proud had gone stream had gone o - ver our soul. The deep wa - ters of the proud had gone stream had gone o - ver our soul. The deep wa - ters of the proud had gone

e - ven o - ver our soul. But prais - ed,

e - ven o - ver our soul. But prais - ed,

e - ven o - ver our soul. But

e - ven o - ver our soul. But prais - ed be the Lord, . .

prais - ed be the Lord, . .

prais - ed, prais - ed be the Lord, . .

prais - ed, prais - ed be the Lord, . . prais - ed,

(3)

prais - ed be the Lord, . . .

prais - ed be the Lord, . . .

prais - ed, prais - ed be the Lord, . . . mf prais - ed, . . . prais - ed be the Lord, . . . Who hath not prais - ed, f

prais - ed, f

prais - ed,

giv - en us o - ver for a prey un - to their teeth.

prais - ed, prais - ed be the Lord. Our soul is es - mf

prais - ed, prais - ed be the Lord.

prais - ed, prais - ed be the Lord. f

prais - ed, prais - ed be the Lord.

mf Sw. Solo.

Ped.

ca - ped as a bird out of the snare of the fowl - er,

the snare is bro - ken, and we are de - liv - er - ed.

rit. Our help stand - eth in the Maestoso.

rit. f

rit. Our help stand - eth in the Maestoso.

rit. f

Name of the Lord, . . . Who hath made heav'n . . . and

Name of the Lord, . . . Who hath made heav'n . . . and

Name of the Lord, . . . Who hath made heav'n . . . and

Name of the Lord, . . . Who hath made heav'n . . . and earth. ff from earth. ff from earth. ff Bless-ed be the Name of the Lord, ff from earth. ff Bless-ed be the Name of the Lord, ff from ff marcato.

this time forth for ev-er more. rit.

this time forth for ev-er more. rit.

this time forth for ev-er more. rit.

this time forth for ev-er more. rit.

rit.

‘UNS KANN KEINER!’

(ZUR BERLINER AUFFÜHRUNG DES ‘FALSTAFF’ VON VERDI.)

Falstaff von Verdi: 'Alle Achtung, der ist ja noch viel kolossaler!'
Der Deutsche Falstaff: 'Keine Rangstreitigkeiten—ich habe ja auch was vom Verdy!'

Verdi's 'Falstaff,' which was first heard at the Scala at Milan on February 9, 1893, was, with but little delay, produced at Berlin by an Italian company, to a great extent identical with the original one, though a marked abstinence was that of Victor Maurel, who on patriotic grounds declined to repeat the part of Falstaff, which he had created, in the capital of the chief enemies of his country. The first performance in the Berlin Opera House, in 'Unter den Linden,' took place on June 1, 1893. It was cordially received, but without any sort of furore, and probably the lightness of its effervescent humour and rapid action were not in its favour in the Prussian capital. It afforded a motive, however, for the accompanying cartoon, which appeared in a comic paper at the time. Falstaff, standing by the side of the Royal Opera House, is greeting a colossal 'double,' who sits crushingly on the Guard House, which is in fact almost exactly opposite the Opera House. He is labelled 'Falstaff-Militarismus,' and it will be noticed how his sensual face and bloated figure seem to be causing great alarm among the passers-by. His greeting to his pigmy rival: 'No disputes about precedence; I too know something of Verdy,' refers of course to a Prussian War-Minister, Verdy du Vernois, who presumably shared some responsibility for the tax which militarism imposed upon the German people, and probably this represents the extreme limit which Press censorship would allow in the direction of any protest against such a burthen as this military policy involved.

H. T.

Sixty Years Ago.

From the Musical Times of April, 1859:

BERWICK.—On the 23rd of Feb., the Church Choir gave their annual concert, in the Girls' School, to a large and very select audience, including many ladies from the town and country. The singers consisted of three men and five boys, and were accompanied by Mr. Young on the pianoforte. The programme contained fourteen pieces of secular music, glees, songs, and catches.

WHITBY.—A new idea has been very successfully carried out here in concerts. The Temperance Choral Society have just held two very crowded meetings, and, although the talent employed was strictly native, the greatest satisfaction was given. The music consisted chiefly of old Airs to modern Temperance Words, interspersed with recitations. Miss King accompanied the songs on the pianoforte.

EDINBURGH.—On the 26th of February, the Edinburgh Tonic Sol-Fa Association gave a very successful festival of Scottish song, in the Music Hall, which was occupied in every part by a very respectable audience. This festival broke up with the audience all joining in 'Auld lang syne.'

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—Beethoven's Mass in C, and Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise, were performed, under Mr. Hullah's direction, on Wednesday evening, the 16th ult., when the principal singers were Miss Banks, Miss Martin, Miss Bradshaw, Messrs. W. Cooper and Thomas. The chorus is no doubt well trained by Mr. Hullah, but the difficulties in these two compositions are great, and are quite sufficient to account for occasional unsteadiness. Upon the whole, the performance was satisfactory, and the band was unexceptionable. Mr. Sims Reeves was announced in the bills for the tenor part in the Hymn of Praise, but an apology was made for his non-appearance by Mr. Hullah, who stated that Mr. Reeves had only just come up from the Isle of Wight, and had arrived 'voiceless.'

A FESTIVAL AT WOKING.

The organizers of the Woking Musical Festival of British Composers, which was held on March 15, deserve to be both congratulated and encouraged, for their enterprise is of a kind that could be developed with advantage in the London area. Towns in the near home counties are too apt to have their own musical life impoverished by the competition of London. The burden of an important programme was borne by the Woking Musical Society's choir and orchestra, and with orchestral leaders from the Royal Philharmonic Society, Mr. Frederick Ranalow as vocalist, and Mr. Herbert Fryer, the standard of performance was of the best. One can assume from the title 'Festival of British Composers' that the event under notice, being devoted entirely to works by Sir Charles Stanford, was inaugural. The programme consisted of the Irish Rhapsody No. 1, in D minor, Op. 78; Pianoforte Concerto No. 2, in C minor, Op. 126; Solemn March and Heroic Epilogue, 'Verdun,' Op. 151, for orchestra; the 'Songs of the Sea,' for baritone, chorus, and orchestra; and choral part-songs. Interest centred in the Pianoforte Concerto—excellently played by Mr. Fryer—which was then heard for the first time in the London area. It was typical of the composer's distinction of thought and craftsmanship; two movements in particular—the slow movement and the Finale—made an instant and vivid impression. The rest of the programme was more than adequately carried out, including the part-songs excellently sung under the guidance of Mr. H. Scott Baker. It should be mentioned that it is largely due to the continued support of a local J.P., Mr. Patrick H. White, that the Society has long been able to lead and vitalize music at Woking.

THE MUSICIANS' Y.M.C.A. GIFT.

This is a scheme for providing additional musical facilities for the members of His Majesty's Forces in the 2,600 Huts and Centres of the Y.M.C.A. at home and abroad.

Committee.—The Editors of all the Musical Papers of the Country.

Hon. Treasurer.—Major H. Walford Davies, Mus. Doc.

Organizing Secretaries.—Percy A. Scholes, Mus. Bac., A.R.C.M.; Katharine E. Eggar, A.R.A.M.

Assistant Organizing Secretary.—Miss Edna Palmer.

Hon. Organizer of National Collection of Instruments and Music.—Herman Darewski.

Office.—Y.M.C.A., Universities House, 25, Bloomsbury Square, W.C.-1.

	£	s.	d.
Total collected this year	392	0	0
Total from February 12 to March 11th, 1919 ..	227	9	1

(a) PROCEEDS OF CONCERTS AND ENTERTAINMENTS FROM FEBRUARY 12 TO MARCH 11, 1919.

	£	s.	d.
Crouch End Mr. E. M. Erlbach's Concert	50	14	0
Canada Lethbridge, Alberta, Imperial League of Daughters of Empire Concert	2	17	5
Cheltenham Mr. C. A. Morris's Concert during his Collection campaign	5	0	0
Erith Miss F. H. Ledger, Pupils' Concert	1	10	0
Leamington Spa .. Miss G. F. Gabb, Pupils' Concert	1	2	0
Liverpool Mr. W. E. Bridson's Concert	15	11	6
Leytonstone Dramatic Recital by Miss Louie Bagley's Pupils at the Metropolitan Academy of Music	2	2	0
Stoneycroft Miss E. Levin, Pupils' Musical Evening	1	15	0
Stalybridge Miss E. Ridway, Musical Evening, Girls' Guild	2	0	0
St. Leonard's-on-Sea .. Miss Florence Aylward, Cafe Chantant	4	11	0
West Hartlepool .. Concert by St. George's Choral Society	8	0	0
	£95	2	11

(b) ORGAN RECITALS.

	£	s.	d.
Colne Baptist Church: Mr. E. Tatham	3	5	6
Gospel Oak All Hallows' Church: Mr. W. Wolstenholme ..	2	17	1
Hereford Cathedral Recital: Mr. Percy Hull	6	7	6
Holmwood Parish Church: Recital by Miss Pike, and donation from Lady Wilson's 'Comforts Fund'	12	0	7
Hove Parish Church: Mr. F. M. Butler	3	11	0
Lincoln Cathedral Recital: Dr. Bennett	7	11	11
Leytonstone St. Andrew's Church: Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson	7	19	3
Newcastle-on-Tyne .. Cathedral Recital: Mr. C. H. Moody	20	0	0
Ripon Cathedral Recital: Mr. C. H. Moody	15	0	0
Stroud Green Holy Trinity Church: Mr. G. D. Cunningham ..	4	4	0
	£82	16	10

(c) DONATIONS AND COLLECTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Mrs. K. Mackinnon	10	0	0
Miss K. A. Mackinnon	5	0	0
Mr. G. Elwes	5	0	0
Mrs. M. Body	5	0	0
Mrs. A. Thorp	2	2	0
Messrs. J. Curwen & Sons ..	2	2	0
Mr. J. E. Wallis	2	2	0
Miss E. M. Haselden	2	2	0
Mr. J. M. Ruddock	2	2	3
Mrs. H. Muller	2	2	0
Dr. J. E. Borland	1	1	0
Mr. W. French	1	1	0
Miss L. Cogan	1	1	0
Miss K. Martin	1	1	0
Messrs. Lyon & Hall	1	1	0
Miss E. M. Boyce	1	1	0
Miss R. M. Fagelund	1	0	0
Mr. E. F. Holey	0	10	0
Mr. C. H. Francklow	0	10	0
Miss Dickinson	0	10	0
Lady Robertson	0	10	0
Miss D. M. Stevens	0	10	0
Mrs. Askwith	0	5	0
Miss S. Maturin	0	5	0
Miss E. Marriott (Reader of The Strad) ..	0	5	0
Anonymous	0	5	2
Mr. W. E. Rogers	0	2	6
Miss D. Sherratt	0	2	6
Miss J. E. Hamilton	0	2	6
Mr. E. Besley	0	2	6
	£49	9	3

Many of the above are the donors' second contributions to the Fund.

London Concerts.

THE ROYAL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

MR. GUSTAVE HOLST'S 'THE PLANETS' SUITE.

The third concert of the season, on February 27, was notable for the first performance of a new Suite by Mr. Gustave Holst, 'The Planets.' The work was begun at the end of 1914, a fact which was clearly not without influence on its style. There are seven movements, 'Mars, the Bringer of War,' 'Venus, the Bringer of Peace,' 'Mercury, the Winged Messenger,' 'Saturn, the Bringer of old Age,' 'Uranus, the Magician,' 'Neptune, the Mystic,' and 'Jupiter, the Bringer of Jollity.' The second and sixth were omitted on this occasion. The idea of the Suite seems to have been conceived while the composer was studying astrology. Although the poetic basis is planetary, however, he wishes his work to be judged as music. So few of us know anything of the heavenly bodies, that there is no fear of his wish being disregarded.

The orchestra employed is very large—four flutes, three oboes, cor anglais, three clarinets, bass clarinet, three bassoons, double-bassoon, six horns in F, four trumpets in C, two tenor trombones, one bass trombone, one tenor tuba in B flat, six timpani, big drum, side-drum, cymbals, bells, triangle, tambourine, glockenspiel, celesta, xylophone, organ, and strings. Let it be said at once that the Suite scored an emphatic success. 'Mars' is by far the most convincing orchestral battle-piece that we have heard. Comparisons with the passage in 'Ein Heldenleben' were inevitable, some hearers (of course) discovering similarities. But it seemed to us that Mr. Holst, in making an insistent rhythm the dominating feature, had got well clear of the Strauss example. Cacophony there is in abundance, but the most lasting impression is that of the figure :

beaten out with remorseless insistence. 'Mercury' proved to be the most engaging number, full of fancy, and wonderfully scored. 'Saturn' was impressively gloomy, and a trifle over-long in one mood. 'Uranus' and 'Jupiter' were both on the strenuous side; but the latter contained so much of an attractive character that we believe it would be very popular. Towards its close a fine, long tune of Celtic type seemed a trifle out of the picture, but a good tune is always welcome, so we do not complain of it being dragged in by the hair, as this one seems to be. The Suite was finely played, and loudly applauded.

The rest of the programme consisted of Arnold Bax's Festival Overture (a riotous and exhilarating work, though somewhat diffuse), Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto (in which Miss Margaret Fairless played brilliantly, and, in the Finale, a trifle hurriedly), and Ravel's 'Rapsodie Espagnole.' Mr. Adrian C. Boulton's conducting was admirable.

QUEEN'S HALL.

The return of M. Cortôt gave added importance to the symphony concert of the New Queen's Hall Orchestra on February 22. His reputation as one of the foremost of the world's pianists was confirmed by a performance of Saint-Saëns's C minor Concerto that was both technically brilliant and finely expressive. The Symphony was that of Mozart in E flat, No. 39. Miss Carrie Tubb sang the narration of Isolde from 'Tristan' and an aria by Bach.

On March 8 Moussorgsky's 'Une nuit sur le mont chauve' and Bantock's comedy-overture, 'The Pierrot of the Minute,' brought an interesting pictorial element into the programme, of which the chief features were Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony and Rachmaninov's second Pianoforte Concerto, played by Miss Myra Hess with accustomed distinction.

Miss Murray Lambert played Violin Concertos by Mozart and Dvorák at Queen's Hall on March 4, accompanied by the London Symphony Orchestra under Mr. Hamilton Harty. The programme introduced a fascinating and clever piece of fairy music, 'Puck's Minuet,' by Mr. Herbert Howells, and 'Will o' the Wisp' by Mr. W. H. Reed, the latter being conducted by the composer.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

London concert-goers are not accustomed to associate the name of Mozart with religious music, and to many of the audience at the Royal Albert Hall on March 1, the strength and beauty of Mozart's 'Requiem' must have been a surprise and a lesson. It was an excellent idea to revive this work—which had not been performed by the Royal Choral Society for twenty years—as it contains much that is adapted for sonorous and dignified singing, and the qualities of both the music and the choir were heard to advantage. The solo parts were taken by Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Gertrude Higgs, Mr. Walter Hyde, and Mr. Graham Smart, and Sir Frederick Bridge conducted.

The 'Requiem' was followed by Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.'

Madame Clara Butt's concert at the Royal Albert Hall on March 15 was a memorable occasion. Every seat was sold, the massed bands of the Guards occupied the orchestra, conducted by Major Mackenzie Rogan, and the atmosphere was that of a grand occasion. Madame Butt's singing, as was to be expected, justified this setting, and she held her customary grip on the vast audience in Elgar's 'Sea Pictures' and the other songs in her programme. Mr. Kennerley-Rumford's contributions again roused great enthusiasm, as did the playing of Tchaikovsky's '1812' Overture by the band.

ÆOLIAN HALL.

At the chamber concert of the London Trio on March 11, Schumann's Trio in D minor, and that of Arensky in F minor, were presented. The soloists of the occasion were Mr. Albert Sammons and Miss Amy Deakin.

A new Trio by Mr. Harry Farjeon was introduced at the concert of the Harmonic Trio on February 20. Dr. Vaughan Williams's song-cycle 'On Wenlock Edge' was given by Mr. Gervase Elwes with the London String Quartet and Mr. Kiddle on February 21. Love-songs made the programme of M. Rosing's recital on February 22. Chamber music was given on March 1 by Miss Helen Sealy (violin), Miss Joan Willis (violin), and Miss Renée Benson (pianoforte), and the Harmonic Trio reappeared on March 6 with a programme that included Trios by Ernest Austin and J. D. Williams and a Violin Sonata by Eugène Goossens.

Recitals were given by Miss Bertha Best, pianist (February 19); Miss Frances Coopman, pianist (February 24); Madame d'Alvarez, vocalist (February 25); Madame Margherita Valda, soprano (February 25); Miss Hilda Saxe, pianist (February 26); Miss Margaret Portch, pianist (February 27); Miss Dorothy Brook, violinist (March 4); Miss Edith Finch, vocalist, and Miss Ivina Meyrick, pianist (March 4); Mesdames Umberto De Villi and Ferruccio Dina, vocalists (March 5); M. Rosing, in a programme of songs by Moussorgsky (March 8); M. Alfredo Nardi, violinist, with other artists, in a recital of his own compositions (March 12).

Mrs. and Miss Kennedy-Fraser gave another of their uniquely interesting recitals of Hebridean songs on March 4.

ELGAR'S VIOLIN SONATA.

Mr. W. H. Reed's chamber concert on March 21 was notable for the first performance of Elgar's Sonata for violin and pianoforte. Mr. Reed had the invaluable co-operation of Mr. Landon Ronald, and the new work received a very fine performance. Mr. Reed's playing in the second movement (Romance) was especially good, the delicate and fanciful passages being a delight. The large audience (which included a good sprinkling of well-known fiddlers) recalled the composer and player again and again. The rest of the programme consisted of Quartets by Mozart (E flat), and Ravel, the latter being beautifully played by the British String Quartet.

WIGMORE HALL.

Among the more notable of recent recitals that of Miss Margaret Harrison (violinist) on February 20 deserves special mention. Not only was the recitalist's playing of a high order, but special interest attached to a performance of Brahms's Double Concerto for violin and violoncello by Misses May and Beatrice Harrison, with Mr. Hamilton Harty at the pianoforte.

Mr. John Coates made his re-appearance on March 4, and sang songs by Miss Amy Hare. Miss Parlow, Miss Portman, Mr. Lionel Tertis, and Mr. Arthur Williams gave chamber music.

The Classical Concert Society opened a series of six concerts on March 5 with a programme that included Ravel's Septet for harp, strings, flute, and clarinet. The Allied String Quartet and M. Moiseiwitsch assisted. At the second concert, on March 12, M. Florent Schmitt joined the same string players in his notable Pianoforte Quintet. A Suite on Breton songs, by Jean Hure, for Pianoforte Trio, was introduced on March 19. Haydn's Quartet in C major (Op. 54), and Mozart's Clarinet Quintet, were also in the programme, to which Mr. Gervase Elwes contributed an interesting set of songs.

Miss Muriel Foster chose an exceptionally varied and interesting programme of songs for her recital on March 8. They included six by Mr. John Ireland.

Recitals were given by Miss Helen McGregor, violinist (February 19); Miss Isabel Grey, pianist (February 21); Mr. Victor Benham, pianist (February 22); Miss Lura Juta, vocalist (February 28); Mr. Frederic Lamond, pianist (March 1); Miss Katherine Goodson, pianist (March 1); Mr. Lloyd Powell, pianist (March 3); Miss Sylva Van Dyck, vocalist (March 4); Miss Winifred Macbride, pianist (March 7); M. Sascha Lasserson, violinist, and Miss Lonie Basche, pianist (March 10); M. Michael Doré, violinist (March 11).

STEINWAY HALL.

Mr. Arnold Trowell's Quartet in G made a good impression at the concert of the Philharmonic String Quartet on February 27. Old songs and ballads were given in her inimitable style by Miss Jean Sterling Mackinlay on March 1. Compositions by Mr. James Richardson (violin-cellist) were given at his concert on March 3. Recitals were given by Mr. James Richardson (viola); Mr. Sivory Levey, who returned to the concert-platform after four years' military service on March 8, and gave a characteristic programme of poems to music; and Miss Winifred Purnell, pianist (March 11). Mr. de Lara gave a concert of British music on March 13.

A successful concert was given at Steinway Hall on March 18 by Miss Christabel Baxendale (composer-violinist), assisted by Miss Eva Dale (soprano), Miss Margaret Lewys (contralto), Mr. Spencer Thomas (tenor), Miss Nancy Morgan (harp), and Mr. F. W. Holloway (pianoforte). The programme included several attractive songs and instrumental pieces by the concert-giver.

A new String Quartet by Sir Charles Stanford was introduced at the chamber concert of the Royal College of Music on February 25.

Miss Lilius Mackinnon gave a Scriabin recital at the Margaret Morris Theatre, Chelsea, on March 22, playing twelve Preludes, a Sonata (Op. 30), three Poems, and five Studies—an exacting programme, on the performance of which she is to be congratulated.

The Ealing Philharmonic Society, under the conductorship of Mr. E. Victor Williams, gave selections from Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' at a Victory Concert on February 22.

Music in the Provinces.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

BELFAST.

The Philharmonic Society gave its usual two performances of 'Messiah' on December 13 and 14, 1918, the soloists being Miss Dorothy Moulton, Mrs. John Seeds, Mr. Loyal Crosby, and Mr. Ivor Foster. Several of the less familiar choruses were included in the selection at these concerts, thus affording interesting variety.

The third concert of the Philharmonic Society was given on March 5, when an interesting programme was presented to the subscribers. The principal work was Hurlstone's Ballad for chorus and orchestra, 'Alfred the Great,' performed here for the first time. The gifted young composer whose early death cut short a career so full of promise has in this work embodied really fine choral and orchestral music, which was well rendered under the inspiring direction of Mr. E. Godfrey Brown. The remainder of the programme was admirably filled by Mr. Gervase Elwes and Miss Adela Hamaton (pianist) as soloists. The latter played, with the orchestra, Schumann's Concerto in A minor (Op. 54). The orchestral pieces were the Overture to Humperdinck's 'Hansel and Gretel,' 'The Song of the Rhine Daughters,' from 'Götterdämmerung,' and the Overture to 'Tannhäuser.' A really good performance of music so difficult for a provincial orchestra reflected much credit on its preparation by Mr. Brown.

BIRMINGHAM.

The Birmingham Festival Choral Society's third concert of the season was given at the Town Hall on February 19 and conducted by Sir Thomas Beecham. But it was at once apparent that his recent illness had left its mark upon him, for one missed his customary magnetic influence upon his rank and file, and it also may have been for want of sufficient rehearsal that the orchestra by no means realised the fine tone-quality and the finesse du jeu of former days. Wagner largely figured in the programme, the excerpts consisting of Act 3 of 'Lohengrin,' the Prelude to Act 3 of 'Die Meistersinger,' the Choral March from 'Tannhäuser,' the great duet for Sieglinde and Siegmund from 'Die Walküre,' and Wotan's 'Abschied,' sung by Mr. Frederick Ralalow, Miss Licette, and Mr. Walter Hyde, excellent Wagnerian singers, who were cast for the principal rôles. Additional interest was provided by a performance of Debussy's 'La Demoiselle Elue.'

The Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association was quite justified in again giving, under Mr. Joseph H. Adams, Edward German's sparkling opera 'Merrie England,' which once more attracted a packed audience, completely filling the Town Hall on Saturday evening, February 22. The principal parts were well sung by Madame Parkes-Darby, Miss Doris Russell, Miss Ethel Branscombe, Mr. Ernest E. Ludlow, and Mr. Herbert Simmonds. German's 'Welsh Rhapsody' opened the concert.

Madame Gell's Ladies' Choir held its annual concert at the Town Hall on March 1. The selection of choruses and part-songs included mostly operatic examples, as the Spinning Chorus from 'The Flying Dutchman' and Musetta's song from 'La Bohème,' arranged for female voices. The voices are of clear and resonant timbre, and the singing denotes Madame Gell's careful training. Captain Herbert Heyner (baritone) contributed songs, Mr. Paul Beard (violinist) played excellently, and Mr. Appleby Matthews accompanied.

The fourth and last Max Mossel concert of the season was given at the Central Hall on March 4—a magnificent finale to a delightful series of concerts, the success achieved being so great that Mr. Mossel already announces that these concerts will be continued next season. The Birmingham Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald, proved a great attraction. Mr. Landon Ronald is a prime favourite in this city, and local musicians are much attached to him. Under his masterly guidance the orchestra gave, among other works, Wagner's 'Siegfried Idyll' and Haydn's Symphony, Letter V, No. 1, in G major. Mr. Max Mossel and Miss Daisy Kennedy joined forces in Bach's Concerto in D for two Violins. The soloist was Mlle. Zoia Rosowsky.

Mr. Hubert S. Brown gave his third and last concert of the season at the Town Hall on March 5, with the assistance of Mr. Albert Sammons (violinist), Mr. Arthur Cooke (pianist), Mr. Frederic Austin (baritone), Miss May Huxley (soprano), and an excellent local contralto, Miss Alice Vaughan. The concert opened with a movement from a Quintet for Strings and Pianoforte by Dorothy Erart, the composer presiding at the pianoforte, assisted by the Hytch String Quartet.

The Appleby Matthews Sunday Orchestral Concerts at the Scala Theatre have become very popular, and are certainly a source of unusual attraction and of considerable variety as regards the programmes. Beethoven's Symphonies as well as those of the other classical masters have proved a welcome feature of these concerts.

Mr. Appleby Matthews gave a popular concert at the Town Hall on March 8, with his choir and orchestra, the principal choral work performed being Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast,' with Mr. J. W. Willink as vocalist. The choir is well-balanced, and the voices, especially the sopranos, are of an excellent tone-quality—indeed the whole rendering of Coleridge-Taylor's remarkable work was impressive in every way. Unaccompanied part-songs, including examples by Elgar, were delightfully sung. Miss Margaret Fairless scored an enormous success in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto.

On March 3 Mr. Ernest Newman gave an interesting lecture at the Birmingham and Midland Institute on 'The present trend of music'; and, under the auspices of the Birmingham Sunday Lecture Society, Mr. John Tobin, of Liverpool, gave a lecture at the Town Hall on March 9 on 'The glories of British Music,' with musical illustrations by the Tobin Pianoforte Trio.

The Birmingham Choral Union gave a concert recital of Gounod's Opera 'Faust' at the Town Hall on March 15. Mr. Richard Wassell had secured some excellent principals, viz., Miss Emily Breare, Miss May Peters, Mr. Evan Jones, Mr. Arthur Cranmer, and Mr. Ridding. Owing to the unavoidable absence of Mr. Wassell, the concert was conducted by Mr. A. J. Cotton.

BOURNEMOUTH.

When, at the start of the present series of Symphony Concerts, reference was made in this column to the strengthening process that the violins (in particular) had undergone since the 1917-18 season, it was hardly realised at that early stage how materially this department of the orchestra had improved. Now—when time has been given us to turn an impression into a clear conviction—it is clear that at no former period have the strings of the Municipal Orchestra been so powerful and so responsive to all the varying shades of expression. Recent performances have afforded complete proof of the assertion that the Bournemouth Municipal Orchestra is an extremely flexible and compact body, fully capable of assuming the responsibilities that Mr. Dan Godfrey imposes upon it.

In continuation of the monthly record of the principal works performed at these concerts, we find in the programmes presented during the past month Symphonies by Beethoven, Goetz, Glazounov, and Dvorák—viz., the 'Eroica,' Goetz's only example, the Russian composer's fifth work in this form, and the Bohemian master's Symphony in G. The best complexion was put upon these various compositions, the playing satisfying us that careful attention to detail was by no means overlooked at rehearsal. Other works of interest have been Smetana's 'Bartered Bride' Overture, De Greef's four Old Flemish Folk-Songs, Beethoven's 'Coriolanus' Overture, and—revived with great success after an absence from our programmes during the War—Brahms's fine 'Academic' Overture.

Rimsky-Korsakov was responsible for the two novelties of the month: the 'Sadko' Tableau Musical and the Suite from the Opera 'The Snow-Maiden.' Both are plentifully besprinkled with the characteristics of the famous Russian composer and teacher, the orchestration, as one would be led to expect, being of a masterly order. Nevertheless, the 'Snow-Maiden' music was a trifle disappointing—possibly because of its divorce from the context—but 'Sadko' may be regarded as an acquisition to the orchestra's repertoire.

Two pianists and two violinists have appeared as soloists, the string players, perhaps, having borne away the palm. Miss Ivy Angove, indeed, gave a superb rendering of D'Ambrosio's Concerto in B minor. This artist is certainly now to be placed in the front rank of solo violinists. Mlle. Adila Fachiri, again, is a performer of uncommon talent; and, as a niece and pupil of the great Joseph Joachim, is not this as it should be? Her performance of the Beethoven Concerto, which she played on Joachim's favourite instrument, was full of nobility and deep feeling. The pianists were Miss Lilia Kanevskaya and Miss Maud Agnes Winter. The former's studies with Moiseiwitsch have resulted in an impeccable technique, which she displayed to much advantage in Saint-Saëns's well-known Concerto in G minor. She should become a player of distinction when her undoubted powers ripen still further. Miss Winter elected to be heard in Liszt's 'Todtentanz,' a noisy composition in that bombastic and tawdry style which Liszt far too often favoured. We know that Miss Winter is a gifted artist, but on this occasion her talent did not have a fair outlet.

BRISTOL.

During the latter part of February and the beginning of March, concert-goers had a wealth of varied music awaiting them. The Bristol Choral Society at the third of its four concerts gave the public the opportunity of hearing for the first time 'Hora Novissima,' by Prof. Horatio Parker. It is a setting of a portion of 'The Rhythm of Bernard de Morlaix on the Celestial Country,' a famous Latin poem of about the year 1145. It makes considerable demands on both principals and choir, but Mr. George Riseley may be congratulated on obtaining a most successful performance of the work. A very happy feature of the programme was the third part of 'Tannhäuser,' the orchestra playing beautifully.

On the following Saturday (March 1) the Bristol Royal Orpheus Glee Society occupied the orchestra at Colston Hall, and it was pleasant to find the muster of members little short of pre-war times. The concert was in every respect admirable, Mr. George Riseley obtaining most remarkable effects from his singers. Miss Adela Verne played pianoforte solos with her accustomed skill.

CAMBRIDGE.

The University Musical Society held on March 14 a Memorial concert to commemorate those of its members who have fallen in the War. The choir and orchestra were much larger than they have been for the last five years, the numbers indeed practically reaching the pre-war figure. The programme consisted of Dr. Rootham's setting of Mr. Laurence Binyon's words, 'For the Fallen,' Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' a Rhapsody ('A Shropshire Lad') by the late George Butterworth, M.C., and Beethoven's fifth Symphony. Though Dr. Rootham's work was composed and published in 1914, this was its first performance, and the reception accorded to the composer showed that the audience at any rate agreed that it was worthy a place beside that of one of the greatest English choral writers. This is the best work of Dr. Rootham's we have yet heard. It is quite spontaneous (it was written in three weeks), and its workmanship throughout is admirable. The voice-parts in several places are difficult, but always tuneful, while the orchestral treatment shows Dr. Rootham as a thorough master of his craft.

DEVON AND CORNWALL.

PLYMOUTH.

The Madrigal Society, conducted by Dr. H. Lake, was responsible on February 26 for a first appearance at Plymouth of Benno Moiseiwitsch, whose playing of Ravel and Debussy particularly was a revelation of tonal proportion and exquisite interpretation. Miss Tessie Thomas's violin-playing proved very acceptable, and the choir sang pieces by Elgar, German, Wilbye, Dunhill, MacEwen (a lovely 'Wind in the chimney'), Balfour Gardiner, and Rimsky-Korsakov ('Peaceful and still').

On February 20 the Royal Naval Accountants' Glee Party—which, under Mr. R. R. Kimbell, has proved of inestimable value to the members themselves as well as to local charities—took leave of its conductor at a farewell concert. Mr. Kimbell is succeeded by Mr. S. Horwood.

In celebration of the Jubilee of the Barnstaple Musical Festival Society two concerts will be given in the Autumn, including two performances of Dr. Edwards's new work, 'Hymn of Victory and Peace,' for soli, chorus, and orchestra, which work will also be produced at Exeter about the same time.

Mr. Josef Holbrooke, Mr. John Dunn, and Mr. George Pawlo visited Torquay Pavilion on February 15. During the next week end the band of the R.M.L.I., Plymouth Division, gave five concerts, conducted by Mr. P. S. G. O'Donnell. The Symphony was Schubert's in C, No. 7, and modern music (Rimsky-Korsakov, Rachmaninov, and Coleridge-Taylor) was interspersed with classical and lighter items.

Two concerts were given in the Pavilion on March 3 by Miss Ada Forrest, who sang English songs, Miss Lena Kontorovitch, who played violin music by Brahms and Sarasate; and M. Shapiro, who represented Chopin, Liszt, and Brahms in his pianoforte solos, and joined the violinist in the Brahms Sonata in A. The last of the musical events in the Pavilion up to date were two pianoforte recitals by Mark Hambourg. Miss Annabel Macdonald was the vocalist.

One of the most successful gatherings of the Torquay and District Organists' Association was held on March 1 at the residence of Mr. Harry Williams, when Mr. W. L. Twining read a paper on 'Voice Production.' The musical programme included the first performance of a Prelude in E by Mr. Harold Skidmore for violin, pianoforte, and organ. It is hoped that Associations will be formed at Exeter and Plymouth, and that amalgamation may increase the value of the several combinations.

St. Dennis and District Musical Society raised £18 to develop its work by giving a concert at Carne Hill on February 26, conducted by Mr. S. D. Collins, being assisted by St. Austell Ladies' Quartet; and at Looe, on February 27, artists from Liskeard and Plymouth joined local performers in a concert in aid of the local Reading Rooms.

Launceston Choral Society is one of the most enterprising and successful in Cornwall, and adept in making the best of things as they are and thus achieving progress. Though unable to secure orchestral help, on February 27, under the direction of Mr. C. S. Parsonson it gave a very good rendering of Percy Fletcher's 'The Deacon's Masterpiece,' with Miss Ethel Baily at the pianoforte and Mr. D. J. Coldwell at the harmonium. The programme also included the part-songs 'Song of the Pedlar' (Coleridge-Taylor) and 'And did those feet' (Parry), also vocal and instrumental solos.

Want of space forbids the mention of a great number of smaller musical events that testify to the widespread and busy musical activity of these counties.

GLASGOW.

This month's record is one of local effort, and that almost wholly choral. The last of the Choral and Orchestral Union's concerts on February 22 took the form of a performance of 'Elijah' by the Choral Union, under Mr. David Stephen. The choruses were sung with good effect, and as a much more complete orchestra than earlier in the season had been engaged, the accompaniments were more adequately rendered. In the title-rôle Mr. Herbert Brown sang with distinction, and Mr. Herbert Walton acted as organist with exceptional skill. There is a likelihood of the Choral and Orchestral Union's complete orchestral scheme being brought into operation again next season, when, the absence of the Scottish Orchestra during the War being so greatly felt, the management are justified in looking forward to largely increased public support. Two concerts were given on March 1 and 2 by the St. Wilfrid's Choir. This promising body was recently formed by the most musical of the ex-students of Notre Dame Training College, under the leadership of the accomplished lecturer in music at the College. The two performances showed that the fine musical traditions of the College are being carried into extra-mural life. Especially was this evidenced in the consistently charming enunciation and expression exhibited in a programme of familiar choral music. Some excellent solo singing and pianoforte playing lent variety to the programme. Another new choir made its first public appearance on March 2—the Singer Mixed-Voice Choir, a completion and extension of the Singer Female-Voice Choir, which owes its inception to the Competitive Festival movement in Glasgow. The members of the Choir are employees in the great manufacturing firm of Singer's, and the creation of this and similar choirs is one of the most hopeful signs of the times. The new Choir's first appearance augurs well for the future, its judiciously selected programme being carried through with considerable success. Mr. W. Robertson acted as conductor. Under the same leadership the William Morris Choir gave its annual concert on March 13. The choral programme included no fewer than thirteen numbers, all of which were sung entirely from memory, thus securing to the fullest extent the conductor's best interpretation. The female-voice section is, owing to the conditions of the time, the better one; but the Choir's rendering of such pieces as Coleridge-Taylor's 'Summer is gone' and two of Stanford's 'Elizabethan Pastorals' left little to be desired. Pianoforte and violin solos were played by Miss Hilda Saxe and Mr. T. Shaw respectively.

LIVERPOOL.

At the sixth Philharmonic Concert, on March 1, the 'Emperor' Concerto found a notable interpreter in M. Alfred Cortôt, the distinguished French pianist. It was a brilliant performance, brimming over with vivacity and ardour and not lacking in suggestions of the deep things of the music. Even more exactly was M. Cortôt suited with César Franck's Symphonic Variations, which he played with sparkling clearness and crispness. The orchestral items of the programme—conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald—included Schumann's 'Manfred' Overture, his finest work, and Elgar's 'Polonia,' dedicated by the composer to Paderewski and to Polish aspirations, which it so nobly expresses.

The choral music at these concerts is notably gaining in interest. On this occasion two fine works were heard in Granville Bantock's 'The world is too much with us,' for six parts unaccompanied, and Elgar's 'Fly, singing bird,' for female voices with orchestra, conducted by the chorus-master, Dr. A. W. Pollitt.

Sir Edward Elgar conducted a splendid performance of 'The Dream of Gerontius,' given by the Philharmonic Society, at the seventh and penultimate concert on Saturday afternoon, March 15. The vocal principals were Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. Gervase Elwes, and Mr. Herbert Brown, a distinguished trio, and the instrumental and choral features of the noble work were no less finely realised.

The Victory Celebration concert of the Welsh Choral Union, on March 8, proved an exhilarating affair. The programme was made up of miscellaneous items in a regular crescendo of excitement, commencing with Sullivan's Te Deum, sung by the fine choir accompanied by the band of the Welsh Guards, which provided new thrills in the finale, where the tune 'St. Gertrude' was crashed out with the relentless rhythm and tonal glory of a first-class military band. It would be an interesting novelty to hear 'Elijah' under similar conditions. Mr. Hopkin Evans sent Faning's 'Song of the Vikings' hurtling along at perilous speed. It was an exhibition of choral steeple-chasing which aroused the Celtic fires of the performers and their audience. But Mr. Evans showed his real musicianship as well as temperament in better-balanced performances of other choral items. The playing of the Welsh Guards Band, under Mr. Andrew Harris, was not only a model of military precision, but also remarkable for the beauty and blend of its tone; as, for example, in Saint-Saëns's fine 'Marche Héroïque.' The songs contributed by Miss Mignon Nevada, and the pianoforte solos of Mr. Michael Mullinar, were other features of a generous programme. This promising young pianist does credit to his training at the Birmingham and Midland Institute of Music; his natural gift and technical equipment should carry him far.

Mr. Cyril Scott had a crowded audience at his recital in Crane Hall on March 12. In his songs he was fortunate in obtaining the services of Miss Astra Desmond, a fine singer and real artist.

Miss Jean Sterling Mackinlay gave another of her inimitable performances in the Play House on March 6.

Under its new conductor, Mr. H. Goss Custard, the Post Office Choral Society sang very well in Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' at its concert in the Philharmonic Hall on March 12. The chorus-singing was marked by high intelligence and efficiency, and bore witness to the careful training of good material. The vocal principals were Miss Lillie Wormald, Miss Muriel Weatherhead, and Mr. Henry Brearley.

The fifth concert of the Rodewald Society, on February 24, was sustained by the Catterall String Quartet.

Mr. Frederick Lamond gave a pianoforte recital on February 22, and demonstrated his unsurpassable excellence as a player of Beethoven.

Thanks to the enterprise of Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper, the mid-day Wednesday recitals in Rushworth Hall have been maintained at a high pitch of excellence as regards programmes and performances. Stanford's 'In Memoriam' Trio had a first performance by the excellent Tobin Trio.

The Crane Hall Wednesday Afternoon Concerts have offered much of interest, notably on February 19, when Mr. Edward Isaacs played Rubinstein's G major Concerto, and on February 26, when Miss Una Truman played two extremely modern examples by Turina, which bear the titles of 'Dance of the Seises in Seville Cathedral' and 'A los Toros.' The recitalist on March 5 was Mr. Arthur Cooke.

A well-known Liverpool composer, Mr. Ernest Bryson, has written a new orchestral work, 'Drumtaps,' founded on a selection of stanzas from Walt Whitman's characteristic series. Conducted by Mr. F. H. Crossley, it was successfully produced at the concert of the Warrington Musical Society on February 27. Mr. Bryson is a disciple of the modern school, on whose lines he expresses himself with freedom and force. His music is distinctly interesting in its personal note. At this concert Mr. Crossley also conducted a performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Kubla Khan,' in which Miss Astra Desmond sang the contralto solo.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.

Some of the most important music given here during the past month cannot be dealt with at first-hand owing to an illness which kept the writer away from the two Hallé concerts of this winter which one was most eager to hear—that of February 27, when Cortôt played the Beethoven 'Emperor' Concerto and Ronald repeated his reading of the second Rachmaninov Symphony, and that of March 8, which provided the first performance under Goossens of three orchestral pieces by Lord Berners: (1) Chinoiserie (Allegro ma non troppo); (2) Valse Sentimentale (Lento); (3) Kasatchok (Allegro feroce). Lord Berners has published pianoforte music under the name of Gerald Tyrwhitt, and an advance note in an earlier programme claimed that these orchestral pieces are parodies of the usual kind of 'Folk Lore' and 'Genre' music—Chinese music as conceived by the European mind; a version of the old 'Viennese Waltz'; and the Cossack Dance, a mixture of 'Charme Slave' and 'Bolshevism.' One's regret at missing the opportunity for hearing such orchestral experiments is keen.

After over two months' abstention from conducting, Sir Thomas Beecham reappeared at the Hallé concert on February 22. Well as this band has played under all the other conductors since December last, before many ears had been heard one was conscious of the presence of a vivid personality, and in nothing more than in Lalo's G minor Symphony. The programme contained a Lully Minuet, the Mozart G major Serenade, and Delius's 'Brigg Fair,' which had only had one previous performance here. But if applause be any criterion (pace 'Feste') it was more enjoyed than anything which preceded it. Miss Olga Haley, judged by her performances on this occasion, has emerged as a singer of real importance, her command of vocal colour no less than her emotional power being in strong evidence.

On February 20, 22, and 26, one heard in succession the Brodsky, Catterall, and 'Allied' Quartets—an exhibition of masterly playing in contrasted styles. The last-named Quartet is new to Manchester. A change has taken place in the personnel of the Edith Robinson Quartet, as Miss Isabel McCullagh has now formed a Liverpool quartet, her place in Manchester being taken by Miss Gertrude Barker.

On March 6, 10, and 11, Moiseiwitch played at the Hallé, Gentlemen's, and Bowdon chamber concerts, on the two latter occasions assuming the burden of the programme himself instead of in association with his wife, who was unfortunately taken ill. Such a succession of recitals gave the Manchester pianoforte-loving public the most convincing demonstration of the great scope of his interpretative powers.

There is to be a six weeks' season of Beecham opera in May-June, and for what one may call the summer out-door season more ample preparations than ever before are in hand by the City Council. From May onwards numerous choral performances will be held in the parks, especially in the poorer districts, and probably not less than fifty such will be given voluntarily, in addition to music provided by reed and brass bands and massed choral performances.

Judging from the local papers, preparations would seem to be afoot for a mammoth out-door choral celebration of Peace at Bellevue Gardens, the Hallé Choir taking the initiative in providing a chorus adequate to the occasion. If something on a 'Handel Festival' scale is contemplated, the choice of work—suitable to the occasion and to the size of choir—must be somewhat restricted; the best of our recent choral music has sprung from the anguish of war and its conditions, and would not find a suitable medium of expression in such popular conditions.

The question of site for the Municipal Opera House is being rapidly dealt with. Soon after these lines appear it is probable that we shall know the positions of the available sites and the City Council committee's preference.

On February 25 was held the 160th concert of the Tuesday Mid-day Concerts, which were commenced in connection with the Committee for Music in War-time, and which are to be continued as an organized concert-giving concern, with Mr. William Eller as musical director. On this occasion Mr. Fowler Burton sang three numbers of Vaughan Williams's 'Songs of the Road,' and Mr. John Wills was joined by four Hallé wind-players in Mozart's E flat Quartet.

NEWCASTLE.

On March 8, under the auspices of the British Music Society, Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill delivered a lecture on 'Sir Hubert Parry,' to a large audience.

The lecturer said that some of the composer's admirers had labelled him the 'English Bach,' but Parry had been strongly influenced by our own Elizabethans and Purcell, and was very English in his straightforward sincerity of style. He was an architect, rather than a colorist; consequently his orchestral work was inclined to be square and ponderous. He showed best in his choral works and his songs. His contributions to musical history and literature revealed scholarship and balanced judgment. The illustrations for the lecture included the Cantata 'Voces Clamantium,' and the unison song 'Jerusalem,' rendered by a choir composed of members of the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union and the Newcastle Bach Choir. The Motet 'There is an Old Belief' was performed as a sextet. A group of the 'English Lyrics' was sung by Mrs. Rogers, who with Mr. E. J. Potts sustained the solo portions of the Cantata. Messrs. E. L. Bainton and T. Wilkinson played the accompaniments, and Mr. W. G. Whittaker conducted.

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

In the immediate future the Leicester Choral Society is giving a performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' under the direction of Mr. Charles Hancock. Since the splendid effort in aid of Railway Servants' Orphanage, the fortieth annual concert on February 8, Derby has been musically very busy. On February 18 Dr. Markham Lee gave a concert at the Temperance Hall, when the programme was entirely devoted to his own compositions; Miss Neville Cox, violinist, gave the first movements from Dr. Lee's Suite in D minor; vocal items were rendered by Madame Lonskaya and Miss Wilkinson, while Dr. Lee himself contributed the pianoforte solos. Choral numbers were supplied by a well-balanced choir under the guidance of Mr. F. J. Bonas. A very interesting lecture, musically illustrated, was given by the Rev. Fiddian Moulton, entitled 'The Gospel Story and its musical interpreters,' at the Technical College on March 6. At the Mayor's 'At home,' on March 12, a varied programme of organ music, representative of old schools and new, was rendered by Mr. W. Baker, assisted vocally by Mr. Fowler Burton. Derby is going forward with a scheme of Municipal music, and committees have been appointed to run (1) central concerts, (2) open-air concerts and Morris dances, (3) suburban concerts. In the future Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' under Dr. Coward and with the assistance of Mr. Gervase Elwes, and a visit from Mr. Lionel Tertis (viola), are promised.

In Nottingham, Elgar's 'Caractacus' was performed by the Sacred Harmonic Society on February 20 in a manner which reflected credit on all concerned, the choir and orchestra no less than the principals. Mr. Allen Gill conducted, the solos being undertaken by Miss Caroline Hatchard, Mr. Alfred Heather, Mr. Fraser Gange, and Mr. John Buckley.

Very interesting was the pianoforte and violin recital given by Miss Alice Hogg and Mr. Fred. Mountney on February 25 at the Theosophical Hall, when the programme consisted of three Sonatas by three English composers—viz., John Ireland, Arnold Trowell, and John B. MacEwen. Still more encouraging is the fact that the work by Ireland had to be repeated. Mr. Bernard Johnson was assisted by Miss Minnie Wilson at the Albert Hall on March 2, when the items included the G minor Concerto of Saint-Saëns and a group of organ solos, comprising Handel's Concerto No. 6 and the 'Peer Gynt' Suite (Grieg). The attendance was phenomenal.

Dr. Radcliffe, the organist of St. Mary's, has issued a little booklet of organ programmes, recitals of which he gives every Sunday evening. The scheme embraces all that is best in organ work, in which direction Nottingham is very well catered for.

A lecture-demonstration on the Techniquer by Mr. R. J. Pitcher is announced for April 14 at the London Academy of Music, with Mr. Herbert Fryer as chairman and pianoforte recitalist.

OXFORD.

On March 8 the Professor of Music, Dr. H. P. Allen, gave an interesting lecture in the Sheldonian Theatre on 'The Orchestra in the time of Bach, and his use of it,' with illustrations. Beginning by enumerating the instruments in Bach's time, he lucidly explained the great difference between the orchestras of those days and the huge orchestras of to-day. In particularising the use of the more conspicuous instruments employed by Bach, it might be said that they would be sometimes found in very different situations—to take but one instance, the use of the trumpet, which with 'its loud clangour' will be found at one time to portray the greatest jubilation and merriment, and at another the most extreme seriousness, announcing the 'Great Day of Doom.'

In his use of the trombones, said the lecturer, Bach seemed almost always to have placed them in unison with the voices, with the idea of augmenting the general tone, and not to have used them for special characteristic effects.

The Professor also mentioned some of the instruments of Bach's day, such as the oboe d'amore and the viola da gamba, which had now become obsolete on account of their ineffectiveness, and for other reasons. He went on to refer also to one other peculiarity of Bach's scoring which should be noticed in passing—that in which he selected a certain combination of instruments at the onset, and kept it steadily going throughout the movement, this being diametrically opposed to the practice of to-day. Speaking generally, the Professor said that Bach seemed to be very keen on 'solidity' in his scoring, and to have justly realised that this could only be done by the careful scoring of the stringed section of the orchestra, though as a matter of fact this excellent principle was fully realised more than a century before his time. With regard to the 'continuo,' which is largely employed by Bach, Dr. Allen remarked that it was, so to say, like the air we breathe—a something always there, the filling in the chords on the harpsichord or organ, and it is recorded that the great composer would himself sometimes leave his conductor's desk and, going to the harpsichord, put in bits here and there in the way he particularly wanted them. The excellently-chosen illustrations were played by a stringed band with the addition of trumpets, flute, and oboe.

SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

An interesting new concert venture has been successfully launched at Sheffield. A series of six New Saturday Concerts organized by Miss Eva Rich, a well-known local soprano, and Mr. Allan Smith, a Sheffield violinist, is in progress at the Y.M.C.A. Hall, and so far has appealed to a large number of music-lovers. Chamber music is played at each concert. The works already given include Rheinberger's Quartet for pianoforte and strings, Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Trio in D minor, String Trios by Beethoven and by Percy Grainger, and Böellmann's Symphonic Variations for violoncello, played with rich tone and artistic sensibility by Mr. Collin Smith. Part-songs for ladies' voices were given at the second concert by the Eva Rich Ladies' Choir, who sang Walford Davies's 'The Shepherd' and 'Cradle Song,' Ethel Boyce's 'Here a solemn feast we keep,' and works by Holst, Stanford, and Percy Fletcher. In addition to a group of well-equipped singers the concerts have the valuable co-operation of two admirable instrumentalists in Mr. John Collins (violin) and Miss Ethel Cook (pianoforte).

The University Musical Society, departing from its normal choral activities, occasionally organizes a chamber concert, a policy which is about to be developed still further by the University authorities. One such enjoyable music-making was given in the Fifth Hall, when the Catterall Quartet appeared. Beethoven's Quartet in C sharp minor, Op. 131, was strong fare to the majority of those present—young students, for many of whom it was a first introduction to chamber music. In Dr. Ernest Walker's Quartet in D major they had music more suited to inexperienced assimilation, and its delightful freshness, intensified by a brilliant, fanciful performance, charmed everybody. Debussy's exquisite Quartet, beautifully played, rounded off a programme which, despite its somewhat advanced character—bearing in mind the progressive educational object of the concerts—was evidently thoroughly enjoyed.

The Friday Three o'Clock Concerts arranged by the Misses Foxon continue their successful course. A pleasant variation was afforded at the sixth concert by a recital of folk-songs and old ballads by Miss Jean Sterling Mackinlay. Frank Bridge's Quartet for pianoforte and strings has been the most notable of the recent chamber works played. The performers—Misses Ethel Griffiths and Ethel Cook, Messrs. Allan Smith and Collin Smith—were technically competent, and secured much of the necessary atmosphere and freedom of style demanded by that fine work. At the seventh concert Liza Lehmann's song-cycle 'In a Persian Garden' was sung by Miss Pansy Moore, Miss Agnes Griffiths, Mr. Ralph Williams, and Mr. Bernard Maxfield, a well-balanced and well-rehearsed party.

Mr. Bernard Johnson, city organist of Nottingham, played at one of the Victoria Hall weekly concerts. Apart from his lucidly played recital-solos his visit was interesting by reason of his clever adaptation to the organ of the orchestral accompaniments to two Pianoforte Concertos—Saint-Saëns's in G minor (played by Miss Minnie Wilson) and Mendelssohn's in G minor (played by Miss Helen Guest). The experiment on the whole was successful, though the organ of Victoria Hall does not readily lend itself to the reproduction of orchestral tone-colouring. The two soloists played with refreshing assurance and adequate technique.

At the last of Messrs. Wilson Peck's successful series of Sheffield Subscription Concerts Sir Henry Wood conducted the Hallé Orchestra in a strong programme which included the 'Eroica' Symphony, Overture 'Sakuntala' (Goldmark), 'L'Après-midi d'un Faune' (Debussy), Three Spanish Dances (Granados), 'British Heroes' (Howard Carr), and 'Handel in the Strand' (Grainger). Miss Olga Haley was the vocalist.

YORKSHIRE.

LEEDS.

On March 12 the Leeds Choral Union ended its season with a concert of greater interest than the 'miscellaneous' programme usually provides. It introduced a complete novelty in the shape of an eight-part unaccompanied chorus, a setting of Longfellow's 'Hymn to the Night,' composed by Mr. Ernest Austin, and dedicated to the Society and its conductor, Dr. Coward, in recognition of their production of his 'Hymn to Apollo' last season. It is a broadly treated, impressive work, quite modern in its harmonization, but without any suggestion of being forced or wanting in spontaneity. The atmosphere and mood of the words are happily caught, and the music is a genuine attempt to interpret the poem. It was finely sung under Dr. Coward's direction, and the composer was called upon the platform to receive congratulations on his success. The other important choral work was Bach's great Motet, 'Singet dem Herrn,' which, though it came at the close of a very long concert, was sung with admirable verve and sustained power. Two instrumentalists appeared, Mr. Frederick Dawson and Mr. John Dunn, who joined forces in the 'Kreutzer,' and played it with a more sympathetic ensemble than one expects from a couple of virtuosi. On March 8, Mr. Hamilton Hartly conducted the last, and one of the best, of the Saturday Orchestral Concerts, which have given evidence of a growing love of orchestral music in a town where it had been only fitfully cultivated until Mr. Fricker founded these Saturday concerts, and conducted them until he went to Canada. The programme included Brahms's third Symphony, of which the reading was good, though the execution left some little room for improvement, and indeed, now that the war is over, one trusts that it may be possible to strengthen the personnel of the orchestra in several directions. Mr. Anderson Tyrer gave a forcible and brilliant interpretation of the solo-part in Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto, and the orchestra was at its best in Mr. Hartly's own 'Comedy Overture' and the 'Siegfried' Idyll.

The Leeds Bohemian Concert on March 5 introduced two modern Pianoforte Quintets—Taneiev's in G minor and Sinding's in E minor—which were played with great spirit by Mr. Cohen, Mr. Bye, Miss Simms, and Mr. Hemingway, with Mr. Anderson Tyrer as pianist. Mr. Cohen's own Sonata recitals have been continued on March 7 and 17. On the former occasion he and Mr. Herbert Johnson played Violin Sonatas by Mozart—an exceptionally strong work in G—Ireland, in D minor, and Lekeu; on the latter date the programme included Sonatas by Brahms (Op. 78), César Franck, and Herbert Howells, the last a composition still in MS. On this occasion Mr. Lloyd Huntley was the pianist, An organ recital by Mr. H. M. Turton, at St. Aidan's, Leeds, on March 3, deserves record because it introduced some modern music of great interest—Stanford's first Organ Sonata, in F, three movements from Vienne's third Organ Symphony, an Allegro from Pietro Yon's 'Sonata Cromatica,' and pieces by Joseph Jongen, Augustine Barie, and Joseph Bonnet.

The Leeds University recital on March 4 was given by Miss Summers, whose programme was equally deserving of praise because of its unconventional character. She ventured to give a Beethoven Sonata other than the 'Waldstein,' or the 'Appassionata,' or the 'Pathetic,' or the 'Moonlight,' and chose the seldom-heard work in F sharp (Op. 78), which is probably ignored by virtuosi because it contains such small opportunity for display, but is characteristic and interesting. Franck's Prelude and Chorale and pieces by Brahms and Chopin were also played with a keen sense of their poetic and emotional qualities. The largest audience of the month was that which attended the concert given on February 19 by Madame Clara Butt, with the co-operation of Mr. Kennerley Rumford and Mr. Pachmann, but the programme, though well suited to the occasion, was not of general interest.

A particularly interesting concert was conducted on March 15 by Mr. E. Maude, who has organized a small but efficient string orchestra, which took part in a really enjoyable programme of music by British composers: Parry's 'Lady Radnor' Suite, Elgar's Serenade, Coleridge-Taylor's 'Novelletten,' and pieces by Edward German and Percy Grainger. The vocalist was Miss Etty Ferguson, who sang songs by Mallinson, Coleridge-Taylor, Graham Peel, Quilter, Cyril Scott, Walford Davies, Ireland, Stanford, and Frank Bridge, an excellent selection which presented British art in a most favourable light, and to which she did complete justice.

BRADFORD.

The Bradford Subscription Concerts have worthily maintained their high reputation during the War, and though many of the subscribers to the most expensive seats seem to have been scared off by war conditions, the quality of the concerts has not suffered. On February 28 Sir Henry Wood conducted the Hallé Orchestra in Beethoven's C minor Symphony, the 'Good Friday' piece arranged from 'Parsifal,' and the fifth Suite in G, which he has cleverly arranged from Bach's Organ Sonatas. Mr. Howard Carr's impressionistic sketches illustrating some heroic deeds by Englishmen, were heard for the first time at these concerts. They are clever and vivid, if not particularly interesting from the purely musical point of view.

The Bradford Permanent Orchestra's Concert, on February 22, was conducted by Mr. Julian Clifford, and the pianist was Mr. Eric Brewerton, who played in capital style Arensky's Fantasia on two Russian chants for pianoforte and orchestra. Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Capriccio Espagnol,' and the 'Karelia' Suite of Sibelius, were other features of the programme. Miss Dorothy Parkinson was the soloist. The Free Chamber Concerts, on February 24, introduced Pianoforte Trios by Hubert Parry, Arnold Trowell, and Rubinstein, the executants being Mr. Edgar Drake, Miss Kathleen Moorhouse, and Miss Nellie Chapman. Miss Adelaide Taylor was the vocalist. At the next concert of the season, on March 10, Ireland's second Violin Sonata was repeated, so as to acclimatise the audience to a work which many found too strange in idiom to be easily understood. Sonatas by Cui and Esposito were also played by Messrs. Dunford and Midgley, and Miss Nellie Judson sang some well-chosen modern songs. The Bradford Festival Choral Society, under Dr. Bairstow, gave the first two sections of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' on March 7, together with Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens' and other shorter pieces, and on March 12 the Bradford Old Choral Society, under Mr. C. H. Moody, chose Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' and a miscellaneous second part, which included two of Coleridge-Taylor's choral ballads.

OTHER TOWNS.

At Huddersfield the Choral Society, on February 28, gave, under Dr. Coward's direction, a brilliant performance of the 'Hymn of Praise' and Rossini's 'Stabat Mater,' with Miss Madeline Collins, Miss Olga Haley, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. Herbert Brown. On March 11, the Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society gave an unusually good programme, the artistic singing, under Mr. C. H. Moody, of part-songs by Cornelius, Fletcher (an effective setting of a 'Broken' scene to Shelley's words), and others being varied by the playing of the Catterall String Quintet, in works by Beethoven, Schubert, and Debussy. Mr. John Booth was a most refined singer of some very interesting songs.

The Halifax Choral Society, under Mr. C. H. Moody, revived Stanford's fine 'Te Deum' for its concert on March 6, and gave an excellent all-round performance, in which Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. H. M. Bower, Mr. D'Oisly, and Captain Heyner were the principals, and in the miscellaneous part of the concert introduced the same composer's equally appropriate chorus, 'Our enemies have fallen.'

The Wakefield Chamber Concerts, which have been in abeyance during the War, were resumed on February 21, when the Catterall Quartet, with Miss Marjorie Sotham as pianist, played Brahms's splendid Pianoforte Quintet in F minor, Beethoven's Quartet in E flat (the so-called 'Harp' Quartet) being also in the programme. On February 26 the York Musical Society gave Stanford's 'Phaëdre Crohoore,' and Dr. Bairstow secured a highly finished interpretation, the clearness of enunciation being most noticeable, even apart from the fact that it was enhanced by the absence of an orchestra. Wesley's 'In Exitu' was also heard, and songs were contributed by Mr. Gervase Elwes. Miss Irene Scharrer was the solo-pianist.

Miscellaneous.

THE METROPOLITAN ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The Annual Concert and Prize Distribution took place at the Conference Hall on March 1, before a very large audience. The performances throughout were excellent. Particularly good was the pianoforte playing of the more advanced students. The choice of music was notably progressive, e.g., pieces by Palmgren, Ireland ('The Island Spell'), Grainger ('Shepherd's Hey'), Arensky, Frank Bridge ('Fire Flies'), &c. A very enjoyable feature was the singing of Madame Day Winter's Ladies' Choir. Mr. Harvey Grace distributed the prizes, and made an appeal on behalf of the 'Musicians' Gift,' in response to which about £15 was collected.

Reports of a performance of 'Messiah' under unique conditions reach us from South Africa, the oratorio being sung on February 5 at the Union Buildings in Pretoria by the coalition choir of the Johannesburg and Pretoria Philharmonic Societies, some four hundred voices, with orchestra, uniting under the baton of Mr. John Connell, Johannesburg Town organist, in aid of the Governor-General's Fund. The Union Buildings were erected a few years ago for offices for the Government of the Union of South Africa, and are situated on a hillside to the North of Pretoria, on a site described by Lord Selborne as one of the finest in the world. The buildings have over a quarter-of-a-mile frontage, and consist of two large wings (built round centre courtyards (connected by a centre block and colonnade, semi-circular in plan; this semicircular space has been treated to form a large amphitheatre capable of holding many thousands of people, a rostrum, of the same stone as the rest of the building, being placed at the foot. Here are held meetings of a national character, such for instance as a service of thanksgiving at the time of the Armistice. On the occasion in question it became evident that the offices in bulk formed a sounding board making for perfect acoustical conditions, even the most delicate string passages losing nothing of their subtlety because of open-air conditions. The cupolaed rostrum, picked out by soft lighting from the columned semicircle behind, was full of paintable potentialities, and the balmy, breezeless night made the conditions under which the oratorio was heard absolutely ideal!—of which we understand conductor Connell took full advantage, getting every ounce of tone and temperament out of choir and soloists.

A rare and creditable record has been achieved by the South London Choral Association in completing fifty years of existence under the continuous conductorship of Mr. Leonard C. Venables. During this half-century of activity the Association has given many performances at the Crystal Palace, St. James's Hall, Royal Albert Hall, and other large halls in London. In 1880 the Surrey Masonic Hall was acquired, the South London Institute of Music was opened, and an orchestral society formed. At this Institute 160 concerts have been given. The Jubilee was celebrated at a performance of 'Elijah' on February 24, when a presentation was made to Mr. Venables. The South London Musical Club joined forces with the Association, and the solo parts were taken by Miss Mabel Corran, Miss Ethel Bilsland, Mr. David Ellis, and Mr. George Baker.

The Ashburton Choir sang Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas' (with orchestral accompaniment) at Ashburton Hall, Red Lion Square, Holborn, on March 8. A very interesting miscellaneous selection included Arcadelt's 'Ave Maria,' S. Wesley's 'O sing unto my roundelay,' Holst's 'I sowed the seeds of love' (first London performance), and 'Dashing away with the smoothing iron,' arranged for chorus and orchestra by Irene Bonnett, &c. Mr. Wilfrid S. Palmer conducted.

A fine performance of 'Messiah' was given at St. Paul's Church, Leamington, on February 20. The soloists were Madame Laura Taylor, Miss Edith Brooke, Mr. Walter Otey, and Mr. Herbert Simmonds. Mr. C. Meachem led the orchestra, Mr. Lionel Higgins was the organist, and Mr. Robert West conducted. Mr. West's effective brass trio arranged from the Mozart score for two trumpets and a tenor trombone was used at this performance.

The Glastonbury Festival School, of which Mr. Rutland Boughton is principal, announces an Easter Holiday session from April 12 to 26, with courses of special study in early English music, Dalcroze eurhythmics, Hellenic dancing, and scenic and costume design. The secretary is Miss S. F. Meade, Horsington, Templecombe, Somerset.

The Potteries Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Carl Oliver, gave Stanford's 'The Revenge' as part of an interesting programme at Victoria Hall, Hanley, in February. The same work, with Oliver King's 'Soldiers' Rest' and various other part-songs, was given at the County Mental Hospital at Cheddleton on March 1.

The Colne Orchestra, which is now in its twenty-seventh season, gave a concert on March 4, with Debussy's 'Petit Suite' and an Idyll by C. W. Eric Fogg as items of a varied programme. Mr. Wildman, Mr. Bateson, and Mr. Fogg shared the work of conducting.

A Czecho-Slovak Festival is announced to take place in May at Queen's Hall and Wigmore Hall, with the assistance of the Prague Choral Society, the Moravian Choral Society, the Czecho-Slovak National Theatre Orchestra, the Bohemian String Quarter, and Miss Emmy Destinn.

The recent activities of the Long Eaton Co-operative Choir, conducted by Mr. William Woolley, have included a Sullivan concert on March 1, with a lecture on the composer by Mr. Woolley, and an excellent programme of part-songs and glees at Sutton Bonnington on March 15.

Mr. James Walter Brown, in a lecture to the Carlisle Literary Society on February 18, described his discovery of two Elizabethan manuscript part-song books that appear to embody the earliest example of a song-cycle.

M. Messenger, composer of 'Veronique' and 'The little Michus,' has written a new light opera, 'M. Beaucaire,' in conjunction with Mr. Adrian Ross. It is to be produced shortly in London.

In aid of St. Dunstan's Hostel, the Metropolitan Concert Orchestra will give a concert at the King's Theatre, Hammer-smith, on April 20. Mr. Henry F. W. Horwood will conduct.

Messrs. Chappell & Co. offer a prize of £100 for a light orchestral suite. The judges will be Sir Frederic Cowen, Mr. Edward German, and Mr. Landon Ronald—and good judges too!

Answers to Correspondents.

R. W.—We do not know of any books dealing specially with the use of the whole-tone scale and overtones in modern music. Any recent book on harmony, such as those by Lenormand (Williams) or Hull (Augener) contain examples and information. But your 'Young Student' will probably be better served by a book telling him how to leave the much-overworked whole-tone scale alone. He will find lots of possibilities still left in the ancient modes and the major and minor scales.

'HOODS.'—In asking us 'how many musical hoods are allowed to be worn' you have set us a problem at which we shy. There are unfortunately all too many 'allowed.' Some are distinctions, some merely expensive and inadequate garments. We must ask to be excused from the invidious task of classification.

PARSEE SUBSCRIBER.—A reader kindly tells us that Loder's 'Brooklet' is edited by Edmondstone Duncan and published in Augener's Ed. No. 4672.

J. HIGGINS.—We have no news as to when the recitals will be resumed. Your best plan will be to write to the local authorities of the towns in which you are interested.

CONTENTS.

	Page
'A Westminster Pilgrim': A Note on the Illustrations	153
Modern British Composers—II. Arnold Bax. By Edwin Evans	154
Interludes	156
The Clavier Toccatas of Bach. By Sydney Grew ...	160
Elgar's Violin Sonata	162
Occasional Notes	163
Rosing: An Impression. By Edward Lewis...	165
Church and Organ Music	166
The Point of Perfection in 16th Century Notation ...	167
Reviews	168
Letters to the Editor	169
Obituary	169
Mr. Christopher Wilson	169
Royal Academy of Music	170
The Beecham Opera Season	170
Verdi's 'Falstaff': a German Cartoon	177
Sixty Years ago	177
A Festival at Woking	178
The Musicians' Y.M.C.A. Gift	178
London Concerts	178
Music in the Provinces	180
Miscellaneous	185
Answers to Correspondents	186

MUSIC:

'If the Lord Himself had not been on our side.'
Anthem for Thanksgiving after Victory, or General Use. By HUGH BLAIR	171

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this number:—

'Fain would I change that note.' Canzonet for Mixed Voices. By R. Vaughan Williams.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BEETHOVEN.—"Penitence." Arranged for String Quartet by JOSEPH JONGEN. 3s.BLAIR, HUGH.—"If the Lord Himself." Anthem for Thanksgiving after Victory, or general use (No. 914, The Musical Times). 1½d.BURGESS, FRANCIS (Edited by).—"Cantiones Ecclesiae," No. 1: Solemn Te Deum, set to the Eighth Tone. 1d.COULDERY, C. H.—Vesper Hymn, No. 10 ("Lord, keep us safe this night"). On Card. 1½d.ELGAR, EDWARD.—Sonata, Op. 82. For Violin and Pianoforte. 6s.FLETCHER, PERCY E.—"Hark! Hark! my Soul." Sacred Song, in C and E flat. Each 2s.SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 322), contains the following music in both notations:—"The Three Poor Mariners." Unison Song, arranged by THOMAS F. DUNHILL. "A Mouse in the Moon." Unison Song, by J. M. CAPEL. 1½d.SUMSION, C. C.—Two Songs: (1) "The way that lovers use"; (2) "The Soldier." 3s.TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:—

No. 2278.—"Sweet and low." For T.T.B.B. J. BARNBY. 1½d.

ZILLHART, ETHEL.—"Kosovo." Servia's Hymn of Glory. 2s.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.DAMROSCH, WALTER.—"Peace Hymn of the Republic." On Card. (5 cents) 3d.FEDERLEIN, G. H.—"A Twilight Plea." Three-part Chorus for Female Voices. (12 cents) 6d.JEWELL, LUCINA.—"There came three Kings." (12 cents) 6d.KERN, MARY R.—"The Singing Dunes." Song. (60 cents) 2s. 6d.OXFORD—NEW COLLEGE CHORISTERSHIPS.

There will be a TRIAL OF VOICES on Tuesday, April 22. For particulars, apply to The Precentor before April 12.

WANTED for Choir of St. Peter's, Bayswater (Re-construction), BASS and TENOR. Salary £15 per annum each, for Cantoris side. Write L. R., 28, St. Stephen's Avenue, Ealing, W. 13.WANTED.—COMPLETE EDITION or any VOLUMES of the Works of J. S. BACH published by the Bach Society (not the New Bach Society); also COMPLETE SET or any PARTS of the FITZWILLIAM VIRGINAL BOOK, edited by W. Barclay Squire and J. Fuller Maitland (Breitkopf & Härtel). G. Cooper, 18, Park Street, London, W. 1.PASSION MUSIC, CONCERTS, &c.—TREVOR OWEN (Tenor). 68, Staines Road, Hounslow, W. (Terms moderate.)LADY (19), good Sight-Reader, desires post as ACCOMPANIST to Singing-Teacher (lady), or in Music Salon, Pianoforte and Roll-Music Department. Address, Miss Mason, 103, Windmill Street, Gravesend.TENOR, for CHRIST CHURCH, Beckenham. Two Sunday Services; Friday practice. Communicant. Write, stating experience and salary required, E. A. Coombs, Esq., Longside, Beckenham.M. R. E. T. COOK, Mus. B., F.R.C.O., has a Vacancy for an Articled Pupil. For particulars as to premium, &c., apply Southwark Cathedral, S.E. 1.JOSEF HOLBROOKE'S
NEW WORKS.

JUST ISSUED.

	Price net.
"EILEAN SHONA" (ORGAN)	1s. 6d.
FOUR MEZZOTINTS—Violin and Piano, Clarinet and Piano	3s.
STRING QUARTET (No. 2), Songs and Dances	5s.
"THE PICKWICK CLUB" (in the Press)	6s.
(CARY & Co.).
THREE DRAMATIC SONGS, for Voice and Piano, with String Quartet Accompaniment	5s.
TALIESSIN'S SONG	5s.
REELS AND STRATHSPEYS, for Strings and Flutes each	1s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FOR SALE.—20 Volumes of the "MUSICAL TIMES,"
Bound in Cloth, 1882 to 1901.

	Paper Back
1902 to 1910—Complete	" "
1911—June only Missing	" "
1912—January and August Missing	" "
1913 and 1914—Complete	" "
1915—December only Missing	" "
1916 and 1917—Complete	" "
1918—April only Missing	" "

What Offers?

Address, Mrs. M. A. Blackwell, 8, Moss Grove, Birkenhead.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALE ARABESQUE

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

COMPOSED BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALE IMPROMPTU

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

COMPOSED BY

ALFRED HOLLINS.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE MUSICAL TIMES.
SCALE OF TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions,
Advertisements for the next issue should reach
the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.-1,
not later than

THURSDAY, APRIL 17 (FIRST POST).

MUSIC FOR LENT AND EASTER.

BY EDWARD BUNNETT, MUS. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES.

Venite (special music setting in G)	2d.
Te Deum in E (Chant Form)	3d.
Benedicite in E	2d.
Benedictus and Jubilate in E (Chant Form) ...	3d.
Cantate in E and Deus Misereatur in E ...	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in E	3d.
Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa	1½d.

ANTHEMS.

Lead me in Thy Truth (Lent)	3d.
If we believe (Easter)	4d.
Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa	1½d.
The Good Shepherd	3d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE LORD'S PRAYER

COMPOSED BY
BORTNIANSKY

Arranged for use in St. Margaret's, Westminster,

BY
EDWIN STEPHENSON.

Price 4d. net.

J. & W. CHESTER, 11 Great Marlborough Street, London, W. 1.

THE
CHANT COMMUNION SERVICE
WITH EUCHARISTIC HYMNS.The Creed, and Gloria in Excelsis, arranged in verses and pointed both for Anglican and Gregorian chanting.SUITABLE FOR MISSION, VILLAGE AND PARISH CHOIRS, OR
FOR A CONGREGATION WITHOUT THE AID OF A CHOIR.

Arranged by the

REV. C. W. A. BROOKE, M.A.

Price Fourpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

PEACE.

THE GENERAL THANKSGIVING. Two Settings.

No. 1. FOR VOICES IN UNISON. Organ Accompaniment.
" 2. FOR S.A.T.B. Unaccompanied.

BY EVERARD HULTON, MUS. B. Oxon.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE MILITARY
CHURCH PARADE SERVICE BOOKFOR THE USE OF MILITARY BANDS AND CHAPLAINS AT PARADE SERVICES IN CAMP AND CHURCH,

CONSISTING OF

MORNING PRAYER, LITANY, AND HOLY COMMUNION,

WITH A

SELECTION OF HYMNS FOR OPEN-AIR SERVICES.

COMPILED AND ARRANGED BY THOMAS CONWAY BROWN.

Price 1s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SONATA

FOR

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

Op. 82

Price Six Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

EIGHT EASY MELODIES

FOR YOUNG BEGINNERS

FOR

VIOLIN

With Pianoforte Accompaniment

COMPOSED BY

ERNEST NEWTON.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

The pieces are suitable for Solo or Ensemble playing.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE

Secret of Fine Technique in Violin Playing

BY

ALBERT SAMMONS

Being a Unique Method of Daily Practice for Soloists and advanced Players.

- | | |
|-------------------------|-----------------------------|
| 1 Bow Technique | 12 Double Stopping |
| 2 Exercises on Tone | 13 Heavy Spiccato |
| 3 Scale Exercises | 14 Legato Technical |
| 4 Arpeggi | Passages |
| 5 Chromatic Fragments | 15 Light Spiccato |
| 6 The Stretch | 16 Exercises on Double |
| 7 Exercises for the Bow | Stopping |
| Arm, in Scale Form | 17 Exercises for Manipulat- |
| 8 The Glissando | ing Fifths across the |
| 9 The Trill | String |
| 10 Thirds | 18 Pizzicato Exercises |
| 11 Octaves | |

Price 3s., or 3s. 3d. post free.

OBTAINABLE OF ALL MUSIC SELLERS OR DIRECT FROM THE PUBLISHERS.HAWKES & SON,
Denman Street, Piccadilly Circus,
LONDON, W. 1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

HARK! HARK! MY SOUL

SACRED SONG.

THE WORDS BY
F. W. FABER.

THE MUSIC BY
PERCY E. FLETCHER.

IN TWO KEYS.
Price 2s. each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Just Published.

AFTER TUMULT, REST

TENOR SOLO

FROM WAR AND PEACE

COMPOSED BY
C. H. H. PARRY.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TEN PIECES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

BY HENRY PURCELL.

SELECTED AND EDITED BY
NORMAN P. CUMMINGS
AND WILLIAM H. CUMMINGS.

Price 2s. 6d.

CONTENTS:

PRELUDE IN C.	SICILIANO IN G.
MINUET IN G.	A NEW IRISH TUNE.
ALMANDE IN G.	PRELUDE IN G.
CEBELL IN C.	THE GOLDEN SONATA.
ALMANDE IN G.	SONATA IN G.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE

ELEMENTS OF PIANOFORTE TECHNIQUE

ARRANGED UPON A RHYTHMIC BASIS

BY
DR. R. H. BELLAIRS.

Strongly recommended by the highest authorities.
More work can be done with Dr. Bellairs' Method than with any other.
Eliminates Mechanical Drudgery.
Interests the pupil from the very beginning.
List of companion works and testimonials on receipt of a post-card.

Price 2s. 6d. net. Of all Musicsellers.

ENOCH & SONS, LONDON.

Enoch House, 58, Great Marlborough Street, W.1.

BASS VOCALISTS should buy descriptive song,
THE VOICE OF THE DEEP (Oakley). Compass: G (or low E flat to E flat. Price 1s. 6. Weekes & Co. 14, Hanover St., W.1.

OLD

ENGLISH VIOLIN MUSIC

EDITED BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

ALTHOUGH considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Glee and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the eighteenth century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured bass for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

ALFRED MOFFAT.

No.					s. d.
1.	SONATA in G major	..	..	JAMES LATES	2 0
2.	SONATA in D minor	..	..	HENRY ECCLES	2 0
3.	SONATA in B flat major	..	..	WILLIAM BABELL	2 0
4.	SONATA in G minor	..	..	JOHN STANLEY	2 0
5.	SONATA in A major	..	..	JOHN COLLETT	2 0
6.	TRIO-SONATA in E minor	..	..	THOMAS AUGUSTINE ARNE	3 0
7.	SONATA in D major	..	..	RICHARD JONES	2 0
8.	TRIO-SONATA in D minor	..	..	WILLIAM BOYCE	3 0
9.	THREE PIECES	..	..	WILLIAM BOYCE	2 0
10.	SONATA in E major	..	..	CHARLES MACKLEAN	2 0
11.	SONATA in G minor	..	..	WILLIAM CROFT	2 0
12.	SONATA in D minor	..	..	JOSEPH GIBBS	2 0
13.	SONATA in D minor	..	..	JOHN HUMPHRIES	2 0
14.	SONATA in A minor	..	..	THOMAS VINCENT	2 0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MELODIOUS TECHNIQUE

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

COMPOSED BY

J. A. O'NEILL.

In Two Books. Price Two Shillings each, net.

BOOK I.

1. Right Hand Study for Repetition of 4th and 5th fingers.
2. Left Hand Study for Repetition of 4th and 5th fingers.
3. Right hand Study on Triplets for 4th and 5th fingers.
4. Left Hand Study on Triplets for 4th and 5th fingers.
5. Right Hand Study on Interval of Thirds for 4th and 5th fingers.
6. Left Hand Study on Interval of Thirds for 4th and 5th fingers.

BOOK II.

7. Right Hand Study on Shake or 4th and 5th fingers.
8. Left Hand Study on Shake for 4th and 5th fingers.
9. Right Hand Study on Turning over the 2nd and 4th fingers.
10. Left Hand Study on Turning over the 4th finger.
11. Right Hand Study on Turning over the 4th finger while holding Notes.
12. Left Hand Study on Turning over the 4th finger while holding Notes.

TESTIMONIAL FROM M. VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN.

"I cordially recommend these original Studies, which are of great technical value and of considerable musical merit and charm. After looking through them thoroughly, I consider them quite superior to any other exercises of the kind. They ought to prove a great success, as excellence of technique can be acquired by using them in a much shorter time than by the use of ordinary exercises.
"I was struck by their originality, both in conception and in the clever manner in which the idea is carried out."

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

LONDON, LIVERPOOL,
GLASGOW.

ESTABLISHED 1845.

EXHIBITION, 1851—PRIZE MEDAL,
EXHIBITION, 1862—GOLD MEDAL,
EXHIBITION, 1885—GOLD MEDAL,
FOR

EXCELLENCE OF TONE,
INGENUITY OF DESIGN,
PERFECTION OF CONSTRUCTION.

DIPLOMAS OF HONOUR, ETC.

HENRY WILLIS & SONS

AND

LEWIS & CO., LTD.

ORGAN BUILDERS.

Managing Director :
MR. HENRY WILLIS, JUNR.

Messrs. HENRY WILLIS & SONS and Messrs. LEWIS & CO., LTD., beg to announce their amalgamation under the above title.

All communications should be addressed as below :—

HEAD OFFICE AND WORKS—

ROTUNDA ORGAN WORKS, 234, FERNDALE ROAD, BRIXTON, LONDON, S.W. 9.

Telegrams : "CORNOPEANS, BRIX., LONDON." Telephone : BRIXTON 2793.

LIVERPOOL BRANCH—

196-202, PHYTHIAN STREET, KENSINGTON, LIVERPOOL.

Telegrams : "DIAPASON, LIVERPOOL." Telephone : ANFIELD 401 X.

GLASGOW BRANCH—

916, SAUCHIEHALL STREET, GLASGOW.

FOUR CHARACTERISTIC WALTZES

1. VALSE BOHEMIENNE.

3. VALSE DE LA REINE.

2. VALSE RUSTIQUE.

4. VALSE MAURESQUE.

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(OP. 22).

PIANOFORTE SOLO :

PRICE, COMPLETE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE ; SEPARATELY, 1s. 6d. EACH.

Violin and Pianoforte complete	3s. od.	Full Score (Full Orchestra)	5s. od.
Violin and Pianoforte separately, each	1s. 6d.	Full Score (Small Orchestra), MS.
String Parts for Full or Small Orchestra	6s. od.	Arrangements, as Quintets, for Pianoforte and
Wind Parts for Small Orchestra... ..	7s. od.	Strings, each Number	2s. od.
Ditto, for Full Orchestra... ..	12s. od.	Separate String Parts, 6d. each.
		Military Band Arrangement	15s. od.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

SONGS OF THE EMPIRE.

BOYS OF THE EMPIRE.

THE TOPIC OF THE DAY :—

THE EMPIRE.

THE ONLY THING THAT COUNTS TO-DAY IS

THE EMPIRE,

AND THE ONLY THING THAT WILL HELP YOU TO GIVE A GOOD PERFORMANCE IS

THE EMPIRE

MUSIC LEAF TURNER.

EQUALLY USEFUL TO THE LEARNER AND
THE PROFESSIONAL AS AN AID IN MEMORISING.

PRICE 21/- COMPLETE.

SOME OF THE ADVANTAGES CLAIMED :—

Can be placed instantly and without any previous fixing on any Piano or Music Stand.Can be used while playing any Instrument, as the Mechanism is operated by the breath or touch of the finger.

Can be packed into any ordinary Music Case and carried with the Music.

Obtainable from the Principal Branches of KEITH, PROWSE & CO., LTD.

THE ÆOLIAN CO., LTD.

ARMY AND NAVY STORES.

HARRODS, LTD.

and all the Principal Music Stores throughout the country.

Sole Manufacturers and Owners of Patent Rights :

The British and Colonial Industries Association Ltd.,

317 HIGH HOLBORN, W.C. 1.

NOVELLO'S POPULAR PIANOFORTE ALBUMS FOR YOUNG PERFORMERS.

HUBERT BATH

DOLL'S-HOUSE SUITE

Price Two Shillings.

FRANCESCO BERGER

EIGHTEEN LITTLE PIECES

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN

HAPPY THOUGHTS

Price Two Shillings.

ARNOLD KRUG

TEN LITTLE PIECES

Op. 109.

In two Books. Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

ARNOLD KRUG

SCENES FROM FAIRY-LAND

In two Books. Price Two Shillings each.

TH. KULLAK

TWENTY-FOUR PIECES

Op. 62 AND 81.

In four Books. Price One Shilling each.

MAX MAYER

BAGATELLES

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

MENDELSSOHN

SIX CHRISTMAS PIECES

Price One Shilling.

ERNEST NEWTON

WOODLAND DANCES

Price Two Shillings.

HUBERT G. OKE

THREE PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

SCHUMANN

PIECES FOR THE YOUNG

Part I., Price 1s. ; Part II., Price 1s. 6d.

SCHUMANN

THREE PIANOFORTE SONATAS

(Part III. of Pieces for the Young).

Price One Shilling.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING

SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING

OUR VILLAGE IN SUMMER

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

E. A. SYDENHAM

SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

TSCHAIKOWSKY

CHRISTMAS ALBUM

In three Books. Price One Shilling each.

FRANCESCO BERGER

FIRST STEPS AT THE PIANOFORTE

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

FAIN WOULD I CHANGE THAT NOTE

CANZONET FOR FOUR VOICES

THE WORDS ANONYMOUS

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

RALPH VAUGHAN WILLIAMS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Andante tranquillo.

SOPRANO. mp

Fain would I change that note To which fond love hath charmed

ALTO. mp

Fain would I change that note To . . which fond love hath charmed

TENOR. mp

Fain would I change that note To which fond love hath charmed

BASS. mp

Fain would I change that note . . To which fond love hath charmed

(For practice only.) mp

Andante tranquillo.

mf

me Long, long to sing by rote Fan - cy - ing that that harmed me ;

mf

me Long, long to sing by rote Fan - cy - ing that that harmed me ;

mf

me Long, long to sing by rote Fan - cy - ing that that harmed me ;

mf

me Long, long to sing by rote Fan - cy - ing that that harmed me ;

mf

FAIN WOULD I CHANGE THAT NOTE.

Musical score for the hymn "PAIN WOULD CHANGE A CHANCE THAT BORN." The score is arranged for four voices (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and piano accompaniment. The tempo is marked "Andante" and the key signature is one flat (B-flat major or D minor). The time signature is 4/4. The lyrics are: "Yet when this thought doth come 'Love is the perfect sum Of". The score includes dynamic markings such as p (piano) and cres. (crescendo). The piano accompaniment features a simple harmonic structure with chords and single notes.

all de-light," I have no o-ther choice . . . Ei-ther for all de-light," I have no o-ther choice . . . Ei-ther for all de-light," . . . I have no o-ther choice, . . . no all de-light," . . . I have no o-ther choice . .

pen or voice To sing or write.

pen or voice To sing or write.

o ther choice Ei - ther for pen or voice To sing or write.

Ei - ther for pen . . or . . voice To sing or write.

FAIN WOULD I CHANGE THAT NOTE.

mp

O Love, they wrong thee much That say thy sweet is bit - ter,

mp

O Love, they wrong thee much That say thy sweet is bit - ter,

mp

O Love, they wrong thee much That say thy sweet is bit - ter,

mp

O Love, they wrong thee much That say thy sweet is bit - ter,

mf

When thy rich fruit is such, As no - thing can be sweet - er.

mf

When thy rich fruit is such, As no - thing can be sweet - er.

mf

When thy rich fruit is such, As no - thing can be sweet - er.

mf

When thy rich fruit is such, As no - thing can be sweet - er.

p cres.

Fair house of joy . . and bliss Where tru - est plea - sure is, I do a - p cres.

Fair house of joy . . and bliss Where tru - est plea - sure is, I do a - p cres.

Fair house of joy . . and bliss Where tru - est plea - sure is, I . . do a - p cres.

Fair house of joy . . and bliss Where tru - est plea - sure is, I do a -

FAIN WOULD I CHANGE THAT NOTE.

dim.

- dore thee; I know thee what thou art, I.. serve . . thee with my dim.

- dore thee; I know thee what thou art, I know thee what . . thou art, I serve thee

dim.

- dore thee; . . I know thee what thou art, I know thee what thou

dim.

- dore thee; . . I know thee what . . thou art, I f

dim.

p heart, And fall . . . be - fore thee. . . .

p

with my heart, And fall be - fore thee. . . .

p art, I serve thee with my heart, And fall be - fore thee. . . .

p serve thee with my heart, And fall be - fore thee. . . .

p

pp

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

FOUNDED IN 1844.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH.

No. 915.—Vol. 60.

Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage.

MAY 1, 1919.

Price 4d.; Postage 1½d.

Annual Subscription, Post-free, 5s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARLYBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

MIDSUMMER TERM began April 28th.

Fortnightly Concerts, May 17th and 31st, at 3.

Chamber Concert, May 28th, at 3.

A Junior Department is now open.

Prospectus can be obtained on application.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams—"Initiative, Southkens," Telephone—"1160, Western."
London."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Director: PROFESSOR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc.

Honorary Secretary: M. MUIR MACKENZIE, Esq.

The MIDSUMMER HALF-TERM commences on Tuesday,
June 10th, 1919.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age.
Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from The Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND
(Founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.) For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c.,
may be had on application.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Sec.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC,

VICTORIA EMEANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL LONDON RONALD.

NEW TERM BEGAN MONDAY, APRIL 28TH.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING
in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £7 17s. 6d. and £10 10s. per term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects,
Harmony, Sight-Singing, and / or Orchestra.

Weekly Orchestral Practices.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local Schools
Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Tel.: Cent. 4459.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE

SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A.

SESSION 1918-1919.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 23 to December 21); WINTER TERM (January 20 to April 5);
SUMMER TERM (April 7 to June 28).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra,
Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £30. Special fee for Organ Course, £20, and for Wind Instrument Course, £15.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations,
and Entry Forms, on application.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Lessons.

Full Orchestral Class, Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras,
Opera, Ensemble, Elocution, Choral, and Harmony, &c., Classes.
Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

UNIVERSITY OF DURHAM.

Examinations for degrees in Music are held as follows: Matriculation,
January, July, and October; First Mus. B., March and September;
Mus. B. and Mus. D., September only.

For particulars, apply Secretary of Examinations, University Offices,
Durham. Copies of former Examination Papers, 1s. 6d. per set.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, READING.

HALLS OF RESIDENCE:—

Wantage Hall (Men).

St. Patrick's Hall (Men).

St. Andrew's Hall (Women).

Wessex Hall (Women).

St. George's Hall (Women).

Centra Lodge (Women).

SCHOLARSHIPS IN MUSIC.

An Examination for one or more Scholarships in Music, each of about £26 per annum, open to men and women, and tenable at the College for not more than three years, will be held at the College on July 9, 1919.
Candidates must offer Singing, Pianoforte, Violin, Viola, Violoncello, or Organ as a principal subject. Entries must be sent in by June 25, 1919.
Further particulars of these and other Scholarships, and prospectuses of the College, may be obtained from the Registrar, University College, Reading.

FRANCIS H. WRIGHT,

Registrar.

THE BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY.

Offices: 19, Berners Street, W.1.

FOR THE FOSTERING OF BRITISH MUSIC.

Membership open to all music-lovers.

Patron: The Rt. Hon. A. J. BALFOUR.

President: THE LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.

Director: A. EAGLEFIELD HULL, Mus. Doc. OXON.

Committee of Management:

Mr. Adrian C. Boulton
Mr. W. W. Cobbett
Mr. Alvin Langdon Coburn
Sir Edward E. Cooper
Mr. W. R. Davies
Mr. Edward J. Dent

Rev. E. H. Fellowes, Mus. Doc.
Col. W. Johnson Galloway
Mr. H. Cart de Lafontaine
Mrs. W. Lee Mathews
Mr. G. Bernard Shaw
Major Geoffrey Toye

W. R. DAVIES, Treasurer.

Particulars from the Acting-Secretary, A. Eaglefield Hull, Mus. Doc.
Oxon., 19, Berners Street, W. 1.

ADVANCE IN PRICES.

The prices of certain of the Novello publications are again advanced but the charges are still unaltered in the advertisement columns.

THE INCORPORATED LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

22, Princes St., Cavendish Square, W. 1.

Branches; Hampstead Conservatoire, N.W. 3, and
117, Seven Sisters Road, N. 7.

Principal: T. H. YORK-TROTTER, M.A., Mus. Doc. (Oxon.).

Rhythmic Method of Music Teaching. Special Classes for Teachers.
Special Training in Music and Elocution. Private and Class Lessons in every subject by the best Teachers.

ORCHESTRAL AND CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES WEEKLY.

Frequent Students' Concerts. Examinations in Music and Elocution,
July and December. Spong Rhythmic Dancing. For Prospectus and
Examination Syllabus apply to the CENTRAL ACADEMY, 22, PRINCES
STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W. 1.

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC, LONDON

(Under the direction of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.).

INCORPORATED 1891.

158, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W.-11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc., Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.

Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.M.

Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.

Rev. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. Oxon.

Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects, including the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M. F.V.C.M., also for the Teachers'
Professional Diploma in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and December.

Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition.

Local Secretaries required for towns not represented.

Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint; and all other Subjects connected with the culture of Music.

SPECIAL CINEMA COURSES in Orchestral, Piano, and Organ-
Playing.

All communications to be addressed to The Secretary, Registered
Office, 11, Burleigh Street, Strand, W.C. 2.

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH MUSICIANS.

Founded 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI.
Victoria, Cap. cxxxii., § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.D.,
DEAN OF DURHAM.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.), LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.), FELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London and at approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

May 7th, 1919, at 3.30 p.m.—Lecture, "Some Æstheticisms of Ecclesiastical Etiquette," by Dr. T. Westlake Morgan.

Chairman.—The Rev. H. C. Eden, M.A., Vicar of the Holy Innocents, Ravenscourt Park. 7.30 p.m.—Annual Service.

Sept. 11th, 1919, 3.30 p.m.—Lecture, "The Ethics of Criticism," by
Dr. Churchill Sibley.

Chairman, J. Hawthorth Roberts, Esq., M.A. Cantab.

COMPETITIONS, 1919.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best ANDANTE for the ORGAN, and a SHORT ANTHEM with Treble Solo.

BRONZE MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, DOUBLE CHANT,
and KYRIE.

Organists (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Vacant
Appointments.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of DR. LEWIS, Warden,
158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.-2

Founder and Director: MR. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, Concerts, &c. Telephone Paddington, 5990. Sec., E. B. GOLDING.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W.-1

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION.

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.A.M.

DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.

G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Violin,
Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held at Scotch and Irish Centres in JUNE (last day of entry, May 15th), and in London and at the various Local Centres in the Provinces in JULY (last day of entry, June 14th).

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, may be had on application to the Secretary.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate
(A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, July,
and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A. Mus.
L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L. Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship
(F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented, either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date. For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.

Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London," Telephone: Central 3870.

Leamington & County Open Competitive Musical Festival.

JULY 3rd, 4th, 5th, 1919.

TOWN HALL, LEAMINGTON SPA.

SPECIAL COMPOSITION TEST.

Syllabus from Secretary, Mrs. Bernard Green, 175, Rugby Road, Leamington Spa.

ROYAL NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD OF WALES, BARRY.

AUGUST 2nd—7th, 1920.

The following prizes are offered for

MUSIC COMPOSITION.

- (1.) £40 for the best setting for Chorus and Orchestra of Sir Henry Newbolt's Poem,
"He fell among thieves."
- (2.) £10 10s. for a Tone-Poem for Orchestra, based on Welsh Airs or Welsh Folk-Songs.
- (3.) £5 5s. for the best Anthem to words expressing
Thanksgiving for Peace.
(English or Welsh Words.)
- (4.) £5 5s. for the best Glee.
(English or Welsh Words.)

Nos. 1, 3, and 4, are limited to Welsh composers.

No. 2 is open.

All compositions to be sent in by October 31, 1919. The successful compositions will be performed at the Eisteddfod Concert.

Further particulars may be obtained from the Music
Secretary, Mr. W. M. Williams, 9, Old Village Road,
Barry, Glam.

D. ARTHUR EVANS, General Secretary.

THE TECHNIQUER

(THE MASTER KEY TO TECHNIQUE.)

Patented in Great Britain and U.S.A. For all instrumentalists.

Copy of testimonial from

CHARLES F. REDDIE, Esq., F.R.A.M.,

Professor and Examiner of the Pianoforte at the R.A.M.

"Having had more than two years' experience of your clever invention, I have no hesitation in stating that to a pianist it really is invaluable.
Three pupils came to me a few weeks ago with hands so malformed that it seemed hopeless for them ever to become pianists. Thanks to 'The Techniquer' they can already play with comparative ease octaves and chords, which before were impossible. Their hands, in time, will, I feel certain, become almost if not quite normal."

Send for particulars and list of testimonials. "Hand Development," (3rd edit.), 7d. post free. Secretary, Miss Cooper, 33, Orchard St., W. 1.

PIANO PLAYING KEPT UP without keyboard practising.

Not the least of the many benefits which the use of my System confers upon pianists is that of being able to keep "in practice" without keyboard practising.

Even when circumstances make keyboard work impossible for several months, definite progress is often made in touch, increased powers of execution, and in general command over the keyboard.

This is one of the many reasons why pianists of all grades of proficiency should take my Postal Course.

Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 10,000 successful tudents add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard" Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average or advanced pianist. Book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C.1.

MR. CHARLES TREE.

CHAPPELL BALLADS ON TOUR.

Bradford Observer, April 10, 1919: "An artist in all he essays. His fine baritone and graphic style were a great feature of the evening. His various cackinnations in the Moussorgsky songs were a wonderful study."
Yorkshire Post, April 10, 1919: "He sang not merely with an infectious vien of sardonic humour, but also with high dramatic force."
Newcastle Journal: "The art of Mr. Charles Tree is as unmistakable as it is all-embracing."

RECITAL-LECTURES on the ART of EASE in SINGING.

Wellington Journal, March 22, 1919: "An outstanding feature in the records of local entertainments. The committee are to be congratulated. His evening was unique, interspersed as were his songs and explanations with such subtle shafts of wit. He illustrated every phase of articulation, enunciation, expression, and tone."

Mr. Tree is giving a limited number of lessons in voice-production.

The amount of vocal-camouflage existing to-day is appalling. Yet the so-called Italian method is based on simplicity. Real lasting success cannot be obtained unless the vocal placement is on the mask and lips. The chief danger is, that it can be apparently forward, yet just fail in that all-important detail. The means of obtaining that frontal position is simplicity itself.

Mr. Tree's Book on Voice-Production. Publisher, Joseph Williams. Concerts, Lectures. Address, 29, King's Road, Chelsea, S.W. 3.

MR. W. H. BREARE VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique: How it feels to Sing." 3s. 6d. each, post 3s. rod.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y.

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—Gentlewoman.

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—Eastern Morning News.

"Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald.

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide and accurate; what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury.

"Is an acknowledged authority."—"Western Morning News."

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H. Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MR. ERNEST A. FLAMBE (BASS).

Oratorio, Concerts, Receptions, &c. For vacant dates, address 67, Ashbourne Avenue, Mitcham Surrey.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS
(TENOR).

Address—164, Bank Buildings, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

MR. AMBROSE COVIELLO

Associate and Professor of the Royal Academy of Music, is now demobilised, and arranging times for Private Tuition in Pianoforte Playing and Teaching, at his studio (Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W. 1.

G. HUBI-NEWCORBE.

Author of "Whisper and I shall hear" (Piccolomini), "Within your heart" (Trotter), "Love's Devotion" (A. F. Tate), "Heart's Delight" (Tosti), "A Summer Song" (Guy d'Hardelot), "I heard a Sweet Song" (Dorothy Foster).

ADAPTATIONS AND TRANSLATIONS.

1,200 SONGS SOLD. 300 ADAPTATIONS.

STOCKTON HEATH, WARRINGTON.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-FOUR YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING.

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W. 2.

*The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Major H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

YOU CAN PASS IN OCTOBER, 1919.

MATRICULATION

A. MCALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.),

209, CASTLE BOULEVARD, NOTTINGHAM.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.B. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of F.L.C.M., L.Mus.L.C.M., A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916), and L.R.A.M. Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, "Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the College of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.

(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.

(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-19 .. 136 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-19 .. 27 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 362 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey. 'Phone, Burgh Heath, 346.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS. FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written and Works Scored for Orchestra. Address as above.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS in MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.-11

ENGAGEMENTS ACCEPTED AND POSTAL LESSONS given by Mr. C. T. HEAVISIDE, SOLO PIANIST, Cellist, &c., 27, Torwood Street Torquay.

MR. T. W. HOLGATE, Professor of Singing, 99A, Queen's Gate, South Kensington, S.W.-7. Voice Trial and Advice free by appointment.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address, 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.-3

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Professor of Singing, R. A. Music. Private Pupils received at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.-1

DR. LEWIS, Mus. Doc., F.E.I.S., Warden, Incorporated Guild of Church Musicians, gives LESSONS, Personally or by Post, in HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT. 158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W.-11.

DR. LEWIS' TEXT-BOOKS:

HARMONY. (2 vols.) 5s. each, net.
COUNTERPOINT. 5s. net.
DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT AND CANON. 5s. net.
FUGUE. 1s. 6d. net.
ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. 2s. 6d. net.
DEVELOPMENT OF ANGLICAN CHURCH MUSIC. 2s. net.
PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
MATERIAL OF MELODY. 3d. net.
IMPROVISATION. 1s. 6d. net.

The above, complete, will be forwarded (carriage paid) or £1 5s.

ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (formerly Mangelsoff), of the British Expeditionary Force, France. Pianist and Teacher of Pianoforte, Cole Bank School of Music, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

HE. MACKINLAY, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L., L.R.A.M. Correspondence lessons in "Rudiments," Art of Teaching, Harmony, Counterpoint, &c. Preparation for R.C.O., R.A.M., and all recognised Examinations. Moderate fees. "S. Cecilia," Powys Lane, Palmers Green, N.-13.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes, L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd. West Kensington.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.-1.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte Teacher), A.T.C.L. (Pianoforte and Vocal Teacher). Correspondence Lessons, Theory, Harmony, Form, Art of Teaching. Successes at R.A.M. and T.C.L. Metropolitan Examinations. Compiler, Musical Terms (English first), Novello, 4d. Bawburgh Vicarage, Norwich.

COMPOSERS' MANUSCRIPTS AND SCORES REVISED AND EDITED.—Immediate attention guaranteed. If you wish to publish, terms, and all conditions will accompany our acknowledgment of ALL MSS. RECEIVED. Darings Ltd., 35 Oxford Street, W. 1.

ACCOMPANIST (Medallist R.A.M.) desires ENGAGEMENTS for practice with Singers, &c.; also Concert work. Apply, E. G. E., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W. 1.

PIANISTE wishes to meet INSTRUMENTALIST for Practice and Concerts; evenings, E. L., 20, Lambourn Road, Clapham, S.W. 4.

SINGER, complete Classical Repertoire, good London critiques, wishes take up teaching, and would welcome proposals from Schools or established Artists. Box T 345, c/o Dawson's, 121, Cannon Street, E.C. 4.

ABBOTT'S ORCHESTRAL SCHOOL for VIOLINISTS, PIANISTS, ORGANISTS, &c. Finest Cinema Training School in London. Classes daily. £1 1s. Twelve lessons. Appointments found. 47, Uxbridge Road, Shepherd's Bush.

CLIFTON COLLEGE.—Classical, Mathematical, Modern Language, Natural Science, and Music Scholarships, value from £25 to £100 a year. Examination in June. There are also several "War Exhibitions" of £60 a year. Particulars from the Secretary, Clifton College, Bristol.

SOPRANO SOLOIST, &c.—Lady desires ENGAGEMENT in Choir (Experienced); Good sight-reader. Or any superior musical appointment, being also a pianist and excellent accompanist. No teaching. Highest references. X., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd. 160, Wardour Street, London, W. 1.

SALISBURY CATHEDRAL.—TENOR LAY-VICAR REQUIRED. Candidates should be under 30, and Communicants. Good reader essential. Copies only of not more than three testimonials as to character and musical ability to be sent before May 20. For further particulars, address Dr. W. G. Alcock, M.V.O., The Close, Salisbury.

NORWICH CATHEDRAL.—WANTED, temporary TENOR and BARITONE LAY-CLERKS, with probability of permanent appointment. Salary £80. Apply to Dr. Frank Bates, The Close, Norwich.

EXETER CATHEDRAL CHOIR.

There is a VACANCY for a TENOR VOICE. Salary £104. Candidates must be good sight-readers. Applications, with not more than three recent testimonials (copies), should be sent without delay to the Rev. The Succentor, The Close, Exeter.

LINCOLN CATHEDRAL CHOIR.—There is a VACANCY for TENOR. Salary £95 and 25 per cent. War Bonus. Candidates must be under 35 years of age, and applications with testimonials (not more than three) received not later than May 15 by The Precentor, Lincoln Cathedral.

TENOR SOLOIST AND LEADER WANTED. Nonconformist Choir, North London. Must be experienced and good reader. £25. "Y. Z.," c/o Terry & Co., Ltd., 6, Hatton Garden, E.C. 1.

TENOR and BASS WANTED, St. Paul's, Portman Square, W. 1. Very light duties. £12 to £15. Apply, Organist.

TENOR WANTED, for the Church of the Ascension, Balham. £12. Address, Adolphus Antoine, 43, Alderbrook Road, S.W. 12.

TENOR WANTED. £20. Must read; also chant (Anglicans). Essex Church (Unitarian). The Mall, Notting Hill Gate. Alfred R. Stock, F.R.C.O., 21, Sutherland Place, Bayswater, W. 2.

DURHAM CATHEDRAL.

ASSISTANT-ORGANIST WANTED. Salary not exceeding £150 a year. Applications, stating age and experience, and accompanied by testimonials, must be sent on or before Tuesday, May 6th, to the Rev. The Precentor, the College, Durham.

AMERICAN CHURCH OF THE HOLY TRINITY, PARIS.

An ORGANIST will shortly be REQUIRED. Fine organ, daily Cathedral service, Choir-school; opportunities for outside work in the American and English Colony; a considerable number of weddings, &c. Salary £250-300.

Intending applicants should send their names, with those of three references (no testimonials) to Dr. P. C. Buck, West Hill House, Harrow-on-the-Hill, before May 18, 1919.

WANTED, ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER for Park Parish Church, Glasgow. Salary £120. Application by letter only, with testimonials, to The Choir Convener, Park Parish Church, Glasgow.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED for the Priory Church, Bridlington. Must be efficient choir-trainer. Great opening as teacher for first-class man. Splendid organ and magnificent church. Salary to be arranged.

ORGANIST WANTED, for West Bromwich Parish Church. Salary £40. Good player, accompanist, trainer voice-production. Address application, with three testimonials, to Rev. Prebendary Connor, The Vicarage, West Bromwich.

THE ORGANIST of Norwich Cathedral is desirous of meeting with a MUSICAL STUDENT, qualified to act as his assistant and to take charge of the Nave Services. Salary given. Apply, Dr. Frank Bates, The Close, Norwich.

POST AS PUPIL-ASSISTANT ORGANIST WANTED in N.W. London. Slight previous experience. Full details by letter to B. O. B. 9, Chevening Road, N.W. 6.

PIANIST, just demobilised, pupil of the late Madame Teresa Carreño, has a few vacancies for pupils. For terms, &c., apply to P. T. C., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

YOUNG MAN, good Pianist, WANTS situation as PIANIST in a cinema. Bird, The Stores, Evershot, Dorset.

PIANO-TUNER WANTED for Y.M.C.A. work in the occupied territory of Germany. Board, lodging, travelling expenses, first uniform, and honorarium according to needs, but not exceeding £150. Four months' engagement in first instance. Apply, Percy A. Scholes, Music Section, Y.M.C.A., 25, Bloomsbury Sq., W.C. 1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—
Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed.
Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

STANDARDISED ORGANS (Pipe).—TWO-
MANUALS and Pedals, as built to order, by Richardson's, specially to meet the requirements of the times. 100 to 500 guineas; in nine sizes. Entirely new introduction. These Organs are voiced and toned and adapted according to size, &c., of Church. Specifications and Estimates, W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

FOR SALE.—ORGAN, Two-manual American, by Story & Clark. Eighteen stops, with complete pedal attachment; driven by hydraulic engine; in perfect condition; suitable for small church or organist for Home practice. Price £65. Apply Box 700, Robertson & Scott, Advertising Agents, Edinburgh.

FOR SALE, ERARD DOUBLE-ACTION HARP.
Excellent condition. £20. T., Wilbury, Broadwater, Worthing.

BASSES and BARITONES should buy descriptive Scena, THE WILD WINDS WALK THE DEEP (Oakley).
Compass: G to D. Price 1s. 6d. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover St. W.1.

PIANO PEDALS with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

"Orrisdale," 418, Chorley Old Road, Bolton.
DEAR SIRs,—I have opened many organs by various builders, but I wish to say this: That I have never played on a finer Pedal Board than the one which you make.

ARTHUR E. JONES, F.R.C.O., L.T.C.L.

Terms: Cash, or instalments of 20s. per month.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to
THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
Works—Hanley, Staffs. NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

CHOIRMASTERS wishing something entirely new should obtain
TE DEUM and BENEDICTUS in F.
TE DEUM in D. By D. R. MUNRO.
Sung where hitherto only chants allowed.
Selling in thousands. Twopence each.
London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TO EDUCATIONAL AND MUSICAL INSTITUTIONS.

BUSINESS MAN (twenty years' City and Colonial experience—
Accounts, Correspondence, Organization, General Management, and Negotiator); BARITONE SINGER (nine years' training, classical répertoire, good London critiques, and business references), SEEKS
POST where combined experience would be useful, as SECRETARY and
TEACHER, &c.
Box 250, c/o Dawson's, 121, Cannon Street, London, E.C.-4.

JUST PUBLISHED.

"The Allies' Victory March Song."

A stirring composition with patriotic words by
W. SEYMOUR HAWKER.

Copyright. Published by Arthur & Co., Limited., No. 4,
Featherstone Buildings, High Holborn, London, W.C. 1.
Of all Musicsellers, 1s. 6d. By Post, 1s. 7d.
Everyone should have this Song.

WILL BE PUBLISHED MAY 5.

I WILL EXTOL MY GOD

ANTHEM FOR THANKSGIVING
AFTER WAR, OR GENERAL USE

COMPOSED BY
JOHN E. WEST.

PRICE THREEPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SONATA FOR VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

BY EDWARD ELGAR.

Op. 82.

Price Six Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

EIGHT EASY MELODIES

FOR YOUNG BEGINNERS

FOR VIOLIN

With Pianoforte Accompaniment

COMPOSED BY

ERNEST NEWTON.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

The pieces are suitable for Solo or Ensemble playing.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

OLD ENGLISH VIOLIN MUSIC

EDITED BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

ALTHOUGH considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Gleees and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the eighteenth century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured bass for the harpsichord or organ;
another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

ALFRED MOFFAT.

No.				s.	d.
1.	SONATA in G major	JAMES LATES	2	0
2.	SONATA in D minor	HENRY ECCLES	2	0
3.	SONATA in B flat major	WILLIAM BABBL	2	0
4.	SONATA in G minor	JOHN STANLEY	2	0
5.	SONATA in A major	JOHN COLLETT	2	0
6.	TRIO-SONATA in E minor	THOMAS AUGUSTINE ARNE	3	0
7.	SONATA in D major	RICHARD JONES	2	0
8.	TRIO-SONATA in D minor	WILLIAM BOYCE	3	0
9.	THREE PIECES	WILLIAM BOYCE	2	0
10.	SONATA in E major	CHARLES MACKLEAN	2	0
11.	SONATA in G minor	WILLIAM CROFT	2	0
12.	SONATA in D minor	JOSEPH GIBBS	2	0
13.	SONATA in D minor	JOHN HUMPHRIES	2	0
14.	SONATA in A minor	THOMAS VINCENT	2	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

HARK! HARK! MY SOUL

SACRED SONG.

THE WORDS BY
F. W. FABER.THE MUSIC BY
PERCY E. FLETCHER.

IN TWO KEYS.

Price 2s. each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Just Published.

AFTER TUMULT, REST

TENOR SOLO

FROM

WAR AND PEACE

COMPOSED BY
C. H. H. PARRY.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TEN PIECES

FOR THE

PIANOFORTE

BY

HENRY PURCELL.

SELECTED AND EDITED BY
NORMAN P. CUMMINGS
AND WILLIAM H. CUMMINGS.

Price 2s. 6d.

CONTENTS:

PRELUDE IN C.
MINUET IN G.
ALMANDE IN G.
CEBELL IN C.
ALMANDE IN G.SICILIANO IN G.
A NEW IRISH TUNE.
PRELUDE IN G.
THE GOLDEN SONATA.
SONATA IN G.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE ELEMENTS OF PIANOFORTE TECHNIQUE
ARRANGED UPON A RHYTHMIC BASIS.

BY

DR. R. H. BELLAIRS.Strongly recommended by the highest authorities.
More work can be done with Dr. Bellairs' Method than with any other.
Eliminates Mechanical Drudgery.
Interests the pupil from the very beginning.
List of companion works and testimonials on receipt of a post-card.

Price 2s. 6d. net. Of all Music-sellers.

ENOCH & SONS, LONDON.

Enoch House, 58, Great Marlborough Street, W.1.

CHARMING CHLOE

THE WORDS BY

ROBERT BURNS.

THE MUSIC BY

EDWARD GERMAN.

In three Keys, D flat, E flat, and F.

Price Two Shillings Each.

A delightful song . . . treated as only Mr. German knows how.
—Queen.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALE ARABESQUE

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

COMPOSED BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALE IMPROMPTU

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

COMPOSED BY

ALFRED HOLLINS.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S
ELEMENTARY MUSIC MANUALS

- No. 1.—PART-WRITING FOR BEGINNERS, by J. W. IVIMEY.
The Rules tabulated are for the guidance of beginners in the Art of Part-writing. Many of them change from rules to recommendations, when the student becomes more advanced. Bound in linen covers. Price 6d.
- No. 2.—LESSONS IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Many elementary students of harmony can satisfactorily add parts to figured basses, but are unable to harmonize even simple melodies. This book gives minute instruction which any student can understand. Part I. Price 1s. 6d.
- No. 6.—LESSONS IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Part II. Price 1s. 6d.
- No. 7.—ADDITIONAL EXERCISES IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Price 6d.
- No. 3.—AN ELEMENTARY MIXED-VOICE SIGHT-SINGING COURSE (Staff Notation through Tonic Sol-fa), by GEORGE LANE. The Exercises are written in the Treble and Bass Clefs, in order that the Book may be used by Male and Female voices in one class. Suitable for Evening Continuation Schools. Part I. Price 6d.
- No. 4.—AN ELEMENTARY MIXED-VOICE SIGHT-SINGING COURSE (Staff Notation through Tonic Sol-fa), by GEORGE LANE. Part II. Price 6d.
- No. 5.—HINTS TO YOUNG VIOLINISTS by C. EGERTON LOWE. Price 1s.
- No. 8.—HINTS ON PIANOFORTE TEACHING (chiefly to Boys), by E. D. RENDALL. Price 1s. 6d.
- No. 9.—SCHOOL CHOIR TRAINING, by MARGARET NICHOLLS. A Practical Course of Lessons on Voice Production for the Guidance of Teachers of Class Singing. Price 2s. (The Appendix, published separately: Hints on Part-Singing and Exercises, 2d.; Sol-fa, 2d.).
- No. 10.—THE COMPOSITION OF SIMPLE MELODIES by ROBERT T. WHITE. Price 1s. 6d.
- No. 11.—PHYSICAL EXERCISES IN THE INFANT SCHOOL, by MARGARET A. HUGHES. Price 4s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S

POPULAR PIANOFORTE ALBUMS

FOR YOUNG PERFORMERS.

HUBERT BATH
DOLL'S-HOUSE SUITE

Price Two Shillings.

FRANCESCO BERGER
EIGHTEEN LITTLE PIECES

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN
HAPPY THOUGHTS

Price Two Shillings.

ARNOLD KRUG
TEN LITTLE PIECES

Op. 109.

In two Books. Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

ARNOLD KRUG
SCENES FROM FAIRY-LAND

In two Books. Price Two Shillings each.

TH. KULLAK
TWENTY-FOUR PIECES

Op. 62 AND 81.

In four Books. Price One Shilling each.

MAX MAYER
BAGATELLES

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

MENDELSSOHN
SIX CHRISTMAS PIECES

Price One Shilling.

ERNEST NEWTON
WOODLAND DANCES

Price Two Shillings.

HUBERT G. OKE
THREE PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

SCHUMANN
PIECES FOR THE YOUNG

Part I., Price 1s. ; Part II., Price 1s. 6d.

SCHUMANN
THREE PIANOFORTE SONATAS

(Part III. of Pieces for the Young).

Price One Shilling.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING
SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING
OUR VILLAGE IN SUMMER

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

E. A. SYDENHAM
SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

TSCHAIKOWSKY
CHRISTMAS ALBUM

In three Books. Price One Shilling each.

FRANCESCO BERGER
FIRST STEPS AT THE PIANOFORTE

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

May 7th, at 3 p.m.—Students' Concert.May 14th, at 3 p.m.—Lecture-Recital on the works of Bach and S. Wesley, by Dr. C. W. Pearce, assisted by Mr. L. Pecsikai.May 15th, at 3 p.m.—First of a course of Musical History Lectures by Dr. C. W. Pearce. Subject: French and Italian Music during the second half of the 17th century.May 28th, at 3 p.m.—Violin and Pianoforte Recital by Messrs. Emile Sauret and Charlton Keith.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Any number of subjects—from one to the Full Course—may be entered for. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student.

Approved complete Courses for the University of London Degrees in Music under recognised Teachers of the University.

Students are prepared for the Degrees in Music of the London and other Universities, the Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, Trinity College of Music, &c.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College students for other subjects.

All modern systems of Technique (whether for the Pianoforte, Violin, or other instrument) and of Vocal Training are taught by qualified professors.

The Class for Training Boys for Cathedral Choirs is held on Saturday mornings.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

Students not older than 16 years are admitted to the JUNIOR SCHOOL at reduced fees.

There are Thirty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music of the London University and are open only to Students who have satisfied the Matriculation requirements of that University.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, on application to the undersigned,

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1

HAROLD WALLIS

FIVE ALBUMS FOR

THE PIANOFORTE.

EACH CONTAINING 4 OR 5 SHORT PIECES.

Price each 2s. 6d. Net Cash.

"COUNTRY THOUGHTS."

"DECLINING DAY."

"EVENING SKETCHES."

"LYRIC SKETCHES."

"VISIONS."

"Harold Wallis is a young composer who has not been before the public long, but already the charm and fragrance of his little piano pieces are quickly winning their way into the hearts of those who have had the good fortune to come across them." :: :: ::

From a critical article by George Lowe.

"The books are replete with graceful numbers and will come as a boon to music teachers."—The Halifax Guardian.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, Beak Street, Regent St., London, W.

And of all Musicsellers in the United Kingdom and Colonies.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & Co.

CONSTRUCTIVE HARMONY.

YORKE TROTTER.

PART I.

TWO SHILLINGS.

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION.

This book is an attempt to make the study of Harmony and of Construction as practical as possible. With this object in view the student is taught to recognise the sound of the various chords and progressions, to be able to play on the pianoforte any chords, to resolve discords, and to harmonize melodies at sight. Moreover, from the very beginning he is made to do things for himself; to invent melodies, to put together chords, and to make little compositions as exercises and so become a real musician. Experience has shown that students who have been taught to regard harmony as inseparably bound up with melody and rhythm rapidly acquire the power of making compositions of their own on a given harmonic basis.

BOSWORTH & CO.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods:

BERINGER'S TUTOR. WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR. HEMY'S TUTOR. WICKINS'S RAPID TUTOR. GRAHAM P. MOORE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES.

Publishers of Sevcik's Violin Method, Beringer's Daily Technical Studies. Macfarren's The Child's First Music Lesson.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A

WESTMINSTER PILGRIM

BY

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE

PRICE SIXTEEN SHILLINGS NET.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

MAY 1, 1919.

MODERN BRITISH COMPOSERS.

BY EDWIN EVANS.

III.—BENJAMIN DALE.

'He has written fewer and better works than any English composer of his generation.' That is the considered opinion of a well-known English musician, admittedly of the older school, concerning Benjamin J. Dale. To some extent it may be coloured by personal predilection as well as by a firm belief in conservative principles, but even when discounted in both respects, this sweeping statement is not devoid of some justification. Dale has few works to his credit, but practically all of them have a real permanent value, and, in the path of his choice, he has certainly achieved remarkable eminence. The accident of chronology which led us in the introductory article to assign to one group the English composers born between 1870 and 1885 places him at the end of a period, and the circumstance, though fortuitous, has its significance. He really does represent the end of a period. Though one or two of his close contemporaries, such as James Friskin (born 1886), still adhere to the same traditional principles, Dale's work is so characteristic of them as to stand out with special prominence. It is difficult to explain in words wherein this characteristic quality lies, especially as certain traits of his writing coincide more or less with the conventions laid down by the German composers of the middle 19th century. He has, for instance, an elegance of contour which seems to constitute a link with the days in which the Mendelssohn factor was dominant in English music. Moreover, he is not entirely free from a vein of sentiment which, were one disposed to be critical, might be ascribed to a similar source, though he contrives to escape the charge of sentimentality. The fact is that the elegance and the sentiment alike correspond to indigenous traits for which such methods constitute a sympathetic mode of expression. In other words, this musical elegance is his, not because of the glamour of its German exponents, but because it is natural to himself; and the sentiment finds expression in his music not because of its prototype in the German romantics, but because he really feels it and is impelled to give it voice. In short, even where Dale, to a superficial critic, might appear to be offering up incense on much frequented altars, he is in fact being not only spontaneous, but, in a very subtle sense, markedly individual. It is a paradox the key to which would be readily furnished by personal acquaintance. Its quest in the music itself demands sympathy and an absence of preconceived opinion in the matter. To us in England Dale's music appeals by virtue of qualities which we regard as indigenous. To segregate those qualities from the mere outward aspects of his writing is a matter of unprejudiced insight.

Benjamin Dale was born July 17, 1885, at Crouch Hill, London, and is the son of the late C. J. Dale, a talented amateur musician who was at one time the conductor of the Finsbury Choral Association. He studied with great distinction at the Royal Academy of Music, and was one of many pupils of Mr. Frederick Corder who have since acquired fame. As already hinted, his output is very modest, even in proportion to his years of musicianship. He made his début as a composer with an Overture inspired by Macaulay's 'Horatius,' which was performed May 10, 1900, but he has long since ceased to take that work seriously. Nor does he attach much importance to another Overture, 'The Tempest,' which was given two years later at Queen's Hall. These, and a Concert Overture in G minor, played at Bournemouth, are his only symphonic works, all being of very early date. With them may be classed a Concert piece for Organ and Orchestra which has had numerous performances, including one at a concert of the Patron's Fund.

It is with the Pianoforte Sonata in D minor, written in 1902, when Dale was still a student, and performed for the first time in 1905, that Dale's career as a composer acquires the outstanding prominence which entitles him to special notice among his contemporaries. A detailed analysis of this remarkable work was contributed to the Musical Times of April 1, 1918, by Mr. Frederick Corder. Both in its ambition and its achievement it is one of the most important compositions in the British repertoire. It is planned in generous proportions, and requires, to sustain its length, an exceptional breadth of interpretation, in the absence of which the separate performance of one of its two sections, however regrettable in itself, is the wiser course. It consists of an opening Allegro in the established form, and a theme with seven variations and a Rondo, the former being grouped to correspond with the conventional slow movement and Scherzo of a sonata, to which the latter supplies the Finale. The variations are separated from the Rondo by an elaborate bridge-passage which is in reality yet another variation, and the Rondo concludes with a re-statement of the theme in its most impressive form, the effect of which is enhanced by the high spirits of the intervening music. A romantic thread permeates the entire work, but is not permitted to exclude the element of humour which finds expression in an episode of the first movement, in several of the variations, and most characteristically in the Rondo. Apart from this the dominant quality is a healthy robustness combined with elegance of expression. Though the comparison may seem incongruous, one is led to think of the highly finished performance of an athlete whose strength is displayed the more convincingly through being associated with an easy grace. Though by no means ultra-modern in its texture, the work betrays in places a sympathetic acquaintance with modern harmonic thought, in a very personal blend with the older tradition. It is difficult to realise in the presence of this Sonata that it was the work of a boy in his teens. The only evidence of his youth is the extraordinary exuberance of ideas which a maturer composer might have used more sparingly.

We give two extracts from the Sonata, (1) from the Variations, (2) from the Rondo:

EXAMPLE I.

Andante.

p espressivo.

dolcis. molto espress.

poco rit.

p p p dolcis.

espress

cres.

f poco allarg.

meno forte.

p

EXAMPLE II.

Molto allegro.

8

fff

a tempo.

allarg.

mf

col 8va.....

8va.....

8va.....

8...

Dale's only other pianoforte work is a short piece entitled 'Night fancies,' dedicated to the present writer. It consists of a Rêverie, associated with a bell-like chime, and interrupted with a sudden torrent of whimsical and fantastic imagination.

Much of the rest of Dale's work is indelibly linked to the personality of Lionel Tertis, the greatest viola player of modern times, whose virtuosity has so extended the technical resources of his instrument that nearly all the younger English composers have felt impelled to contribute to a repertoire that had previously lacked interest. Even apart from the many solo works which owe their existence to his playing, any attentive student of English chamber-music will readily discover that the viola plays a distinctive rôle such as is rarely allotted to it in the chamber-music of other countries. The first and most important of Dale's viola works is a Suite in three movements with pianoforte accompaniment, two of which were subsequently scored for orchestra. In the original form the Suite was first heard at Æolian Hall in 1906, and in the orchestral version the Romance and Finale were first played by Mr. Lionel Tertis at a concert of the Royal Philharmonic Society in 1911. Though written very soon after the Sonata, the Suite displays in many respects greater originality of invention, and the element of humour is given more elaborate expression in the first and last movements. But the gem of this attractive work is its middle section—the Romance—a movement constructed on strictly classical lines and based on two simple themes of haunting beauty. It is scarcely too much to assert that no finer slow movement has made its appearance since the days of the great classics. It breathes the very spirit of poetry, and makes such an appeal to the imagination that few can fail to respond to it. To the professed sceptic it may perhaps seem to lean overmuch in a sentimental direction, but the sentiment itself is so fresh, and so free from hysterical exaggeration, that the listener stands disarmed. This one movement alone would entitle Dale to an honoured place among modern writers of chamber-music. Here are its opening bars:

EXAMPLE III.

The musical score for Example III consists of three systems of music. The first system is marked "espress molto." and "p" (piano). It features a treble clef with a key signature of two flats and a 4/4 time signature. The melody is written in the treble clef, and the accompaniment is in the bass clef. Pedal markings (Ped.) are present under the first and second measures. The second system is marked "con tenerezza." and "p" (piano). It continues the melody and accompaniment. Pedal markings (Ped.) are present under the first and second measures. The third system is marked "tre corde." and "p" (piano). It continues the melody and accompaniment. Pedal markings (Ped.) are present under the first and second measures.

The Suite was followed by a Phantasy for viola and pianoforte, due—like so many other works in the same form—to the initiative of Mr. W. W. Cobbett. Owing perhaps to the condensation incidental to this form, the music has an aspect of greater maturity, but is otherwise conceived in the same vein of romantic feeling. Its principal subject is a simple tune somewhat resembling folk-song, and it contains an Andante espressivo which is a remarkable example of the composer's ability to sustain the interest in an extended melodic line.

We give a brief extract :

EXAMPLE IV.

Andante. poco espress. a tempo.

Viol. poco rit. cantabile. espress.

poco rit. cres. &c.

p poco espress. cres. &c.

But perhaps the most characteristic feature of the work is the Scherzo section, with its happy rhythmic freedom :

EXAMPLE V.

[illegible]

In addition to these two compositions, Dale has written an ingenious short piece comprising an Introduction and Andante for six violas, which was first performed by a group of Lionel Tertis's pupils. Owing to the rarity of the combination, it is not likely ever to become popular; but it constitutes a striking display of first-class musicianship.

This practically represents the whole of Mr Dale's output at present, apart from a small amount of Church music, and a Cantata, 'Before the paling of the stars,' which was performed at Queen's Hall in February, 1913. This setting of a poem by Christina Rossetti derives its effect from simple melodic outlines in a highly-coloured setting with a moderate amount of rhythmic freedom. It is intended for a small choir, not exceeding eighty voices, and an orchestra of forty players. When it was written Dale had lapsed into a period of relative inactivity which his friends regarded as the preface to a new development of his methods, for he has too much of the spirit of the age to be content to cling so tenaciously as hitherto to those of tradition. Unfortunately the outbreak of war caught him in Germany, and he was interned at Ruhleben until last year, when he was removed to a camp in Holland. He interested himself in such opportunities as occurred for music at Ruhleben, but the total absence of privacy was an insurmountable obstacle to serious composition, and we shall have to await more favourable conditions to learn the effect of four years of enforced reflection on one of the most interesting and promising musical personalities modern England has produced.

Under such depressing conditions Dale has naturally produced only works of minor importance, an English Dance for violin and pianoforte, and a couple of Shakespearean songs; but his admirers are looking forward with much curiosity to the composition upon which he is now engaged, which is a Quartet in three movements for pianoforte and strings. It will probably be completed during the current month, and it is to be hoped that a public performance will be arranged before the composer leaves, some time in June, for an examining tour in Australia.

Whatever may be the outcome of his present experiences, the works by which Dale is best known, the Pianoforte Sonata and the Viola Suite, have the appearance of representing the close of a chapter rather than the opening of one. It is unlikely that any English composers who are now students will, on reaching maturity, retain as much allegiance as he has done to a tradition which has lost contact with actuality. It is also doubtful whether the somewhat aristocratic distinction of which his style furnishes an excellent example, will characterise our post-war music. The present trend of musical psychology favours ruggedness rather than polished utterance, and the cult of beautiful phrases is giving way to a search for greater veracity. It is at least probable that those composers who have passed through vivid personal experiences in the present war will be among the foremost to give us this element of uncompromising truth in their music, and it will be surprising if Dale is not of their number.

LIST OF WORKS.

ORCHESTRA.

Overture, 'The Tempest'	1902
Fantasia (Organ and Orchestra)	1903
Concert-Overture in G minor	1904

CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA.

'Before the paling of the stars' (Novello)	1912
---	------

PIANOFORTE SOLO.

Sonata in D minor (Novello)	1905
Night-Fancies (Ricordi)	1907

CHAMBER MUSIC.

Suite, for Viola and Pianoforte (Novello)	1907
Phantasy, for Viola and Pianoforte (Schott)	1911
Introduction and Andante, for Six Violas	1913
English Dance, for Violin and Pianoforte (Anglo-French Music Co.)	1916

SONGS.

Carpe Diem (Shakespeare)—(Novello)	1918
A Dirge of Love (Shakespeare)—(Novello)	1918

CHURCH MUSIC.—THREE CAROLS.

In Bethlehem, that noble place (Novello)
The Holy Birth (Novello)
The Shepherds and the Mother (Stainer & Bell)

THE RIGHT PERSPECTIVE FOR BEETHOVEN.

By W. WRIGHT ROBERTS.

The higher function of the Shakespearean jester—as 'Feste,' of all people, will remember—was enlightenment, seasoned or not with irresponsibility. 'Feste's' happy pseudonym discounts the apparent levity of some of his remarks. Last month, indeed, he wrote much that was suggestive. I fully believe that he is not attacking Beethoven; he is attacking rather the complacent, uncritical 'Beethovenite,' and I sympathise with him in his aim.

He tells us that the master 'suffers from his date.' So, surely, do all composers, unless we get just the right perspective. In the case of Beethoven—not quite antique, not quite modern—this is difficult to find. If, in suggesting how we may find it, I question some of 'Feste's' assertions, I ask him to believe that I do so in no carping spirit.

We all of us have some mind-map of Beethoven's works. Do not some of us need to draw it afresh and differently? The C minor, the 'Appassionata,' and other over-played masterpieces show us a tragic figure, a being of Promethean heroism and divine pathos, which the conservative, sentimental public has taken to its heart, not always for musical reasons. This figure has become a convention. It may be the essential Beethoven, but it is not all Beethoven. And many of us, unfortunately, look for this Beethoven in all his works. I am not sure that 'Feste' has not that tendency.

But we sometimes forget that in his early works, and right on into full maturity, alongside the growing heroism and deepening tragedy there is a gay, care-free Beethoven, a stronger, subtler Mozart. Think of the E flat Pianoforte Sonata (Op. 31, No. 3), the last 'Rasumovsky' Quartet, the fourth Symphony. Need we search these works, any more than Mozart's, for deep emotional significance? Rather we should ask of them what they can give—joy, radiance, ideal formal beauty. If there is anything in such works that really catches at the heart, it is most often the very perfection of design, or of melodic curve. Such things, to sensitive minds, can be overwhelming; and some such impression may have been the cause of that rhapsody of Berlioz, quoted last month, on the Larghetto of the second Symphony.

Surely, then, if we look at these works as we do at Mozart's, we shall not be disappointed. The Mozart revival, in this strenuous age, is very significant. Art affords an escape from one's age, as well as an expression of it. Those who wish so to escape, from time to time, have a right to do so. They will not necessarily become less alert to modern developments: their judgment of present-day works may in fact be all the more discriminating.

Again, if Beethoven is more antique, is he not also more modern than 'Feste' seems to imply? Is 'Feste' really fair in stating that among the slow movements of the Symphonies only the Funeral March has more than 'slender emotional significance'? Is he fair in making the Largo of the seventh Pianoforte Sonata in D stand out in such lonely glory? There must surely be good judges of music still left who cannot 'shed enthusiasms' quite so wholly. I try hard to shed those that are unreasonable, yet I still find more than 'slender emotional significance' in the slow movements of the C minor and Choral Symphonies. And need significance only be emotional? The Allegretto of the seventh Symphony baffles verbal description. But 'elemental' is perhaps the word that most nearly gives the main impression of a movement which, hackneyed as it may be, is like nothing else in music. As for the Pianoforte Sonatas, would 'Feste' really refuse to put the Adagio of the 'Hammerklavier,' and the two sublime sets of variations in Opp. 109 and 111, in the same category as the Largo of that early Sonata in D?

For the Beethoven of the 'third period' we must change our perspective. In the last works—apart from the more wayward humour, the deeper, more spiritual pathos—a most significant feature is the increasing freedom of form. Throughout his career Beethoven believed in reprises, but he had countless devices for enhancing their interest. Rarely indeed, once he reached maturity, did he lazily or mechanically give us 'the band as before.' The whole scheme of the later works took on more subtlety. Could anyone, hearing it for the first time, have foretold the key of the second movement of the C sharp minor Quartet, or foreseen the marvellous way in which Beethoven makes harmonic sense of such a remote key, in the course of the whole design of the work? Such things are emphatically not 'according to Cocker.' They show a master striking out into ever wider fields of harmonic and formal discovery.

And it was still more wonderful that the later Beethoven should have tried to reconcile with these discoveries a new and elaborate polyphony. No one would say he succeeded. The fugues are often rough and crabbed. It was left to later symphonists—to Brahms, to Franck, to our own Elgar—to complete the reconciliation. But should not this polyphonic interest, on 'Feste's' own showing, give the later Beethoven some of Bach's 'modern' appeal? 'Feste' says, very justly, that a good tune and good counterpoint are titles to musical immortality. He will not deny Beethoven many a good tune. If his later polyphony, from the modern standpoint, is not exactly 'good,' at least it is altogether remarkable. On the whole, then, Beethoven's chance of immortality should not be so very much worse than Bach's.

But the more conventional figure of the 'middle period' still overshadows this later Beethoven. Those who go to chamber concerts have the best chance of knowing him. But seldom, even now, does one hear in public any of those last five Pianoforte Sonatas which I sometimes think are worth all the others.

I am far from proposing that our chief pianists should often assail our ears with the 'axes and crowbars' of the 'Hammerklavier' fugue. Still less do I advocate an indiscriminate revival of early Beethoven. I am aware, too, that his periods overlap, the first into the second, the second into the third, inextricably. I simply suggest that by taking a broader view of his work as a whole, and by grasping more firmly the essential features of the masterpieces of all three periods, we should ask Beethoven, at each stage of his career, for what he can give. In that way we can get a truer, more elastic perspective.

I know I have only touched the fringe of a very big subject. On Beethoven's instrumentation, for example, there is much to be said which, in fairness to 'Feste,' his many interested readers must not anticipate.

THE CLAVIER TOCCATAS OF BACH.

By SYDNEY GREW.

(Continued from April number, page 162.)

V.

The Fugues of the Clavier Toccatas have even less of scientific subtlety and contrapuntal intricacy than is customary in Bach Fugues. Their counterpoint is freely instrumental. Their spirit is the Toccata spirit of energy, emotional directness, and poetic freedom. They are not perfect examples of Fugue as Bach established the Fugue in the period of his latest maturity. They are not as the 'great' G minor Organ Fugue or as the Fugues in the Organ Toccatas in F major and D minor (Dorian). They are as the Fugues in such works as the Organ Toccata in D minor, the Preludes and Fugues in E flat (St. Anne), E minor ('short'), C minor (the early work in Novello's edition, Book II.), and so forth. They are not, however, so structurally free as the 'great' E minor Organ Fugue or the Fugue of the Fantasia and Fugue in C minor. They are associated in spirit with the Organ Prelude and Fugue in D major, for they are comparatively early works, the Clavier Toccatas in G minor, D minor, and E minor belonging to the years 1708-17, and those in F sharp minor and C minor to the years 1717-23—1722 is the year of the first book of 'The Well-Tempered Clavier.' They are all subordinated to the requirements of their respective Toccatas; and while they never break out into formless rhapsody in the way of the Organ Fantasia and Fugue in A minor (Novello's Edition, Book XII.), they retain an invariable air of spontaneity and unstudied ease. They represent the Fugue 'unbuttoned.' They are not exceptionally difficult to play. Except for the first Fugue in the F sharp minor, they lie well within the technique of the pianist who can play, say, the C major, C minor, G minor, and B flat major, Fugues of the first part of the '48.' Even the difficult Fugue in the F sharp minor is not so troublesome as the G major from the same book of the '48.' They would form admirable studies for developing the alert and easy style most suitable for the playing of Bach. To students who have for a time been acquainted with the Suites and 'Well-Tempered Clavier,' they stand as a sort of 'Open Sesame' to the entrance which admits to the entire treasures of the master. They should prove a very safe medium for the first introduction of Bach to an average audience, particularly when played in conjunction with the Toccata of which they form part. The order in which the Toccatas are set out in this study of the works indicates the order of their poetical intensity. If the F sharp minor be placed after the C minor, it may be taken to indicate also their relative artistic value; though to attempt to set in relative order such exquisite works as these two is to waste effort. One might say that the first Fugue in the F sharp minor is the greatest movement of all the score that comprise the five Toccatas, which would place the F sharp minor ahead of the C minor; but beyond this argument would be futile. The Fugues generally end with a rich Coda in Toccata style, the last Fugue in the C minor closing thus with an effect of musical beauty and poetic significance scarcely surpassed elsewhere in Bach. The prevailing atmosphere of the Fugues is poetic. Their subjects are clear; they are developed organically, but in performance the subjects prove to be less important in the economy of the Fugues than the phrases and sentences that make up the larger sections.

The first Fugue in the G minor is Handelian:

EX. 10.

It would make a good organ piece, as indeed would the whole of the first part of the G minor Toccata. In form this Fugue is the least compact of all the Toccata Fugues. In style it is not contrapuntally clear. It is properly an Allegro of the type found in non-Bach free Suites. The second Fugue also is Handelian, but more compact and vigorous than the first. It is not unlike such independent Giges as the large Gigue in G minor of Handel.

The D minor Fugues form a delightful pair when one is in the mood for them, which mood must be a mood of easy-going leisure. Otherwise they seem over-long and over-elementary in style and content. They are as detached from the bustle and emotional pressure of modern art as are the essays in the Spectator. The second is a most delightful and happy piece of music.

The E minor Fugues are pure Bach. The first has a strain of yearning that approaches melancholy:

EX. 11.

It is potentially passionate, but in the result the piece represents the great Bachian, early German, poetic mood of grave lyrical sweetness. The second E minor Fugue is the only example in these Toccatas of the class of music that comprises the Organ Toccata in D minor. Its subject is five bars long:

In mood this Fugue is delicately animated and very sweet and pure.

The Fugues in the F sharp minor Toccata are in vivid contrast to each other. The first is one of the most powerful and forceful works of Bach. Its close, however, is calm, in keeping with the prevailing poetical character of the Toccata. The second is characterised by a noble emotional 'urge.' It is less physically intense than the first, but it is perhaps more spiritually affecting. It is the complement of the lento section of the first part of the Toccata. The subjects of these two Fugues are as follows:

These two pieces appeal to me as representative of the essential Bach.

Regarded as a single piece, the Fugue of the C minor Toccata is over 150 bars long. But it has no absolute length any more than a perfect life has absolute length. It is all happiness, from the first sounding of the subject:

to the interrupted full close that leads into the Coda.

The point of this interrupted full close is one of the great moments in music. It is Bach's last expression of the Toccata-spirit in the form of actual Toccatas, and the Coda contains the ultimate thought of full twenty years of his work. It contains indeed the ultimate realisation of two centuries of artistic effort. As we touch the chord of interruption (it is merely the chord of the super-tonic minor 9th in first inversion as used a thousand times by Bach and by the predecessors of Bach), a light surprises us; more than a light—a refulgent glow from some eternal source of light, by power of which we see that the Bach Toccata is a thing to be cherished, not discredited, and that this ultimate Toccata Fugue is nothing less than a winged flight into the purest and most ethereal world the human sense can know, the world of spiritual beauty. The student who realises this finish of the Toccatas has 'found' Bach.

Interludes.

The question of strict regard to an old—or even a new—composer's intentions is more often than not a matter of the letter versus the spirit. We know that with Bach and Handel the music was usually more important than the medium. Thus, in the set of Schübler Preludes, we find Bach taking vocal solos from the cantatas and transferring them to the organ, sometimes without the alteration of a note. Purists who object to transcriptions on principle should examine these Preludes. When they see Bach giving a soprano solo to one manual, and its elaborate 'cello obbligato to another (as in 'Bleib' bei uns'), without the slightest scruples as to the fitness of the idiom for its new instrument, they must surely relax their views. Of Handel's indifference in such matters there is no need to speak. Instruments generally were in a more or less embryo stage, with their characteristics few and ill-defined, so that it was natural for composers to put purely musical considerations first. But even later, when this argument no longer held good, we find composers surprisingly free. Thus Beethoven took his D major Violin Concerto and changed it into one for pianoforte. He arranged his second Symphony as a pianoforte Trio, and even produced a string Quintet from his Octet for wind instruments—a sea change if ever there was one. And we know that he not only countenanced a pianoforte-duet arrangement of his seventh and eighth Symphonies, but showed his approval in the most practical way by correcting the proof-sheets.

It may be argued that in these cases the composers were dealing with their own works, and therefore they established no precedent which would justify our tampering with their scores. But arrangements of all kinds are now so generally tolerated that the time for argument is past. I quoted the above examples as a proof that the great composers were by no means wedded to the original forms of their works. It has been left to some of their admirers to make a fetish of the written note.

A good example of this slavish respect for the original text, even when everybody admits its faultiness, is to be found in Schubert's C major Symphony. In the peroration of the first movement occurs what Prout calls 'a very grave miscalculation,' the subject being given to the wood-wind and horns, accompanied by the strings, brass, and drums. As scored by Schubert, the accompaniment hopelessly drowns the theme. Prout says: 'Had Schubert ever had the opportunity of hearing the Symphony played, he would probably have re-scored the whole of this peroration.' We may safely leave out the 'probably.' Prout then goes on to discuss various ways in which the matter may be put right, only to dismiss them with the observation that 'the retouching of the scores of the great masters is objectionable on principle, and we must take them, as men take their wives, "for better, for worse."*

The analogy is not perfect, for the wise husband loses no opportunity of improving his wife, hopeless as the task too often appears. But would the giving of the theme to the trombones in unison, and so making the passage say what Schubert obviously wanted it to say, be 'retouching'? Is it not rather 'correcting' or 'remedying'? We should leave a score untouched if there is any respectable weight of opinion in favour of the original being correct or preferable in any way. But in such cases as this, where there can be no two opinions as to the composer's intentions, we must consider the spirit rather than the letter.

It is not a very long step from the few passages which are faulty through the composer's miscalculation to the far more numerous examples in which the failure is due to the limitations of the instruments of the period. Such passages are almost entirely confined to orchestral works, and, with scarcely an exception, have to do with the wind department and especially the brass. True, there are some cases in Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonatas, where he has been hampered by the limited range of the keyboard. Thus, in the early Sonata in D, the short keyboard leads to a miserably weak effect:

There can be no question as to what Beethoven wished to do here: if we have any doubt it is settled by the form of the same passage later in the tonic. Does any purist object to the above being carried on in octaves? Most editions give the extended form in small notes as an optional reading. The 1915 Bosworth reprint of the Liszt Edition goes farther, dropping the original version and boldly carrying the passage up to A.†

Now, if we may be allowed to alter this passage, why should we be content to go on suffering far worse things in the Symphonies, owing to the wretchedly inadequate brass instruments to which Beethoven was doomed? Take, as a good—or

* 'The Orchestra,' vol. ii., p. 105.

† But circumstances alter cases. Here we have a weak inverted pedal. In the D minor Sonata, Op. 31, No. 2, a similar keyboard handicap leads to an example of inverted pedal so beautiful that we may well bless the limitation that brought it about:

This is perhaps the only case where a composer has really scored off an obstacle.

bad—example, the passage beginning at bar 114 of the slow movement of the fifth Symphony. Here the bass strings have a florid version of the subject, while the rest of the strings, the wood-wind, and horns play repeated chords. Can anybody deny that the balance of the passage is upset by the vagaries of the trumpets? They have only two notes available during the eight bars, the C and G. The harmony of bars 1-2 is A flat, so they give us their tonic—C, the third of the orchestra's chord. Bar 3 and the first two beats of bar 4 modulate to B flat minor, so there is nothing doing for the trumpets. The third beat of bar 4 gives us a dominant on G, and leads to a bar in C minor, whereupon the trumpets improve the occasion with G and C. But it is a mere flash in the pan, for in the next bar the music is again in B flat minor, which, as the linguists in the Army say, is 'no bon.' Then comes the following (I reduce the harmony to its bare chords):

Here we have what may quite decently and truly be called a blasted tonic and dominant of C obtruded into the key of A flat, merely because the notes happened to be lying round handy. Can anything be more inept, especially in the final bar, where the brilliant and dominating tone of the trumpet doubles the leading-note? Prout objects to this doubling, and to the 'abrupt cessation of the trumpets in the middle of a phrase,' 'but' (he adds) 'the fault, if fault it be, rests not with Beethoven, but with the imperfection of the instruments for which he had to write.' Exactly. Then why should not a matter of this kind be rectified? There are many other examples—far too many to refer to—which are a constant source of irritation to the listener.

Hereabouts an angry reader—in Belfast probably—begins to bridle. 'What's all this? Are you daring to suggest that the Immortal Nine shall be re-scored? Hands off, Vandal!' I 'hands off' at once, realising that I am merely one of the rank and file of the profession. It is not for the likes of me to say what ought to be done. I merely ask why we should go on regarding the letter of Beethoven as being more important than the spirit. But my angry reader will, I hope, allow me to take a peep into the future. . . . The result is the following review from a Musical Times of 1940:

'Symphonies 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9 of Beethoven, adapted to the modern orchestra.' Full Scores, octavo and miniature. (London: Novello & Co.)

'We may safely anticipate a warm welcome for this edition of some of the best works of a composer who, for want of such a revision, has for some years past met with neglect. Most of our readers will remember how, in 1925, an International Conference of conductors and other eminent musicians met at Brussels to consider the advisability of bringing certain passages in Beethoven's Symphonies into line with modern orchestral developments. At first the general feeling seemed to favour no more than a re-writing of some of the passages in which the composer had obviously been hampered by the imperfect instruments of his day. A minority, led by Prof. Toomer (Principal of Wigan University) wished to go further and add parts for trombone, tuba, contrafagotto, and even the profundophone, the new machine-blown instrument which recently made such an impression at the Commonwealth Hall. This was bitterly opposed by the more conservative section of the Conference, but eventually Prof. Toomer carried his point. Indeed, so completely did the pendulum swing across that the final decision was to re-score the works, leaving Beethoven's arrangement where possible—e.g., the string and drum parts, and most of the solo wood-wind passages. The task was entrusted to a committee of five—Sir Hugo Burls (London), Professor Abner P. Wagborne (Gippsville, Ga.), Mons. J. Bonhomie (Paris), Herr Minenwerfer (Berlin), and Signor Olla Podrida (Rome). The reputation of these musicians is a sufficient guarantee that the difficult task has been performed with the necessary combination of reverence and skill. Not a note of the original has been altered, and the new edition contains no harmony that was not written, or obviously implied, by Beethoven. We should hesitate to give an opinion on the merits of the new scores if we had no more than the printed page to help us. But, as our readers know, the new versions have all been heard in London during the past few months, especially at the ten days' festival of old classical works directed by Dr. Cecilia Bompas, whose virile methods are remarkable, even in this age of masterly women conductors. Having heard Beethoven in his new guise, we can honestly endorse the opinion of the musical critic of The Times, who wittily says that Beethoven may be regarded as a composer who has exchanged a glorious past for a brilliant future.

'We have not space to consider the scores in detail, nor is such consideration necessary. It will suffice if we draw attention to a few of the passages which, as scored by Beethoven, have been an infliction to many ears during the past two decades. Perhaps no movement gains more than the Finale to No. 7. Until the performance of the new version, we may venture to say that nobody has ever yet heard the theme:

at its first presentation, and at its re-appearance on the return to the original key half-way through the movement. We were for a long while inclined to blame the conductor for allowing the trumpets and horns to assert themselves too much, but of late we have come to the conclusion that the passage is really one of the very few cases in which Beethoven miscalculated the balance. Support to this view comes from Hector Berlioz*, who in his critical remarks on this Symphony says, "We should better appreciate the freshness of coquetry of this phrase . . . if the chords taken in upper parts of the wind instruments were less dominating over the first violins singing in the medium register, whilst the second violins and violas accompany the melody below with a tremolo in double-stopping."

'For years we detested this portion of the movement, with the tonic and dominant blared out by the brass. We knew what the first violins were supposed to be playing, and we believed them to be playing it, for we saw them hard at work. But we have always had to take the result on trust until a few weeks ago, when we heard the theme given to all the violins, ff, in octaves. The hideous single notes of the old trumpets and horns have been superseded by chords for the complete brass, mf, with the syncopation of the original retained, of course. The high wood-wind parts remain, with the addition of an extra flute and clarinet, but now played f instead of ff. The lower string part consists of violas and 'celli divided. The gay song of the violins comes out with exhilarating effect against the rich background, and the movement at last lives up to its old title of "the dance of humanity." The only other part of this Finale that has been drastically revised is the section marked fff. This is almost, if not quite, the only time Beethoven employed such a direction, and we may fairly believe that (not to put too fine a point on it) he wanted a jolly good row. Perhaps contemporary ears thought it was a jolly good row. But to those of us accustomed to the sonority of a modern orchestra, the result was merely a forte. It may be said that a big effect depends more on the vigour of the thought expressed than on dynamics. We willingly concede the point; but, after all, the dynamic side is far more important than is sometimes imagined. Play the opening of the C minor Symphony pp, and observe the result. It is no longer Fate knocking at the door: it is merely a woodpecker enjoying himself. The fact is, pace and force are the making of many movements, just as long-drawn thought or delicacy is the prime consideration in others. Here we have a passage which obviously demands terrific pace and tremendous power. Beethoven got the first, and did his best to secure the second. But it was a bad best, with eight wood-wind and four (natural) brass instruments.

* A neglected and almost forgotten French composer (1803-69) who did much for the art of orchestration, even writing a treatise on the subject. We wish some of our conductors could see their way to reviving a few of his best works, such as the 'Queen Mab' Scherzo, his brilliant version of the 'Rakoczy' March, &c.

The passage as now scored is a cataclysm over which Beethoven would have smacked his lips. The audience at its first performance were startled, several being removed suffering from shock. A few purists wrote to the papers protesting, but we believe that the result would have pleased the composer. He would probably have regretted the casualties—though we cannot be sure of that. And the purists must admit that far more people are upset by harrowing plays of the Grand Guignol type than are ever likely to be bowled over by the most strenuous orchestral playing.

'In this passage, as elsewhere, the greatest gain comes from the inclusion of the trombones and tuba. It must always be a matter for regret that Beethoven made so slight use of the former. Why, for example, in the fifth Symphony did he reserve them for the Finale? There are passages in the first movement that cry out for them. They are absent from the first movement of No. 9, and enter in the Scherzo to play a very humble part—only partly redeemed by the single high D with which the bass trombone so splendidly ushers in the D major section. Even in the Finale they are made to do far too much in the miserable rôle of support to the voice parts, for all the world like the serpent or ophicleide at the church blaring out the plainsong in order to help lame cantors over the stile. The fact is, the trombone (which we now recognise as the noblest voice in the orchestra) was under a cloud during most of Beethoven's life. It was mostly reserved for the wretched ecclesiastical duty mentioned above, and rarely had a chance to show its capabilities. Think of what modern composers do with three trombones in harmony ppp, and see what Beethoven missed by being born too soon!

'The reader may ask how the thematic material of the Symphonies bears the burden of the additional orchestral parts. We know that certain types of music lose more than they gain when subjected to such a test. They become tumid rather than weighty. Without exception, we think it will be found that the balance here is all on the profit side. There are many passages in which the thought was profound, but the expression meagre. For example, this from the first movement of No. 5:

Ex. 4. Wind. Str. Wind, p Str. &c.

'We have always been impressed here, both by the weighty chords and the antiphony. But we have also felt that the means were too slender for the full realisation of Beethoven's intention. Apparently conductors have felt the same, for they have generally adopted an even more threatening attitude than usual in their endeavour to extract from their players as much tone as possible. The version before us gives a magnificent effect, the antiphony now being between the whole of the brass, and the strings and wood-wind. The effect of the chords by eight horns, four trumpets, three trombones, and tuba is one of sombre magnificence.

'We hope we have said enough to indicate the general lines on which the revisers have worked. We believe that the best movements of these Symphonies are as imperishable as anything in music. There can be no more justification for continuing their performance on the inadequate lines of former days than for playing Beethoven's keyboard works on a pianoforte of 1818. There is nothing specially sacred in the actual scoring of Beethoven. He fixed certain broad principles, but it was inevitable that he could do no more, owing to many of the most important constituents of the orchestra being either uninvented or in an embryo stage. With an orchestral composer of to-day, the instrumentation is so important that it cannot be disturbed without injury. Indeed, too often the medium is more important than the matter, an unsound state of affairs. With Beethoven, the medium was often quite inadequate for the proper expression of the matter. The first of these discrepancies cannot be put right. Fortunately, the second can be. It has, we believe, been splendidly done in the edition of which we have been speaking.

'That such a step will escape censure is too much to expect. Already the storm is brewing. Last week the Society for the Protection of Antient Music met and passed a resolution to the effect that they "viewed with apprehension and alarm the re-scoring of certain of Beethoven's works, and called on Sir Augustus Bealby, the Minister of Fine Arts, to nip such vandalism in the bud, before it could wing its flight and spread its miasmatic influence farther." We believe this and similar protests will be unavailing. When organists find Bach's works better on an old-fashioned tracker organ with heavy touch and few accessories; when pianists think the "Appassionata" sounds better on a pianoforte of a hundred and fifty years ago than on a concert-grand of to-day; when a man who wants to go somewhere safely and quickly prefers a motor car to an airplane; then, and not before, shall we believe that there are ears that can tolerate Beethoven played on the imperfect orchestra for which he wrote: not because it was all his fancy painted it but because it was that or nothing.'

Well, there is my prophecy. 'Nonsense!' says a reader, taking off his coat. 'Bolshevism!' says another, putting on his thickest boots. Perhaps so. Those of us who live the longest will see the most. You and I may never hear the effects arranged by Burls, Wagborne, and their co-workers. But I believe that one of two things will happen: Our children will hear them, or they will hear no Beethoven at all save at antiquarian concerts or lectures. In a word, Beethoven will either be re-scored, or discussed as a fossil. Can we doubt which the shade of that tempestuous Titan would prefer?

FESTE.

REGISTERS.

By AGNES J. LARKCOM.*

There is perhaps more controversy and disagreement about the Registers of the human voice than about any other part of the Art of teaching Singing.

We have teachers who deny the existence of registers, teachers who say they should be ignored, teachers who insist on five, or three, or two; some who train the registers up, some who train them down, and again others who never think about them at all.

I propose to put before you in as simple a manner as possible, the theory of registers as taught by Manuel Garcia, and explained by him in a paper read before the Royal Society of Great Britain in 1855, after a long period of research accompanied by experiments on himself and others, conducted on absolutely scientific lines.

I was permitted some years ago, by the courtesy of the Royal Society, to have a copy of the original address made, as delivered to them and recorded in their 'Proceedings.' The address is in exceedingly technical language, but I hope to make its main teaching clear without using many of the somewhat jaw-breaking terms which seem so dear to the medical profession.

I think we are safe in taking for granted that every note produced by the human voice is formed in the larynx by the vibrations of the vocal cords.

These ligaments in the female larynx are somewhat less than half an inch in length.

As far as we know the glottis alone has the power of varying the pitch of the voice, variations which have been known to extend in some exceptional voices to three or more octaves.

How can such a tiny instrument as the larynx produce such a great variety of pitch without in some way, at some point, modifying its action?

I expect we are all more or less familiar with the theory of vibrating strings as explained so beautifully by Professor Tyndall in his treatise on 'Sound.' By referring to that we shall see that in all vibrating strings the pitch of the sound produced is determined by these conditions—namely, the length, tension, thickness and density of the vibrating element.

In passing I may as well remark that I am now dealing entirely with the pitch of sounds, not at all with quality. It is, in my opinion, the aspect of the subject with which the registers are most concerned.

We find then that in all vibrating strings, a long, thick, or heavy cord vibrates more slowly at a given tension than a short, thin, or light one. We have only to look at the inside of a pianoforte or at a violin to recognise that this principle underlies the mechanism of all manufactured stringed instruments. In a violin there are four strings of equal length but different thickness. The pitch of each differs according to its thickness, and individually can be varied by shortening it by finger pressure.

If a stringed instrument is out of tune we tighten (or stretch) the string to sharpen, or loosen it to flatten, but the principle is always the same.

The human larynx seems to possess some of the characteristics of a stringed and some of a wind instrument, but the aspect of the case which is of such great interest and importance to us as teachers of singing is the fact that the vocal apparatus as a whole is provided with muscles which can thicken, make thinner, tighten or shorten the cords or vocal ligaments.

Manuel Garcia defined a register as 'a series of homogeneous sounds produced by one mechanism.'

* A Paper read before the Society of Women Musicians.

He recognised three registers in most female voices and divided the two lower into two parts.

He taught that the mechanism employed in varying the pitch of the voice was of two kinds—one a closure of the cartilages, and the other a stretching of the ligaments. Both closure and stretching have the effect of raising the pitch.

The glottis or vibrating element of the human voice consists roughly of two parts, one of cartilage (the Arytenoids or Pyramids) which close, and the other of ligaments which stretch. The two parts into which he divided the chest and medium (or falsetto as he called it) registers, include the notes produced first by closure, then followed by those produced by stretching. The singer is not aware when the action changes from closure to stretching, and it is rarely noticed by the listener. Behnke used to call these divisions the 'Lower Thick and Upper Thick' and the 'Lower Thin and Upper Thin.' The definition is not elegant, but it expresses the physical condition very well.

In the lowest register (that which is usually called the 'chest' register), the whole glottis is thrown into loose, full vibrations. As the pitch rises the cartilages can be seen to close gradually; then when their work is done, the ligaments begin to stretch, and that goes on as long as it can be done without any feeling whatever of effort or fatigue.

Signor Garcia showed that the ligaments are connected with the outside of the trachea or windpipe by means of a fleshy membrane.

All through this membrane are tiny muscular fibres of different lengths which seem to have the power of drawing the membrane towards the middle of the larynx, thus by contraction thickening the resisting element, and having the effect of making the cords vibrate slowly at a given tension.

In producing a chest note we have therefore these conditions: the vocal cords made thick and heavy by the drawing forward of the membrane, a contraction of the larynx, and considerable resistance to the pressure of air from the lungs. The result is, or ought to be, a brilliant and powerful tone.

Gradually the arytenoid cartilages meet and close and raise the pitch of each succeeding note, then they cease, and the work is carried on by the stretching of the ligaments. It is here that great care must be taken.

The stretching movement must be continued only as long as it is perfectly easy. Directly there is the least sensation of tightness or effort the proper limits of the chest register have been reached or passed, and the modification called changing to the medium or falsetto ought to be brought about.

This modification consists of relaxing the membrane so that a thinner surface is presented to the ascending column of air. The cords are loosened, the cartilages separated, and the whole process is repeated, the only difference being that as the vocal ligaments are thinner, the tension necessary to produce a higher note is less than that necessary to form the last of the chest register, and there is no strain or fatigue.

This register can be used by the singer with perfect ease up to about C₄, when most people begin to experience the need for further modification.

At or about this point, if the voice is being used with ease, 'stop closure' is supposed to begin. That is, the cords are closed, sometimes at each end, sometimes halfway, so that only a very short portion can vibrate and high notes are produced without difficulty at a quite moderate tension. If the medium is persisted in, the singer is using what Sir Morell Mackenzie used to call the 'long reed.' This method is tiring, but the notes are very strong. It is, however, dangerous to the majority of voices.

My experience as a teacher has shown me that in the majority of voices the head notes are the last to be developed. We all know that they are generally the first to go. It would almost appear as if the production of true head tones depended on a certain power of 'accommodation' in the vocal ligaments which belongs to the prime of life only. Certainly the head notes of the most gifted singers tend to deteriorate at about the same epoch that the eye begins to lose its power of accommodation, and it is foolish to try to arrest their decay. The medium or chest notes are available for many more years, and sometimes remain beautiful even in advanced age.

I have in several instances (I can recall at least six) noticed what appeared to me to be a fourth register in the female voice, that is, a certain adaptation which gave to high sopranos the power of singing the notes from D to A and even B₇ in alt, with precision and ease. It has seemed to me that these notes were produced by a kind of damping process. They are, of course, unusual, but when the power exists singing these acute notes involves no effort, and causes no fatigue; in fact, exertion tends to spoil them. I expect many teachers and singers have also observed that sometimes when there is a slight cold, extremely high notes can occasionally be sung with ease and clearness. Manuel Garcia, when commenting on this phenomenon, suggested that perhaps a little mucous had collected on the vocal cords in such a manner that they were 'damped,' and the vibrating portion in a way artificially shortened, thus temporarily making very high sounds possible and easy. (Perhaps a node is formed and the resultant notes are harmonics.)

So we see that if voices are trained carefully, and if the principles underlying the different adaptations are understood and acted on, the best possible use can be made of the vocal mechanism, and its widest compass used without fear of injury or strain.

Actual observation of the movements involved in singing are so difficult that I think there will always be some things which are more or less matters of conjecture. The theory of adaptation I have endeavoured to explain offers at any rate an admirable working hypothesis. It rests on known scientific laws which can easily be tested in stringed instruments, and the teacher who bases her work on these principles and uses care and judgment in their application is not likely to do much mischief, and will probably obtain good results.

The rather fashionable method very much to the fore to-day of making the medium register do the work of three, though avoiding the difficulty of the change, sometimes mis-called the 'break' (it only becomes a break through misuse or abuse), tends in my opinion to limit the voice both as to compass and tone. Contraltos do not avail themselves of the brilliantly resonant chest notes which form the most useful and attractive part of their special endowment, and sopranos do not develop the fluty pure head notes which are so beautiful and characteristic. The mezzo alone is fairly happy.

The great principle which underlies everything is no doubt ease of emission based on deep and well-controlled breathing. If this is ensured, given that the teacher is dealing with a young unspoiled voice, there is not likely to be much difficulty.

Unfortunately the desire which is so frequently present in the minds of both teacher and pupil to produce brilliant telling tone in a short time on the notes E₇, E, and F (first line and first space) and strong resonant notes for sopranos an octave higher, is a strong temptation to force up the respective registers.

A steady, gentle, persistent use in the appropriate registers of sustained sounds on different vowels, 'Ee' frequently for the first medium notes, and 'Oo' or 'Oh' for the first head notes, is almost certain to bring about equality of tone and satisfactory blending.

When mischief has been done by misuse of the registers and the poor student is suffering from 'nodules' on the vocal cords (a frequent result of forcing up the chest register), rest is imperative for a time; then the medium must be trained down by means of very gentle exercise of the voice, beginning above the point of difficulty and persisted in until control is regained, and the muscles have returned to their normal elasticity. The use of the exercises for flexibility found in Garcia's 'Art of Singing,' published by Leonard & Co., cannot be too highly recommended. These exercises help to blend the registers, to smooth over rough places and make transition easy; they also strengthen the throat and assist in obtaining breath control.

Personally I think a singer ought always to know when and where she changes her register, but her aim should be to conceal it from the listener.

There is a great difference in individuals as to the ease or the reverse with which the change is effected. Some throats seem to do it so easily that even the teacher has difficulty in detecting it. These cases are very 'grateful and comforting' to the teacher, but are not so common as one could wish. In many the change is difficult and noticeable, and only patient practice can overcome the trouble. There is great divergence of opinion amongst voice trainers as to the advisability of talking to students about their registers. Some teachers of high repute find they can do their work better and obtain finer results by not calling the attention of the student to the means by which these results are gained. Personally I have always preferred to explain my reasons and methods to my pupils. I like them to be aware of their dangers and to be ready to resist temptation through knowledge and understanding of the delicate mechanism they are using and developing. Still I have the greatest respect for the workers who differ from me in this, and recognise that the same ends may be attained by different ways.

In bringing forward this simple statement of Manuel Garcia's observations on the registers of the human voice, I feel I am offering something which may be useful in helping to solve the difficulties which are met with by young teachers when they first begin to practise the delightful but difficult art of teaching singing.

Manuel Garcia was a very old man when I had the privilege of studying with him, but up to the time of his peaceful and beautiful death in 1907, at the patriarchal age of 101 years, he never lost his interest in science, or relaxed in his unselfish devotion to the highest ideals of vocal art.

His intellect was keen, his taste severe. The length of his experience as a teacher gave him unique opportunities for testing his theories and watching the results of their practical application.

The methods of a master of such noble character, rare gifts, penetrating insight, and widespread and remarkable success, must always be of interest to every serious teacher of singing.

Many theories have been advanced and advocated, and considerable matter has been written on the subject since the day when Garcia's 'Treatise on the Art of Singing' first saw the light. But amidst much that is valuable and a good deal that is worthless, that wonderful work still seems to retain the place awarded to it when it first appeared. It remains to-day what it was a couple of generations ago, the classical manual for the teacher and the safe practical guide for the student in nearly all that appertains to the beautiful art of singing.

Occasional Notes.

Mr. Ernest Newman lost no time MR. NEWMAN in replying to our 'Occasional IN A HURRY. Notes' of April 1. Indeed, thanks to the Musical Times being published a couple of days in advance he was able to deal with us in the Birmingham Daily Post of March 31. This was sharp work, but it is pretty certain that less haste and more reflection would have ensured a better result. We feel that certain passages in Mr. Newman's answer should be given as wide publicity as possible, so we propose to quote them, with brief comment. Mr. Newman makes much of the alleged anonymity of our remarks. But the article was editorial, and we have yet to learn that editorial matter must be signed or regarded as anonymous. Mr. Newman, of course, knows quite well that he has no grievance on this score, and merely harps on it (he uses the word 'anonymous' seven times) in order to eke out his scanty ammunition in a counter-attack so promptly delivered as to show obvious signs of haste—even flurry.

As our readers will remember, we IT WAS ONLY took exception, first, to Mr. HIS FUN. Newman's ill-natured attempts to wet-blanket a scheme that, put forward as it was by a committee of representative musicians and other public men, deserved a fair trial. Second, we protested against his easy assumption that those of us who do not see eye to eye with him must therefore be fools—the epithet was his. Mr. Newman's 'reply' to this is an expression of wonder 'that professional musicians have so much poorer a sense of humour than most other people.' 'Why is it,' he goes on, plaintively, 'when you chaff them they think you are angry and abusive? . . . If musicians object to criticism in general . . . they have the simple remedy in their own hands. . . . Anyone who puts an idea into the air must expect people who differ from him to put up a barrage against it.'

Much depends on the nature of the 'barrage.' We expect people who differ from us to argue, not abuse. Our complaint was not that Mr. Newman criticised the League of Arts scheme and song-book. On the contrary, we objected to the absence of criticism. To describe the compilers of a book as 'people utterly destitute of a sense of humour'; to dismiss its contents as being mostly 'the merest doggerel and commonplace'; to call the work as a whole 'a roaring joke,' and 'pitiful stuff'; and (in order to make the curse thoroughly comprehensive) to dub its prospective users as 'fools,' may be Mr. Newman's idea of 'criticism.' We are glad to believe it is nobody else's. We admit that it is lively to read, and we are sure it is easy to write, but we see nothing else in its favour.

Mr. Newman's idea of banter is also peculiar. He says that we do not know when we are being 'smiled at.' We 'mistake chaff for bad temper.' Here is the case in the form of a brief duologue:

E.N. (heatedly) —Your scheme is absurd, your book ridiculous, and your supporters fools, though I won't bother you or myself by any critical considerations.

M.T. (mildly) —Why not give the scheme fair play? If you don't feel disposed to help it, you might at least abstain from damning it. If it is absurd, it will fail soon enough. And don't be so ready with your 'fool.' Since when have you had the monopoly of wisdom?

E.N. (at boiling point).—You have no sense of humour, and, like most musicians, object to criticism. I was merely chaffing. (Boiling over.) Can't you see I'm merely pulling your leg, and enjoying myself hugely at your expense? (Foaming.) It's only my fun! (Pawing the air.) I m smiling at you.

Mr. Newman readily assumes that we had him in mind when we spoke of people 'whose musical and spiritual home is in Germany.' Far be it from us to object to his fitting on the cap. He goes on to say:

I cheerfully confess that one at least of my musical homes is in Germany. But my musical morals are those of a debauchee. Like the sailor who has a wife in every port, I keep up not merely two but half-a-dozen musical establishments. I have a musical home in Germany: I have others, equally dear to my immoral heart, in France, and Italy, and Russia, and Finland, and Scandinavia, and England.

He must not imagine himself to be singular in his appreciation of the best foreign music. We hope that we too are not blind to its merits.

But we think that this appreciation should not debar us from showing sympathy for the work of our own countrymen. Even some slight bias is pardonable. With Mr. Newman the bias is in the other direction, and is anything but slight. His internationalism, like that of a small and cantankerous section of our politicians, generally resolves itself into a warm admiration of every country but his own. He includes England in his list of musical homes—appropriately putting it last, with Germany at the other end. If we may judge from his customary attitude towards our native composers, England is less a musical home than a week-end lodging to which he repairs (not in the best of humour) on as few occasions as possible. He attempts to turn the tables by pointing out that Messrs. Novello 'owe a very large part of their prosperity to the publication of German music.' As everybody knows, the bulk of the Novello catalogue consists of British works, chiefly choral. When Mr. Newman's sympathy for native music is in the same generous proportion, his most intimate friends will rub their eyes, and ask 'Can this be Ernest?'

The more recent controversial 'E.N.' ON methods of Mr. Newman have RING-CRAFT. puzzled some of us. After reading the following naive avowal, they puzzle us no longer:

Not that I would deny that my manner is often most irritating. I admit it; indeed, it is designedly so. The technique is so absurdly simple that it is a mystery to me why its victims do not see through it at the first glance. Often a subject is well worth a couple of articles—or even three; but it is always best in these matters to let the second and third be motivated by someone else, and, for preference, by someone who has been annoyed by the first. Now there is no surer way of making the average man angry than by chaffing him. The master at whose feet I am proud to have sat is Jack Johnson: that dusky genius always used to make his fights easier for himself by throwing facetious remarks at his opponent, who got nettled, lost his temper, hit out wildly at his tormentor, and left his guard open. I do not pretend, of course, to anything like my master's consummate mastery. I am not comparing little things with great. I am only indicating the school in which I have been an unprofitable but still conscientious scholar. The technique, however, such as it is, has rarely failed me.

Every man to his taste. This is a free country, and nobody will wish to interfere with Mr. Newman in his choice of feet at which to sit, pupil-wise. We would only suggest that he shall go to some sporting friend, and inquire: (a) The opinion of boxers on the Johnsonian tactics with which he is so delighted; (b) What kind of reputation his 'master' bears in sporting circles; and (c) Why 'the dusky genius,' although now in England, is never heard of to-day, in spite of the unprecedented activity in the prize ring. When Mr. Newman has heard the answers, he will understand why his ambition to be looked on as the Jack Johnson of Journalism is not likely to be opposed. His fellow-writers gladly give him a walk-over.

We resist the temptation to discuss Mr. Newman's reply in further detail, because after all the real point is not merely what Mr. Newman thinks of the League of Arts or anything else. It is the far more important question as to whether musical differences of opinion are to be discussed with due regard to the decencies of debate, or settled by calling names. Mr. Newman's attitude towards those who differ from him has for some time been steadily becoming more abusive. For example, if (in company with many excellent musicians and critics) you are of opinion that a national school of music may, to a considerable extent, be based on folk-song, you are 'merely stupid people.' Those who wish folk-song to play a substantial part in school music are 'cranks, who, if they are not checked, will end in making the children as dull as themselves.'

THE COUNCIL OF THE LEAGUE OF Arts (Messrs. Granville Bantock, Rutland Boughton, John Ireland, Sir Edward Elgar, Benjamin Dale, &c., &c.), are 'pompously absurd.' A search of the file of Mr. Newman's articles written during the past two years would yield a long list of such 'chaff' and 'criticism.' Never did musical questions, and especially those concerned with our own composers and performers, need sympathetic and broad-minded discussion so much as at the present time. To such discussion nobody is more able to contribute than Mr. Newman—or less willing, apparently.

Musical journalism, and therefore THE TWO music generally, is the poorer since NEWMANS. he laid down the rapier for the bludgeon and began to run amok. Feeling that a protest was due—even overdue—we have ventured to make it. For the Ernest Newman who gave us 'A Study of Wagner,' and 'Gluck and the Opera' we have respect and admiration. We have neither for the far inferior writer of the same name who confesses proudly that his method of disputation is based on the less reputable tactics of the prize ring.

A writer in the Nottingham Evening News makes a complaint calculated to spread the idea that the production of Elgar's Violin Sonata at Æolian Hall on March 21 excited little attention in London. He says:

And what of the musical critics of the great newspapers? I searched the columns of the provincial editions on the following day—and found one small notice. The Times mentioned that the work had been produced, and that a full notice would appear in Monday's issue. The musical gentleman had forgotten about it by Monday, or I am blind. The remainder of the London Press contained nothing about the Sonata; the musical critics had been too busily engaged thinking out the virtues and the beauty of the foreign compositions elsewhere.

There is a third alternative to the two he suggests, viz., that the London Press only reached Nottingham in the shape of provincial editions. There were appreciative notices of the Sonata in The Times, Morning Post, Daily News, Daily Chronicle, Daily Mail, Evening News, Evening Standard (all on March 22), Referee (March 23), and Daily Telegraph (March 24). The fault probably lies with the editorial powers—that be who habitually insist that concert notices must appear somewhere in the following day's issue, even at the price of missing the early editions. It is part of an eagerness to be up to the minute with 'news.'

The system leads to other mis-
CRITICAL fortunes than the misconception SCRAMBLES. instanced above. It hampers the thinking and writing powers of the critic. In no other form of art, we imagine, is public judgment so hustled. There may be only an hour for a musical work, perhaps important and elaborate, to be sized up and the manuscript to be delivered. Next morning the criticism stands for ever, to guide the taste of the public, or submit to jealous scrutiny by the many musicians whose delight it is to direct bitter and sarcastic shafts at 'those critics.' The dangers of the system are as a rule admirably avoided by the experience and 'happy knack' of its practitioners, but they certainly exist and constantly endanger fairness to critic, artist, and public. There are cases where it can defeat its own ends. Performers cannot be expected to adapt their programmes to the exigencies of newspaper criticism, and a new work may appear towards the end of a concert. By that time the critic is far away, writing that the work was 'announced for performance,' or 'included in the programme.' Otherwise it is ignored, and the expressed judgment which is looked upon as
'news' goes by the board.

ERNEST NEWMAN'S DEPARTURE FROM BIRMINGHAM.

BY W. BEESON.

In his own inimitable way of informing the public of an important fact, Mr. Ernest Newman, in the Birmingham Daily Post announces his impending departure from Birmingham, a city which is, he considers, unmusical and in a general way uncultured.

There are those who will say that if Mr. Newman could have tolerated an uncultured city for thirteen years it is rather late in the day to sever his connection with it purely on the above grounds, but readers of Mr. Newman are aware that he has been expressing his opinion of the city of his adoption for a number of years. Mine is not the pen nor is it an ideal occasion on which to write an appreciation of Mr. Newman, but my reason for rushing into print is that having recently perused a few of the paragraphs that have here and there crept into the Press anent Mr. Newman leaving Birmingham, I feel I should like to put some members of the musical (and all of the unmusical) public right upon one or two little matters in which they so freely express their hastily made judgment of this great critic. To begin with, one writer considers he has no sense of humour. This writer might just as well accuse Mr. Newman of a lack of mnemonic development, and the simile would be equally ridiculous, for whether attacked or attacking, whether damning an artist with faint praise or the reverse, the broad-minded tolerance of his humour has always been super-evident.

Personally I have found it difficult on occasions to see eye to eye with him, but as I happen to be one of those derided people who believe that any theory is better than no theory at all, I cannot agree with one critic who considers that Mr. Newman is dogmatic, for this seems to be an ugly word to apply to those opinions which contemporary writers have done their best to refute and signally failed, for it cannot be denied that in his frequent bouts with other musical writers his opponents have invariably come off second best. On more than one occasion Mr. Newman has startled the musical world with his peculiar theories, and when I use the word 'peculiar' I must not be taken as indicating anything in the nature of a fad or a crank idea. Why the musical world might term them peculiar is purely and simply because for a number of years

Mr. Newman has refused to accept the settled opinions and prejudice of other musical writers, and the British musical world is so notoriously conservative that it takes a very long time indeed to discuss any new question with the necessary calmness and self-abstraction. He is frequently accused of being abusive in his writings, but surely this must be a reflection upon his accusers, because no editor would tolerate a lack of refinement in his paper, therefore to possess a refined abusive wit is a powerful asset to any critic, and the only counter is to make such a weapon in his hands ineffective.
Merely to accuse an opponent of being abusive, in a journalistic sense, is in itself a weakness, and moreover is betraying a lack of that particular sense of humour which the writer accuses Mr. Newman of having the monopoly of. As an educator Mr. Newman has undoubtedly been a powerful force to Birmingham.
He has made the unmusical milkman and the grocer read him, and I know no other musical writer who has succeeded in doing this. If this were all that Mr. Newman had done in Birmingham it would be in itself a triumph, and no other town but Birmingham would have failed to profit by it. To my mind his great success as a combative writer was his peculiar power of being able to dissociate himself from his own letters and articles when once he had written them. I do not know how he worked, but I should imagine when he had heavily laid about him with his pen he would promptly read his own writings for a loophole for counter-attack. Having failed to find any opening in his own armour, then and only then would such articles or letters see the light of day.
He is a past-master in the art of laying traps when attacking the theories of others, and many times I have discerned the yawning ambush he has prepared for an opponent, who, seeing what he considered an opening, has rushed in, only to get a reply that has, metaphorically speaking, laid him flat.

Of his actual technical knowledge no one will dispute Mr. Newman's profundity, though many like myself would be inclined to dispute his basis or standard of musical criticism. To a quick wit, a delicate sense of humour, a broad-minded knowledge of the world, and voracious appetite for general and special reading, is allied a real and practical understanding of music.

To writers who, like myself, have lived in the same town as Mr. Newman for a number of years, he has been a real source of inspiration and encouragement, and Birmingham without his caustic and volcanic pen will not be the same, even to those who are frankly envious of his powers. Birmingham certainly can lay claim to having had in its midst a writer who has raised the standard of English musical criticism in European eyes. His passing from us will be a very real regret indeed, except possibly to many people who have on dozens of occasions wished he would go, or to dozens of people who have on many occasions wished the same thing.

MUSIC FOR PEACE CELEBRATIONS.

We understand that in the event of a peace concert taking place at the Royal Albert Hall, the following will be the principal features: A selection from Parry's 'War and Peace,' a new Motet by Sir Frederick Bridge, 'Peace lives again,' Elgar's 'Fringes of the Fleet,' Stanford's 'Last Post,' Bridge's 'Flag of England,' and the hymns 'O valiant heart' and 'Recessional.'

This may serve as a guide to choral conductors who have not yet made their choice. We have received so many inquiries on this point that we add the following suggestions: The 'Peace' section of Parry's 'War and Peace' may quite well be performed alone. The Overture should be played, and a cut made from the end of the ninth bar after figure 8 to the beginning of the sixth bar after figure 61, substituting a tied minim F for the crotchet and quaver G F. The result is a work lasting about thirty minutes, and difficult to surpass for peace concerts, whether in churches or halls. The alla marcia, 'Forward through the glimmering darkness,' is one of the finest and most stirring choruses Parry ever wrote. The balance of an hour's choral singing might well be made up with Elgar's or Rootham's 'For the Fallen' (about fifteen minutes) or Stanford's 'Last Post,' and a couple of detached choruses or hymns of jubilant character.

Another very appropriate work would be Hamilton Harty's 'Mystic Trumpeter.' It is for baritone solo, chorus, and orchestra, and takes about thirty-five minutes to perform. The closing section of Whitman's poem, 'O glad, exulting, culminating song,' might have been written for such celebrations as we shall shortly be engaging in.

For efficient church choirs a good plan would be an hour's recital of fine native Church music from Byrd and Gibbons down to the present day, both a cappella and accompanied, relieved by a few good organ solos and orchestral items, and some festival hymns. Not the least advantages of such a scheme would be the addition of some fine numbers to the choir repertoire.

THE RULES OF COMBINED COUNTERPOINT.

BY GEORGE J. BENNETT.

Whilst there is now general agreement as to the rules of Simple Counterpoint, a considerable divergence of opinion still exists among teachers as to how far these rules may be relaxed in Combined Counterpoint—i.e., when the score contains two or more moving parts.

Nor is this to be wondered at. Anyone turning to Albrechtsberger or Cherubini for a complete elucidation of the subject will be disappointed; at the same time, it is of interest to observe that in cases of extreme difficulty they were inclined to a certain latitude not permitted by the strictest theorists at the present time.

In Sir Frederick Bridge's Primer—which has borne the test of forty years' constant use—we find an admirable exposition of the rules of Simple Counterpoint in a concise form, but although there are some exercises in Combined Counterpoint, the absence of rules is noticeable—this, perhaps, from limitation of space.

In recent years attempts have been made to deal fully with the subject, notably by Dr. Kitson, whose exposure of Macfarren absurdities is of the greatest value.

Other theorists, still fettered by Macfarren traditions, do not seem to fully realise that a rule which is good in Simple Counterpoint may not be applicable to moving parts. Some of them, applied to moving parts, are indeed opposed to the practice of the early composers, as I will endeavour to show further on. Whilst a rigid observance of these rules is insisted on, insufficient importance is attached to musical effect; weak harmony and harsh progressions, such as would be condemned in any ordinary piece of music, being apparently considered of little moment.

The type of Counterpoint produced under these conditions is certainly strict, perhaps in some ways stricter than any that has gone before; but it can hardly be considered musical, or as representing any particular period.

A growing feeling of doubt as to whether such crabbed work can be really beneficial to the student has at last culminated in a trenchant attack on our present system of Counterpoint by Dr. Ralph Dunstan. Without entering into a discussion as to the advisability of the drastic reforms which he suggests, I propose to draw attention to rules adopted by some teachers and examiners which seem to be at least open to question.

Let it be clearly understood that the following remarks, except where otherwise indicated, are intended to apply solely to Counterpoint with two or more moving parts.

I.—A DISSONANCE BETWEEN TWO PARTS MAY NOT BE APPROACHED BY LEAP IN EITHER PART.

The composers of the Polyphonic period made occasional use of a dissonance approached by leap in one part, as in the following examples. Many more might be quoted if space permitted. It is important to observe that the dissonance is in some cases approached by similar motion.

The bars in $\frac{2}{2}$ time have been divided into two parts, to make each bar-length correspond to that in Strict Counterpoint:

EX. 1. PALESTRINA. Missa Brevis. EX. 2.

EX. 3. PALESTRINA. Lauda Sion. EX. 4.

EX. 5. PALESTRINA.

Venite Sponsa Christi.

EX. 6.

EX. 7. PALESTRINA.

Jesu Nostra Redemptio.

EX. 8.

EX. 9. DI LASSO.

In die Tribulationis.

EX. 10. DI LASSO.

Quinti Toni.

EX. 11. GABRIELLI.

Missa Brevis.

EX. 12. TVE.

"I will exalt Thee."

(Tenor omitted.)

EX. 13. TALLIS.

Gloria in Excelsis.

EX. 14. PATRICK (in G minor).

EX. 15. FARRANT (in G minor).

EX. 16.

EX. 17. BYRD.

"O Lord, turn Thy wrath."

EX. 18. GIBBONS (in F).

EX. 19.

EX. 20. GIBBONS.

"Lift up your heads."

The following examples, taken from various text-books on Strict Counterpoint, show that all theorists have not regarded such dissonances with disfavour:

EX. 21. FUX.

EX. 22. BEETHOVEN.

(Corrected by ALBRECHTSBERGER.)

EX. 23. CHERUBINI.

EX. 24. CHERUBINI.

EX. 25.

Ex. 26. GOSS. Ex. 27. BRIDGE. Ex. 28. KEETON. Ex. 29. DUBOIS.

Ex. 30. ALAN GRAY. Ex. 31. KITSON. Ex. 32. KITSON.

Ex. 32 affords an amusing instance of doctors differing. The same example appears exactly note for note, except the last half-bar, in Dr. Pearce's 'Academic Counterpoint' (page 190), but there it is condemned, the author taking a directly opposite view to Dr. Kitson.

Whilst conceding that such treatment of a dissonance should only be employed in moderation, its absolute prohibition seems to be both arbitrary and unnecessary.

2.—A SYNCOPATED MINIM MAY NOT BE TAKEN AT THE SECOND CROTCHET OF THE BAR.

The syncopated minim was quite an important feature in the music of the early composers, a few examples of which are appended :

Ex. 33. PALESTRINA. Missa Papæ Marcelli.

Ex. 34. PALESTRINA. Æterna Christi Munera.

Ex. 35. PALESTRINA. Tu es Petrus.

Ex. 36. DI LASSO. Precatus est Moyses. Ex. 37. DI LASSO. Iniquos.

Ex. 38. VITTORIA. Quinti Toni.

Ex. 39. HÄNDL. Ecce concipies.

Ex. 40. HASSLER. Missa.

Ex. 41. FARRANT (in G minor).

Ex. 42. GIBBONS (in F). Ex. 43.

Ex. 44. BYRD. Justorum Animæ.

Morley includes the syncopated minim in his "Plaine and easie Introduction" (1597). It is curious that later theorists made no use of it, but it is only in the most recent text-books that we find it actually forbidden. A perusal of the examples in Gordon Saunders's "Examples in Strict Counterpoint" (Part 2) will show that there is at the present time a tendency to use it.

In combining two or more florid parts, also in combining the 5th and 3rd species, it can be occasionally employed with good effect.

(To be concluded.)

THE EIGHTEENTH AND THE EARLY NINETEENTH CENTURY IN ENGLISH MUSIC.

BY F. A. HADLAND.

It may appear to some people quixotic to attempt to write on the subject of what is generally admitted to be the dulllest period of music in England so far as composition is concerned—that is the 18th century and the first half of the 19th. But everything is entitled to as much advocacy as may help to rescue it from undeserved neglect, especially when it possesses merits which seem to be traditionally overlooked.

So far as England is concerned the 18th century may be called the age when Handel came, saw, and conquered. But the conquest was not quite complete, and it is well to remember that much talent and some genius of independent native origin light up the long vista which stretches from the death of Purcell to the beginning of the Victorian epoch. The beacon lights of Greene, Boyce, and Battishill burn with a steady flame, and the Anglican Church, with all its apparent lifelessness at that time, nourished a goodly band of musicians whose works will not be allowed to die. The secular music of this long period is that which has been greatly neglected, and it is not too much to assert that many professional musicians, in spite of their acquaintance with Grove and other authorities, seem to have tacitly agreed to ignore it.

The 18th century, in spite of its great critics and theologians, was essentially dull, although patriotism was well in evidence. Perhaps to this latter source we are indebted for the noble and peculiarly English vocal music to which the age gave birth, although English poets seem never to have been attracted to the outpourings of their musical brother artists in the same degree as we find in the case of Burns and of Moore. In the arts of design the century was one of ugliness. The Renaissance had spent its energy, and had given place to the Georgian style, till at length architects frankly gave up the idea of beautiful design, and lapsed into downright hideousness, in which state architecture remained until the Oxford Movement brought with it a wave of æstheticism.

It may be asked, 'Why trouble about an age of dullness?' The answer is that there lived all through that age composers who were neither swamped by the commanding genius of Handel, nor dragged down by the generally low level of contemporary taste and artistic invention. It would be superfluous to say much about Church musicians. The 'Dictionary of National Biography,' W. A. Barrett, Myles Birket Foster, Henry Davey, Grove's Dictionary, and many other authorities of equal merit have placed on record so much concerning Anglican music as to leave little more to be done in this way.

There remains the secular music to be considered; and in common with others who have turned their attention in that direction I hold the opinion that a considerable field still lies open which may well repay the labour of research. This has been worked from time to time by a few enterprising publishers, but it is far from exhausted.

A matter for great regret is the absence of sufficient means of presenting the wealth of glees and part-songs which are the special outcome of English vocal culture. Mendelssohn's appreciation of our native creations in this department of art is well known, and he frequently gave them warm commendation.

The Handelian obsession had suffered little diminution when Wagner appeared on the horizon, and his brilliant light overpowered the beams of the lesser.

The present generation knows little or nothing of the peculiarly English genius which is found in the works of Horsley, Webbe, Samuel Wesley, Pearsall and Bishop. We may readily grant that the operas of Bishop are not suitable for resuscitation, but it can hardly be denied that they contain much that is beautiful, although allied to out-of-date libretti. The special manner of employing the glee in his operas as an element intermediate between the solo and the chorus has given us approximately two hundred such compositions, only a very few of which are known at the present day.

Perhaps the worthiest of the immediate successors of Purcell was Jeremiah Clark, whose secular compositions are now quite ignored. Clark, connected in most people's minds almost exclusively with Church music, was a most refined artist, and the revival of some of his secular compositions would be a matter of much interest. It is of course well known that Boyce was quite distinguished outside his cathedral work, and the same may be said of Battishill.

It is a pity that the Englishman Burney, who through his historical works exerted a considerable influence, should have neglected if not despised the madrigal. As regards native instrumental music much that would have been hopelessly lost has been revived within the last twenty years by Mr. Dolmetsch, a foreigner, to whom we are much indebted.

Besides Handel, the foreign musical influence in England during the period under consideration does not amount to much. Perhaps Pepusch, with the phenomenal success of the 'Beggars' Opera,' counts for something, although he did little more than arrange the existing English songs which he found ready to his hand. The three Huguenots, D'Urfey, Dupuis, and Rimbault, were born in England, and their training was entirely English. They appear to have been the chief or only musical representatives of that industrious people connected with England.

Without quoting Jackson of Exeter as a composer, his memory is entitled to respect as a cultivated observer of what was passing in the musical life of England in his day. He remarks that anything that helps to fix Art to a certain point is destructive to further improvement. The Handel Festivals at Westminster Abbey contributed to establish and to fix a taste for Handel to the exclusion of the works of other masters, which Jackson remarks is a thing to be much lamented. Had he lived in the height of the Wagner worship he would probably have had something to say about the frequency of programmes devoted exclusively to that composer.

At the present day it seems to be impossible to combat in some quarters the notion that England was never a musical nation, but perhaps if the man in the street finds the idiom of the madrigal period beyond him, and fails to recognise the beauty of the golden age of Elizabeth and James I., he might be glad to hear some of the compositions of the 18th century, which are nearer to his own time.

I hope to be able in a future article to specify some 18th century music worthy of revival.

(To be continued.)

MEMORIAL TO SIR HUBERT PARRY.

A project has been formed to perpetuate the memory of Sir Hubert Parry at Exeter College, Oxford, of which he was a member since 1867 and in recent years an Honorary Fellow, by the foundation of a permanent organ scholarship at the College, to be called the 'Hubert Parry Organ Scholarship.' All Exonians who are interested in the scheme, and others who were in any way associated with Sir Hubert Parry's life or work in Oxford, are invited to communicate with the Rector of Exeter.

A CHEERFUL PILGRIM.

Somewhere in Boswell's 'Life of Johnson' we read of a man who said to the sage, 'You are a philosopher, Dr. Johnson. I have tried, too, in my time to be a philosopher; but, I don't know how, cheerfulness was always breaking in.' We found the above delightful remark occurring to us from time to time in reading Sir Frederick Bridge's newly-published book of reminiscences.* From page 1, wherein he appears as a small boy at Rochester Cathedral watching the old blind bell-ringer tolling the knell for the Duke of Wellington, to page 349, in which he takes his leave with an appropriate quotation from the Psalter, Sir Frederick writes with a light-hearted gusto that gives his book a tonic property of more value in these worrying times than any purely literary quality.

The child is father of the man. Frederick Bridge (aged eight) was not content with watching the bell-ringer. Before long he had persuaded the ringer to take a back seat for a time, and was hanging on to the rope himself: 'I should like to say I had tolled the bell for the great Duke of Wellington,' he says. The enterprise and (to put it nicely) absence of diffidence shown so early has been a great factor in his long life. In 1852 the motto 'Get on, or get out' was unknown, but the spirit behind the words was floating round, and a choirboy at Rochester Cathedral inhaled some of it. He got on.

Rochester is not, we believe, regarded as a very stimulating centre to-day, but at that time there must have been something in the air conducive to success. At all events, as Sir Frederick points out, seven old Rochester boys became Cathedral organists and three of these were also University professors of music. This fine record was not due to educational advantages. The cathedral choir schools of the period left much to be desired. Sir Frederick quotes two writers in the Choristers' Magazine, a quarterly periodical issued by Westminster Abbey Choristers. The first, recalling his days in the Choir School at Westminster, says, 'It seems hard to realise that the authorities, who had the best years of a boy's life in their hands, treated us with such indifference. The only thing that most of us excelled in was sacred geography—very good in its way, but hardly sufficient to fit one for a future career.' The second, speaking of a slightly earlier period, says, 'No one received any education. Walter Macfarren came to school with me (in Charles Street, Westminster) for a short time, but not one of the others attended any school.' One's faith in education receives something like a shock when the writer adds, 'And yet many turned out clever and important men'—which shows that in order to succeed you may have education but you must have grit. Young Bridge and his companions had plenty of the right stuff.

The old bell-ringer mentioned above (known as 'Blind Fred') may be regarded as one of Sir Frederick's first organ teachers. He was not only a capital fiddler, and in great local request for dance music purposes, but a keen Church musician. He was organ-blower as well as bell-ringer, and so it fell to his lot to supply the wind for the youth's organ practice. He would frequently leave his handle and pay a rapid visit to the keyboard with a helpful suggestion or criticism, being able to do this easily enough because the boy was not allowed to play loudly, and the organ was of a type that was satisfied with but little wind. 'He was rather hard on my extempore playing, which I admit was not very good,' says Sir Frederick, 'but once I tripped him up by taking a phrase from one of Mendelssohn's Lieder, using it as a subject. This brought him round to me with the exclamation, "Ah, Master Fred, that is something like." I thanked him, but was artful enough not to tell him whose it was.'

It is a pleasant picture, this of the two Fred's, the one old and blind, the other young, and with his eyes uncommonly wide open.

Sir Frederick's first appointment (held with other small posts during his articles) was at Shorne, a village five miles from Rochester. There being no other means of transport, he did the journey on foot, passing on the way the 'Bull Inn,' with its Pickwickian associations, and, a mile or two farther, the spot where Falstaff ran away 'on instinct.' Here the youthful organist frequently saw Charles Dickens, whose house—Gad's Hill Place—was hard by.

Our young players may be encouraged to read that there was no rush to secure the services of the future Abbey organist. At the age of twenty he decided to launch out, and applied vainly for several posts. He missed one in London, after being among the selected four. The appointment was in the hands of the vestry, and he was advised to canvass the parish for votes. He did so, but in vain, for one of the other candidates happened to be a Freemason, and sailed in on the votes of his fellow-masons. Nor did he fare better in his attempt at Faversham Parish Church. Curiously, one of the two judges was Turle, whom Bridge was destined to succeed. Not unnaturally, in later years Bridge was wont to remind Turle of the Faversham rejection, whereupon Turle would (also very naturally) pass the responsibility on to his fellow-judge—Jones, of Canterbury.

The Faversham failure, however, was the prelude to a very important step, for the Rector at once recommended the young organist for a post at Holy Trinity, Windsor. Here he came in touch with Elvey, Stainer, Parry, and many other friends who proved of great value in later life.

Here is a glimpse of Parry in an unusual rôle. Sir Frederick says: 'We did "Elijah" and "The Hymn of Praise" more than once; in connection with "Elijah" it may be interesting to note that the part of the Prophet at one of the performances which I conducted was sung by no less a person than Hubert Parry, then at Eton. Our bass failed us at the last moment, and Hubert Parry kindly undertook to sing the part. The thing I remember most about the performance was the extraordinary speed at which he sang "Is not his word like a fire?" Fortunately we had a good band, and although the conductor was naturally inexperienced, the players pulled him through very well.'

Bridge was already making attempts in the direction of a Cathedral appointment. After several failures, he went to Manchester, and so, at twenty-four years of age, began that long and distinguished career with which musicians, and especially organists, are so familiar. Among the reminiscences of Manchester is a good story which deserves to be widely known to-day, when there is so much dabbling in superstition of various kinds. Bridge got the story from Hallé, and has not yet met with it in print, though he thinks it may be familiar: A girl (presumably in the Fatherland) bought a lottery ticket, and asked particularly that she might have No. 23. There was some difficulty at first, but she was so insistent that the number was obtained for her. It turned out to be a lucky one, winning a large sum. When she claimed the money, the authorities asked her why she had been so anxious to secure No. 23. 'Oh!' she said, 'because of my dream. I dreamt three nights that I bought No. 7, so I said to myself, three sevens are twenty-three; that's the number I'll have.'

* 'A Westminster Pilgrim.' (Novello & Co.)

One of Bridge's first difficulties after his appointment to Westminster in 1875 was in connection with the establishment of regular full rehearsals. The boys practised daily, but (it seems incredible) there was no rehearsal for men and boys together! 'Occasionally,' says Sir Frederick, 'the soloists would come to my house to rehearse, yet this was purely an act of grace on their part. I soon made a move to get regular rehearsals established, but this was stoutly opposed by some members of the choir, one of whom, a man approaching seventy, told me that when he was appointed he undertook to obey the laudable customs of the Abbey, and he did not find that the laudable customs of the Abbey included any rehearsals!' Another old singer who gave trouble was a septuagenarian soloist. His voice was naturally very weak, but he insisted on singing 'Comfort ye.' Bridge took the matter to the precentor, pointing out that the singer would not dare to perform at a concert, and he ought not to do so at the Abbey. The precentor took the line that as the lay-vicar was in the choir, he had the right to sing what fell to his turn. When the anthem came round again, Bridge tried to reason with the old man, who angrily replied that he had sung it before Bridge was born—an answer which brought the natural retort, 'All the more reason you shouldn't sing it now.' There was considerable trouble, Dean Stanley regarding the organist's action as an 'error of judgment'!

Bridge found the lay-vicars capable, and, on the whole, pleasant to work with: 'They were, perhaps, sometimes a little bit inclined to self-complacency, and one with whom I was very friendly gave me an opportunity of scoring off him, an incident which often afforded us laughter in after years. I asked him about a particular anthem, saying, "Do you sing so-and-so here?" "We sing anything," he replied; "Yes," I said, "and anyhow!"'

Apropos the reluctance of soloists to give up when their voices began to fail, Sir Frederick tells us of a very old alto at the Chapel Royal singing a recitative in one of Purcell's anthems. The words were 'The ungodly have laid a snare for me,' and the cracked voice annoyed an old peer who was given to thinking aloud. When the ancient had finished bleating 'The ungodly have laid a snare for me,' the peer was heard to remark, 'I wish to heaven they'd caught you!'

By far the greater part of the book is of course concerned with the author's long period of duty at Westminster, and gives us a record of important functions, with, in many cases, particulars of the music used. Although nobody imagines the organist's work on such occasions to be light, few realise the amount of anxious labour and organization necessary to insure things going without a hitch.

Nothing in the Abbey reminiscences is of more musical interest than Sir Frederick's account of the way in which the autograph score of Purcell's Te Deum came into his possession. The discovery was just in time for the work to be performed at the Purcell celebration, superseding the corrupt version of Boyce with its hundred and fifty interpolated bars of dull interludes. As a good example of affection for the familiar, even when proved to be spurious, Sir Frederick tells us of an 'excellent, but conservative, Cathedral organist,' who wrote saying that 'he did not like to give up the Purcell he had known so long'!

Very interesting are the pages concerning the Gibbons celebration. There is a quaint letter from Orlando, reproduced in facsimile, and an old account of a visit to the Abbey by the French Ambassadors and others, at whose entrance 'the Organ was touch'd by the best Finger of that Age, Mr. Orlando Gibbons.' The company remained 'about half-an-hour, while the Quiremen, vested in their Rich Copes, with their Choristers, sang three several Anthems with most exquisite voices before them.'

The energetic personality of W. G. McNaught could not be better described than in the following passage:

I have never done much work as an examiner, such employment being for me very fatiguing. On one occasion when Sir John Stainer was incapacitated through illness, I accompanied the late Dr. McNaught for a week on one of those whirlwind examination tours in which his soul delighted. The genial Doctor was Sir John Stainer's assistant, but I believe Sir John's physical make-up could not support the fierce bouts of 'inspecting' that seemed to be the breath of life to McNaught. My week with him is a nightmare, in which processions of candidates come and go endlessly; in which we seem always to be boarding trains by the smallest margin of safety; in which night brings no rest, for we have to sit far into the small hours making up returns and preparing for the morrow; and generally the whole thing proceeds at breathless speed, and the problem emerges in all its stupendous proportions. I remember telling my companion that it really had been the hardest week's work I had ever done, and I would not undertake his job for £5,000 a year.

McNaught was entirely unruffled, and always seemed to have absolute mastery of the situation, working with extraordinary devotion and celerity, yet never revealing the slightest impatience. He even found time to fit in some journalistic work, and to conduct a publication of which he was editor. This he achieved from the end of a wire, and by ways and means of speeding letters through the post in the shortest possible time unknown to ordinary mortals.

Our space is running short, so we must resist the temptation to quote more from this very quotable volume. There are so many plums in the way of good stories that if we began picking them out, we should extract more than would be fair. Not all are concerned with music; there are some good ones connected with sport. Two of these latter show Sir Frederick trying unsuccessfully to 'wangle' things. There will be many a laugh over his dashing, if brief, display at the wicket, and at his fish wager: in both cases he was unexpectedly caught. In fact, his book, like his lectures, is capable of giving almost as much pleasure to the layman as to the musician. To the latter, however, it will be much more than a series of entertaining memories. There are many pages of historical interest, the value of which will increase as time goes on, e.g., the early records of the Abbey organs, the notes on the Gresham Professors, the biographical details of past Abbey organists, extracts from documents in the Muniment Room, &c., &c. Of the numerous portraits and other illustrations we spoke in our last number.

In his speech at the Music Club dinner, Sir Frederick very happily quoted Dr. Johnson's remark that it is necessary for a man to be constantly making new friends; if he does not wish his later years to be lonely he must keep his friendship in constant repair. Sir Frederick has always done that, but perhaps never more so than by this book. It will please his old friends, and we are pretty confident that it will bring him many new ones.

How much his extraordinarily full and varied career owes to his high spirits and sense of humour is well known. These qualities are still very much in evidence, and we can best describe his book in few words by saying that it is like the man—cheerfulness is 'always breaking in.'

DINNER TO SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

On April 1, at the Connaught Rooms, the Music Club gave a dinner in honour of Sir Frederick Bridge. The Right Hon. the Lord Ernle, Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries, was in the chair, and the large and representative gathering included Lady Bridge, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Sir Frederic Cowen, Prof. H. P. Allen, the Very Rev. The Dean of Westminster, Dr. J. C. Bridge, Sir Charles Sykes, M.P., Dr. Clifford B. Edgar, M.P., Mr. Alfred Davies, M.P., Mr. and Mrs. Ben Davies, and many others well known in the musical world.

The following sent messages of regret for their enforced absence:—Madame Clara Butt, the Earl of Shaftesbury, The Earl Howe, Sir Edward Elgar, Sir Walter Parratt, Sir Charles Stanford, Sir Charles Santley, Mr. Justice Younger, Sir Homewood Crawford, Sir Henry Wood, Dr. Charles Pearce, and Messrs. Rudyard Kipling, Edward German, and Landon Ronald.

The toast of 'The King' having been honoured,

THE CHAIRMAN said: Ladies and Gentlemen,—I must apologise for the dress in which I appear here to-night. I am like, I feel sure, a peahen among a whole drove of peacocks; but the explanation is that I was detained up to the very last moment in the House, and I could not get away except by coming straight here in my ordinary working clothes. I apologise. Now, in a representative gathering like this of the musical world I cannot pretend to think for one moment that it is as a musician that I am asked to take the chair. Neither do I suppose that it is in my capacity as President of the Board of Agriculture. I think in common speech and thought we are accustomed to link music with many things, but I never heard of its being linked with fertilisers, and indeed, when I come to think of it, the only animal that is inseparably connected with music of a mechanical type is the monkey, and that is not an animal which is included in the live-stock of a farm. So, then, Ladies and Gentlemen, it is neither as a musician nor as a farmer that I take the chair to-night; but I think that there are three grounds why I should propose the toast of the evening, the health of Sir Frederick Bridge. One of them is the ground common to all of us—a warm admiration for his work and his character. The second ground is this, a friendship of forty-five years: it is about that time since he came from Manchester to take up his responsible duties at the Abbey. And the third ground is the link that there is between him and me because of his friendship for my father, to whom, as I believe, he owed the possession in the first instance of his charming house in Littleington Tower, one of the most beautiful spots in old London. These, then, are the reasons why I propose the toast. Music in our history has had its ups and downs. I have a sort of recollection that Shakespeare tells us that the man that has no music in himself is not to be trusted. That represents the 'ups.' I also remember, though I do not profess to quote the words accurately, a passage in Darwin's 'Descent of Man,' that represents the feeling prevalent in 1875 among the majority of English-speaking people. Darwin said: 'The capacity for enjoying music and for producing musical notes is not of the least direct use to men in the ordinary habits of life.' It always used to amuse me when I read that passage. In what perhaps was appropriately called the 'Descent of Man' there occurred this passage: 'Musical notes seem to have been acquired by the first male or female progenitors of mankind for the sake of attracting the opposite sex'; and I remember in my youth I used to think that if, many years ago, the art of producing musical notes assisted in attracting the opposite sex, it was of very practical use in one of the ordinary habits of mankind. But with that possible exception, in 1875, in spite of a great deal of promise on all sides, music was relegated to the limbo of useless arts. Neither, as I recollect Westminster Abbey, was the field particularly favourable for the organ. Anybody who remembers its services then must have been struck by their artistic poverty. I could remind Sir Frederick of many circumstances in those bygone days, but the fact was that the authorities of the Abbey at that time, to put the matter on its lowest ground, had not recognised the truth of what Pope put into a couplet, that

'Some to Church repair,
Not for the doctrine, but the music there,' and the Dean of Westminster of that day, Dean Stanley, was not a lover of music. His favourite instrument—I have heard him say so himself—was the big drum; and I also well remember that Sir Frederick Bridge, in adapting himself then, as I have no doubt he has done since, to the tastes of his Dean, used to produce from the organ when playing the Dead March in 'Saul' such a roll of drums as made the Dean's frail figure vibrate with ecstasy. Well, we have passed to-day far away from that position in 1875. To-day music, as we all know, holds a definite, assured, legitimate place among the arts. It is recognised as the one medium for the direct expression of the complex emotions of a complicated age. It has asserted for itself and secured for all time an educational and beneficent influence on the development of our national life, and its value has been found not merely for the expression or excitement of emotion, but above all for its discipline, its control, and its relief. The place of music to-day is assured and definite. Now in that movement, that progress of music in the last fifty years, our guest to-night, Sir Frederick Bridge, has played a distinguished part. He has played it as organist of Westminster Abbey, as a composer, as an historical researcher, and so wide and varied has been his life that I must imitate his own nimbleness and rapidity of movement in the rest that I have to say. Of his tenure of Westminster Abbey I shall say nothing except this, that a small boy who in 1852 insisted upon tolling the bell at the Duke of Wellington's funeral has lived to take a prominent part in many of the stately ceremonials with which we have seen our illustrious dead consigned to the grave in Westminster Abbey. The Dean of Westminster himself is going to speak to you of his (Sir Frederick's) work at the Abbey. I will only say this: that he has worthily followed the traditions of the greatest of his predecessors, Henry Purcell. As to his merits as a composer, I cannot speak with the critical knowledge and understanding which many of you ladies and gentlemen may possess, and will only lay stress upon the strength and solidity which are the characteristics of his music, of his noteworthy setting of Tennyson, of the dignity of music written for special occasions—like that for the Jubilee of 1887—of the admirable spirit with which he has caught the very essence of Kipling's ballads, and of the humorous side of his music which is presented to us to-night, both in 'The Goslings' and in 'Bold Turpin.' As a teacher and a lecturer he has influenced thousands; and he has infused them with something of his own infectious enthusiasm, and the young men and women whom he has trained for their work are further centres of influence wherever they are working to-day. There are thousands who have attended his lectures who carried away with them a higher appreciation of music, and also a gratitude to the lecturer for the fact that his sense of humour has often not only sustained but has aroused their interest. And then there is his sterling value in researches. He has made known to the public the history of music in Westminster Abbey. I should like to dwell upon many other things that he has done, but outside the Muniment Room at Westminster Abbey let me say that he has placed under a debt of eternal obligation every lover of Samuel Pepys; and behind all these varied activities of his life there is the man himself. Shrewd, practical, full of humour, he has beneath that surface a deep, rich vein of artistic feeling—enthusiastic, almost effervescent, full of vivacity, with interest and zest in many forms of life. He is a fisherman of no mean prowess, and as a shot he has at least made a considerable noise in the world. He has lived among us for fifty years that generous, frank, and genial life which makes for a happy and genial old age; and to speak of old age in connection with Sir Frederick is to speak a contradiction: he has all the youthful freshness of his interest, and come what will, live as he may, we all wish him long life and happiness, and we all shall remember him with affection for his connection with Westminster Abbey; and yet I say, live as long as he will, we shall never speak of him as 'old Westminster Bridge.' Ladies and Gentlemen,

I give you the toast of long life and happiness to Sir Frederick Bridge.

THE DEAN OF WESTMINSTER: My Lord, Sir Frederick Bridge, Ladies and Gentlemen,—I shall only stand between you and Sir Frederick Bridge for a very few moments, but I occupy this position, as you will surmise, by request, because, being the representative, unworthy as I am, of Westminster Abbey, it is quite right that the Dean should have a little say before Sir Frederick Bridge has the innings which we all want to see him take. Poor Sir Frederick Bridge! He has had to deal with a succession of Deans, and one has cared for the drums, and the others, whether they were musical or not—I am rather afraid that Sir Frederick himself would say that they were not—have cared for other things; and when he has come to the last of the roll, and has had to deal with my humble servant, I am afraid that he has had the impression that the last of the roll must have been reached. But, Sir Frederick, it has been one of the privileges of the last eight years that I have been Dean that you have presided at the organ. I came to the Abbey not even—such is the kind of Dean that is appointed!—not even knowing you by sight, but having heard of you almost all my life. Bridge, of Westminster Abbey, was known to me for years and years and years, though I had not known him by sight, and only heard him when I was one of the congregation and he was up in the organ-loft. Now, Ladies and Gentlemen, you will expect me to flatter him. Shall I flatter him? Whom shall we pick out to flatter him? Shall it be the typewriter, who listens to his dictation and hopes to be able to put down the words in accurate succession as they flow from his honied lips? I defy anybody, at least I should defy my own skill, to attempt to put down in writing what he is able to dictate with his extreme lucidity combined with celerity. Yet I am perfectly certain that after a few months' silence we shall all be delighted in reading his autobiography, and shall find that the typewriter has been able to do a perfect miracle of achievement. Then, too, my dear Sir Frederick, I have had some delightful letters from you. I have had the utmost difficulty in deciphering them; but I am bound to say that they are the most skilful bits of hieroglyphics that I have ever puzzled over, and I have always been able to arrive generally at the sense which they conveyed. They were beautifully explicit, and it was always a pleasure to have a letter from you. But, Sir Frederick, you have been something more than a good letter-writer: you have been a good friend. I do not think a man could want a better friend than Sir Frederick, who has known how to stand by people in difficulties, in troubles, and in trials. He has had difficulties and troubles and trials himself, but he has been one of the best of friends to many men, and I expect there are many in the musical world whom the world in general does not know anything about, to whom he has been one of the kindest and best of friends. And I think, Sir Frederick, that you have been one of the most loyal men that the Abbey has ever known. I think that your heart is bound up with the old Abbey. For forty-four years you have worked there with true devotion, and if anything was for the honour and credit of the Abbey you were always to the front in upholding and maintaining it. Indeed, as I look back over only these few years, you are the patriarch in the old Abbey precincts. It is no exaggeration to say that, because you know that you and I have seen many dear friends pass away during the last eight years, and you stand almost alone in what had been a fairly large galaxy of persons of distinction. You and I are the only ones left, pretty well, of the Abbey body of which I was called to be a member eight years ago. Well, Sir Frederick, God bless you! As you look back upon those forty-four years of hard work and devoted affection on behalf of the Abbey, may it add many more years to you of happiness and distinction in time to come. I do feel that you have set us an example in one respect. I regard you as one of the most industrious men I have ever come across, and there is an old Latin saying—forgive me for saying anything in Latin at a convivial gathering—'Homini diligente semper aliquid est' (There is always something for every man of real diligence); and you have laid down the office which you have discharged and adorned for many years, not to be idle and indolent, but perhaps almost to renew the abundance of your youth in the pursuit of many other activities. I do not believe that you will be in the very least degree the less effective and efficient a man because you have resigned. I believe myself that when the time comes and physical strength is just a little beginning to wane, it is not wise to prolong the period of strenuous activity until people say, Why does not such and such a man resign? It is far better to do as you have done, Sir Frederick, and resign in the plenitude of your fame and distinction and in the fulness, in a wonderful degree, of your powers. You have earned the respect of the whole world, and our gathering to-day is for the purpose of tendering you our homage, not because your powers have waned, but because you have maintained your powers so fully and so richly during the forty-four years, and have made your bow to the Westminster Abbey public and yet have not retired into the background. It would be an impertinence for a man like myself, with only eight years' experience of the Abbey, to go deeply into the past. Your experience and knowledge of the Abbey have been so wonderful, and intimate, and affectionate that it would be presumptuous on my part to enter into these details. I stand before this company, and I invite them to realise for a moment what Sir Frederick has made of the Abbey, and how the people of the Abbey have overflowed in affection towards him, while he has overflowed with loyalty, heartiness, generosity, and affection towards them. It is thus that I most cordially endorse what our Chairman has said in reference to Sir Frederick; and, Sir Frederick, with a warm heart, with all good wishes to yourself and Lady Bridge, I pledge you most heartily this evening, your very good health, and many years of happiness and strength in the time to come.

The toast was drunk with acclamation, followed by musical honours, and cheers for Sir Frederick and Lady Bridge.

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE: Lord Ernle, my dear Mr. Dean, Ladies and Gentlemen—I am sure you will know that it is impossible for me adequately to express all I feel on this occasion, and all the gratitude I feel to you all for coming here to-night. As many of you know, a similar compliment was paid to me after the last Coronation, but this is of a different character. You come to assure me after my forty-four years of pretty strenuous work at the Abbey, and after the loss of so many of those with whom I have worked, that I yet retain the friendship, and I hope I may say the affection, of many old and many new friends. Dr. Johnson says that if a man does not make acquaintances as he advances in years he will soon find himself left alone; a man should keep his friendship in constant repair. Well, that is what I have tried to do, and the gathering to-night seems to show that I have succeeded. The need comes home to me when I think of the men who have passed away since I was appointed to Westminster. During my career there we have had three Sovereigns on the throne; I have served under four Deans and five Precentors—think of that, organists!—and at the National Training School of Music and the Royal College of Music I have worked with five Directors. I have seen three organists at St. Paul's, and have seen all the Cathedral organists of England except one appointed since I came to Westminster, the exception being my old friend Dr. Keeton, of Peterborough, and I remember his being appointed when I was organist at Manchester Cathedral, so that I have seen them all out. Of course you will quite understand that this gathering has its serious side to me. It marks the close of my Abbey duties, but as the Dean has told you, and as I am happy to say, not my connection with the Abbey. To resign into younger hands the important charge that has been mine for so many years is no light matter, but I made up my mind that I would do so with cheerfulness, and I may add even with thankfulness. And I ought to be thankful to have been spared so long, to have had such good health, to have had so many opportunities, and apparently to have performed the duties of my office so as to gain the affection of those with whom I have worked. Also I think it my duty to place on record the kindness and great consideration shown to me by the Dean and Chapter at this crisis in my life. Particularly must I say some words about the Dean. I have had some experience of Deans—having served in the course of my career under seven Deans. Now Deans and Chapters are to some people rather terrors, and although I have had sometimes to submit where I would have rebelled, yet I am bound to say I have no real complaint to make. Rather, I am only too conscious of the great and continued kindness shown to me, by the present Dean of Westminster in particular. Whenever I have had to undertake a big service—and that has happened fairly often—the Dean never failed to write me a charming letter of thanks and congratulation. But never in my whole career have I experienced more kindness and consideration than has been shown to me in my retirement. To continue in my house, the scene of many joys and sorrows, is a real boon, and to be able still to call myself Emeritus-Organist of Westminster Abbey is an honour which I owe certainly to the Dean and for which I tender heartfelt and grateful thanks. Well, now, Ladies and Gentlemen, I need say little more, but I wish particularly to express my grateful thanks to Lord Ernle for coming to preside to-night. I am sure you will all thank him too, for a more delightful speech on such an occasion as this I have never listened to. I am usually sorry for the unfortunate object of a chairman's remarks at such a gathering as ours, because the chairman generally puts his foot into it, but our Chairman to-night has really made me feel proud. I am particularly delighted to have him here to-night, because he has told you of the intimate connection that existed between his dear father and myself. Canon Prothero was my first great friend at the Abbey. He did me great service at the Jubilee of Queen Victoria, and he was a kind friend and affectionate counsellor in a time of great domestic affliction, writing to me every day for a fortnight charming words and hopeful thoughts. It is always a happiness to me to remember that he spent a short holiday with me in Scotland, and actually landed his last salmon with my rod. Therefore, to the son of my dear friend, and to a man who has taken a leading part in the Government in these anxious times, I tender my grateful thanks. To the organizers of this meeting I can only express in public what I have said in private. I value the compliment paid to me very highly. I see also in the choice of music which they have made that they recognise my cheerful moments. The first part-song seems to have been selected because of its reference to the Dead March in 'Saul,' of which I am supposed to be an expert—it is said to be one of my show pieces!—and the drum part of which was taught me by Dean Stanley. I do not know how the Chairman knew this, but he knows a good deal, and I am glad to think we have a man in charge of agriculture in this country who has known so much about these things, so much more than one ordinarily expects. He has told you a little of the secret, though not quite all. He has related that Dean Stanley said the instrument he admired the most was the big drum. It is a very funny thing, but I do owe the fact that I am able to play the Dead March in 'Saul' with better drum effects than most people, primarily to the hints that I received from Dean Stanley. I really must say that Dean Stanley did indeed teach me to play the drums in the Dead March. He was dissatisfied with my performance, and said it did not sound to him like the Dead March he was accustomed to. I asked him who he had heard play it. He said he had heard Dr. Buck, of Norwich, play it. I said Dr. Buck was a good teacher of boys, but I had never heard that he was a capable organist. But I said I would see what I could do with the drums, and took counsel with Mr. Turle. Then I went into the Abbey and gave the Dean a performance of the Dead March, putting in some drums he had never heard before and drums that very few people have ever heard since, and he wrote to tell me afterwards that he was quite satisfied. Well, now, to pass on to the next part-song to-night, I see it is 'Bold Turpin.' That seems to be a suggestion that as a highwayman I have robbed the Church. Now that I have not done—no organist gets a chance of that. The nearest approach to it was when I charged a good fee for editing the hymn-book for the Wesleys, but I should not have done that if my own Church had not refused to let me assist in the editing of the new edition of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern.' I am glad now that I did not have a finger in that pie. The third and last part-song, 'When Father votes,' is a fine picture of the scene in my own house when I am rushing off to a rehearsal at the Albert Hall and cannot find my gloves. The last song, 'Michael O'Leary, V.C.,' which my dear friend Mr. Ben Davies has done me the honour to come to-night to sing, reflects my admiration for the Army. I do not suppose any man has ever played the National Anthem as many times as I have played it, because I have played it at every afternoon service in the Abbey during the whole of the War—from the time the War began until after the Armistice—and very thankful I was when I had to give up the job; but I did play it, and I think with some effect. I have written some serious music. I have written what was called a 'serious glee,' but nobody wants to hear it; but these humorous things apparently please you, and I assure you they please me. I will not detain you much longer. Now I do not usually prepare any notes for my speeches, but I made some notes for to-night. I did not feel that this was a humorous occasion, and I wanted not to make a fool of myself, and also I wanted if I possibly could to do justice to, and to acknowledge as I ought to do with thankfulness and joy, this extraordinary compliment paid to me, and I beg that you will all accept my thanks. I am only too thankful that I have been able to face this great crisis, which you have only got to try in order to know that it is a trial. When Sunday comes round I sometimes feel, as you would all feel, that I would like to fall in and play again; but one cannot have his cake and eat it, and having retired it would not be fair to one's successor. I have put that before me, and tried not to make it difficult nor irksome for him. And neither is it fair to oneself to go in and keep one's ears and eyes open to observe what one does not like and what one thinks he could have done better. I am not suggesting I feel like that: I have not done it. If my attendance at the Abbey has not been so frequent as the Dean might have expected, he knows my reasons for it, and I think you will agree I have acted as a wise man. I remember an old Lancashire saying, 'There is nothing to beat a good old 'un, except a good young 'un.' Well, I hope you believe you have had a good old 'un, and I hope and believe that you have got a good young 'un, and I only wish that he may at the end of his career have the happiness of looking back to many opportunities such as have come to me, and that he will be able to feel, as I do, that he has been most fortunate in his opportunities and most fortunate in the result of his labours. I wish him every success, and I hope that I may be spared a few years—I cannot speak about that, of course; I may be spared a great many years, but that is in God's hands—but I hope that I may be spared to see him go on, and that the old Abbey services will go on in that perfection which I venture to think they have attained, and that he will be able at the end of his career to merit and receive such kind treatment as I have received from the Dean and Chapter, and such an overwhelming tribute of affection and respect from such a company as I see before me to-night. I may say I have had two communications put into my hands since I came here to-night. One is from Madame Clara Butt and Mr. Kennerley Rumford:

'Our love to you and best wishes; greatly regret we are unable to be present to-night';

the other is a most charming letter from Sir Charles Santley:

'My Dear Bridge,—I have been afflicted with acute rheumatism for four years. It grieves me that I cannot be present at the dinner to congratulate you on your retirement to-morrow evening, and must write what I would much prefer saying on that occasion. We have been true friends, colleagues, and companions for about half a century. May we still be the first for another half. At any rate, I wish you many years of health and happiness, together with Lady Bridge, to whom I beg you will present my kindest regards. So good-bye and God bless you both. Remember me kindly to your brother John, if he is still alive [he is] for whom I have the highest esteem and regard.—Yours affectionately, 'C. SANTLEY.'

I value that very much, and I am sure you will forgive me for taking up your time in reading it. Now, my Lord, Mr. Dean, Ladies and Gentlemen, my affectionate love to you all. I have just had a telegram put into my hand expressing regret that illness prevents his coming, from Mr. Louis N. Parker.

PROF. MILNIKOV proposed 'Music,' and gave an account of Russian music during the past century, describing its chief characteristics and aims.

PROF. H. P. ALLEN replied. He put in a plea for better education of the listener, and for increased local activities in musical directions, and paid a cordial tribute to Sir Frederick for his kindly reception and assistance on occasions when the Bach Choir had sung in the Abbey.

MR. ALFRED KALISCH proposed the health of the Chairman in a happy little speech.

The music, under the direction of Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, consisted of Sir Frederick Bridge's humorous part-songs, 'The Goslings,' 'Bold Turpin,' and 'When Father votes,' sung by the Westminster Abbey Male-Voice Quartet (Messrs. Hatherley Clarke, Herbert Thompson, Bertram Mills, and Leonard Salisbury), and 'Michael O'Leary, V.C.,' sung by Mr. Ben Davies, accompanied by the composer.

BELLS.

BY W. W. STARMER.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

At last the authorities of Westminster Abbey have been moved to do something with their bells and put them in ringing order.

The Dean, Bishop Ryle, says that poverty is the cause of this not having been done before. This is a lamentable state of affairs in connection with our national fane. However, poverty was not the cause of the Abbey losing a most generous gift of a peal of ten bells in 1902. In that year a peal of ten bells was actually ordered by the donor. The scheme was frustrated by the opposition of Mr. Micklethwaite, the then architect, who would not permit any bell-ringing whatever. Now, after seventeen years, the tower appears to have got a new life—or is it that another architect has given a different opinion as to its stability? Unfortunately architects have never distinguished themselves when dealing with strains, pressures, &c., re bells. To deal with such things satisfactorily, a good knowledge of engineering is required, and of this they generally have but a slight acquaintance.

The six bells constituting the present ring are a mixed lot, containing one 14th-century and two 16th-century productions. These can be preserved for antiquarian reasons, particularly the 14th-century bell, but they should not be included in the new peal.

Two new bells are to be added, and the 14th-century treble is to be replaced by a new bell, making a ring of eight, with a tenor of 30 cwt. A peal of this weight would be creditable for a village or country town, but for our noble Abbey it is indeed but a very poor thing.

The old bells are to be re-tuned. Can this be done so as to fulfil the exact musical requirements without seriously impairing these bells? It is almost an impossibility. Surely for such an important national occasion as the Peace celebration a new ring of eight bells, with a tenor of not less than 50 cwt., tuned most accurately, according to modern requirements, hung in a well-designed and well-constructed steel frame—proper representative work embodying all the great improvements in bell-making and bell-hanging made in England during the past twenty-five years—would be a more suitable thing than a tinkered-up set of miscellaneous bells of different periods and design, which cannot be brought into proper accord individually or collectively.

It has been stated that this ring of eight will be the heaviest in London. This may be so when peals consisting only of eight bells are considered, but as every ring of ten or twelve bells contains a perfect peal of eight, those of St. Paul's, Bow Church, Southwark Cathedral, &c., include a much heavier peal of eight than the proposed ring for the Abbey.

MALINES CATHEDRAL.

The bells of this famous carillon are safe and sound. M. Josef Denyn, the City Carillonneur, has returned to his duties, and will soon be playing his clavier as of old.

During the German occupation much was done by the citizens of Malines to prevent the Huns from playing their national melodies on the carillon. The essential parts of the connections with the clavier were removed, throwing every bell out of action, and the great bell, Salvator, was lifted out of its bearings so that it could not be rung. Plaster models were made of the Hemony, Van den Gheyn, and other bells, and both bells and models were safely hidden. All this had been accomplished before the Huns notified their intention of requisitioning the bells. There was a tremendous storm of protest, strongly supported by the great Cardinal Mercier, the intensity of which caused the Huns to abandon their project of stealing the bells.

As the war continued, so many workmen were out of employment that the city authorities decided to thoroughly restore the framework and improve the arrangements in connection with the bells. A new bell-frame was erected and the bells were re-arranged as to position; a new playing-room was built, and electric light installed; a series of iron ladders was provided to ensure easy access for the adjustment of the action-work connected with the clavier; and an electric motor was fixed to wind up the driving weight which actuates the elaborate chime mechanism. All these improvements were most satisfactorily carried out.

When the news of the Armistice was received, the devoted friends of the carillon succeeded after great effort in lifting Salvator (eight tons) into its bearings. This took four hours to accomplish, but by three o'clock on the afternoon of November 11 the great bell hurled his enormous voice of triumph over the whole city, while the long file of grey uniforms, creaking wagons, and cannon began the Hun retreat in the direction of Louvain. The Grande Place was filled with an enormous and frenzied crowd, waving their hats and singing the Belgian National Hymn and 'God save the King,' while the last of the Huns, with lowered heads, departed in the direction of 'liebe Vaterland.'

BELLS AS MEMORIALS.

It is probable that bells will be required in many places as War memorials, and it is to be hoped that all the authorities dealing with such matters will secure the best expert advice to ensure obtaining bells which are truly musical instruments of good tone and accurate tune. During the past twenty years England has become famous for producing the best bells in the world as to tone and tune. This has been accomplished by much costly experimental work done by those who have devoted their energies to solving a most difficult problem and thoroughly mastering all its intricacies. Their work has been so successful that five tones in every bell, covering a range of two octaves, can be tuned to the accuracy of a single vibration—which represents a minuter correctness than the best-tuned pianoforte or organ.

'Clog an Air,' the bell described in the October Musical Times, was recently sold at Christies' for the sum of 1,250 guineas.

PRESENTATION TO SIR FREDERICK AND LADY BRIDGE.

At Westminster Abbey, on April 12, Sir Frederick and Lady Bridge were presented with four silver candlesticks and a cheque to mark Sir Frederick's retirement from the post of organist. The presentation was made by the Dean of Westminster.

SCHUMANN'S BARRING.

BY H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

Since the introduction of systematic barring in music, and the consequent development of harmony, there is perhaps no custom that has been so rarely broken by the great composers as that of placing the $\frac{6}{4}$ on a stronger accent than its succeeding $\frac{5}{3}$ chord in a $\frac{6}{4}$ $\frac{5}{3}$ cadence.

This custom has been so consistently kept that such a passage as :

is almost inconceivable if barred thus :

When we find the custom broken by a composer of such weight as Schumann we naturally look for some hidden reason.

Such an instance will be found in the second of 'Three little pieces,' Op. 99, bars 25-26, and one feels inclined to draw the conclusion that in the tense abstraction of composition the composer has inadvertently misplaced his bar-lines.

Let us alter the barring to bring this $\frac{6}{4}$ $\frac{5}{3}$ cadence into its normal position, and see how it affects the rest of the piece.

It will be sufficient and indeed clearer to write it in skeleton form. We must of course begin on the up beat :

Introductory 2 bars in E minor. | 8 bar sentence consisting of four balanced phrases.

Introductory 2 bars in B minor.

4 bars in sequence.

Introductory 2 bars.

Repetition.

Cadence.

bar 25.

6 5
4 3

It will be noticed that in the chord marked A the suspended F# now comes in its appointed place—i.e., on the accented beat of the bar—another good reason for deducing that the composer has misplaced his bar-lines.

Now it may be argued that Schumann at no time felt himself bound by the customs of other composers ;

but he used the conventional $\frac{6}{4}$ $\frac{5}{3}$ cadence, with the $\frac{6}{4}$ on the strong beat, with such constancy as to make it highly improbable that he deliberately departed from the practice in this instance.

The ornate filigree work woven around the structure can hardly be taken to justify the barring, but it certainly tends to obscure the rhythmic accent.

A HUMOROUS PART-SONG.

Words Anonymous.

Composed by A. HERBERT BREWER.
Arranged for Mixed Voices by the Composer.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegretto vivace.

SOPRANO. mf cres. He

ALTO. mf cres. He

TENOR. mf And, though there might be grand - er, He cres.

BASS. mf There was a chap who kept a store, And, though there might be grand - er, He cres.

Allegretto vivace.

(For practice only.) mf cres.

f sold his goods to all who came, And his name was Al - ex - an - der, Al - ex - an - der, his ff

f sold his goods to all who came, And his name was Al - ex - an - der, Al - ex - an - der, his ff

f sold his goods to all who came, And his name was Al - ex - an - der, Al - ex - an - der, his ff

f sold his goods to all who came, And his name was Al - ex - an - der, Al - ex - an - der, his ff

f ff

Copyright, 1919, by Novello and Company, Limited.

Also published for Female Voices in NOVELLO'S TWO-PART SONGS, No. 183; and for Men's Voices, T.T.B.B., in THE ORPHEUS, No. 526.

name was Al - ex - an - der. He mixed his goods with cunning hand, He was a skil - ful name was Al - ex - an - der. He was a skil - ful name was Al - ex - an - der.

name was Al - ex - an - der.

bran - der; And since his su - gar was half sand, They called him Al - ex

bran - der; And since his su - gar was half sand, They called him Al - ex

And since his su - gar was half sand, They called him Al - ex

And since his su - gar was half sand, They called him Al - ex

- Sand - er, - Sand - er, - Sand - er, they called him Al - ex - Sand - er.

- Sand - er, - Sand - er, - Sand - er, they called him Al - ex - Sand - er.

- Sand - er, - Sand - er, - Sand - er, they called him Al - ex - Sand - er.

- Sand - er, Al - ex - Sand - er, Al - ex - Sand - er, they called him Al - ex - Sand - er. He cres. legato.

mp
 And lov - ing - ly he scanned
cres. legato.
mp
 And lov - ing - ly he scanned
cres. legato.
mp
 And lov - ing - ly he scanned tenderly.
mp
cres. legato.
 had his dear one, and she came, And lov - ing - ly he scanned

p
pp mp gracefully.
 her, He asked her would she change her name, Then ring did Al - ex -
p
pp mp gracefully.
 her, He asked her would she change her name, Then ring did Al - ex -
p
pp mp gracefully.
 her, He asked her would she change her name, Then ring did Al - ex -
p
pp mp gracefully.
 her, He asked her would she change her name, Then ring did Al - ex - dolce.

mp
 - hand - her, - hand - her, - hand - her, then ring did Al - ex - hand - her. "Oh
 - hand - her, - hand - her, - hand - her, then ring did Al - ex - hand - her.
 - hand - her, - hand - her, - hand - her, then ring did Al - ex - hand - her.
 - hand - her, Al - ex - hand - her, Al - ex - hand - her, then ring did Al - ex - hand - her.
mp

very decided.

yes," she said, with smi - ling lip, "If I can be com -

very decided.

"If I can be com -

very decided.

"If I can be com -

very decided.

"If I can be com -

f very decided.

ff joyfully.

- man - der;" And so they framed . . . a part - ner - ship, and

ff joyfully.

- man - der;" And so they framed . . . a part - ner - ship, and

ff joyfully.

- man - der;" And so they framed . . . a part - ner - ship, and

ff joyfully.

- man - der;" And so they framed . . . a part - ner - ship, and

ff joyfully.

In strict time.

called it, and called it Al - ex - and - her.

In strict time.

called it, and called it Al - ex - and - her.

In strict time.

called it, and called it Al - ex - and - her.

In strict time.

called it, and called it Al - ex - and - her.

In strict time.

called it, and called it Al - ex - and - her.

pp dim.

ppp

pp dim.

ppp

pp dim.

ppp

pp dim.

ppp

pp dim.

ppp

Church and Organ Music.

MEMORIAL SERVICES.

A memorial service for members of King's College and Trinity College who have fallen in the War was held at King's College on March 31. The music included C. W. Pearce's 'Out of the deep' and 'Rest eternal,' Hiller's 'He in tears that soweth,' and Bridge's 'Crossing the bar.' The service opened with the National Anthem and closed with the 'Dead March.' The choir was provided by students of Trinity College, conducted by Dr. C. W. Pearce, and Mr. E. Stanley Roper was at the organ.

A memorial service for members of the staff of the Metropolitan Asylums Board who died in the War took place at St. Bride's, Fleet Street, on March 21. The Vicar, the Rev. A. Taylor, officiated, and the organist of the Church, Mr. Herbert Townsend, played the organ. The opening hymn, 'For all the saints,' was accompanied by Mr. F. G. Dent, a member of the Head Office staff, who lost his right arm on the Somme. The Head Office also supplied all the adult members of the choir. The Burial Service sentences were sung to Croft's setting and Psalm xc, to Hervey's chant. Miss Gertrude Dunthorne sang 'I know that my Redeemer liveth,' and quartets in the Rev. C. Harris's 'Supreme Sacrifice' were taken by Master V. Newland, of the London College for Choristers, and Messrs. Millis, Hatfield, and Glanville. The hymn 'On the Resurrection morning' was followed by Chopin's 'Marche Funèbre' and the 'Last Post.'

CHOIR-TRAINERS' LEAGUE.

The open choir practice held by Mr. S. H. Nicholson, the new organist of Westminster Abbey, at St. Anne's, Soho, on March 18, brought together a gathering of nearly two hundred choir-trainers and others. Mr. Nicholson, after a few opening words explaining his views, dealt with the saying (not intoning) of the General Confession and the Pater Noster, and after showing that there was no objection to the Responses being sung in unison, passed on to the Venite and the Psalms. He got the extemporised choir to sing certain verses with the note in front of the first minim shortened so as to match a short syllable, and also pointed out that the other end of the chant was capable of being lengthened where perhaps three syllables after the last accent made that course desirable, as in the word 'testimonies.' A hymn was sung, first verse choir and congregation, second verse choir alone, third verse congregation alone, and so on, to illustrate the pace most suitable, and also the kind of organ accompaniment that should be used. Mr. Nicholson and his choristers (basses, tenors, and altos having volunteered for those present, and some boys having been brought from a church in the S.W. district) very soon got into each other's ways, and it was felt throughout that the idea of making this Choir-Trainers' League event a kind of lecture, and at the same time a quasi choir-practice, was distinctly a step in the right direction.

An appeal has been issued for help in founding a professorship of ecclesiastical music at King's College, London. The report points out that there is a unique opportunity for bringing the interests of music and of the Church together at King's College. Its central position is specially suitable for public lectures, out of which classes, conferences, and seminars might be developed. As a training school for the clergy who keep in close touch with the College after ordination it offers special scope for more advanced musical study and for the practical end of maintaining a high standard both of selection and performance in our Church services. Its connection with the University would guarantee that the work done there would be done well, and would adequately meet the needs both of devotion and of art.

A strong committee has been formed, with Viscount Hambleden as treasurer. The sum required is £12,000. Inquiries should be addressed to the secretary, the Rev. F. Clement Rogers, King's College, Strand, W.C. 2.

We have received a booklet containing a record of a hundred organ recitals given at St. Michael's, Cornhill, by Mr. Harold Darke, between May, 1916, and April, 1919. It is a notable list of fine music, old and new, native and foreign; and the musical education of the community will benefit greatly when the rank and file of organists show such enterprise and catholicity. The hundredth programme was chosen by vote, and consisted of Buxtehude's Prelude and Fugue in F, the Allegro Cantabile from Widor's fifth Symphony, Tchaikovsky's Funeral March, the Andante from the 'Unfinished' Symphony, and Rachmaninov's Prelude in C sharp minor.

A series of Lenten choir and organ recitals, given by Mr. Arthur Egg at Christ Church Cathedral, Montreal, contained much fine organ music by Bach, Wesley, Healey Willan, Franck, Parry, Darke, Harwood, Bairstow, and Charles Wood. On the choral side were Bach's 'I wrestle and pray,' Parry's 'Voces clamantium,' the Prelude and 'Sanctus Fortis' from the 'Dream of Gerontius,' and four choruses from Brahms's 'Requiem'—a splendid list.

The organ at Bensham Road Wesleyan Church, Gateshead, has recently been overhauled and enlarged by Messrs. Lewis & Co., who built the original instrument in 1878. The re-opening took place on April 9, when Mr. James M. Preston gave a recital, his programme including Clausmann's 'Allegro Symphonique,' Liszt's 'From Crag to Sea' March, D'Ervy's Meditation and Toccata, Silas's Fantasia, and Best's Romanza and Allegro.

The seventh series of organ recitals at Toronto University by Mr. F. A. Mouré was as usual a feast of good things, among them being Lemare's 'Grand Cortège,' Parry's Fantasia and Fugue, Franck's Cantabile, Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue, Déodat de Séverac's Pastorale, Rheinberger's eighth Sonata, and Healey Willan's Epilogue.

At Aberystwyth, on April 1, the Tabernacle Choral Society sang Dudley Buck's 'Ode to Peace,' Mendelssohn's 'Come, let us sing,' and a miscellaneous programme. Mr. J. Charles McLean conducted, and Mr. C. H. Clements was at the organ.

Stainer's 'The Crucifixion' was sung at the Congregational Church, Sutton Coldfield, on April 9, conducted by Mr. George A. Russell. Mr. C. W. Perkins accompanied and played organ solos.

ORGAN RECITALS.

Mr. J. A. Meale, Girlington Wesleyan Chapel, Bradford—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Concert March 'The Tritone,' Wolstenholme. Wesleyan Central Hall, Westminster (5 recitals)—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Festival Commemoration, West; Theme with Variations in A minor, Faulkes; Fugue à la Gigue, Bach; Marche Héroïque, Lemare; Introduction and Variations on 'The Vicar of Bray,' Meale; In the South, Lemare. Chapel Street Wesleyan Methodist Church, Luton—Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach.

Mr. H. C. L. Stocks, St. Asaph Cathedral—Solemn Melody, Walford Davies; Dithyramb, Harwood; Pastel in B, Karg-Elert; The Storm, Lemmens; Coronation March, Tchaikovsky.

Mr. J. Pulein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Introduction and Passacaglia, Reger; Pastorale from Symphony No. 2, Widor; Sposalizio, Liszt; Légende in C, Dvorák; Berceuse, Arensky; 'Pomp and Circumstance' No. 4, Elgar.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Concerto in F, Handel; Sketch, Schumann; Cantabile and Final from Symphony No. 2, Vierne.

Mr. Albert Orton, Walton Parish Church, Liverpool—Minuet and Trio from Symphony in G minor, Bennett; Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; 'Death of Ase'; Berceuse in G, Gounod; Les Mirlitons, Tchaikovsky; Grand Solemn March, Smart.

- Mr. Harold M. Dawber, St. George's, Stockport—Festival Toccata, Percy E. Fletcher; Lied and Scherzetto, Vierne; Allegro Appassionata from Sonata in C sharp minor, Harwood; Imperial March, Elgar.
- Mr. Herbert Gisby, St. Thomas's, Regent Street (three recitals)—Toccata (Sonata No. 14), Rheinberger; Meditation, Dubois; March in B flat, No. 2, Silas; First two movements, Sonata No. 6, Merkel; Scherzo, Capocci; Le Pastour, La Sarabande, and Petites Litanies de Jesus, Gabriel Grovlez; Violin Sonata in E minor, Bach; Air on the G String, Bach; O Salutaris, Franck (violin, Miss Felicia Borelle).
- Mr. Alban Hamer, All Souls', Leeds—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Spozalizio, Liszt; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Prière, Jongen; Requiem Æternam and Pæan, Harwood.
- Mr. W. Greenhouse Allt, St. John the Evangelist, Edinburgh (five recitals)—Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Andante (from String Quartet), Debussy; Fantaisie, Saint-Saëns; Suite, Borowski; Villanella, Ireland; Choral Prelude, 'Come, Holy Ghost,' Bach; Legend, Harvey Grace; Imperial March, Elgar; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Holsworthy Bells, Wesley; Sursum Corda, Ireland; Overture to the Occasional Oratorio, Handel; Choral Prelude, 'O God, Thou God of the Faithful,' Karg-Elert; Scherzo, Guilmant; Finale in B flat, Wolstenholme.
- Mr. C. T. Weigall, Parish Church, Devizes—Prelude 'Parsifal,' Wagner; Réverie, Lemare; Fantaisie and Finale (Sonata No. 10), Rheinberger; Allegretto, Vierne; Scherzando, Archer; Grand Chœur, Hollins.
- Mr. James Downie, North U.F. Church, Bearsden—Moment Musical in F minor, Schubert; A Sea Song, MacDowell; March in E flat, Léfebure-Wély. At the Parish Church—Sonata in D, Peace; Canzona, Wolstenholme; Old Londonderry Air; March on a Theme by Handel, Guilmant.
- Dr. W. Rigby, St. James's, Paisley—Concerto in D minor, Handel; Minuetto, Gigout; 'St. Francis of Assisi preaching to the Birds,' Liszt; Funeral March, Tchaikovsky; Scherzo, Sandiford Turner.
- Mr. W. H. Trenwith Davies, Congregational Church, Pontefract—Ave Maria d'Arcadelt, Liszt; Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Minuet and Trio (Symphony in E flat), Mozart; Andante poco tranquillo, Hollins; Toccata in A, Blakley.
- Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (three recitals)—Bridal Chorus in D flat, Guilmant; Hymn of Nuns, Wély; Overture to the 'Occasional' Oratorio, Handel; Cantilène in F, Rheinberger; Jubilant March, Stainer; Sonate Pascale, Lemmens.
- Mr. Bertram Hollins, Beckenham Congregational Church—Grand Chœur in E flat, Guilmant; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Allegretto in E flat, Wolstenholme; Good Friday music from 'Parsifal'; Allegro Moderato e Pomposo, F. E. Gladstone. At Queen's Hall—Overture to 'Occasional' Oratorio; Fantaisie in E minor, Silas.

APPOINTMENTS.

- Mr. Ernest T. Gyngell, organist and choirmaster, St. Mark's, Myddelton Square, E.C.
- Mr. Purcell James Mansfield, organist and choirmaster of Paisley Abbey.

JOHN MERBECKE AND HIS MUSIC.

Dr. R. R. Terry had much to present that was interesting in connection with this old English Church musician, at the meeting of the Musical Association on March 11. He said that the commonest phenomenon in the life of most of us was our proneness to take things for granted, to repeat catch-words and shibboleths without thought or reflection—our blank ignorance of things we regard as most intimate and familiar. Tallis, Byrd, and Shakespeare were household words, yet how many of us could quote correctly, or say how many tragedies Shakespeare had written, or even state how many of his plays we had seen? Merbecke had suffered similarly by being a household word, and had thus shared the fate of Tallis, Tye, Whyte, Byrd, &c., who are chiefly known by their least distinguished work.

Merbecke was born in 1523, and became organist at Windsor in 1541. His 'Book of Common Praier Noted' appeared in 1550, when he was twenty-seven years old, and it was an extraordinary fact that after that date no music seems to have come from his pen. He devoted the remaining thirty-five years of his life to writing books and pamphlets on behalf of the Protestant faith. Often couched in violent language, these writings nevertheless left no doubt of Merbecke's sincerity, and for this reason the composition of his five-part Mass, 'Per Arma Justitiæ,' must be assigned to the earlier period of his life, before he changed his faith, for it was impossible to conceive a man of Merbecke's strong opinions writing a work for the Communion he held in such abhorrence.

It was in connection with 'The Book of Common Praier Noted' that Merbecke was chiefly, if not entirely, known to the present generation. It was a work of historical importance, but a large amount of loose writing about it went on, and always had gone on, in the press. No complete modern edition later than that of Rimbault (1845) was in existence. The Oxford Movement brought again into notice that portion of it used 'At the Communion,' and the publication of 'The Cathedral Prayer Book' made its use more or less general. Although there were now on the market many editions of the Communion Service—good, bad, and indifferent—none of them were in exact accordance with the original. This was partly inevitable, since Merbecke's music was written for the First Prayer Book of Edward VI., which differed considerably from the present 'Book of Common Prayer'; but granting all this, modern editors still had much to answer for. The lecturer incidentally protested against the tendency to sing Merbecke's music in notes of equal length, in Solesmes fashion. Merbecke himself expressly pointed out that he made use of notes of four different lengths, and Dr. Terry said that despite certain anachronisms in the accompaniment, which Stainer acknowledged in the latter part of his life, the setting in 'The Cathedral Prayer Book' gave a much closer approximation to Merbecke's original than it was the fashion to avow in some quarters.

The prominence given to the setting of the Communion Service would seem to have diverted attention from the music which Merbecke provided for the other portions of the 'Book of Common Praier Noted,' and there was on all hands either complete ignorance or very hazy ideas of the nature of his setting of Morning and Evening Prayer, of the Benedicite, of the Quicunque Vult, and of the Burial Service. There was no authentic Plain-Chant throughout the book, excepting the Versicles and Responses for Mattins and Evensong. The rest of his adaptations, so-called, bore only a very shadowy likeness to the originals. Possibly he was bound to work in accordance with Cranmer's 'opinion,' viz., that there should be 'for every syllable a note,' Merbecke evidently worked from a late Salisbury MS., such as the Eryllyngham Noted Breviary in the Chapter library there.

There was only one setting of the Te Deum in English Antiphoners which was practically the same as the Tonus Sollemnis in the 'Vaticana.' Merbecke's adaptation was quite as good as the Tonus Simplex in the latter book. The choice of Tone V. for the Benedictus would seem to be arbitrary, for Tone VIII. was a much more usual setting. Merbecke's choice probably fell on Modes I. and VIII. for the Magnificat because those were the ones which had been most frequently used in the old services. The choice of Tones V. and VIII. for the Nunc Dimittis was doubtless dictated by the fact that the former was the Salisbury use for all the great Feasts but one, and that the latter occurred in the same way throughout Advent and at Easter Compline. For Benedicite, the English form of Tonus Peregrinus was used, and the Athanasian Creed was set in the IVth Mode in the Sarum Breviary. In the Communion office the Kyrie was from the Sarum 'Missa pro defunctis,' the Gloria and the Credo were original, the Sanctus and Benedictus qui venit were a compressed form of the IIInd Mode setting 'In Dominicis,' and the Agnus Dei was based upon a Sarum melody which did not occur in 'Vaticana.' The Offertories and Post-Communions were probably Merbecke's own.

As regards his technique as shown in his Mass, &c., he had less freedom than, for example, Taverner. His phrases were detached and scrappy; but the ensemble was broad, dignified, harmonically strong and satisfying. He was a master of choral effect, and one felt in his book that there was a great wave of strong sound; yet he could be tender on occasion. If he did not scale the heights reached by Byrd, if he never plumbed the depths of strong emotion as did Tallis and Whyte, if his serious cast of mind knew not the joie de vivre of Taverner, if he lacked the breezy resilience of Philips, the blandness of Shepherd, and the easy, confident technique of Robert Johnson, Merbecke yet remained one of the great figures of his time, represented (oh, the pity of it!) by one Mass, a mutilated Motet, and a three-part carol. But had he left nothing save the Mass 'Per Arma Justitiae,' that work alone was sufficient to place him among the Olympians to whom we tendered our deepest admiration and offered our sincerest honour and reverence.

A number of illustrations were sung by boys from Westminster Cathedral, aided by some volunteer tenors and basses. Sir Frederick Bridge, the new president of the Musical Association, was in the chair, and moved a vote of thanks to Dr. Terry for his interesting paper.

THE MUSICAL MIND IN ENGLAND.

At a meeting of the Incorporated Society of Musicians (Midland Branch), held at Birmingham on April 5, Mr. Sydney Grew delivered a lecture on the 'The Musical Mind in England,' in the course of which he said that the question as to whether a nation was musical or otherwise could be settled only by taking a long view.

Observing the general development of the musical mind, and the changing conditions of the English mind during the past thousand years, the lecturer said that on two occasions we had been in the strict sense of the term unmusical. Each of those occasions covered roughly two hundred and fifty years—1300-1550 and 1625-1875. But such stretches of time are not great as time goes. In the case of a nation that develops slowly and that is subjected to frequent foreign influences—especially in the case of a nation that out of inner conviction and deep-rooted desire for justice and sanity in the national life is forced frequently into the agitation of long-continued struggles—a thousand years are but as a day; just as in those brief periods (as our Elizabethan period) which produce immortal works a day is as a thousand years. If we had been potentially unmusical as well as actually unmusical during those stretches of time, we should not have risen to the magnificent musicianship of the period 1575-1625, or to the position we have held in music since about 1899. The English mind, out of its complexity and depth, develops very slowly. It takes the oak as symbol of the nature of its growing as well as symbol of the result of its growth.

By nature the English mind and the musical mind are not antagonistic. They are at base identical. Music is by nature spiritual. It is the means whereby are directly represented spiritual states and conditions. It is the direct language of the soul; and it appears only at such times and in such places as contain the human soul in a condition of maturity, able to apprehend spiritual truth in fulness and to represent it tranquilly in life and in art. The function of music is to utter affirmative matters, not negative. The substance of music consequently is entirely moods of confidence, never moods of doubt, pessimism, and fear. Music knows nothing of spiritual restlessness, and less than nothing of that extreme form of pessimism and egotistical pride that results in spiritual revolt.

The English mind is fundamentally tranquil. Its great native characteristic is the quality of brooding thoughtfulness. Out of this rises the English capacity to sustain long-continued contemplation and to maintain at all times a dignified spiritual courage. It is unshakably optimistic, and it never entertains moods of spiritual rebellion. As the Englishman avoids despair in his sadness, so he avoids hysteria in his gladness. As the history of fifteen hundred years proves, he carries into every department of spiritual life the quality of serenity; and whenever the process of mental development and national circumstances have brought about conditions of native energy and stability in the national mind, he, like any other man, has represented himself in music, and in music that has all those qualities of permanence and universality which make it a great and essentially spiritual art.

The nature of the English mind was proved in both the Dark Ages and the Middle Ages. The mediæval mind was antagonistic to music. It was a mind charged with fear and apprehension. It reached ultimately a condition of serenity, as is shown in the 'Paradiso' of Dante and in the music of Palestrina; but it never reached the condition of humanised serenity characteristic of the modern mind and of the English mind in the very middle of the Middle Ages. The English mind was never mediæval. Bede shows that in the Dark Ages it had 'a sweet and reasonable temper.' The presence of such 'humanitarian' poetry as the 13th century poems, 'Sumer is icumen in' and 'Foweles in the frith,' shows that while mediæval Europe was expressing itself in the art that was to culminate in the dreadful hell and purgatory of Dante, England was already in the mood—tenderly sympathetic, broadly emotional, and entirely human—that was to culminate in Chaucer and Langland. That is why, at a period when the rest of Europe regarded music as a branch of applied mathematics, the companion in study of such sciences as astronomy and perspective, the Englishman, regarding music as an art of spiritualised nature, produced music that was several centuries ahead of music in general, and that even to-day is alive with a warmth that appertains only to music that is true music.

When circumstances in general disturbed the native serenity of our national mind, we could not represent ourselves in music; yet on two occasions, at times when we were mentally most unsettled, we produced two great musicians—John Dunstable and Henry Purcell—who, if not fully English in spirit were still entirely English in birth. And on the supreme occasion when the English mind was in a condition of perfected stability and native energy, we produced in our Elizabethan madrigals music that is warm with modern emotionality, while the music of other contemporaneous composers is detached to the point of coldness.

Music is a 'humanitarian' art. The English mind is 'humanitarian.' It is the chief poetic mind of the human race; and at all times when music has rested on poetry rather than 'abstract' principles, the English mind has been musical. Recent events, read in the light of a thousand years of history, suggest that the English mind is once again approaching to the condition when it has the capacity to represent itself in perfect music.

Letters to the Editor.

'MODERN BRITISH COMPOSERS.'

SIR,—In your February issue you have an article on the works of F. Bridge as one of our modern British composers. I regret, however, that your contributor should see fit to regale us almost solely with orchestral items. The pianoforte music seems to be the one exception which gets a decent 'look in,' whilst the songs may be content with one paragraph.

From the list appended I notice that the compositions come under no less than thirteen classifications, among which some are apparently not even deserving a word. Particularly is this the case with the single instruments with pianoforte, and the organ pieces. The former instruments being employed in orchestral music one does not miss so much on reading through, but why the latter are not commented upon at all makes one wonder greatly. Could not your contributor, instead of giving us illustrations from no less than five orchestral compositions and unlimited matter besides, have let us see more of Mr. Bridge's work in other spheres?

I hold a high opinion of the way in which your journal has from time to time given space to the review of music for the organ, and was deeply disappointed to find (although the title of this article did not lead one to suspect that any specialised type of composition would be 'boomed') that the organ is left out in the cold for the orchestra's benefit. (Evidently Mr. Bridge thinks something of it, however.)

And yet we call it the 'king of instruments.'—Yours, &c.,

68, Henrietta Street,
Ashton-under-Lyne.

H. HEWITT.

THE NEW EDUCATION ACT, 1918.

SIR,—May I draw attention to the stringent regulations under Section 13 (1) (i.) of this Act as regards the employment of children, which may well be a matter for grave concern to both choirmasters and choirboys, and should have clear definition before 'the appointed day'? The wording of the Act is terse and succinct: 'A child under the age of twelve shall not be employed; and a child of the age of twelve or upwards shall not be employed on any Sunday for more than two hours, or on any day on which he is required to attend school before the close of school hours on that day, nor on any day before six o'clock in the morning, or after eight o'clock in the evening.' Herein is some cause for anxiety, and much will turn upon the legal interpretation of the term 'employment.' Nowadays, most of us responsible for the upbringing of the young would, and rightly so, regard the training of boys as chorists as part of their general education. But what about the status of boys who receive emolument in some shape or form, pecuniary or otherwise? I refer especially to cathedral, collegiate, and church choir schools. It is a question of vital interest to church musicians, and surely necessitates speedy elucidation.

A. H. STEVENS.

Chattisham Vicarage, Ipswich.

WHEN TO APPLAUD.

SIR,—I have read with interest Miss M. Gordon's letter in your March number.

On the occasion of his recent visit to Nottingham, Mr. Benno Moiseiwitsch played Chopin's 'Marche Funèbre.' The silence maintained by the audience at its close was a delicate and eloquent demonstration of appreciation.

Ill-timed applause is, unfortunately, a too frequent cause of the premature obliteration of very fine musical effects.

If we eliminate from the scope of this correspondence the truly musical, we have to consider only those who are imperfectly appreciative, though generously enthusiastic.

The difficulty could only be overcome by indicating on the programmes where silence should be observed; but we are very susceptible, and such a remedy might be resented.—

Yours, &c., S. B. N.

Nottingham,

March 8, 1919.

BEETHOVEN AS A SONG COMPOSER.

SIR,—Your lively contributor 'Feste' appears to be quite out of humour with poor old Beethoven. Among other funny things he says: 'I have never yet seen any claim put forward that Beethoven was other than a failure as a song composer.'

I suppose that a glance at any history of music, or any account of Beethoven, would convince 'Feste' to the contrary. I turn to two books only, quite at random. First, to Parry's 'Summary of Musical History,' p. 107: 'Mozart and Haydn both approached to the ideal of modern song here and there, and Beethoven in several cases actually attained it.' Second, to Ritter's 'History of Music,' p. 373: 'In how deeply touching a manner he could express himself in song, his "Adelaide," his "Liederkreis an die Ferne Geliebte," and his opera "Fidelio" have amply proven.'

Is this failure?—Yours, &c.,

ARTHUR T. FROGGATT.

5, Richmond Mansions, Denton Road,
Twickenham, April 6, 1919.

We sent a proof of Dr. Froggatt's letter to 'Feste,' who writes:

Like Dr. Froggatt, I will turn to two authorities only, Sir Henry Hadow, in the lecture I quoted in last month's Musical Times, says of Beethoven: 'One of his odd limitations, due perhaps to his increasing deafness, was a want of sympathy with the human voice . . . the solo songs, except perhaps the "Liederkreis," are but chips of a great workshop.' And on page 261 of the Stanford and Forsyth 'History of Music,' we read: 'There was one department of the art in which Beethoven did not shine with the same lustre—that of song writing.

Capable of writing instrumental miniatures, such as the "Bagatelles," of unsurpassed beauty and finish, the vocal miniature that we term "song" apparently did not attract him to the same extent. No man, however great, is without his limitations, and Beethoven's lay here.'

Is this success?

BEETHOVEN AND CHANGING VALUES.

SIR,—I tremble to enter the lists against the powerful writing of your contributor 'Feste,' yet as I feel very strongly on the subject of his article I venture to express an opinion. Surely it is Bolshevism pure and simple applied to music? It would be interesting to know the attitude of devotees of the sister art of painting towards the works of Raphael, L. da Vinci, and Rembrandt, as also the attitude of the literary world towards the masterpieces of Shakespeare. Though I greatly admire much modern music, I have lost none of my old worship for the immortal works of Beethoven, Handel, and Mozart. Indeed I feel they were inspired, and their work was the result of great genius. Much modern music is clever, some inspired, but most of it seems made up and merely pieced together. The song of the nightingale has undergone no change, yet its charm is as potent as it ever was; true we look for no progress here, but what is superlatively good remains so even though idioms may change.

I am sometimes led to think that our so-called progress is retrograde, and I fail to see what is to take the place of the Sonatas and Symphonies of Beethoven in the whole realm of modern music. Of late I have seen much discussion anent Gregorian and Anglican chants, and the arguments in favour of the former have been based on their solidity and grandeur. For solidity and grandeur has any modern writer produced such a masterpiece as the Hallelujah Chorus of Handel or the taboed Largo of the 2nd Symphony, both of which in my humble estimation will bear a hearing long after much modern music is entirely forgotten? The Beethoven orchestra may be dead, yet its very tameness in comparison with the modern orchestra is a rest for both mind and brain, and music is surely to be sought for that purpose rather than to excite and electrify by its complexity and bizarrerie. I am forcibly reminded of a remark of the late eminent critic, Joseph Bennett, when sitting with me at a performance of a modern work followed by a Beethoven Symphony. 'What a delightful change,' said he, 'one cannot gaze at scarlet for long without becoming dazed.' It is surely no argument to try and prove that Beethoven was no song writer, as all the world knows, yet I find the greatest delight in 'Adelaide,' and surely the Septet, Quartets, and Concertos of Beethoven are not to be treated as lightly as your contributor disposes of his Sonatas and Symphonies.

Repeats may be superfluous, continuity of movements is of minor importance, the main question is, 'Is Beethoven worth following nowadays?' and my answer is, 'Unquestionably Yes!'—Yours, &c.

R. J. PITCHER.

21, Boundary Road,

St. John's Wood, N.W.-8.

April 8, 1919.

BEETHOVEN'S SCHEME OF ORCHESTRATION.

SIR,—Surely 'Feste' rather misses the point when he refers to Beethoven's orchestration as being or sounding 'grey.' It may sound 'grey' compared with that of Wagner or Strauss, but for the Symphonies themselves it is admirable. Surely no one could wish that Beethoven's Symphonies should be scored by any other than Beethoven!

Yours, &c.,

LIONEL OVENDEN

(Musical Director, Royal Naval College, Dartmouth).

March 29, 1919.

The two hundred and sixty-fifth Festival of the Sons of the Clergy will take place at St. Paul's Cathedral at 3.30 on May 20. The preacher will be Canon E. W. Barnes. The music will include an anthem of thanksgiving and commemoration after the great War, composed by the organist of St. Paul's (Dr. Charles Macpherson). The Lord Mayor will preside at the festival dinner in the evening at Merchant Taylors' Hall.

Obituary.

We regret to record the following deaths :

PROF. FRANKLIN TAYLOR, on March 19, at the age of seventy-six. He was one of the professors appointed in 1876 to the National Training School, of whom only Sir Frederick Bridge and Mr. Albert Visetti now survive. At the Royal College of Music he long exercised a powerful sway in the world of pianoforte-teaching. His well-known edition, in fifty-six books, of 'Progressive Studies for the Pianoforte,' contains nearly six hundred examples from Bertini, Clementi, Cramer, Czerny, Kalkbrenner, Schmitt, and others.

W. W. ANDREEF, who first introduced the Balalaika to England. He is said to have died of starvation.

MARY LAW, the violinist, who, while earning her chief successes in the music-halls, endeavoured to raise the taste of her audiences to the level of good music.

ARTHUR O'LEARY.

The brevity of the obituary notices of this distinguished Irish musician, who was for many years Professor of Music at the Royal Academy of Music, and also numbered Sullivan and Stanford among his pupils, can only be explained by the present stress.

Born in Tralee, Co. Kerry, on March 15, 1834, Arthur O'Leary was the son of the organist of the Roman Catholic parish church in that town, who was first-cousin of Sir Arthur Sullivan's grandfather. Displaying uncommon musical precocity, Arthur O'Leary found a generous patron in Mr. Wyndham Gould, who, in 1844, defrayed all the expenses of the boy's musical studies in Dublin for two years, and then undertook to give him a five years' training in Leipsic. On the last Sunday of the year 1846 the Irish lad sailed from Dover, and reached Leipsic at the close of January, 1847. His most cherished recollection of the Autumn of that first year in Germany was his meeting with Mendelssohn, who took a kindly interest in the boy, and at whose request, at a memorable dinner-party, young O'Leary sat next to the great composer. Not many weeks later he walked in the funeral procession when Mendelssohn was laid to rest, following the band which played as a funeral march the E minor 'Song without Words.'

O'Leary studied under Moscheles, Plaidy, Hauptmann, Richter, and Rietz, and after five years settled in London, where, after further instruction from Potter and Sterndale Bennett, he was appointed Professor at the Royal Academy of Music in 1856. He retained this important post till 1903, when he retired, but he still continued to give musical instruction till 1915. Naturally the events of the world-war had an effect on his health, but he took an interest in matters relating to music till the early Spring of the present year, when he passed peacefully away on March 13, aged eighty-five. By his own special desire his remains were carried home to Ireland and laid to rest in the ancient cemetery of Aghadoc, near Killarney, where numerous members of the clan O'Leary have been interred for several centuries.

W. H. G.-F.

ALEXANDRA PALACE CHORAL SOCIETY.

This fine choir made a welcome appearance at Queen's Hall on March 29, in conjunction with the New Queen's Hall Orchestra. They opened with Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' a feature of an admirable performance being the splendid sonority of the peroration. Mr. Allen Gill conducted. Mr. Edward German then took the baton, and directed the concert-version of his 'Merrie England,' the delightful music being accorded full justice. The soloists were Miss Louise Dale, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Hubert Eisdell, Mr. Fraser Gange, and Mr. J. Holroyd. The audience was large and enthusiastic. Now that railway difficulties seem to prevent the visits of Yorkshire choirs, Queen's Hall is not too well served in the matter of first-rate choral concerts. We hope Mr. Allen Gill's singers will visit central London frequently.

Sixty Years Ago.

From The Musical Times of May, 1859 :

CHORAL HARMONY, No. 21, Price 1d.—Contains Coquette, The Exquisite, and Aldibrontiphosphornhorn. Colville, Lamb's Conduit-st.; Ward & Co., Paternoster-row.

NEW MUSIC PUBLISHED BY B. WILLIAMS, 11, Paternoster-row.

I LOVE THE SUMMER SKY. The Music by STEPHEN GLOVER; the Poetry by ENOCH. Price 2s. One of the most sparkling melodies yet written by S. GLOVER, and suited for mezzo-soprano voice.

A SLIGHT MISTAKE. Serio-Comic-Sentimental Ballad, written and composed by H. WALKER (Author of The Great Tobacco Controversy, Confessions of a Fickle Man, &c., &c.) Price 2s.

TOM MOORE'S QUADRILLES, on favourite airs from his celebrated Irish Melodies (with illustrated title). Price 2s. solos, 3s.; as Duets, 4s.

FOUR SONGS, together (with pianoforte accompaniment). Price 3d. Viz., Toll the Bell for Lily Dale; We are coming, sister Mary; Hard Times; Kiss me quick. Each song has a chorus, ad lib. By post for 4 stamps.

LEEDS.—A large organ, lately built for the Town Hall, by Messrs. Gray and Davison, was opened on the 7th of April, by two public performances, at the first of which Mr. Henry Smart presided, and at the second Mr. Spark, of Leeds, performed a selection of music.

MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.—The third concert of this musical association took place on the 30th of March, at St. James's Hall, when a very interesting programme was provided. . . . The Symphony [in C major] of Schubert was new to the audience, it only having been once before performed in London, by the Philharmonic Society, when it was disapproved of, and laid aside. It was played on this occasion with the most consummate skill, but its success with the audience is seriously affected by its length, taking as it does one whole hour to perform. There are abundance of melodies, and the three movements contain passages of the highest beauty; but the defects are a prolixity and want of definite form. There was very little sympathy elicited by the performance, and it was received with entire apathy.

THE BEECHAM OPERA SEASON.

The production of Charpentier's 'Louise' on March 24 displayed some interesting features, and one that was distinctly novel and welcome; the Night-Wanderer as played by Mr. Frank Mullings was a far more arresting and individual character than we have ever noticed before. Miss Miriam Licette and Mr. Webster Millar as the lovers were vocally excellent, and in the third Act they rose to heights that, in British artists, would have astonished audiences of ten years ago. Both the workroom and carnival scenes were acted and sung with great spirit. The only doubtful element in the evening's enjoyment was the suspicion that the music is wearing thin with familiarity. Some of its glamour is certainly fading.

The Beecham season as a whole seems to have won a gigantic success, and to have been eagerly welcomed by public and Press alike. From the latter we glean the following brief particulars.

Mozart's 'The Magic Flute' was given with a brilliant company of artists on March 25, under the direction of Mr. Eugène Goossens, jun., and on the musical side the performance was all that could be desired.

Puccini's 'Manon Lescaut' was given on March 26, with Madame Jeanne Brola in the title-part. With Mr. Walter Hyde and Madame Edna Thornton as chief exponents, Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah' was well delivered under the guidance of Mr. Wynn Reeves on March 27. Mr. Julius Harrison conducted Puccini's 'Madame Butterfly' on March 28, when Miss Rosina Buckman repeated her former successes. Miss Agnes Nicholls appeared as Elizabeth in Wagner's 'Tannhäuser' on March 29, Mr. Eugène Goossens, sen., conducting; in the evening of March 29

Mascagni's 'Cavalleria Rusticana' and Leoncavallo's 'Pagliacci' were given under Mr. Harrison. Miss Gladys Ancrum was Santuzza, Mr. Maurice d'Oisly was Turiddu; Madame Jeanne Brola and Mr. Frederick Blamey represented Nedda and Canio.

The principals in Wagner's 'Tristan and Isolde' on March 31 were Miss Rosina Buckman (Isolda), Miss Edna Thornton (Brangaene), Mr. Frank Mullings (Tristan), Mr. Robert Radford (King Mark), and Mr. Herbert Langley (Kurwenal). The performance left a deep impression, to which all contributed with their great technical and imaginative gifts. Mozart's 'Il Seraglio' was given on April 3, with Miss Miriam Licette and Miss Désirée Ellinger as principal ladies.

The most interesting of later events was the revival of Bizet's 'The Fair Maid of Perth.' Its dainty Southern melodiousness, however ill-mated with Scott, again fell pleasingly on tolerant ears. The cast was as follows: Miss Sylvia Nelis (Catherine), Miss Edith Clegg (Mab), Mr. Webster Millar (Hal), Mr. Walter Hyde (Rothsay), Mr. Foster Richardson (Ralph), Mr. Powell Edwards (Glover), Mr. Frederick Davies (Courtier), and Mr. L. J. Russell (Major-domo).

Except where specified above, the conductor's desk was occupied by Sir Thomas Beecham.

THE ROYAL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

MR. EDWARD GERMAN'S NEW ORCHESTRAL WORK.

The fourth concert of the season falling on the anniversary of Beethoven's death (March 26), two of his works opened the programme. It seemed a pity that the choice fell on two such hackneyed examples as the fifth Symphony and the No. 3 'Leonora' Overture. Only the remarkably fine playing to some extent justified the selection. The novelty of the evening was Edward German's 'Theme and Six Divisions,' for orchestra. The theme was rather long for variation purposes, but there was no feeling of diffuseness in the treatment. Of the six divisions we found the third (a piquant Gipsy Dance) especially enjoyable. Hardly less so were the gay Waltz, and its successor, the Waltz with a cantabile counter-theme for the 'celli. In the fourth was some effective writing for muted strings ppp in ten parts. The scoring here and there, especially in the Coda, is perhaps too heavy and gorgeous for the subject-matter, but the work as a whole is an undoubted success in a department of music which Mr. German has made peculiarly his own. He was called to the platform and warmly applauded. The work was brilliantly played.

Mr. Robert Radford sang 'Wotan's Farewell' (struggling heroically against an accompaniment which is bound to be overmuch when played on a concert-platform instead of as under operatic conditions), and the concert ended with a vivid performance of Tchaikovsky's 'Romeo and Juliet' Overture. Mr. Landon Ronald conducted finely.

QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Brahms's fourth Symphony was the outstanding feature of the concert on March 22, a fine performance being given. The work is one of those that at present is heard far too rarely because other by no means better works are played far too often. A little Purcell Suite arranged by Sir Henry Wood was good to hear. The programme included also the 'Mastersingers' Overture, a somewhat meretricious Piano-forte Concerto by Tcherepnin (brilliantly played by Mr. Moiseiwitsch), and a couple of Sibelius songs, well sung by Miss Carmen Hill (in the absence of Madame Kirkby Lunn). Sir Henry Wood conducted.

What was described as a new Suite by William Boyce was introduced by Sir Henry Wood at the concert of April 5. It consists of a judicious selection from Boyce's twelve Sonatas for violins, violoncellos, and basses, with a viola part that was added by Sir Hubert Parry for the use of the Countess of Radnor's string band. It is good to find this publicity given to Boyce's music, for he was one of the 'originals' of his day, and he had an ample fund of individuality, invention, and spirit, and a vital, attractive way of setting out his ideas. The Suite, which was well shaped, made excellent hearing and was received with evident signs of pleasure. The Symphony of the occasion was Mozart's No. 35, in D—a fitting companion to the English work; Madame d'Alvarez sang Bach's 'Agnus Dei' from the B minor Mass, and Mr. Albert Sammons gave a remarkable interpretation of Max Bruch's G minor Violin Concerto.

THE BACH CHOIR.

The Bach Choir gave an unconventional concert at the Central Hall, Westminster, on April 2, the music of Bach finding no place. But there was so much that was enjoyable that the departure from tradition caused few, if any, complaints. Verdi's 'Stabat Mater' is an example of the theatrical treatment of a religious text that we expect from the composer, and, though not the best Verdi, is too good to be neglected. It was followed by Charles Wood's 'Dirge for two veterans,' a fine and sincere piece of work, the baritone solo of which was well sung by Mr. Darrell Fancourt. Some instrumental relief at this point would perhaps have been fairer to the next work, Mr. Frank Bridge's setting of a prayer by Thomas à Kempis, which was down for a first performance. It contains plenty of fine music, especially on its orchestral side, but it left one with the feeling that some of its best passages were far too complex and impassioned for the simplicity of the text. It was well performed under the direction of the composer, whose conducting was so good that we found ourselves wondering at the rarity of his appearances in the rôle. Debussy's 'Blessed Damsel' and 'L'après-midi d'un Faune,' and Franck's 'Les Djinns' (with Mr. Howard-Jones at the piano-forte) completed an interesting and well performed scheme, which needed only a good example of a cappella work by way of relief. Prof. H. P. Allen was an alert and resourceful conductor. There was a large audience.

THE ORIANA MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

The concerts given by this excellent choir are invariably well off the beaten track. On April 12 they gave a programme of exceptional interest, illustrative of English dance and music in Shakespeare's time. The scheme consisted of part-songs by R. Edwards, Byrd, Cornyshe, solo songs and dialogues, two madrigals by Thomas Vautour (the six-part 'Shepherds and nymphs' being a fine and unfamiliar specimen), and a selection of Ayres and Ballets by Dowland, Weelkes, Campion, and Morley. The Chaplin Trio played solos and trios by Orlando Gibbons and John Bull, and a clever troupe of dancers gave examples of the Pavane, Galliard, Allemande, Coranto, and Tordion, and a jolly set of old English country dances, accompanied by a string quartet and oboe. A first performance was given to two new eight-part arrangements of 'The three ravens' and 'The hunt is up,' by Balfour Gardiner. The second was very effective, but the first suffered from a harmonization not always in keeping, though it had some impressive moments, notably the passage for men's voices. Mr. C. Kennedy Scott conducted, and the choir sang with the finish and beauty of tone that we expect from them. The performance was repeated on April 14, a large and appreciative audience again being present.

SOUTHWARK CATHEDRAL.

Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion was sung on April 5 with orchestral accompaniment. There was a crowded congregation, many people being turned away. The choir sang finely, not the least notable feature being the finished and expressive singing of the chorales unaccompanied. No doubt this method provides welcome relief, but there is a good deal to be said in favour of their performance by the choir and people. The soloists were members of the choir (Mr. W. Arthur, Narrator), Mr. W. H. Reed led the orchestra, Mr. F. W. Sutton was at the organ, and Mr. Edgar T. Cook conducted. Good evidence as to the appreciation of the musical work at the Cathedral was forthcoming in the collection—over £58.

At the request of the Czecho-Slovak Legation, the Y.M.C.A. has agreed to accommodate the two hundred artists who are coming from Prague to take part in the Czecho-Slovak Festival which will be held in London in May.

THE MUSICIANS' Y.M.C.A. GIFT.

This is a scheme for providing additional musical facilities for the members of His Majesty's Forces in the 2,600 Huts and Centres of the Y.M.C.A. at home and abroad.

Committee.—The Editors of all the Musical Papers of the Country.

Hon. Treasurer.—Major H. Walford Davies, Mus. Doc.

Organizing Secretary.—Percy A. Scholes, Mus. Bac., A.R.C.M.

Assistant Organizing Secretary.—Miss Edna Palmer.

Hon. Organizer of National Collection of Instruments and Music.—Herman Darewski.

Office.—Y.M.C.A., Universities House, 25, Bloomsbury Square, W.C.1.

	£	s.	d.
Total received since December 31, 1918	654	7	9
Receipts during the month March 11 to April 11, 1919	262	6	0

(a) PROCEEDS OF CONCERTS AND ENTERTAINMENTS.

		£	s.	d.
Birmingham ..	Miss Linda Whitehouse, Pupils' Entertainment ..	5	0	0
Bushey Heath ..	Madame Bertha Moore, O.B.E., Recital at Caldecote Towers (Miss Tate and Miss Tanner)	10	18	0
Coventry ..	Mr. John Gibbons, Pupils' Concert ..	12	9	0
Glasgow ..	Glasgow Society of Musicians, Concert ..	6	10	0
Harpenden ..	Harpenden Hall Lower School Music Society, value of two prizes gained and a Collection ..	0	11	6
Hitchin ..	Girls' Grammar School Concert, per Miss E. Macintosh ..	23	0	0
Leicester ..	Madame Vardy's School of Music, impromptu collection at Junior Sight-reading Test ..	0	1	6
Liverpool ..	Mr. W. Bridson, additional ..	2	4	0
	Mrs. O. E. Corrin, Pupils' Concert ..	2	10	0
	Miss Eda Levin, Fourth Musical Evening ..	1	7	0
London ..	Miss Butters and Staff of Universities House, from Cinderella Dance ..	1	15	6
	Lady Harris, collection at her At Home after Mr. Ashton Jonson's 'Omar Khayyam' Recital ..	14	10	0
	Metropolitan Academy of Music, collection at Annual Prize Distribution ..	14	17	3
	Metropolitan Academy of Music, Half Collection at Junior Prize Distribution and Concert ..	5	10	0
	St. Paul's Girls' School, Collection ..	16	10	3
Reading ..	Miss Rosa Hood, Pupils' Concert ..	4	10	6
Thame ..	Madame Bertha Moore (Miss Hockley), O.B.E., Recital at Girls' Grammar School ..	11	0	0
Wolverhampton ..	High School Choral Society, per Miss May Adams ..	22	10	0
		£162	17	6

(b) ORGAN RECITALS.

		£	s.	d.
Glossop ..	Fitzalan St. Church: Mr. J. Crowther ..	2	0	0
Hove ..	Parish Church: Mr. F. Butler ..	3	11	0
Huntley ..	United Free Church: Mr. J. G. Clemens ..	1	10	6
Leeds ..	St. Aidan's: Mr. Matthias Turton ..	8	3	3
	Carried forward ..	£15	4	9

		£	s.	d.
	Brought forward ..	15	4	9
London ..	Brixton: Independent Church: Mr. H. G. Ley ..	5	16	3
	Finchley: St. Paul's: Mr. H. J. Baggs ..	2	5	0
	Gospel Oak: All Hallows': Mr. R. Goss Custard ..	3	12	5
	Muswell Hill: St. James': Mr. C. D. Cunningham ..	4	13	9
	Tooting: Graveney: All Saints': Mr. S. H. Nicholson ..	7	16	1
	Upper Clapton: St. Matthew's: Mr. S. H. Nicholson ..	5	18	1
Mellor ..	St. Sebastian's: Mr. Zorian ..	1	10	0
Oxford ..	The Cathedral: Mr. Henry G. Ley ..	11	0	0
Southampton ..	St. Denys': Mr. Herbert Deavin ..	2	5	0
Southwell ..	The Cathedral: Mr. H. W. Tupper ..	5	10	2
		£65	11	6

(c) DONATIONS AND COLLECTIONS.

		£	s.	d.
Miss M. A. Morley: Pupils' Collection		7	1	0
Mrs. Howard		5	5	0
Mrs. Stoop		3	0	0
Members of the Holloway College		2	6	0
Mr. J. B. Clark		2	2	0
Mr. John Graham		2	2	0
Croydon Musical Society		1	10	0
Mrs. T. P. Lockwood		1	1	0
Messrs. Paish: Torquay		1	1	0
Miss C. Rutherford		1	0	0
Mr. J. Murdoch and friends		1	0	0
Mr. Preston and Pupils		0	10	6
Mr. H. B. Ward		0	10	6
Mr. H. A. Donaldson		0	10	0
Miss Muriel Hayward		0	10	0
Miss Gwendoline Sharpe		0	10	0
Miss Townsend		0	10	0
Mr. P. Vogler		0	10	0
Mr. Allan Allen		0	5	0
Miss A. Entrican		0	5	0
Mr. Smith: Sale of a Bow, to Mr. Chubb ..		0	5	0
Mr. Epworth		0	2	0

£33 17

London Concerts.

THE PHILHARMONIC QUARTET.

With new and exacting works by Eugène Goossens and Joseph Holbrooke to present for the first time, most chamber-music parties would be content to fill up a programme with, say, some Schubert. But the determination of the Philharmonic String Quartet knows no such limitations, and at Wigmore Hall on March 27 they added to these works a new Quartet by Scontrino and the recently-heard Three Pieces for String Quartet by Stravinsky.

Mr. Goossens joined the string players in his Pianoforte Quintet, a work that challenged interest. Its salient quality is vitality, and it renews the impression that Mr. Goossens is a composer to reckon with, even if he is still copiously sowing his wild oats. He shows an individual capacity to build masses of rich tone which compel admiration in spite of their vividly streaky texture. He revels in bold eloquence which leaves you wondering as to the thesis. A good deal of modern music seems designed to tease the listener's ear, of a set purpose and under the dictate of a fashion; when Mr. Goossens's music teases it does not seem to make an object of doing so. Technique and imagination, beyond being mastered, seem in turn to have mastered the composer's thought and made him impatient of downright statement, and the main thread and connection of his ideas—in harmony and in phrase—are largely implied. Added to a manner that tends to turbulence and vigour, this process gives a good deal of worry to the listener; moreover it robs each of the movements in the Quintet of that which every musical movement should have and which can best be described as a physiognomy. These reflections notwithstanding, we keenly look forward to the next opportunity of hearing a new work from Mr. Goossens's pen.

Holbrooke's MS. Quartet 'Auld lang syne' fell on jaded ears at the end of a long programme, and it was difficult to extract enjoyment from its vacillations between the apparently humorous and the apparently serious, or even to decide which was which. Here was technique in abundance, but no great imagination.

The Quartet in C major by Antonio Scontrino, heard for the first time in England, is a work of great virtue. It is clearly expressed, belongs in its idiom to an up-to-date school, has some excellent ideas, and is adventurous with an air of respectability; a good work to hear once.

Stravinsky's three super-pictorial pieces were heard again with amused tolerance.

On April 8 the Philharmonic Quartet assisted Miss Betty Sharpe and the composer in the production of three songs by Mr. Holbrooke written with pianoforte and string accompaniment. The words were neither printed nor clearly enunciated, and the somewhat vague searchings of the music were not self-explanatory. The Stravinsky pieces were repeated, and Borodin's D minor Quartet was heard with enjoyment.

It is gratifying to note that few chamber concerts occur in London nowadays without British music being adequately represented in the programme. On March 16, when the Classical Society gave a concert at Wigmore Hall, it was John Ireland's interesting Pianoforte Trio in E minor, No. 2; at Mlle. Arnaud's concert (Æolian Hall), on March 28, it was 'Five impressions of a holiday,' by Eugène Goossens, for pianoforte trio—a clever, resourceful work, abounding in ingenious effects. An interesting feature of the Classical Society's concert at Wigmore Hall, on April 2, was the performance of Debussy's Violoncello Sonata by Miss Beatrice Harrison. The same Society, on April 4, afforded a welcome opportunity for hearing Frank Bridge's Pianoforte Quintet and the String Quintet, with two violoncellos, of Schubert.

'A Song of Agincourt,' for orchestra, by Sir Charles Stanford, performed under his conductorship at the Royal College of Music on March 25, commemorates students of the College who fell in the War. It is a thoughtful, finely-wrought musical poem, with moments of deep beauty.

At the orchestral concert of the Royal Academy of Music on March 27, a number of able soloists appeared. Frederick Corder's 'Two choral poems' for women's voices and orchestra formed the chief novelty; and the programme further included movements from Hamilton Harty's Violin Concerto and the second Pianoforte Concerto of York Bowen.

The orchestral concert of Trinity College of Music took place at Queen's Hall on April 4. Mr. J. Ivimey conducted Svendsen's enjoyable Symphony in D, a work to which other amateur orchestras might turn their attention with profit. Sterndale Bennett's 'Naiads' Overture and Chabrier's 'España' Rhapsody were also included.

RECITALS.

The recital of Miss Beatrice Harrison at Wigmore Hall, on March 13, was inadvertently omitted from our last month's record. This extraordinarily-gifted young violoncellist gave the first performance in London of Esposito's Sonata in D, Op. 43. According to the Referee, it is essentially 'a genial work in which the Italian love of beauty is combined with the sentiment of Irish romance. The slow movement, based on a song-like melody, has a pathetic beauty that fascinates, and the other two movements may be described as a musical Rhapsody of a thoughtful and refined mind that rejoices in the goodness of life.'

At the first recital of Miss Vera Horton (vocalist), which took place at Wigmore Hall on March 17, Mr. Lionel Tertis played his 'Mosaic in ten pieces' for viola, which proved to be melodious and interesting.

M. Constantin Strosesco, singing at Æolian Hall on March 18, introduced four settings by Maurice Delage of Hindu poems. In these remarkable songs the Eastern and Western elements are blended with unusual beauty and effectiveness.—Special mention is due to the violin recital of Mr. Anatol Melzak at Æolian Hall on March 20, inasmuch as his programme included Hamilton Harty's Concerto in D minor.—M. Yves Tinayre, who in conjunction with Miss Myra Hess gave a recital at Wigmore Hall on March 21, was heard in an interesting collection of old French dance songs, and later works by Malipiero, Dupin, and Hùe.—For her pianoforte recital at the Margaret Morris Theatre on March 22 Miss Lilius Mackinnon chose a programme entirely from the works of Scriabin.—One of Mr. Plunket Greene's now famous lecture-recitals—illustrating on this occasion the element of 'atmosphere'—was enjoyed by a large audience at Æolian Hall on March 24.—Miss Peggy Cochrane (violinist) made her first appearance at Æolian Hall on March 25, with considerable success.—M. Livio Mannucci did good service at Æolian Hall on March 26 by reviving Hurlstone's Violoncello Sonata.—'Three Macedonian Sketches,' by J. R. Heath, were played by Miss Daisy Kennedy and Mr. Moiseiwitsch at Wigmore Hall on March 29.—In playing his own works at Steinway Hall on March 28, Mr. Percival Garratt showed marked ability both as composer and pianist.

At Wigmore Hall, on April 5, Mr. William Murdoch introduced four attractive new pianoforte works by Julius Harrison, entitled 'Worcestershire Pieces': 'Strawley Round,' 'Redstone Rock,' 'Pershe Plums,' and 'The Ledbury Parson.'—At Æolian Hall, on April 8, M. Strosesco brought forward 'Five little songs' by Reynaldo Hahn to words of Robert Louis Stevenson.—The second performance of Elgar's recently published Violin Sonata was given by Miss Jessie Snow at Wigmore Hall on April 8.

Mr. Roger Quilter gave a concert at Wigmore Hall on April 1, with a varied programme that included songs of his own and others by John Ireland and Winthrop Rogers, with Mr. Gervase Elwes as interpreter. The second Pianoforte Trio of John Ireland, and Quilter's 'Two old English tunes' for the same combination, added considerable interest.

A 'Toy Symphony' by Mr. Algernon Ashton caused a good deal of amusement, and no little pleasure, at Steinway Hall on March 27.

At Central Hall, Westminster, on March 29, it was a privilege to hear, in the same programme, Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. Plunket Greene, Mr. Albert Sammons, and Miss Hilda Saxe.

Mr. Martin Shaw's concert at Æolian Hall, on April 1, established his position of one of our most individual, thoughtful, and arresting song-writers. He is one of the few who can write in an idiom that smacks of Britain and at the same time satisfies an ear that listens to music for its intrinsic value without attention to its nationality. The 'British' quality of his music is easier to perceive than to describe, but is unmistakably present. The words chosen by Mr. Shaw for setting included examples by Kipling, Christina Rossetti, and Meredith. Among many songs that made an instant appeal we can specially mention 'The Cavalier's escape,' 'Brookland Road,' 'Easter carol,' 'Summer,' and 'Heffle Cuckoo fair.' The singers were Miss Ursula Greville and Mr. George Parker, and accompaniments were played by the composer.

The Lotus Ladies' Orchestra, conducted by Mrs. Douglas Hoare, made a highly favourable impression on its first appearance at Wigmore Hall on April 7. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Dream dances,' Eric Coates's 'Wood nymphs' and other works were played with excellent spirit and attractive tone.

The London Sunday School Choir, giving its annual festival concert at the Royal Albert Hall on April 12, attracted and gave evident pleasure to a large audience. Under Mr. William Whiteman's direction a sonorous body of well-directed tone was procured in Handel's 'Let their celestial concerts all unite' and 'Hallelujah Chorus.' Orchestral numbers were given under Mr. Wesley Hammet, and vocal solos contributed by Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss Margaret Layton, and Mr. Charles Tree.

Music in the Provinces.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

BIRMINGHAM.

Since the sending of our last Birmingham musical record a great many concerts of various calibre have been presented to local audiences; indeed the number increases each year, and perhaps finally Birmingham after all will become a musical city in its true meaning.

On March 8 the students of the Midland Institute School of Music took part in the customary terminal concert under the direction of Prof. Granville Bantock, and as usual the large Lecture Theatre was crowded by attentive listeners, principally composed of friends of the students and supporters of the School of Music. An interesting feature was Handel's Organ Concerto in F with orchestral accompaniment, the organist being Miss Nellie Woodward; Bach was represented by a Concerto for two violins, accompanied by the orchestra. The soloists—Miss Eleanor Finegan and Miss Marjory Astbury—played excellently, and the orchestra, although somewhat too prominent, was reliable. Prof. Bantock conducted quite an impressive performance of Stanford's 'Irish Symphony.' The vocalists were Miss Margaret Harrison, an excellent soprano, and Miss Phoebe Capper, who sang in dramatic style 'The dreary steppe,' by Gretchaninov.

At the Town Hall on the same evening the Birmingham Choral Union gave a concert recital of Gounod's opera 'Faust.' Mr. Wassell, the accredited conductor of the Society, was unavoidably absent, his place being suitably filled by Mr. A. J. Cotton, the conductor of the Midland Musical Society. The choruses—especially that connected with the return of the soldiers—were given with spirit and sonority. The principal parts were in able hands: Mr. Evan Jones (Faust), Miss Emily Breare (Margarita), Miss May Peters (Siebel and Martha), Mr. Arthur Cranmer (Valentine), and Mr. John Ridding (Mephistopheles). Mr. C. W. Perkins was at the organ.

Mr. Wassell's orchestral concert given at the Town Hall on March 22 was a brilliant success, the popular conductor being in his best form—indeed, he showed that he is a coming man, who can handle small or large orchestral forces with a sure hand. His clear phrasing and sense of rhythm help to make the works he submits for performance stand out clearly defined; as in the case of Dvorák's Symphony 'From the New World.' An interesting interlude and quasi-novelty was Granville Bantock's Suite for orchestra, entitled 'Russian Scenes,' an early work of the composer's, comprising five short numbers—'At the Fair,' 'Mazurka,' 'Polka,' 'Valse,' and 'Cossack Dance,' bearing the characteristics of the Russian idiom. Mr. Wassell caught the right spirit, although more verve in some of the numbers would have been an advantage. M. Arthur de Greef, the popular Belgian pianist, once more gave a vivid and exhilarating reading of Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto.

The Appleby Matthews series of Sunday evening concerts at the Scala Theatre, which terminated with an important orchestral concert at the Town Hall on April 27, was especially attractive to musicians on account of a splendid revival of Elgar's first Symphony and Granville Bantock's Symphonico-poem 'Dante and Beatrice.' Mr. Matthews is certainly to be congratulated upon the success he attained in giving these concerts every Sunday evening for seven months without a break. They have been a valuable educational factor. Mr. Matthews, with Mr. Alexander Cohen as violinist, gave the first public performance of Elgar's new Sonata for violin and pianoforte at the Scala Theatre on Sunday, April 13.

The Cramer ballad concert given at the Town Hall on March 19 was not so well attended as one expected considering the brilliant array of artists who took part in it, which included Miss Ruth Vincent, Miss Violet Fielding, Miss Melville Ledale, Mr. Walter Hyde, Mr. George Baker, Miss Dorothy Varick, Mr. William Murdoch (pianist), Miss Mary Law (violin), and Mr. F. B. Kiddle (accompanist).

Under the auspices of the Birmingham Anglo-French Society, Madame Minadiou gave at the Royal Society of Artists' Room, on March 27, an exceedingly interesting vocal and instrumental concert of French music, the programme covering a wide range of French compositions. The concert-giver contributed the charming old French song 'La charmante Marguerite,' some years ago a great favourite at Birmingham. The other vocalists were Miss Jean Roper (a promising new contralto) and Mrs. Urwick (soprano). Pianoforte solos by Debussy were admirably played by Mr. Claud de Ville, and violin solos were contributed by Mr. Howard Rutter (a talented student of the Midland Institute School of Music). Mr. G. H. Manton was as usual an excellent accompanist.

A record audience, completely filling our Town Hall on March 25 to its utmost holding capacity, attended the Butt-Rumford Concert. The magnetic drawing-power of Madame Clara Butt is indeed phenomenal, but on this occasion all records were broken, probably owing to the re-appearance of her husband, Mr. Kennerley Rumford, after four years' absence in France. In addition to these two artists, Miss Marie Hall and Miss Irene Scharrer made up the artistic personnel. The programme was of the usual order, and the enthusiasm was so great that in spite of the lengthy list the encores could easily have comprised a whole evening concert.

The Catterall Quartet gave their fifth and last concert of the season on the same evening, at the Royal Society of Artists' Room, with their customary artistic success. The programme included Haydn's Quartet in C major, Op. 54, the Ravel Quartet, and Beethoven's great String Quartet in B flat, Op. 130, written in Beethoven's most characteristic mood. The Catterall combination is now firmly established here, and certainly a finer and more finished performance of the three quartets could hardly be wished for.

A concert performance of Mascagni's opera 'Cavalleria Rusticana' was given at the Town Hall on March 30, under Mr. Joseph Adams's conductorship. Operas are rarely suited for concert programmes, and 'Cavalleria Rusticana' is one of these. The choir certainly made the most of the 'Easter Hymn' as regards sonority and ensemble—the only opportunity given to them. The principal parts were taken by Madame Parkes-Derby, Mr. Albert E. Benson, Mr. James Howell, and Miss Mary Parry.

The most important musical event of the month was the performance of Bach's great Mass in C minor, given by the Birmingham Festival Choral Society in the Town Hall on April 3. Sir Thomas Beecham was unable to conduct the performance, and he left the task to Mr. Hamilton Harty, who had band, choir, and principals under complete control and achieved a decided success. It is interesting to recall that the first complete performance here of the Mass was given at our Triennial Musical Festival in 1903, and subsequently the Festival Choral Society gave two performances in 1911, and one at Queen's Hall in 1912 at the special request of Sir Henry Wood. The choir carried off the honours. Such magnificent choral singing, so glorious in sonority, in expression, and precision, could hardly have been excelled. The orchestra was specially augmented by a contingent of London instrumentalists, through the kindness of Sir Thomas Beecham. Mr. C. W. Perkins presided at the organ, and the valuable help he rendered was a distinctive feature of the performance. The soloists—Miss Caroline Hatchard, Miss Ethel Peake, Mr. Alfred Heather, and Mr. Robert Radford (the two last-named, by the way, also took part in the performance given in April, 1911)—were admirable.

The Chappell ballad concert proved one of the most popular musical functions of the season. Enthusiasm reigned supreme, and the encores nearly doubled the original programme. The Queen's Hall light orchestra, so ably conducted by Mr. Alick Maclean, also took part, and gave delightful readings of the Overture from 'Mignon,' Edward German's 'Three Dances' from 'Nell Gwyn,' and Sibelius's 'Finlandia.' The solo pianist was Mr. Moiseiwitsch, who played Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto No. 1, in E flat, magnificently, accompanied by the orchestra. The splendid list of vocalists included Miss Louise Dale, Madame D'Alvarez, Mr. Gervase Elwes, Mr. Herbert Eisdell, and Mr. Robert Radford. Miss Margaret Cooper gave songs at the pianoforte in her usual attractive manner. To Mr. S. Liddle fell the duty of accompanist.

A recital by Miss Gertrude Fuller (violinist) and Miss Beatrice Hewitt (pianist) at the Midland Institute brought to notice Catoire's Sonata, Op. 15, for violin and pianoforte, two 18th century pieces—'Ayre and Cebell' and 'The rope dancer'—cleverly arranged by Alfred Moffat, and Larghetto by Handel, transcribed by Ysäe. Miss Kathleen Washbourne, a highly promising violinist, was heard at the Royal Society of Artists' Exhibition Room on April 10. Miss Carrie Tubb and Mr. Walter Hyde interpreted songs by Landon Ronald, accompanied by the composer, at the Town Hall on April 11, when M. Arthur de Greef varied the programme with pianoforte solos.

The London String Quartet appeared at Madame Minadiou's last 'Matinée Musicale' of the season, given in the Grosvenor Room on April 12. The London String Quartet is one of the finest organizations of this kind in England, indeed their wonderfully erudite performance of Beethoven's String Quartet in E minor, Op. 59, No. 2, was given with almost orchestral effect and with the utmost finish. They also introduced J. B. McEwen's String Quartet 'Biscay,' which proved quite a welcome novelty. Mr. Warner, the viola player, and a great artist, played with consummate skill B. J. Dale's 'Romance' from Suite for Viola and Pianoforte, Op. 2, the pianist being Mr. G. H. Manton, who also acted as accompanist. Madame Minadiou was the vocalist, singing with perfect art four 'Twilight' songs by Tchaikovsky, Massenet, Poldowski, and Guerra. Quite a novelty proved Beethoven's arrangement of three British National songs—'Bonny Laddy,' 'Faithful Johnnie,' and 'Sally in our Alley,' accompanied by violin, 'cello, and pianoforte. Madame Minadiou sang these in a piquant and simple manner.

A concert in aid of the funds of the National Institute for the Blind was given in the Town Hall on Sunday, April 13. The artists were Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. Maurice D'Oisly, of the Beecham Opera Company, Miss Madge Priest (contralto), Mr. Sidney Stoddard (baritone), Mr. Percy Dyche (solo violoncello), Miss Katrina Lund (recitallist), and Dr. Rowland Winn (pianist and accompanist).

BOURNEMOUTH.

By the time these notes are in print Bournemouth's Winter season, musically speaking, will almost have run its course. Meanwhile one would hardly credit that the end is approaching, for, as did March, so also has April furnished us with a feast of good things in the way of concerts. Mr. Dan Godfrey is lucky in combining an adventurous spirit with a caution born of experience, constituting a happy union of virtues which not infrequently leads to an unexpected and thoroughly desirable stroke of policy. For example, just as the curtain is about to fall on the season's exploits, and suggestions of a comparative lull in matters musical prevail, Mr. Godfrey suddenly fixes his managerial eye upon some distinguished instrumentalists or vocalists whom Bournemouth should on no account fail to hear, and immediately the Winter Gardens Pavilion again fills up to its very doors as though the crowded commencement of the season were beginning all over again. The jaded critic would seem to be the only individual who feels that he has been 'done.'

Recent Symphony Concerts have fully maintained their interest. The Symphonies performed have been Schumann's in C, No. 4 in E minor, by Brahms, Beethoven's 'Pastoral,' and the César Franck Symphony. Some very sound playing placed these compositions in their best light, and, as all are old favourites with our local audiences, they were of course highly appreciated. To one member of the audience at any rate, Brahms's fourth Symphony seems to increase in its magnificence at each re-hearing. Also we wonder if it is permissible to suggest that the 'Pastoral,' excepting for its really excellent 'Storm,' is a somewhat soporific work? Other very acceptable compositions at these concerts have been Elgar's 'In the South' Overture, Schumann's 'Manfred' Overture, Arnold Trowell's Tone-poem, 'Niobe'—the second performance this season of an extremely charming work—Schubert's 'Rosamunde' Overture, Dvorák's 'Carneval' Overture, and Dukas's ingenious Scherzo, 'L'Apprenti Sorcier.' A novelty teeming with ultra-modern effects was Bagrinovsky's Fantastic Miniatures, 'From Russian Tales' (Op. 1). Mr. Godfrey felt constrained to address the audience as to the Suite's grotesqueness and intricacy; perhaps he was wise to do so, although in our opinion the music decidedly 'comes off.' So far as the performance of this most complicated score was concerned, Mr. Godfrey's remarks were really superfluous, as the playing was practically faultless. It was certainly a tour de force, especially on the part of the conductor. Much more normal in its attributes was the remaining novelty of the month—'Fragments Symphoniques,' by Juliette Folville. Mlle. Folville is a distinguished teacher of the pianoforte at the Liège Conservatoire. During the War and the Armistice period she has resided in Bournemouth, and as a performer she has won many successes here, but as a composer of orchestral music her gifts have hitherto received but one demonstration only. The very pleasing composition alluded to above should pave the way for further productions of a like kind.

The soloists at the Symphony Concerts are not always on an equality, from the artistic standpoint, with the rest of the programme, but during the past month there has been little opportunity for criticism of this description. A disappointment awaited us at the twenty-fourth concert, Miss Craigie Ross, whose talents all musical Bournemouth recognises, being prevented through illness from appearing. Fortunately, however, Mr. Godfrey was able to secure Mlle. Folville (whom we have referred to above) in her place, and still more fortunately Mlle. Folville elected to play the beautiful composition that Miss Ross had promised us, namely, the Symphonic Variations for Pianoforte and Orchestra by César Franck. The Belgian artist's interpretation was a most interesting one, though it does not quite reach the splendid level of her playing in the Pianoforte and Violin Sonata by the same master. The following week Mr. Arnold Trowell was heard in his own Violoncello Concerto in E minor—a distinctly attractive though somewhat ill-proportioned work—his reading being most expressive and (of course) authoritative. On April 3 Mr. Percy Frostick made a favourable impression in Mozart's Violin Concerto in E flat. On April 10 Miss Jessie Munro gave the first performance in this town of Harry Farjeon's Pianoforte Concerto in D, an effective work containing much sparkling and unpretentious music, albeit none too successful in its scoring.

BRISTOL.

Lecturing at the Royal Colonial Institute on March 5, Mr. George Riseley, who has done much to develop English talent, put forward a 'reconstruction' scheme for music in the shape of a first-class resident orchestra of fifty performers giving two concerts daily from the beginning of September to June, with symphony concerts and eminent vocal and instrumental soloists, Colston Hall to be so altered to make a popular daily resort, with tea and other social rooms provided. It is interesting to add that in April the City Council agreed to acquire the Hall from the Company for £65,000, a good investment considering the value of the site, the building, and the splendid organ in it, given to the City by the late Lord Winterstoke at a cost of £15,000.

Bristol New Philharmonic Society got out of the old track in its Spring concert on March 19, and under Mr. Arnold Barter admirably presented Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Departure' and Saint-Saëns's second Concerto, with M. Arthur de Greef as solo pianist. On March 25, Bristol Choral Society, at rehearsal, presented through the Lord Mayor an address and a cheque for a hundred guineas to its retiring secretary, Mr. A. H. Insall.

A huge audience attended the Choral Society's fine performance of 'Elijah' at Colston Hall on March 29, Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Joseph Reed, and Mr. Herbert Brown being the soloists. Madame Clara Butt visited her native city, with Mr. Kennerley Rumford, on April 3, and had a magnificent reception at the same hall, in an attractive Butt-Rumford programme, to which Mr. Albert Sammons contributed violin solos, and, with Miss Grace Torrens at the pianoforte, the second movement from César Franck's Sonata in A. Miss Phyllis Lett came from London to assist in a joint service of praise at Tyndale Chapel on April 4.

Yet another Choral Society was successfully inaugurated on April 11, the Cotham Grove Choral Society, under Mr. George Taylor's guidance—an interesting sign of reconstruction in local music. Altogether quite a good month.

DEVON AND CORNWALL.

DEVON.

Madame Clara Butt and Mr. Kennerley Rumford, with Miss Marie Hall and Miss Grace Torrens, gave three concerts in Devon—at Plymouth on March 19, at Exeter on March 21, and at Torquay on March 22. Their appearance together was in all cases warmly welcomed. New songs introduced were by Walford Davies, Grace Torrens, A. M. Goodhart, and Ethel Montefiore. Plymouth and Torquay were visited on March 30 and 31 by Madame Luia Juta, Miss Lena Kontorovitch, and Miss Daisy Bucktrout, when modern songs representing Arthur Coquard, Mallinson, Easthope Martin, Frank Bridge, and Coleridge-Taylor were given, and Miss Bucktrout introduced pianoforte music by Mark Hambourg and Percy Pitt.

Plymouth Madrigal Society on March 26 gave a very good account of Set I. of Gustav Holst's Choral Hymns from the 'Rig Veda,' singing the strikingly impressive and very difficult music with such success that their early repetition is much to be desired. The band of the R.M.L.I. collaborated. The conductor of the Society, Dr. Harold Lake, was the soloist in Tchaikovsky's 'Fantasie de Concert,' for pianoforte and orchestra, Mr. P. S. G. O'Donnell conducting this and a Folk-Song Phantasy for strings, composed by Dr. Lake, the material of which was mainly original and presented in folk-song idiom, the only old tune presented in its entirety being one of the 17th century, 'Woman's work is never done.'

At the Plymouth Guildhall concert on March 22, forty-five of St. Andrew's junior choristers presented a new patriotic chorus by H. Moreton, 'Lives in the making,' the verses from John Oxenham's 'All's well,' the voices being supported by organ, pianoforte, and percussion. Other pieces by Hamilton Clarke, F. Campana, and Handel ('Let the bright Seraphim,' in choral unison), and the Irish song, 'Silent, oh Moyle,' were sung. The season of these concerts closed on the following Saturday, when the band of the R.M., Plymouth Division, gave first performances of an Elegiac Prelude by H. Moreton (who took part at the organ) and a 'May-Day' Overture by F. W. Moreton, and played, also with Mr. H. Moreton, Boellmann's Fantasie Dialogue.

The last of Glover's Sunday concerts up-to-date consisted of a programme performed by Miss Ada Forrest, who sang two new songs, 'Think tenderly of me' (Vernon Sharp) and 'God's bright morning' (Arthur Meale), with Mr. Shapiro (pianist), and Mlle. Kontorovitch (violinist).

Plymouth Orpheus Choir, conducted by Mr. David Parkes, gave a programme from their repertoire on March 24, and announce a big event later in the month, with Madame Melba.

Mr. Lancelot Holden, organist of the Mint Chapel, Exeter, by his periodic concerts and recitals provides one of the very few signs of musical life in the city. This month we have to record a vocal and instrumental recital on April 2, to which Mr. Holden contributed some good organ music, Mr. Arthur Woodbridge some excellent singing, and Miss Ruby Davy violin music. We are glad to learn that Mr. W. J. Cotton, recently returned from war service, is about to re-organize his male choir.

A recital of violin and pianoforte music given by Miss Lillian Dyke (with Miss Bertha Keen) and Miss W. E. Young, at Tavistock, on March 29, is worthy of notice, the programme including the César Franck Sonata, a 'Feu Follet' by Wessely, a Chanson Tzigane by Gerald Phillips (an effective novelty), and pianoforte music by Dohnányi.

Music at Blundell's School, Tiverton, has recently taken a leap forward, Mr. R. Bareham being organist and director. An excellent orchestra gave very creditable performances of good standard music on April 7, and the choir's singing of part-songs was exceedingly artistic. Mr. R. Bareham played pianoforte music, and gave an organ recital on the day previous, Mr. S. J. Bishop being the principal vocalist on each occasion.

Glee music was sung at Okehampton on March 15, and at Seaton on March 21, a good orchestra giving attractive selections at the latter place. A costume performance of a solo and concerted suite, 'A Country Fair,' at Seaton, on March 4, was very interesting in its collection of country songs and dances.

Chief events at Torquay, other than those already alluded to, have been a four days' season by the band of Plymouth Royal Marines, a week's season by the New Zealand Military band, conducted by Lieut. Andrew Wood, pianoforte and vocal recitals by Frederic Lamond and Madame Elsa Stralia, and two concerts by Miss Ada Forrest and party.

CORNWALL.

Choral music in Cornwall is cultivated not so much by big achievements as by small classes all over the country, often working under great difficulty in remote districts. Some of the events of the last month have been chorus, anthem, and part-singing by Penryn Labour Choir, conducted by Mr. Fred Coad, March 24; anthems ('Sing we to God' and 'The Lord liveth') and other sacred music by Penryn Wesleyan Choir, conducted by Mr. J. M. Thomas, March 26; sacred music by a choir from Truro, conducted by Mr. J. Behenna, at Mount Hawke, March 29; choruses, chiefly sacred, by a newly-formed choral class at Penryn, by Mr. F. Coad, on April 8; and anthems and glees ('Fleur-de-Lys,' 'Hymn of Peace,' 'What are these?' 'It is a good thing,' 'The beleaguered,' 'Strike the lyre'), by Germoe Mixed Choir, conducted by Mr. John Pryor at Godolphin Cross, on April 10.

Where numbers are too small for choruses, part-singing is practised, often with very artistic results. The Holman Quartet, Chacewater, sang sacred music at Goonhavern on March 15; Looe Male Glee Party, conducted by Mr. John Mutton, sang excellently on March 20; Miss Meta Hawke's 'One and All' Party have attained a good artistic standard, and on March 26, at Bugle, sang the part-songs, 'Summer fancies,' 'The earth is clothed with flowers,' 'Moonlight,' and 'I've watched from the shore.' Part-songs rendered by Langtree Choral Society, on April 4, under the direction of Mr. S. J. Sanders, were 'Empire song,' 'Boat song,' 'Merrily passes youth away,' and 'Slumber song.'

At Camborne, on March 27, Mr. Godfrey Uren, Mr. H. C. Tonking, and Madame Maria Yelland, gave an organ, violin, and vocal recital, and a string band was conducted by Dr. H. V. Pearce.

EDINBURGH.

A visit of the Band of H.M. Coldstream Guards falls to be recorded this month. Major Rogan conducted, and gave two performances daily from March 24 to 27 inclusive.

On March 26 the Choral Union gave a performance of Elgar's 'The Spirit of England,' with Miss Caroline Hatchard as soloist.

The fourth Reed Concert on March 22 consisted of Tchaikovsky's 'Pathétique' Symphony, Beethoven's 'Eroica,' and Bach's Concerto in D minor.

A delightful recital of violin and pianoforte music was given on March 28 by two local artists whose work will undoubtedly be heard of further afield in the days to come, viz., Mr. Chester Henderson as 'cellist and Mr. Appleyard as pianist. The principal item on their programme was Hurlstone's Sonata for 'cello and pianoforte.

Another recital of more than usual interest was given by Mr. William Moonie, a son of the well-known musician James A. Moonie, on February 28. The programme was devoted to his own compositions, which included an interesting Quartet for strings and pianoforte, several songs, and instrumental solos.

The fifth Reed Concert was given on April 5, and consisted of the C minor Symphony of Mozart, the C major Symphony of Schubert, and Bach's Cantata for alto, organ, and orchestra. Miss Helen Anderton was the vocalist.

On April 19 the Royal Choral Union gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah.' The soloists were Miss Dorothy Silk, Miss Astra Desmond, Mr. John Booth, and Mr. Herbert Brown. Mr. Greenhouse Allt conducted.

A testimonial is being raised for presentation to Dr. E. Bunnett, on his retirement from the post of organist to the Nave Services at Norwich Cathedral. Dr. Bunnett (who, we are glad to hear, is now recovering from his recent serious illness) will be eighty-five in June. His many friends will wish him happiness in his well-earned rest, and any who desire to give practical expression to the wish should send their contributions to the office of the Eastern Daily Press, Norwich.

GLASGOW.

The Students of the Athæneum School of Music gave their annual orchestral concert on March 25. Quite creditable performances of MacCunn's 'Land of the Mountain and the Flood,' two movements of Max Bruch's Violin Concerto in G minor, and Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony were given under the conductorship of Mr. Horace Fellows. For what was announced as the fourteenth annual Spring concert by the Glasgow Orpheus Choir, the public demand for admission was so great as to necessitate three performances, which took place on March 25, 26, 27. In an admirably-chosen programme of twelve choral pieces, the singing of the Choir reached probably its highest point of perfection. Notably was this the case in Coleridge-Taylor's 'Sea-drift,' to select only one instance. Violin solos by Mr. Albert Sammons, accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. Wilfrid Senior, varied the choral programme. The enterprise of the Orpheus Choir is shown in its scheme for popularising chamber music, and as a first essay in this direction it has engaged the London String Quartet to give a week's performances in the month of October. A very successful 'Victory' concert was given by Hamilton Choral Union (Mr. T. L. Drummond, conductor) on April 9. The programme included Elgar's 'For the Fallen,' Percy Fletcher's 'Ring out, wild bells,' and several Handelian choruses. Miss Gertrude Simpson and Mr. Robert Burnett were the solo vocalists, the latter's singing of Stanford's 'Songs of the Sea' being particularly acceptable. An efficient orchestra, led by Mr. W. H. Cole and supplemented by Mr. Robert McLeod at the organ, provided the accompaniments. The other events of the month have included a week's performances of 'Cavalleria Rusticana' and 'Pagliacci' by the Grand Opera Society (Mr. Hatton Malcolm, conductor), a recital of Scottish songs by Miss Boyd Steven and Mr. James McGarvie, a recital of her own songs and instrumental compositions by Miss Ethel Angless, a young Glasgow musician, the annual concert by Mr. Thorpe Davies's choir, and a performance of the 'St. Matthew' Passion in the Cathedral by the Bach Choir, conducted by Mr. J. M. Diack.

LIVERPOOL.

An outstanding event in the rapidly-waning season was the eighth and final concert of the Philharmonic Society, which Sir Henry Wood conducted on April 1. With Moiseiwitsch as soloist, a first hearing was given of the Pianoforte Concerto in C sharp minor, Op. 30, by Tcherépnine, a pupil of Rimsky-Korsakov. In one continuous movement, the so-called Concerto is very compelling in its interest—less, perhaps, on account of the beauty of its themes than for its insistent rhythms and the glitter and colour of its scoring, in which bells find an important place. But while the manner is unconventional, the spirit is unflagging, and to a supremely-masterful player like Moiseiwitsch the exceptional difficulties of the work were there to vanquish. Another feature was the first performance here of Sir Hubert Parry's beautiful six-part Motet, 'There is an old belief,' which was sympathetically sung under Dr. A. W. Pollitt's direction, and made a deep impression. It was the choral gem of the evening. Our great English composer, in writing what was really his own 'Song of Farewell,' has finely-caught the humanity of Lockhart's striking lines, which find expression in strict music of rare and solemn beauty as well as constructive mastery. M. Vladimir Rosing's singing found great favour in its dramatic intensity and versatile art shown in a song from Borodin's 'Prince Igor,' Duparc's 'Invitation au voyage,' Moussorgsky's 'Song of the flea,' and Schumann's 'J'ai pardonné,' a French version of 'Ich grolle nicht,' sung with passionate emotion. Mr. Walter Bridson was an admirable accompanist. The instrumental items included Elgar's delightful movement for strings alone—the Introduction and Allegro, Op. 47, on a Welsh theme, which is so greatly ennobled in the process. Led by Mr. Catterall, it was a magnificent performance of English music by English players. Sir Henry Wood also displayed his splendid qualities of interpretation and command in brilliant performances of Mozart's 'Don Giovanni' Overture, Liszt's 'Hungarian Rhapsody' No. 2, and Wagner's 'Meistersinger' Overture, which rang down the curtain on a successful season that has well-sustained the Society's ample laurels gathered in less difficult years.

Beethoven Sonatas have lately been receiving attention from recitalists at Rushworth Hall Mid-day Wednesdays, and three excellent recent performances included the 'Waldstein' Sonata played by Mr. Walter Bridson, the great C minor Sonata, Op. 111, boldly and resolutely played by Miss D. A. Chilton Griffin (London), while a player of introspective mood as well as great executive powers, Mr. Charles Kelly (Manchester), expounded the seldom-heard Sonata in E flat, Op. 31. Chopin also bulked largely in the programmes, and a notable performance of the B minor Sonata by Mr. Frederick Blundell, on April 2, deserves a line of appreciation. Not only have the classics been well represented, but also many welcome examples were given of our younger English school, whose works may possibly be regarded as 'classics' by the ultra-moderns of a century hence. To their own generation, Ireland, Holbrooke, and Scott, in particular, have something to say. The recitals are to be resumed in the Autumn, which is good news to many who have found refreshment in these weekly opportunities provided by Messrs. Rushworth.

At Crane Hall Wednesday afternoon recitals Mr. Julian Clifford on March 26 played César Franck's Prelude, Choral, and Fugue, as well as Moszkowski's 'Étincelles' with ready skill, while Mr. Edward Isaacs on April 10 gave masterly performances of the G minor Fantasia and Fugue (Bach-Liszt) and Chopin's B flat minor Scherzo. Violinists who have appeared at these recitals included Mr. John Dunn and Mr. J. P. Sheridan, and the singers included Miss Raymonde Amy and Miss Désirée Ellinger. The vocal recital on March 22 by Mr. Riddell Hunter displayed him as a tenor who employed his vocal resources with admirable taste and art, shown in a wide range of songs, ably accompanied by Mr. G. J. Freeman. The recitals given by Miss Gladys Scollick (pianoforte) and Miss Katharine Kendall (violin) were notable for present attainments and future promise.

After a successful season of fifteen weeks in the Shakespeare Theatre the H. B. Phillips Opera Company's stay terminated on April 5. A four months' season is projected next year, and Mr. Phillips in his valedictory speech claimed that while the season's performances might not have been brilliant, they had been good all-round productions. Counting in the prospective visits of the Allington-Charsley and O'Mara Companies, there would be a total of forty-five weeks of opera at popular prices in this theatre. One of the events of the past season was the first production in English of Isidore de Lara's opera 'Amy Robsart,' originally given in Italian at Covent Garden a quarter of a century ago, since when Mr. de Lara has written six other operas produced abroad. He is distinctly a melodist among composers, and his opera found a friendly audience to whom the composer personally expressed his thanks.

At the sixth and final concert of the Rodewald Society's series on March 17, Mozart's delightful F major Quartet was delightfully played by the Catterall String Quartet, whose performance of Eugène Goossens's immensely clever 'Jack o' Lantern' was encored and repeated. Holbrooke's Serenade, 'Belgium, 1915,' strikes a deeper note. It is a musician's noble expression of sorrow, sympathy, and hope. Beethoven's great Quartet, Op. 131, brought a successful season to its close.

The excellent performance of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion, given by the choir of St. Nicholas' Parish Church on April 6, under the direction of Mr. C. W. Bridson, was the occasion of the re-opening of the organ after extensive alterations, including improved pneumatic action and new stops, which are to commemorate the long service of Mr. Walter Baker and Mr. Wynne Jones as choirmen.

The Chappell touring party provided a constellation of vocal stars at their concert on April 8, with Miss Margaret Cooper in addition, and Moiseiwitsch, who played Liszt's E flat Concerto, accompanied by the Queen's Hall light orchestra, conducted by Mr. Alick Maclean. The accompanists at this musical feast were Mr. S. Liddle (pianoforte) and Dr. Pollitt (organ).

The Blundellsands Amateur Orchestral Society, a strongly-supported organization conducted by Mr. Vasco Akeroyd, went through an attractive programme on March 22, at which Miss Una Truman played brilliantly in Saint-Saëns's C minor Pianoforte Concerto No. 4, and Mr. W. H. Cross sang. The orchestra of fifty, which includes many ladies, found congenial material in Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony and Debussy's 'Petite Suite.'

After four years' suspension of activities, the West Kirby Choral Society, which finds such an excellent conductor in Dr. W. B. Brierley, gave a concert on March 25 in which the first part, 'In Memoriam,' opened with Sullivan's Overture bearing that title, followed by Stanford's 'Last Post.' The second part, dedicated to 'Victory,' comprised Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' with Miss Kate Campion and Mr. John Perry as soloists.

The Warrington Musical Society's season terminated with a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' sung in the Parish Church on April 10. Conducted by Mr. Frank H. Crossley, the vocal principals were Miss Elsie Hewett, Miss Snelling, and Mr. Lloyd Moore, with Mr. W. H. Payton as organist and Mr. R. H. Pearson as leader of the orchestra.

During a fortnight's season at the Royal Court Theatre, Liverpool, on April 15 the Carl Rosa Opera Company added a new work to its repertoire by the first production in England of the Belgian composer Alfred de Keyser's opera, 'Stella Maris.' Although new to this country, the opera has found favour on the Continent as a work of considerable interest and merit. In three Acts, the story is slight, and concerns the rivalry of two Breton fishermen for one woman. Yanik returns from sea to find his old sweetheart Marga about to marry another man. His threats or entreaties prove of no avail, although nearly succeeding. In this scene the music finds its strongest moments, and the composer shows real dramatic power and intensity. Elsewhere the score is too often conventional and unequal in its use of representative themes and a symphonic orchestra. There is, however, considerable lyrical facility of expression, while the work possesses evident sincerity, without special distinction. Admirable interpretative power was shown by the three vocal principals—Miss Beatrice Miranda (Marga), Mr. William Boland (Yanik), and Mr. Kingsley Lark (Sylvain).

Conducted by Mr. H. de la Fuente, the opera was well-staged and excellently produced. Madame de Keyser, the composer's widow, was present in the audience.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.

By the middle of April big-scale music here had come to an end. The Beecham Opera returns for a five-weeks' season, from May 19 to June 21, the last-named date being that fixed approximately for the Musical Peace Festival in the grounds of the Belle Vue Gardens. Most important local choral organizations and the better-known Church choirs are joining forces, and a monster choir of fifteen hundred to two thousand voices is confidently expected. The accompaniments will be provided 'by a combination of string orchestra and one of the famous brass bands of the neighbourhood.' Who will be asked to conduct is not yet known. The Festival is to be semi-religious in character, and the oratorios of Handel, Haydn, Mendelssohn, and Spohr are to be drawn on, besides unaccompanied pieces, and a few hymns will doubtless be used for joint participation by audience, choir, orchestra, and band. It is expected that the music will comprise selections appropriate as In Memoriam tributes, thanksgiving for victory and peace, and what may be termed patriotic choruses, in which latter connection Elgar and Purcell are named as probable sources.

The most difficult part of so big a task will be the joint and final rehearsals, as Manchester to a man (and woman) will celebrate its Whitsuntide holiday—immediately prior to the projected Festival—as perhaps never before.

Amidst all Manchester's multifarious musical activities, choral music has latterly occupied quite a relatively unimportant position—opera, orchestral and chamber-music, recitals, and Russian ballet have exceeded all previous records in the first quarter of 1919, but the big-scale choral concerts have been limited to Mr. Brand Lane's choir in Berlioz's 'Faust,' under Sir Henry Wood, the Hallé Choir in Bach's B minor Mass, under Mr. Hamilton Harty, while on April 9 portions of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion were sung at the Cathedral. The lesser choral concerts were Miss Asworth's Ancoats Girls' Choirs, and the concluding concert of the Manchester Vocal Society, when Elgar's 'The Black Knight' was performed.

For a long time I have maintained here and elsewhere that our big-choir performances have failed to grip the public as they might because of (a) inadequate rehearsal for such big works, due (b) to bad planning of the place choral performances should occupy in a scheme like the Hallé Society's. I pleaded for fewer works, more adequately rehearsed, and so placed in the Winter scheme as would permit the devotion of requisite time to rehearsal.

This year's events have conspired to prove the soundness of my contention, as the Hallé Choir had no work to do between Christmas and March 27, except the B minor Mass; and under Mr. Hamilton Harty it was strong then in the very points where it was weak in 1914, when last given under Mr. Balling. Strong exception was taken (in the May issue of that year) to my outspoken comments at the time. Unless choral people realise that the public to-day demands the same high efficiency of brain-power from her amateur choralists as from her professional orchestras, they may as well 'put up the shutters.' In this matter (prior to 1915) the smaller competitive choirs about here set the pace, and unless the big choirs do the same, choral music will simply drop out of the musical curriculum in such centres as Manchester. Ordinary every-day choral singing no longer yields the slightest influence or inspires any interest. Given with distinction, there is life for some choral music; without that saving virtue, nobody who values the country's progress in musical appreciation will for a moment regret its disappearance.

Not only had we that rarest of all experiences—first-rate Bach choral singing on March 27, but a discovery of an equally great Bach soloist in Miss Caroline Hatchard. Mr. Hamilton Harty took over the work at two or three days' notice, and showed conclusively that he knew his Bach score at least as well as some of the orchestral scores which he plays so supremely well—e.g., Debussy's 'L'après-midi,' or anything by Berlioz. This latter predilection of his is very strongly marked, and reached its culmination in a performance (April 5) of the 'Symphonie Fantastique,' not heard here since 1911. On this occasion Mr. Arthur Catterall returned to one of his early loves in the concerto form, Goldmark in A minor—very tuneful, delicately scored, easy of comprehension at the first time of hearing, but not exactly a work that one would like to live with for long. Two orchestral miniatures by W. H. Reed and Herbert Howell had an appreciative reception. On April 10, Mr. Landon Ronald played Butterworth's 'Shropshire Lad,' which interested me more than his 'Pathetic' Symphony reading. I went from this concert straight to the Russian Ballet, and came away wondering whether it would not be a good thing were our conductors to banish Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' for several years, meanwhile soaking their artistic natures in Russian opera and ballet, and then come back to the old 'Pathetic.' I do not think that they could then possibly play it as they do to-day. Those Russian dancers proved conclusively to me that our British reading of the second and third movements especially, and of parts of the first also, are hopelessly lacking in real rhythmical abandon. The 5-4 would become something more expressive in lyrical power where now it is rather coldly formal, and the March-Scherzo would take on more of the complexion of the 'Prince Igor.' Strange that 'Scheherazade,' played in the concert-hall, is listened to in silence. Transfer it to the music-hall and the first eight minutes of the music, prior to the curtain rising, can only be heard to an accompaniment of chatter, which ceases immediately the dancing begins!

On March 27 the O'Mara Opera Company gave for the first time in England Catalini's opera, 'La Wally' (The Vulture Maiden). Produced at Milan in 1892, it was brought to O'Mara's notice by one of his famous tenor singers, Mr. Henry Thompson. It is concerned with Wally's (pronounced as French Valleé) two lovers, one of her own choice, the other being her father's. Complications and jealousy ensue, and the inevitable quarrel, in which her father's choice pushes her own into a Swiss ravine, whence she rescues him. Later rescuer and rescued are overwhelmed by an avalanche. Miss Morden sang the heroine's part with great beauty of tone, but hardly realised the more ruggedly romantic side of the character. Few of the O'Mara scenic settings can compare with this Alpine village and the romantic colouring of its fair. Mr. Cuthbert Hawley conducted.

Notable among chamber music concerts were the Catterall Quartet in the Ravel on March 22; the Ravel Trio on April 2, and Eugène Goossens's 'Cello and Pianoforte Rhapsody, in which Messrs. André Mangeot, Georges Pitsch, and R. J. Forbes were concerned; the Brodsky concert on March 20, devoted to early Beethoven and Mendelssohn, and Schumann in A minor, Op. 41; and that of April 3, when three Quintets—Mozart in G minor, No. 6, Schubert's 'Trout,' for pianoforte and strings, and Beethoven's C major, Op. 29—were heard. Listening to these I felt more than ever before that the outstanding characteristic of this quartet's playing to-day is the ripe maturity of its readings, in which was all the mellow beauty of a Cotswold harvest scene. Dr. Brodsky has some new ideas for the development of chamber-music in Manchester which may be made public later.

The Tuesday and Friday Nootide Concerts have been notable for the finely reflective interpretations of Miss Marjorie Sotham in Debussy, Albeniz, and in the Tchaikovsky Elegiac Trio; and for the commanding, almost overpowering technique of Miss Chilton-Griffin, who is certainly to be counted as in the Carreño succession. Her Beethoven Sonata, Op. 111, was as fine in conception as one could well wish; she seems already marked out for really big things.

Miss Vivian Edwards (April 4) gave a recital of Folk-Songs of the Near East, singing over a score of items in six languages, including Serbian, Armenian, and Greek.

Mr. Rosing's first recitals here and the two promised performances of the new Elgar Sonata must wait until next month's message.

On April 9 the Manchester Vocal Society concluded its season with Elgar's 'The Black Knight' and a miscellaneous programme given under Dr. T. Keighley.

NEWCASTLE.

Serious music at Newcastle-upon-Tyne has been almost entirely in the hands of the Bach Choir, which has continued its work under difficulties that would have discouraged any but the most enthusiastic. Four concerts have already been given this season, the first being devoted to Bach, the second to Christmas music, one part of the latter programme being taken from Bach and the other from British Christmas music. The central feature of this concert was the first performance of Mr. Alfred Wall's Pianoforte Quartet in C minor, which received one of the prizes of the Carnegie Trust award, 1918. It proved to be a well-designed work, with strong characteristic themes and finished workmanship. The third concert was devoted to British music, beginning with Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas.' The second part consisted of a Rhapsody for 'cello and pianoforte by E. Goossens, three little Funeral Marches for pianoforte by Gerald Tyrwhitt, Rutland Boughton's choral Folk-song Variations, 'William and Margaret,' 'By the Tarn' (Goossens), 'The leaves be greene' (Byrde), and the 'Solemn Melody' by Walford Davies, for string orchestra. The concert concluded with Balfour Gardiner's ballad, 'News from Whydah.' The fourth concert, on Saturday, April 12, was again devoted to Bach. It included a Motet in four parts, the eight-part Motet 'Sing ye to the Lord,' the Church Cantata No. 158, 'May peace be unto thee,' a similar Cantata for baritone and cembalo by Mr. Clapperton and Miss Eckford, and a selection of songs from the 'Anna Magdalena' Book. In addition to the choral concerts the committee also arranged two chamber concerts, at the first of which, on January 24, the Leeds Trio supplied the programme and played Beethoven's Op. 97 and Rachmaninov's Op. 9. The second concert was given by the Catterall String Quartet, who gave a superb performance of Beethoven's

C sharp minor Quartet, Op. 131, Borodin in D minor, and Joseph Speaight's 'Some Shakespearean Characters.'

The Armstrong College Choral Society, on Wednesday, March 19, gave a very interesting concert consisting of Motets by Gabrieli and Vittoria, Gustav Holst's 'Hymn to Dionysius,' songs by British and French composers, and music for string orchestra. Mr. W. G. Whittaker conducted both this and the Bach Society's concerts.

The Darlington Chamber Music Society has also been able to continue its concerts during the War. Three were given this season, the London String Quartet, the Arthur Catterall Quartet, and a violoncello recital by Mr. Hock.

On March 26 Dr. A. Eaglefield Hall lectured to a meeting of the British Music Society on 'British music, past, present, and future,' choosing his illustrations from Morley, Dowland, Ford, Purcell, and John Ireland.

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

Sir Henry Wood received a warm welcome at Nottingham when he conducted the Hallé Orchestra on March 19. The programme included Beethoven's 'Eroica,' Howard Carr's 'Three sketches of British heroes,' Saint-Saëns's 'Le Déluge,' and Goldmark's 'Sakuntala.' Miss Olga Haley contributed Gounod's 'O ma lyre immortelle' ('Sapho') and Bizet's 'Chant Bohémien' ('Carmen').

At the performance of Haydn's 'Creation' at Broad Street on March 23, Miss Florence Mellors, Mr. C. H. Morley, and Mr. Harold Glover rendered the solo parts, Mr. F. Wyatt officiated at the organ, and Mr. H. Lowater conducted.

Mr. Bernard Johnson gave an organ recital at the Albert Hall on March 23, when his programme was exclusively Wagnerian, including the Overture to 'Tannhäuser,' the Prelude to 'Lohengrin,' and (by request) the 'Ride of the Valkyries.' On April 6 Mr. Johnson brought his present series to a conclusion by playing a request programme, which included Bach's Prelude and Fugue in D major, Rossini's Overture to 'William Tell,' and the recitalist's 'Pavane' and 'Deserted water-way.'

One of the musical treats of the season was Miss Cantelo's chamber concert on April 11, when the Catterall String Quartet gave a fine performance of Beethoven's Op. 74, in E flat major. Miss Cantelo was heard in a selection of pianoforte solos by Scarlatti, Chopin, Debussy, and Frank Bridge, and joined the strings in a fine performance of Dvorák's Quintet in A major, Op. 81.

On Palm Sunday (April 13) the Albert Hall Choir gave a performance of Bernard Johnson's 'Ecce Homo.' The hall was filled to its utmost capacity. Mr. Allen Gill conducted, and the composer was at the organ. The soloists were Messrs. C. Morley, C. Keywood, B. Hodgson, and F. Herrick, while the choir was assisted by the boys from St. Andrew's Church choir.

SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

There was much to interest the student of Bach in the revival of the 'St. Matthew' Passion music given by the Sheffield Musical Union on March 27. Dr. Coward was responsible for the general character of the performance, but he essayed no novel readings such as marked the two memorable performances of the work at the Sheffield Festivals of 1908 and 1911. In leaning to an orthodox laying out of the style of interpretation he was enabled more particularly to focus attention on the singing of the choir, which in this instance overwhelmed all other aspects of the performance. So much was this the case that the purist may question the policy which gave predominance to what should, ideally, be a co-equal partner with the other contributory elements—the soloists, orchestra, and massed chorales. With this reservation, unstinted praise can be given to the beautiful choral effects, touching and expressive as they were in the quieter moods and overwhelming in the torrential fury of 'Have lightnings and thunders.' The chorales were treated as highly-finished and elaborated part-songs, unaccompanied save in one instance. Though such a treatment constituted a diversion from their original intent, which may be taken to be outbursts of congregational feeling, it enabled their harmonic beauties and emotional opportunities to be demonstrated. A competent quintet of soloists was found in Misses Minnie Searle and Ena Roberts, Messrs. Joseph Reed, William Hayle, and Joseph Lycett. Miss Alice Walker was the pianist, Mr. E. Booth the organist, and Mr. J. H. Parkes orchestral leader.

The Sheffield Amateur Musical Society chose for its main work at the Spring concert on April 1, Verdi's 'Requiem.' The particular genius of this Society lies in versatility of style and a wide range of expressiveness, which qualities were indeed summoned in the presentation of so vivid and temperamental a work as the 'Requiem.' As a result the choir surpassed its own record, and gave a vitalised, warmly coloured, and realistic reading of the music and the Latin text of the Mass. The interwoven sections for choir and solo quartet were models of proportionate balance, while the great choral climaxes were brought out in inspiring fashion. The soloists—Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Alfred Heather, and Mr. Herbert Brown—were ideal for the solo portions, and the score was smartly played by a well-found orchestra. Songs and orchestral pieces completed the programme. Mr. J. A. Rodgers conducted.

At the second of the Misses Foxon's orchestral concerts two Pianoforte Concertos were played—MacDowell's No. 2, in D minor, and Arensky's in the same key. The soloists were Mr. Stanley Kaye and Miss Helen Guest, each of whom played with the confidence born of good preparation, and showed much insight into the import of the music. Mr. Julian Clifford conducted an excellent orchestra from the Harrogate Kursaal.

A successful season of Friday Afternoon Concerts, organized by the Misses Foxon, ended with an interesting chamber concert at which the London String Quartet played works by Beethoven (Op. 18, No. 4) and Tchaikovsky in D (Op. 11), and with Miss Lily Foxon, Schumann's Pianoforte Quintet.

The Eva Rich Ladies' Choir gave a well-rehearsed performance of Mozart's twelfth Mass, under the capable direction of Mr. Allan Smith, at one of the Victoria Hall Popular Concerts, and the Choral Society connected with the same hall performed 'Elijah,' conducted by Mr. H. Chisholm Jackson.

Four Church performances of 'St. Matthew' Passion were given at various places of worship in Sheffield during Holy Week, the choir being drawn from the Musical Union and the conductor being Dr. Coward.

The successful series of New Saturday Chamber Concerts terminated early in April; their continuance next season is promised.

YORKSHIRE.

LEEDS.

The Leeds Philharmonic Society, on March 26, gave one of the best of the many concerts that are to its credit during its fifty years' existence. Bach's 'Magnificat' and Hamilton Harty's 'Mystic Trumpeter' received interpretations the brilliance and finish of which were not confined to one section of the performers, but included choir, orchestra, and principals. Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Mary Swailes, Miss Dilys Jones, and Messrs. Gervase Elwes and F. Ranalow were the soloists, and Dr. Bairstow conducted. Bach's fourth 'Brandenburg' Concerto served as a most suitable prelude to this excellent concert. Miss Lily Simms, a clever violinist, who has of late turned particular attention to the viola, gave a recital of music for viola and pianoforte on March 28, when with Mr. Anderson Tyrer as pianist she gave works by Schumann, Brahms (the F minor Clarinet Sonata), and Winkler, which were the more interesting since they are so seldom heard in the concert-room. A most enjoyable chamber concert was that given by Mr. Arthur Catterall's Manchester Quartet on April 3, when String Quartets by Beethoven (in B flat, Op. 130), Schubert (A minor), and Ravel, were played in finished style. Yet another concert of chamber music has to be chronicled in the last of Mr. Alex. Cohen's Sonata recitals, on April 4, when, in addition to pieces by Medtner, Catoire, and Dvorák, he gave the first performance at Leeds of Elgar's new Sonata, which he and Mr. Anderson Tyrer played with much brilliance and warmth of style. Brahms's 'German Requiem' has become so recognised a feature in some of our churches that not even prejudice raised by the War can dethrone it, and it was listened to by a crowded and attentive congregation at St. Chad's, Leeds, on April 7, when Mr. H. P. Richardson secured a fine performance, the choral finish attained after almost a minimum of rehearsal indicating how familiar the work has grown with singers of the present generation. Miss Suddaby and Mr. Hayle were most artistic principals, and Mr. Walter Walker gave as satisfactory a version of the score as was possible on the organ. At Leeds Parish Church the customary service at which the 'St. Matthew' Passion is given took place on April 14, under Mr. Willoughby Williams's direction. Mrs. H. M. Bower was the contralto, Mr. Brearley the Narrator, and Mr. Hayles the Christ, the choirboys sharing among them the soprano solos.

OTHER TOWNS.

At the Bradford Permanent Orchestra's concert on March 22 Mr. John Dunn gave a brilliant effervescent performance of Mackenzie's 'Fibroch,' and the performance included also Holst's 'Japanese Suite,' which makes a happy use of Oriental idioms. Mr. Julian Clifford conducted, and Miss Adelaide Taylor was the vocalist. On March 24 Mr. Midgley had the honour of giving, at the last of his Free Chamber Concerts, Elgar's new Sonata its first Yorkshire performance. Mr. Edgar Drake was the violinist, and a feature of the concert was the charming singing of concerted vocal music by Misses Judson, Midgley, Clayton, and Parkinson. At All Saints' Church, Bradford, Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' was the subject of a special service on April 10, when Mr. Charles Stott conducted a performance which, though the effect suffered from the substitution of an English version for the familiar Latin original, was very sympathetic and reverent. Mr. Arnold Goldsbrough, the sub-organist of Manchester Cathedral, did all that an organist could do to take the place of Dvorák's orchestra, and Miss Nellie Judson, Miss Baxandall, and Messrs. Wilfrid Hudson and W. Lowell made a capital quartet.

At Halifax the Glee and Madrigal Society, which has attained such remarkable perfection under Mr. Shepley, gave a characteristic concert with a well-arranged programme on March 20. The choir sang with admirable precision and ease, and secured every possible effect with a minimum of effort. Miss Fairless was the solo violinist, Mr. Arthur Jordan, a tenor with perfect enunciation, being the vocalist. At the Halifax Chamber Concert on the following day, March 21, three String Quartets—by Mozart, Schumann, and Ravel respectively—were played by the Catterall Quartet party. At the Huddersfield Music Club, on March 27, Mr. Gervase Elwes gave a vocal recital, and on March 29 the Huddersfield Philharmonic Orchestra, which is now under Mr. Frederick Dawson's direction, gave a programme of more than common artistic value, having for its central feature Liszt's E flat Concerto, the solo part being played with good effect by Miss Guendolen Roe. Mr. Holbrooke has extended his chamber concerts to Hull, where on April 5 he ended a series with a programme that included Violin Sonatas by César Franck and Ireland, in which he had for his colleague Miss Kate Goldsmith, a violinist possessing a very warm tone and broad emotional style. Miss Violet Roberts was the vocalist. Dr. Bairstow has, since he became organist of York Cathedral, organized an annual performance of the 'St. Matthew' Passion, which has now attained a more than creditable degree of all-round excellence. On Palm Sunday, April 13, it received a really fine and complete interpretation. The solos were taken by a choirboy (Wright), who in both voice and musical feeling shows very exceptional promise, Miss Dilys Jones, whose voice never sounded better than in this vast building, Mr. Gervase Elwes, a finished Narrator, Mr. Herbert Brown, who put good expression into the part of Christ, and Sergt. Davison, who took minor parts very efficiently. The chorus of the York Musical Society, a complete orchestra, with Mr. Harold Bennett at the organ and Dr. Ernest Bullock and Mr. McEwen at the pianoforte, made up an excellent body of performers, and the result, under Dr. Bairstow's able conductorship, was a really impressive performance.

Dr. E. Harold Davies (brother to Dr. Walford Davies) has accepted the post of Elder Professor of Music at Adelaide University in succession to Dr. J. Matthew Ennis, who recently resigned.

Country and Colonial News.

ABERDEEN.—Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' was sung in Queen's Cross Church on Sunday, March 30. The soloists were Misses Margaret Inverarity and Chrissy F. Moir, and Messrs. Forbes Rae and Fred J. Burnett. Mr. John Pullen was at the organ, and Miss Gladys Taiby played the timpani. Mr. Willan Swainson conducted an excellent performance.

ASHTON - UNDER - LYNE.—A concert performance of Gounod's 'Faust' was given at the Town Hall on March 25 by the Albion Congregational Church choir, with orchestral accompaniment, under the direction of Dr. T. Keighley. The principal parts were taken by Miss Elsie Thurston (Margarita), Mr. Arthur Wilkes (Faust), and Mr. Hamilton Harris (Mephistopheles).

BRENTWOOD.—Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was performed as part of a Victory concert at the Town Hall on April 1. Under the direction of Mr. Fred Southgate a choir and orchestra of ninety performers gave a good account of the impressive and still popular work. The vocal soloists of the evening were Miss Maggie Inglis, Miss Ettie Lavell, and Mr. Frank Webster. The choir was also heard in Coleridge-Taylor's 'Viking song.'

CAPTOWN.—To commemorate its fifth anniversary the Municipal Orchestra gave a special concert at the City Hall on February 27. Under the guidance of Mr. Theo Wendt, creditable performances were given of Beethoven's ninth Symphony (three movements), the Scherzo 'L'Apprenti Sorcier' of Dukas, the four instrumental movements from César Franck's choral symphonic-poem 'Psyche,' and the Weber-Weingartner 'Invitation à la Valse.'

DUNEDIN, NEW ZEALAND.—The consecration of St. Paul's Cathedral took place on February 12. At the various services held during the octave the settings of the Canticles were Stanford in B flat, Roberts in C, Bridge in D, Stainer in A, Bowdler in F, and the anthems included Elvey's 'I was glad,' Barnby's 'O how amiable,' Haydn's 'In the beginning,' Cowen's 'We Thy people,' and Wesley's 'Blessed be the God and Father.' Mr. E. Heywood is the organist and choirmaster.

HANLEY.—Distinction was lent to the concert of the North Staffordshire District Choral Society at Victoria Hall on March 20 by the presence of Sir Frederick Bridge as conductor of his cantata 'The Flag of England.' An excellent performance was enthusiastically received. The programme included also Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and the 'Hallelujah' Chorus. Miss Désirée Ellinger and Mr. John Booth were the soloists, and Mr. Ernest C. Redfern the conductor.

HUDDERSFIELD.—The Huddersfield Music Club concluded a brilliant season on March 19 with a pianoforte and violin recital by Madame Amina Goodwin and Mr. Albert Sammons. The two players gave splendid readings of Beethoven's 'Kreutzer' Sonata and John Ireland's Sonata No. 2, whilst Mr. Sammons played pieces by Tartini, Chopin, and Mozart; and Madame Goodwin drew on Scarlatti and Liszt (whose pupil she was).—The Ladies' String Orchestra gave a British Music Night in aid of the British Music Society branch funds. Their programme included orchestral pieces by Franck, Bridge, Grainger, Foulds, and an interesting Suite by a lady composer, Phyllis Norman Parker. Miss Alison Shaw played Ireland's 'Island Spell' and Bridge's Capriccio in F sharp minor, and Mr. John Booth sang songs by Bath, Brewer, Walford Davies, and Coleridge-Taylor.

NORWICH.—Under the auspices of the Philharmonic Society, Bach's Passion according to 'St. Matthew' was sung in the Cathedral on April 10. The soloists were Mr. Gervase Elwes, Mr. Herbert Heyner, Miss Olive Sturgess, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. A. E. Benson, and Mr. Walter Ivey. Mr. E. Weeks played two violin solos. Mr. Meddern Williams was at the organ, and Dr. Frank Bates conducted. There was an enormous congregation.

PETERHEAD.—The Peterhead Choral Society concluded its fifty-second season with a miscellaneous concert on Friday, March 21. The principal choral item was Coleridge-Taylor's 'Kubla Khan,' which received an effective interpretation, the solo portions being finely sung by Miss Rachel Hunt. The quartet of principals—Miss Nora Arthurs, Miss Rachel Hunt, Mr. Henry Brearley and Flight-Sergt. Bishop—sang songs, mostly of good quality, in splendid style. Mr. Willan Swainson conducted.

STOCKPORT.—The principal work in the programme of the Stockport Vocal Union's 182nd concert, which took place on March 24 at the Centenary Hall, was Elgar's 'The Spirit of England.' Dr. Keighley secured an expressive performance that revealed much of the beauty and thoughtful appeal of the music. The soloist was Miss Caroline Hatchard. Part-songs were included in the programme, and violin solos were given by Mr. J. S. Bridge.

STONEHAVEN.—The Select Choir performed 'Messiah' on Thursday, March 27, in the Town Hall. The principals were Miss Inverarity, Miss V. M. L. Snowie, Mr. J. Sharp (Aberdeen), and Mr. Walter Kingsley (London). Prout's version was used, and an adequate orchestra, mainly professional (Mr. J. M. Cooper, leader) played the accompaniments. Mr. John Alan McGill conducted.

VANCOUVER.—The Musical Society's concert on March 4 was a conspicuous success. 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' conducted by Mr. G. P. Hicks, with Mr. Theo Karle as soloist, was the principal feature. Smaller choral works were also included, and the orchestra played Haydn's sixth Symphony.

WINNIPEG.—Sullivan's 'The Golden Legend' was performed by the Winnipeg Handel Choir at Broadway Methodist Church on February 25, under the conductorship of Mr. Watkin Mills. The solo parts were taken by Miss Beatrice Overton, Miss Dorothy Parnum, Mr. W. D. Love, Mr. W. Davidson Thomson, and Mr. C. H. Burgess. Mr. Ernest E. Vinen was at the organ.

Musical Notes from Abroad.

MILAN.

The Lirico Theatre is still swinging along gaily through its season of opera, the discriminate choice of artists and operas being the factors of success. Announced for April 15 was the first performance, to be followed by other special performances, of Ponchielli's 'Marion Delorme,' with the famous tenor Paoli—who is one of the old guard in point of being an exponent of the bel canto as it was really understood by the singers in the golden era of vocalism. With the exception of 'La Gioconda,' Ponchielli's works have fallen practically into disuse, yet they abound in melody. In the more spiritual provincial towns there is still a great demand for these old operas, because they appeal to the people. It is difficult to understand why 'La Gioconda' has not been performed more often at Covent Garden. I remember it was given some seven or eight years ago, and called forth a veritable storm of abuse. A fiery critic of one of the leading London papers was most indignant, and wrote saying that London audiences could not be expected to listen to 'such music.' Yet it is universally recognised to be one of the finest operas ever penned, and surely there are no dances more satisfying to both eye and ear than the famous 'Danza delle Ore' (the Dance of the Hours). In Italy, 'La Gioconda' is a great favourite everywhere and always.

Lovers of concert-music have every reason to be satisfied, for lately there have been many concerts given in the large Hall of the Royal Conservatorium here in Milan. The more important programmes were contributed by pianists Dario Attal and Luba d'Alexandrowska. The latter has been able to captivate her hearers by reason of her punctilious interpretation of various works of Beethoven, Bach, and Schumann. Possessing great executive ability combined with sentiment and power, she was, however, less successful when playing pieces by Ravel, Albeniz, and Scriabine. Dario Attal's performances are fast becoming notable. He is also a composer. His first concert was given at the Conservatorium Hall on March 10, when the impression was so good that a large audience was attracted to his second concert. Much spontaneous applause followed his execution of Schumann's 'Papillons,' a 'Studio di concerto' of Martucci, a 'Gigue' of Scarlatti, 'Le Coucou' of Daquin, and 'Le rappel des Oiseaux' of Rameau. He rather errs on the side of zeal in expression, oftentimes pushed to unnecessary expansion.

Is it a pleasure to be able to record the successful début of an English baritone, Arthur Neville. He impersonated Enrico in 'Lucia di Lammermoor,' given at the theatre of Mondovì, near Turin, on March 21. The local papers praised qualities which promise well for the future. As already remarked in some previous notes, Italian audiences are invariably very sympathetic and well disposed towards foreign, and particularly British, artists. This should encourage compatriots to step the boards of Italian theatres large and small, according to individual merit. Unadulterated success in Italy means success indeed, because Italians with or without musical culture are more or less able, through heredity, to criticise singing.

In the Hall of the Major Council of the Ducal Palace of Venice, an orchestral concert was given on March 31, the proceeds of which were devoted to the disabled soldiers' fund. The programme included works of Rossini, Grieg, Smetana, Dvorák, the orchestra being ably conducted by Signorini, who besides being a talented musician is also an artillery officer who gained three silver medals in the War. This is the first artistic event of importance since the War.

A young Italian tenor, Beniamino Gigli, recently made a Chevalier of the Kingdom of Italy, is considered to be one of the best tenors at the present time. He has come rapidly to the fore during the last year and has scored very many successes. So long as he keeps to his own particular répertoire and does not strain his voice (which is a 'mezzo-carattere')—a happy medium between a light and a lyric tenor) by singing heavy dramatic rôles, he should, in a very few years, take his place among the leading tenors of the day. His voice is exceptionally sweet, with an exquisite mezza-voce which he uses cleverly and with effect. Unhappily, commercialism in the art has been and is the main cause of the ruin of so many beautiful young voices to-day in the sense that artists sing operas unadapted to the capacity of their vocal organ. It is to be hoped that Gigli will not go off at a tangent.

E. HERBERT-CESARI.

MONTE CARLO.

The Riviera is just now at its best, flooded with sunshine and visitors. To music-lovers no place could offer greater attractions than does fascinating Monte Carlo with its renowned Casino and Opera House. The former is living up to its traditions, and in spite of the immense difficulties it has had to encounter, its matchless orchestra has been able to maintain the superb ensemble which has always enjoyed universal repute. This admirable body of players is, as in former years, under the direction of M. Léon Jehin, maître de chapelle to the Prince of Monaco, M. Louis Ganne, and M. Georges Laurvyns, each of whom arranges his own concerts according to his individual wishes. The last-named is quite young, with a decided leaning to the modern school, maintaining the courage of his opinions despite some opposition, and he invariably brings his orchestra through the greatest difficulties with flying colours. Under the baton of M. Ganne, the band enchants the ears of those not too superior to be charmed with lighter strains; while M. Jehin is never happier than when conducting music of the great classical masters. Under his guidance the orchestra is always the perfect interpreter of a great musical genius. To him we owe a magnificent performance of César Franck's 'Rédemption.' It would surely be impossible to listen to a grander interpretation of this noble work, soloists and choir being on a level with the instrumental portions, and than this no higher praise could be given.

It is difficult when discussing opera of the latter part of the 19th century up to the present not to give first place to the Monte Carlo Opera House, where under the patronage of the Prince of Monaco such a large number of works have first seen the light. A great many of the most renowned composers have obtained the premières of their operas at this theatre. Massenet gave there for the first time his 'Jongleur de Notre Dame,' 'Chérubin,' 'Roma,' 'Thérèse,' 'Don Quichotte,' 'Cléopâtre,' and 'Espada';

Saint-Saëns, 'Hélène,' 'Dejanire,' 'l'Ancêtre'; César Franck, 'Hulda,' 'Ghisèle'; Gabriel Fauré, 'Pénélope'; Reger, 'Maitre Wolfram'; Lalo and Coquart, 'La Jacquerie'; Puccini, 'La Fille du Far West' and 'La Rondine'; Messager, 'Béatrice'; Mascagni, 'Amica'; Desjoeaux, 'Renaud d'Arles'; Dupuis, 'La Passion.' The first performances in French of Wagner's 'Rheingold,' 'Tristan,' and 'Parsifal' were given at Monte Carlo, as was the stage adaptation of Berlioz's 'Damnation of Faust,' and Rubinstein's 'Démon,' when given for the first time in French, was heard here. It is perhaps unfair to have laid stress on the fact of so many celebrated composers' works being produced at the Opera House, for every encouragement has been given to musicians who have yet had their names to make. As a proof of this may be cited the following: 'Le Tasse' (Eugène d'Harcourt), 'Pyrame et Thisbé' (Trémisot), 'Mlle. de Belle-Isle' (Samara), 'Yato' (Madame Labori), 'Moïna' and 'Messalina' (de Lara), 'Les Heures d'Amour' (Bertrand), 'La Tragédie de la Mort' (Musicant), 'Mara' (Madame de Montgomery), 'Aréthuse' (Pollonnais), 'Mirka' (Nérini), 'l'Epreuve dernière' (Drigo), 'Venise,' 'Manole,' and 'Côte-d'Azur,' by Raoul Gunsbourg. The above is surely a goodly list, to which must be added revivals of almost forgotten works which may perhaps be considered as novelties, such as, for example, two versions of 'Armide,' one by Gluck the other by Lully; Rameau's 'Fête d'Hébé' and 'Platée'; Cimarosa's 'Matrimonio Segreto,' and last year Paisiello's 'Barbiere de Seville,' the last-named proving such a success as to cause it to be included in the present season, which promises to be one of the most brilliant on record, being what has been happily called 'la saison de la Paix.' During the not over-lengthy period in which the Opera House will remain open, five new works will be tried: 'Masques et Bergamasques' (Fauré), 'Nausicaa' (Reynaldo Hahn), 'Amphitryon' (Le Rey), 'Le Mufti' (Claude Terrasse), and 'La Jeune Fille de l'Y.M.C.A.' (Gordon). Verdi's 'Falstaff' and Marchetti's 'Ruy Blas' will also be heard, while among old favourites will be given 'Phryné' (Saint-Saëns), 'Thais' (Massenet), 'La Rondine,' 'Butterfly,' 'La Fille du Far West,' and 'La vie de Bohème' (Puccini), three operas by Verdi—'Traviata,' 'Rigoletto,' and 'Aida'—Leoncavallo's 'Pagliacci,' and Donizetti's 'Favorita.' The very pick of the Italian operatic world has been engaged to interpret those works of their countrymen which are to be sung in Italian, and the same may be said of the selection of singers for interpreting French operas, or Italian works to be sung in the former language, the two companies including an immensely long list of stars, hardly any of them, unfortunately, known in England; neither, for that matter, is a large number of the long list of operas, new and revivals, mentioned above.

CLAUDE TREVOR.

ROME.

I remarked in these columns recently that the great criterion of music in Italy is spontaneity. A remarkable illustration of the truth of this was furnished us at the Augusteum on April 6, in the unfavourable reception accorded to the oratorio of Marco Enrico Bossi, 'Joan of Arc.' The story of the French heroine is rendered in a work of admirable construction, but which does not succeed in hiding the traces of its laborious workmanship—in other words, it is a work which proceeds more from the head than from the heart, lacks spontaneity, and therefore did not satisfy the Roman public. I do not say that it did not please them to a certain extent: of the technical and harmonic abilities of M. E. Bossi no one could venture to breathe a doubt, but what is required is precisely what is lacking in this new work: that slancio or outburst of inspired genius which carries all before it and moves the hearts of the hearers because they feel in that outburst the expression of true inspiration voicing in the only way possible what is to be said.

On Sunday, March 16, a concert of exceptional interest was given at the Augusteum by the American violinist Albert Spalding, whose military duties recently brought him to Rome. This young artist, born in 1888, has already studied in Italy, and won the concourse at the Rossini Liceo in Bologna in 1903. He is also known in England, and some ten years ago gave a concert at the Augusteo with Raoul Pugno as pianist. On the occasion of which I am writing his collaborator was Signor Traversi, the organist of the Accademia Sta. Cecilia. The programme was as follows :

Comic Overture on Nigger Themes	H. F. Gilbert
Four Character-Sketches from the 'Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam,' for orchestra	Arthur Foote
Concerto for Organ and Orchestra	Horatio Parker
Violin Concerto	Mendelssohn
Prelude and Gavotte for Violin	Bach
'Danse Spagnole,' for Violin	Granados
Berceuse	Fauré

Henry F. Gilbert is actually professor of harmony and counterpoint in the Musical Institute of New York, and the Overture which was played at the Augusteo is designed as part of an opera descriptive of the traditions and customs of the negroes. This Overture has five parts. The first movement, Vivace, has as subject two phrases from Edwards's 'Songs and Stories of Bahama,' published by the American Folk-Lore Society; and the second movement, a Lento, has a similar subject taken from Allen's 'Slave Songs of the United States' ('I go to Alabama, Oh!'). The third movement is a fugue on the subject of the 'Spiritual Negro,' and after a repetition of the first movement the Overture closes in a characteristic ragtime.

The concert was very successful, and had all the features of a real Americo-Roman festivity.

LEONARD PEYTON.

Miscellaneous.

MUSIC AS MEDICINE.

The first concert given by soldier-patients gathered from various War-hospitals where there are vocal therapy classes, was given on Saturday, April 5, at the South-Western Polytechnic, Chelsea, and proved a marked success. Not only was the singing good, but the singers responded to the conductor as a well-trained choir, sang correctly, with true appreciation, in excellent tune and time, and with genuine feeling and heartiness. One does not often get the chance of hearing a large number of male voices joining in simple songs, and the effect is wonderfully exhilarating. The power of music to heal the distractions of mind and body has been known from the days when David soothed the soul of Saul with the harp of Judah, but the War has for the first time shown the salutary benefit which experts in voice-culture can confer on sufferers from shell-shock, loss of voice, and the various nervous disorders of the throat and lungs. The vocal therapy treatment has worked wonders, in some cases almost miracles, for poor fellows who for many months have suffered strange and distressing disorders of the voice and nervous system. Many have been lifted above their affliction, having learned to understand and enjoy music, and on Saturday they made a grateful acknowledgment in the excellent concert at Chelsea. People desirous of helping our wounded soldiers and lovers of music cannot do better than assist the good work by sending contributions to the treasurer of the Vocal Therapy Fund, Mr. H. Entwisle Bury, 47, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C. 2.

THE BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY.

At the second Central London meeting of the Society, held on March 13, at 32, Gordon Square, the chief feature was the semi-public performance of Elgar's new Sonata for Violin and Pianoforte, which is in the three classical movements, the slow movement being cast in a somewhat unusual mould, a blend of the slow movement and the Scherzo moods. There is some effective left-hand pizzicato in this movement, a bold device, which however does not protrude from the picture. The Sonata was well played by Mr. William H. Reed and Mr. Anthony Bernard. A little-known Suite in D major (No. 1), for violin and pianoforte, by Parry, was also performed, and four part-songs by the same composer were sung.—At the inaugural meeting of the Blackheath Branch, at which Mr. George Mackern presided, Dr. Eaglefield Hull gave a sketch of the history of British music from the time of the early round 'Sumer is icumen in' up to the present day. Special stress was laid on Purcell's songs. Amongst the music performed were 'Four Old English Carols' by Holst, some Folk-song arrangements by W. G. Whittaker, and Miss Mildred Buckman sang a Scena from Parry's 'War and Peace.' Miss Ethel Waddington sang Darke's 'Uphills' and Goossens's 'Chanson de Barberine,' and Mr. Cecil R. Harris gave 'The Vagabond,' 'Bright is the ring of words,' and 'The Road-side Fire,' by Vaughan Williams. A successful opening of this branch was made, and a committee appointed to carry on activities.

THE IMPERIAL CHOIR.

Dr. Charles Harriss has arrived in London from Santa Barbara, California, and is calling together all those who have sung with him in London since the year 1906. This means the revival of the great choirs which sang under his direction before his late Majesty King Edward VII.; at the Annual Empire Concerts at the Albert Hall and Queen's Hall; the official opening of the Festival of Empire and Pageant of London at the Crystal Palace in the presence of their Majesties The King and Queen; the inauguration of the Shakespeare's England Exhibition at Earl's Court; at the Ghent Exposition and afterwards at the Palace of Laeken at Brussels, before his Majesty King Albert; and in tours to Canada in 1908, and to Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, and South Africa in 1911. Dr. Harriss hopes to organize a choir of ten thousand voices to celebrate the Peace by a concert in one of the great parks of London.

THE LEAGUE OF ARTS.

A large and enthusiastic audience was present at a meeting held in His Majesty's Theatre on the afternoon of Sunday, April 13, when the objects of the League were set forth by various speakers. In the unavoidable absence of Admiral Beatty, Sir Frank Benson acted as chairman, and opened with an eloquent address. He was followed by Miss Maud Royden, Prebendary Gough, Dr. Stanton Coit, and Mr. Clem Edwards, M.P., each of whom dealt with the subject from a different point of view. Five speeches seem rather a stiff dose at a sitting, so we hasten to add that they were uniformly good. Not often is an audience treated to such good platform matter. The Grenadier Guards band opened with the D major 'Pomp and Circumstance' March, and accompanied a series of choruses from 'The Motherland Song Book,' well sung by a choir of two hundred and fifty voices, conducted by Mr. C. Kennedy Scott and Mr. Martin Shaw.

THE LATE MR. CHRISTOPHER WILSON.

We now understand that Christopher Wilson had, before his death, practically completed the articles dealing with all the more important of Shakespeare's plays and the music inspired by them; and that the editor of The Stage intends to continue the publication of the series and ultimately to issue the complete work in book form. The notice in our April number contained one important, though fairly obvious, error: the number of bronze medals carried off by Wilson at the Academy was three (not thirteen). Moreover, among the more important of his Shakespearean settings 'King Lear' should have been included.

The first meeting of the Trowbridge, Devizes, and District Organists' Association for this year was held at Devizes in March, when the president, Mr. C. T. Weigall (organist of Trowbridge Parish Church), gave an organ recital in St. John's Parish Church, during which a collection was taken in aid of the Organists' Benevolent League. Mr. Percy J. Fry, in proposing a vote of thanks to the president for his most enjoyable recital, referred with regret to the impending departure of Mr. Weigall. In congratulating him on his appointment as organist and choirmaster of St. Andrew's Church, Boscombe, Mr. Fry wished him, on behalf of the Association, every happiness in his new work, and said his leaving the district would be a great loss to the Association. Mr. A. W. Barry (hon. secretary and treasurer) seconded the vote of thanks, and referred to the keen interest Mr. Weigall had taken in the Association since its inception four years ago with about twenty members; the number had now increased to over seventy-five. A vote of thanks then followed to the Rector for the use of the Parish Church. The Rector, in replying, spoke of Mr. Weigall's excellent playing, and wished that these meetings could take place oftener.

Dr. H. A. Harding's admirable work at Bedford in arranging concerts for the Troops received warm public recognition at the last concert of the series. Dr. Harding is a busy man, but he has found time to organize no fewer than a hundred and seventy-eight Sunday evening concerts, working in conjunction with the Borough Recreation Committee. This fine record coincides with the thirtieth anniversary of his appointment as organist of St. Paul's Church, and Borough organist. Bedfordians unite in wishing him many happy returns of the day.

The Southend Madrigal Society gave a concert on April 9 with an attractive programme, which included Faning's 'Daybreak,' Elgar's 'Go, song of mine,' Coleridge-Taylor's 'Lee Shore,' Sullivan's 'Song of Peace' and 'The long day closes,' and Booth's 'The Mighty Caravan.' Songs were contributed by Mr. John Booth, Mr. Selwyn Driver gave humorous 'pianorations,' Mlle. Valerie Valenson played cello solos, and Miss Florence Birchnell recited. The conductor was Mr. Walter L. Booth, and Miss E. Daddo accompanied.

Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion was sung at Goldsmiths' College, New Cross, on April 16, by the South London Philharmonic Society. The soloists were Miss Hope Jackson, Miss Ida Cooper, and Messrs. Joseph Reed and Topliss Green. The choir and orchestra numbered a hundred and fifty. Mr. Alfred J. Sindell and Mr. Charles Brown were at the organ and pianoforte respectively, and Mr. Wilfrid Bruin conducted. The proceeds were devoted to St. Dunstan's Hostel.

Mr. R. J. Pitcher's lecture-demonstration at the London Academy of Music on April 14 was attended by a large audience. The chairman was Mr. Herbert Fryer, who testified to the merits of the 'Technique' from his own experience. Very convincing experiments were made on members of the audience, and a recital was given by the lecturer, the chairman remarking that such a programme of difficult works performed without a break was in itself a testimony to the value of the 'Technique.'

We have received from the office of the Palestine News copies of the musical programmes arranged by Capt. B. Dennis Jones for soldiers at the Y.M.C.A. Anzac Hotel at Cairo. There appears to be a circle of cultured and keen musical artists at Cairo ready to be employed for these concerts, as the programmes are of a high order and would do credit to many a London event. On February 27 an entirely Russian programme was given by Mr. Frederick Kitchener (pianist) and the Cattani String Quartet.

'Messiah' was given by the Bromley Choral Society at the Central Hall on March 18. Under Mr. Frederic Fertel's direction the choruses were sung in a manner both individual and convincing, and with Miss Ada Forrest, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Harold Wilde, and Mr. Robert Radford as soloists a high standard was maintained throughout.

A new orchestral Suite by C. à Becket Williams was produced by the East Cowes orchestra (conductor, Capt. MacBean) on Sunday, April 13. It is in three movements—an opening Allegro, an Intermezzo, and a Morris Dance.

CONTENTS.

	Page
Modern British Composers—III. Benjamin Dale. By Edwin Evans	201
The Right Perspective for Beethoven. By W. Wright Roberts	205
The Clavier Toccatas of Bach. By Sydney Grew ...	206
Interludes	208
Registers. By Agnes J. Larkcom	211
Occasional Notes	213
Ernest Newman's Departure from Birmingham. By W. Beeson	215
Music for Peace Celebrations	216
The Rules of Combined Counterpoint (continued). By George J. Bennett	216
The 18th and the Early 19th Century in English Music. By F. A. Hadland	219
A Cheerful Pilgrim	220
Dinner to Sir Frederick Bridge	222
Bells. By W. W. Starmar	225
Schumann's Barring. By H. Elliot Button	226
Church and Organ Music	231
John Merbecke and his Music	232
The Musical Mind in England	233
Letters to the Editor	233
Obituary	235
Arthur O'Leary	235
Alexandra Palace Choral Society	235
Sixty Years Ago	235
The Beecham Opera Season	235
The Royal Philharmonic Society	236
Queen's Hall Symphony Concerts	236
The Bach Choir	236
The Oriana Madrigal Society	236
Southwark Cathedral	236
The Musicians' Y.M.C.A. Gift	237
London Concerts	237
Music in the Provinces	239
Country and Colonial News	246
Musical Notes from Abroad	246
Miscellaneous	248

MUSIC:

'Alexander.' A Humorous Part-Song. By A. HERBERT BREWER. (Arranged for Mixed Voices by the Composer)	227
---	-----

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this number:—
'Peace lives again.' Motet for Four Voices. By Sir Frederick Bridge.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W-1, not later than WEDNESDAY, MAY 21 (FIRST POST).

THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SCALE OF TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.*BREWER, A. HERBERT.—“Alexander.” A Humorous Part-Song. Arranged for Mixed Voices by the Composer. (No. 915, The Musical Times.) 1½d.BRIDGE, SIR FREDERICK.—“Peace lives again.” Motet for Four Voices (No. 1069 Novello's Octavo Anthems). 3d.BBROWN, ARTHUR HENRY.—“Hail this happy Christmas Morn.” Christmas Carol. 2d.CHURCH HYMNAL FOR THE CHRISTIAN YEAR. Children's Supplement. Music Edition. Cloth. 2s. 3d.CROFFIER, META.—“Wattle Bloom.” Song. 2s.PENNINGTON-BICKFORD, REV. W.—Eucharistic Hymn, No. 2 (“O Source of Life”). 1d.; or 2s. 6d. per 50.SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 323) contains the following music in both notations:—“The Minuet.” Two-Part Song by ARTHUR RICHARDS. “Baby Brother Mine.” Junior Unison Song. Hungarian Melody. 1½d.TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:—

No. 2294.—“How happy the lover.” Part-song for Mixed Voices. JOHN E. WEST. 1½d.

TUCKETT, J. E. SHUM.—“Sweet fa's the eve.” Four-part Song. 3d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.LESTER, WILLIAM.—“With righteousness He judgeth all.” Anthem. 12 cents (6d.)J U D E X

FROM

MORS ET VITA

COMPOSED

BY CH. GOUNOD.

	s.	d.
FULL SCORE	3	6
STRING PARTS	1	3
WIND PARTS	4	6
MILITARY BAND	3	0
BRASS BAND	2	0
PIANOFORTE SOLO	2	0
VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE	2	0
VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE	2	6
QUINTET FOR PIANOFORTE AND STRINGS	3	0
ORGAN SOLO	1	0
SACRED SONG (“Angel hosts descending”)	2	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.*THE CHANT COMMUNION SERVICE WITH EUCHARISTIC HYMNS.

The Creed, and Gloria in Excelsis, arranged in verses and pointed both for Anglican and Gregorian chanting.

SUITABLE FOR MISSION, VILLAGE AND PARISH CHOIRS, OR
FOR A CONGREGATION WITHOUT THE AID OF A CHOIR.

Arranged by the

REV. C. W. A. BROOKE, M.A.

Price Fourpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS
IN F.SET TO MUSIC BY HENRY SMART.ARRANGEMENT FOR FEMALE OR BOYS' VOICES
(S.S.).PRICE TWOPENCE.
TONIC SOL-FA, TWOPENCE.London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

REFLECTIONS

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

(AFTER VERSES FROM LONGFELLOW)

BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.*MORNING SONG

FOR THE

ORGAN

COMPOSED BY

ALFRED HOLLINS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.*EVENING REST

FOR THE

ORGANComposed for the opening of the Town Hall Organ, Johannesburg,
March 4, 1916.

BY

ALFRED HOLLINS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.*YOUNG LADY (A.L.C.M.) seeks engagement.
Good Accompanist and Sight-Reader. Awarded two bronze medals for pianoforte-playing. Apply, “H. S.” c/o Novello & Co., Ltd.ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for St. George's Congregational Church (Mixed Choir), West Hartlepool. Applications by May 4, enclosing terms and testimonials, to be sent to T. Burton, 9, Wansbeck Gardens, West Hartlepool.ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for New North U.F. Church, Edinburgh. Applications to W. G. Maxwell, 1, So. Oswald Road, Edinburgh.S. MATTHEW'S CHURCH, Bayswater, W.
TENOR (£15), BASS (£12) VACANCIES. Letters to A. C. Mathews, 10, St. Mary's Mansions, W. 2.BASS-BARITONE REQUIRED for Brixton Unitarian Church, Effra Road. Good Reader essential. £15. Apply, by letter, to “Organist,” 14, Daysbrook Road, S.W. 2.HARP FOR SALE.—Double-Action Grecian, by Sebastian Erard. What offers? Apply, 102, Walsall Rd., Lichfield.PEDAL PIANO FOR SALE.—Independent strings for Pedals, by Louis Derdeyn. Ideal for organ practice; as new, cheap. Also Blüthner Grand Piano, splendid condition. M. de Wael, Auckland, Queen's Road, Richmond, Surrey.

ANTHEMS FOR ASCENSIONTIDE.

Above all praise and all majesty	Mendelssohn	14d.	Let not your heart be troubled (Double Chorus unac.)	M. B. Foster	3d.
*Achieved is the glorious work	Haydn	1d.	*Let not (Four-part arrangement, with organ)	Myles B. Foster	3d.
*Achieved is the glorious work (2nd Chorus)	Haydn	14d.	*Let their celestial concerts all unite	Handel	14d.
All glory to the Lamb	Spohr	14d.	*Lift up your heads	Handel and J. L. Hopkins, each	14d.
*Awake up, my glory	M. Wise	3d.	*Lift up your heads	S. Coleridge-Taylor	3d.
Christ became obedient unto death	J. F. Bridge	14d.	Lift up your heads	W. Turner	2d.
Christ is not entered into the Holy Places	Eaton Fanning	14d.	*Look, ye saints	Myles B. Foster	3d.
Come, ye children	Henry John King	3d.	O all ye people, clap your hands	H. Purcell	3d.
For it became Him	Oliver King	14d.	*O clap your hands	J. Stainer	6d.
*God is gone up	*Croft, 4d.; W. B. Gilbert	2d.	O clap your hands	T. T. Trimmell	3d.
God, my King	Bach	14d.	*O God, the King of Glory	H. Smart	4d.
Grant, we beseech Thee	H. Lahee	14d.	*O God, when Thou appearest	Mozart	3d.
Grant, we beseech Thee (Collect)	A. R. Gaul	3d.	*O how amiable	J. Barnby	3d.
Hallelujah unto God's Almighty Son	Beethoven	3d.	*O Lord our Governor	H. Gadsby	3d.
*How excellent Thy Name, O Lord	Handel	14d.	*O Lord our Governor	Marcello	14d.
*If ye then be risen with Christ	Ivor Atkins	4d.	*O risen Lord	J. Barnby	14d.
*If ye then be risen	*F. Osmond Carr and J. Naylor, ea.	3d.	*Open to me the gates	F. Adlam	4d.
If ye then be risen (Two parts)	Myles B. Foster	3d.	*Rejoice in the Lord	J. B. Calkin	14d.
In My Father's house H. Elliot Button and J. Maude Crament, ea.	3d.		*Sing unto God	F. Bevan	3d.
In that day	George Elvey	4d.	*Ten thousand times ten thousand	E. Vine Hall	3d.
*In that day (Open ye the gates)	F. C. Maker	3d.	The earth is the Lord's	T. T. Trimmell	4d.
It shall come to pass	B. Tours	14d.	*The Lord is exalted	John E. West	14d.
*I will not leave you comfortless	W. Byrd	3d.	The Lord is King	H. Gadsby, 6d.; H. J. King	4d.
King all-glorious	J. Barnby	6d.	Thou art a priest for ever	S. Wesley	3d.
*King all-glorious (with Chorus arr. for four voices)	J. Barnby	4d.	*Unfold, ye portals	Ch. Gounod	3d.
Leave us not, neither forsake us	J. Stainer	14d.	*Where Thou reignest	Schubert	3d.
Let not your heart	Eaton Fanning and G. Gardner, each	3d.	Who is this so weak and helpless	Rayner	2d.

ANTHEMS FOR WHITSUNTIDE.

And all the people saw	J. Stainer	6d.	In My Father's house	J. Maude Crament	3d.
*And suddenly there came	Henry J. Wood	3d.	It shall come to pass	G. Garrett	6d.
And when the day of Pentecost	C. W. Smith	3d.	*It shall come to pass	B. Tours	14d.
*As pants the hart	Spohr	14d.	Let God arise	Greene	6d.
As the hart pants	Mendelssohn	14d.	Let God arise	T. T. Trimmell	4d.
*Behold, I send the promise	J. Varley Roberts	4d.	*Let not your heart be troubled	H. G. Trembath	14d.
Come, Holy Ghost	T. Attwood	14d.	Look down, Holy Dove	B. Luard-Selby	3d.
Come, Holy Ghost	Elvey and J. L. Hatton, each	4d.	*O clap your hands	J. Stainer	6d.
Come, Holy Ghost	C. Lee Williams and Palestrina, each	2d.	*O give thanks	G. Elvey	3d.
Come, Thou Holy Spirit	J. F. Barnett	3d.	*O Holy Ghost, into our minds	G. A. Macfarren	14d.
*Do not I fill heaven and earth	Hugh Blair	4d.	*Oh! for a closer walk with God	Myles B. Foster	14d.
Eye hath not seen (Two-part setting)	Myles B. Foster	3d.	O taste and see	*Goss; A. H. Mann, each	3d.
Eye hath not seen (Four-part setting)	Myles B. Foster	3d.	*O taste and see	Sullivan	14d.
Fear thou not	Josiah Booth	14d.	O Thou, the true and only Light	Mendelssohn	2d.
Give thanks unto God	Spohr	14d.	O where shall wisdom be found	Boyce	6d.
*Glorious and powerful God	Orlando Gibbons	3d.	*Our blest Redeemer	E. V. Hall	3d.
*God came from Teman	C. Steggall	4d.	*Praised be the Lord daily	J. B. Calkin	14d.
*God is a Spirit	W. S. Bennett	14d.	Sing to the Lord	Smart	1s.
*Great is the Lord	W. Hayes	4d.	*Spirit of mercy, truth, and love	B. Luard-Selby	14d.
*Grieve not the Holy Spirit	J. Stainer	3d.	*Spirit of mercy, truth, and love	H. A. Chambers	14d.
*Hail! breath of life	Thomas Adams	14d.	The eyes of all wait upon Thee	Gibbons	4d.
Happy is the man	E. Proust	8d.	*The Glory of the God of Israel	T. Adams	3d.
*He that dwelleth in the secret place	Josiah Booth	4d.	*The Lord came from Sinai	John E. West	14d.
Holy Spirit, come, O come (Ad Spiritum Sanctum)	G. C. Martin	14d.	The Lord descended	Hayes	14d.
I was in the spirit	Blow	6d.	The Lord is in His Holy Temple	J. Stainer	4d.
I will magnify Thee	J. H. Parry	3d.	The Lord is in His Holy Temple	E. H. Thorne	14d.
I will not leave you comfortless	Bruce Steane	2d.	The love of God is shed abroad	S. Reay	14d.
I will pray the Father	G. W. Torrance	14d.	There is no condemnation	H. S. Irons	3d.
If I go not away	Thomas Adams	14d.	The Spirit of God	Arthur W. Marchant	3d.
If I go not away	A. J. Caldicott	3d.	*The wilderness	John Goss, 2d.; *S. S. Wesley	6d.
If ye love Me	C. S. Heap	14d.	*When God of old came down from Heaven	E. V. Hall	3d.
If ye love Me	W. H. Monk, Tallis, and R. P. Stewart, each	14d.	We will rejoice	Croft	4d.
If ye love Me	Bruce Steane	2d.	When the Day of Pentecost	A. Kempton	3d.
If ye love Me	Herbert W. Wareing and W. J. Westbrook, each	3d.	Whosoever drinketh	J. T. Field	14d.

ANTHEMS FOR TRINITYTIDE.

*Almighty and everlasting God	Gibbons	14d.	*In Jewry is God known	J. Clarke-Whitfield	14d.
Almighty God, Who hast promised	H. Elliot Button	1d.	In sweet consent	E. H. Thorne	3d.
Angel Spirits, ever blessed	Tchaikovsky	2d.	In the fear of the Lord	J. Varley Roberts	3d.
Ascribe unto the Lord	S. S. Wesley	4d.	Let the peace of God	J. Stainer	4d.
Behold, God is great	E. W. Naylor	4d.	*Let Thy merciful ears	A. R. Gaul	14d.
*Beloved, if God so loved us	J. Barnby	14d.	*Light of the world	E. Elgar	3d.
*Beloved, let us love one another	Gerard F. Cobb	14d.	Lord of all power and might	E. T. Chipp	3d.
Be ye all of one mind	Arthur E. Godfrey	3d.	*Lord of all power and might	William Mason	14d.
Blessed is the man	John Goss	4d.	Lord of all power and might (men's voices)	J. Barnby	2d.
Blessing and glory	Boyce	14d.	*Lord, we pray Thee	J. Varley Roberts	14d.
Blessing, glory	Bach	6d.	O Father blest	J. Barnby	3d.
*Come, ye children	Josiah Booth	3d.	O God, Who hast prepared	A. R. Gaul	2d.
God came from Teman	C. Steggall	4d.	O joyful Light	B. Tours	4d.
God so loved the world	Matthew Kingston	14d.	*O Lord, my trust	King Hall	14d.
*Grant, O Lord	Mozart	14d.	O taste and see	*J. Goss and A. H. Mann, each	3d.
Grant to us, Lord	H. Elliot Button	1d.	*O taste and see	A. Sullivan	14d.
*Hail, gladdening Light	J. T. Field, 2d.; *G. C. Martin	4d.	O where shall wisdom be found?	Boyce	6d.
*Holy, holy, holy	Crotch	3d.	Ponder my words, O Lord	Arnold D. Culey	14d.
*Holy, Lord God Almighty	T. Bateson	4d.	*Praise His awful Name	Spohr	2d.
*How goodly are Thy tents	F. Ouseley	14d.	Rejoice in the Lord	G. C. Martin	6d.
*How lovely are Thy dwellings	Spohr	14d.	*See what love hath the Father	Mendelssohn	14d.
*Hymn to the Trinity	Tchaikovsky	14d.	Sing to the Lord	Mendelssohn	8d.
*I am Alpha and Omega	Ch. Gounod	3d.	*Stand up and bless	J. Goss	4d.
I am Alpha and Omega	J. Stainer	14d.	Teach me Thy way	W. H. Gladstone, 14d.; Frank L. Moir	3d.
I am Alpha and Omega	J. Varley Roberts	3d.	*The Lord hath been mindful	S. S. Wesley	3d.
I beheld, and lo!	Blow	6d.	*The Lord is my Shepherd	G. A. Macfarren	14d.
I know that the Lord is great	F. Ouseley	14d.	*The Lord is my Shepherd	J. Shaw	3d.
I saw the Lord	Cuthbert Harris, 3d.; *J. Stainer	6d.	The Lord will comfort Zion	H. Hiles	6d.
I will magnify	J. Shaw	3d.	Thou art worthy, O Lord	F. E. Gladstone	3d.
I will sing of Thy power	Greene	3d.	Thou shalt shew me the path of life	Alan Gray	14d.
*I will sing of Thy power	A. Sullivan	14d.	We humbly beseech Thee	H. Elliot Button	1d.
I will sing unto the Lord	H. Wareing	3d.	Whosoever is born of God	H. Oakeley	3d.
*In humble faith	G. Garrett	14d.	Who can comprehend Thee	Mozart	3d.

* Anthems marked thus (*) may be had in Tonic Sol-fa, 1d. to 2d. each.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.

"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.

"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.

Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

HARVEST ANTHEMS.	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
Sing to the Lord of Harvest	3d.	2d.
While the earth remaineth	3d.	2d.
Blessed be the Name of the Lord	3d.	2d.

SERVICES.

SERVICE IN G	1/6	1s.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum	3d.	2d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	2d.	2d.
Benedictus	2d.	2d.
Jubilate	3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion	8d.	6d.
Pater Noster from the above	2d.	2d.
Amen ditto	1d.	1d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	3d.	2d.

SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	1s.	8d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion	6d.	4d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	3d.	2d.

Te Deum in B flat	3d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	3d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	3d.	2d.

ORGAN.

Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	2s.	—
--	-----	---

CHURCH CANTATA.

Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for General use)	1/6	1s.
--	-----	-----

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSIC

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, MUS. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES.

Venite—Two settings in Chant Form—one in G and one in A	2d.
Te Deum laudamus in A	4d.
Benedictus in A	3d.
Jubilate in A	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in A	4d.

ORGAN MUSIC.

Eight Organ Pieces in Four Sets:—	s. d.
No. 1. Air in C; Larghetto in F; and Andante in D	1 6
No. 2. Russian Air in G, varied. An Air from Pierson's "Jerusalem"	1 6
No. 3. Andante in E flat and Andante in F, from Concerto by Cramer	1 6
No. 4. Fantasia alla Marcia in C	2 0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

PEACE.

THE GENERAL THANKSGIVING. Two Settings.

- No. 1. FOR VOICES IN UNISON. Organ Accompaniment.
 „ 2. FOR S.A.T.B. Unaccompanied.

By EVERARD HULTON, MUS. B. OXON.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S Sunday School Anniversary Music ANTHEMS.

*Sun of my Soul	J. H. ADAMS
†Thine for ever	H. ELLIOT BUTTON
†I love to hear the story	MYLES B. FOSTER
†Lord, Thy children guide and keep	J. H. MAUNDER
†Hosanna we sing	JOHN E. WEST

Price Threepence each.

† Tonic Sol-fa, price 1½d. each. * Tonic Sol-fa, price 2d.

HYMNS AND TUNES.

No.	SET I.
1.	Come, children, on and forward	GEORGE C. MARTIN
2.	For the freshness of the morning	Lady EUAN-SMITH
3.	I love to hear the story	FREDERIC CLAY
4.	Come, O come! in pious lays	J. STAINER
5.	Thine for ever! God of Love	W. C. HARVEY
6.	Jesu, Whom Thy children love	H. ELLIOT BUTTON
7.	Sweetly o'er the meadows fair	F. A. CHALLINOR
8.	Would you gain the best in life	C. J. MAY
9.	On our way rejoicing	WALTER B. GILBERT
10.	Now the daylight goes awa	J. ADCOCK

SET II.

1.	Again the morn of gladness	J. STAINER
2.	The Angels' Song	ALBERTO RANDEGGER
3.	Forward, Christian children	ALFRED MOFFAT
4.	The Golden Shore	J. STAINER
5.	Saviour, blessed Saviour	JOHN E. WEST
6.	Enter with thanksgiving	F. H. COWEN
7.	Man shall not live by bread	J. VARLEY ROBERTS
8.	Stars, that on your wondrous way	J. STAINER
9.	The day is past and over	JOSEPH BARNEY
10.	God will take care of you	FRANCES R. HAVERGAL

SET III.

1.	We march, we march, to victory	JOSEPH BARNEY
2.	Hark! hark! the organ loudly peals	GEORGE J. BENNETT
3.	O what can little hands do?	H. ELLIOT BUTTON
4.	While the sun is shining	T. ADAMS
5.	I love to hear the story	H. J. GAUNTLETT
6.	The roseate hues of early dawn	A. SULLIVAN
7.	Lord, Thy children guide and keep	A. S. COOPER
8.	In our work and in our play	F. WESTLAKE
9.	The Beautiful Land	J. STAINER
10.	Gentle Jesus, meek and mild	J. STAINER

SET IV.

1.	The boys and girls of England	J. STAINER
2.	The crown is waiting	J. STAINER
3.	The City of Light	E. J. TROUP
4.	He dwells among the lilies	LADY EUAN-SMITH
5.	God is in Heaven! Can He hear	H. ELLIOT BUTTON
6.	The Good Shepherd	J. STAINER
7.	A little kingdom I possess	R. S. NEWMAN
8.	Raise your standard, brothers	E. J. TROUP
9.	Flowers	ALBERTO RANDEGGER
10.	Jesus, tender Shepherd, hear me	HORATIO PARKER

Both Notations, price Fourpence per Set.

Words only, 5s. per 100.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE LORD'S PRAYER

COMPOSED BY

BORTNIANSKY

Arranged for use in St. Margaret's, Westminster,

BY

EDWIN STEPHENSON.

Price 4d. net.

J. & W. CHESTER, 11 Great Marlborough Street, London, W. 1.

HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST

(Op. 30, No. 1.)

AND

THE DEATH OF MINNEHAHA

(Op. 30, No. 2.)

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

ARRANGED FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

BY

JOHN POINTER.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE EACH

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE MONTHS

TWELVE SKETCHES FOR THE PIANOFORTE

BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN

IN FOUR BOOKS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

CONTENTS:—

BOOK 1.

January.	Lullaby for the New Year.
February.	(St. Valentine) Flirtations.
March.	Boreas.

BOOK 2.

April.	In Springtime.
May.	Italian Serenade.
June.	Birds.

BOOK 3.

July.	Butterflies.
August.	Mid-day Rêverie.
September.	Harvest Hymn.

BOOK 4.

October.	Autumn Evening Song.
November.	Civic Procession in the Olden Time.
December.	Christmas Morn.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA BY THE COMPOSER.

No. 2.	February.	String Parts (5)	—	4s. od.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	2s. 9d.
No. 5.	May.	String Parts (5)	...	1s. 6d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	1s. 6d.
No. 6.	June.	String Parts (4)	...	1s. od.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	2s. 6d.
No. 9.	September.	String Parts (5)	...	2s. 6d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	5s. od.
No. 12.	December.	String Parts (5)	...	2s. 3d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	4s. 6d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

48 PRELUDES AND FUGUES

(THE WELL-TEMPERED CLAVICHORD)

A NEW EDITION, CAREFULLY REVISED AND FINGERED BY

HAROLD BROOKE.

IN TWO PARTS.

Price 2s. 6d. each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

THE CHORALE PRELUDES

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY ERNEST NEWMAN.

Complete in Five Books, to which is added a Sixth Book, containing the Chorales only.

CONTENTS.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
BOOK XV. Orgelbüchlein (Little Organ Book).	5	0	BOOK XVIII. Miscellaneous Preludes (Part I.) ...	3	6
BOOK XVI. The Six "Schübler" Preludes and the "Clavierübung" (Part III.) ...	3	6	BOOK XIX. Miscellaneous Preludes (Part II.) and Variations	3	6
BOOK XVII. The Eighteen Preludes	3	6	BOOK XX. The Chorales only	3	6

"What is needed," wrote Schweitzer, in concluding a chapter on these magnificent organ works of the great master, 'is a cheap edition of the Chorale Preludes in the original form, distinguishing the collections planned by Bach himself, from detached chorales that have come down to us.' At length, in the excellent edition before us, we find admirably fulfilled every detail of Schweitzer's ideal.

"We have no hesitation in recommending this edition of the Chorale Preludes."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"This fine series is a triumph of British music publishing, and, with clear editing and informing prefaces and annotations, it should prove of the greatest value to students of the old master."—The Glasgow Herald.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" consists of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on, and the appropriate pairs are now issued bound together in cloth (see Cloth Bindings below).

1A. TECHNICAL PRACTICE (1st Position)	2s. od.	1B. STUDIES (1st Position)	2s. od.
2A. DITTO (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. od.	2B. DITTO (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. 6d.
3A. DITTO ... (1st to 5th Position)	3s. od.	3B. DITTO ... (1st to 5th Position)	3s. od.
4A. DITTO ... (all Positions)	2s. 6d.	4B. DITTO ... (all Positions)	3s. od.
5A. DITTO ... Do.	2s. 6d.	5B. DITTO ... Do.	3s. od.
6A. DITTO ... Do.	3s. od.	6B. DITTO ... Do.	3s. od.

CLOTH BINDINGS.

Book 1. (1A and 1B, bound together) in Cloth	 5s. od.
„ 2. (2A and 2B, bound together)	Do. 5s. 6d.
„ 3. (3A and 3B, bound together)	Do. 7s. od.
„ 4. (4A and 4B, bound together)	Do. 6s. 6d.
„ 5. (5A and 5B, bound together)	Do. 6s. 6d.
„ 6. (6A and 6B, bound together)	Do. 7s. od.

PIECES.

In completion of the scheme of "A Modern School" a number of Pieces are published, in a form designed to fulfil the requirements of Violin Teachers and Students. In each number the Violin part is furnished with complete Fingerings and Bowings, besides remarks as to the methods of rendering, &c.

No. 13. TWELVE FOLK DANCES FROM DENMARK (1st Position)	2s. od.	No. 21. CONCERTO IN A MINOR. J. S. BACH (1st to 6th Position)	2s. od.
No. 14. SONATA IN G MINOR. G. TARTINI (All Positions)	2s. od.	No. 22. CONCERTO IN A MINOR. PIERRE RODE (Op. 9). (All Positions)	2s. 6d.
No. 15. OVERTURE TO SAMSON. G. F. HANDEL (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. od.	No. 23. TWELVE CAROLS (1st Position)	2s. od.
No. 16. SONATINA IN D. FRANZ SCHUBERT (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. od.	No. 24. SONATA IN A. W. A. MOZART (1st to 5th Position)	2s. od.
No. 17. EIGHT HYMN TUNES. VARIOUS COMPOSERS (1st Position)	1s. 6d.	No. 25. RÉVERIE. HENRI VIEUXTEMPS (Op. 22, No. 3). (Advanced)	2s. od.
No. 18. STYRIAN DANCES (LANDLER) (Op. 165). JOSEF LANNER (1st to 5th Position)	2s. od.	No. 26. FOUR LITTLE PIECES. (From Op. 8) IGNAZ PLEYEL (1st Position)	2s. od.
No. 19. PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN G MINOR. J. S. BACH (Advanced)	2s. od.	No. 27. SARABANDE AND TAMBOURIN. JEAN-MARIE LECLAIR (1st to 5th Position)	2s. od.
No. 20. SONATA IN G (No. 8). JOSEPH HAYDN (1st to 6th Position)	2s. od.	No. 28. BOURRÉE AND GIGUE. J. S. BACH (1st and 3rd Positions)	1s. 6d.
		No. 29. BALLADE AND POLONAISE. HENRI VIEUXTEMPS (Op. 38) (Advanced)	2s. od.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CHAPPELL & CO.'S STANDARD OPERATIC AND CHORAL WORKS.

Messrs. CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., beg to draw the attention of Choral Societies, &c., to the undermentioned Standard Works, which are now in great demand with the resumption of performances by Choral and Dramatic Societies:—

CONCERT VERSION

MERRIE ENGLAND

COMIC OPERA

By EDWARD GERMAN.

SCOTTISH RHAPSODY.

THE WEDDING OF SHON MACLEAN

FOR CHORUS, SOLI, AND ORCHESTRA

By HUBERT BATH.

FAUST

By CH. GOUNOD.

CONCERT VERSION

TOM JONES

COMIC OPERA

By EDWARD GERMAN.

CONCERT SELECTION

A PRINCESS OF KENSINGTON

COMIC OPERA

By EDWARD GERMAN.

LOOK AT THE CLOCK

By HUBERT BATH.

THE MARTYR OF ANTIOCH

By ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

VOCAL SCORE, CHORUSES AND ORCHESTRAL PARTS.

FULL PARTICULARS WILL BE SENT ON APPLICATION TO—

CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

FOUR CHARACTERISTIC WALTZES

1. VALSE BOHÉMIENNE.

3. VALSE DE LA REINE.

2. VALSE RUSTIQUE.

4. VALSE MAURESQUE.

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(OP. 22).

PIANOFORTE SOLO:

PRICE, COMPLETE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE; SEPARATELY, 1s. 6d. EACH.

Violin and Pianoforte	...	complete	3s. od.
Violin and Pianoforte	...	separately, each	1s. 6d.
String Parts for Full or Small Orchestra	...		6s. od.
Wind Parts for Small Orchestra...	...		7s. od.
Ditto, for Full Orchestra...	...		12s. od.

Full Score (Full Orchestra)	...	5s. od.
Full Score (Small Orchestra), MS.
Arrangements, as Quintets, for Pianoforte and
Strings, each Number	...	2s. od.
Separate String Parts,	6d. each.
Military Band Arrangement	...	15s. od.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

DATE OF PUBLICATION, MAY 1st.

PRICE SIXTEEN SHILLINGS NET.

A WESTMINSTER PILGRIM

BEING A

RECORD OF SERVICE

IN

CHURCH, CATHEDRAL, AND ABBEY

COLLEGE, UNIVERSITY, AND CONCERT-ROOM

WITH A

FEW NOTES ON SPORT

BY

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE

Commander of the Royal Victorian Order

King Edward Professor of Music in the University of London

Gresham Professor of Music

Emeritus-Organist of Westminster Abbey

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

* * * An Illustrated Prospectus will be sent on Application.

PREFACE.

THE Canterbury Pilgrims, many years ago, probably passed through the streets or in the immediate neighbourhood of the old City of Rochester as they wended their way to and from the Shrine of Thomas à Becket. Their journeys lay through a diversified and beautiful country, and though toilsome could not have been without many happy days. Through the streets of the same old City of Rochester, nearly seventy years ago, I used to pass to and fro to attend to my duties at the Cathedral, starting on the Pilgrimage recorded in the following pages. My journey has been a long one, my experiences very diversified. I have had as companions, like the Canterbury Pilgrims, a varied Company of all Professions and Ranks of Men. My life's work has been attended with many joys and some sorrows. . . . The notes of my life which I have been tempted to put on record contain nothing very remarkable,—of that I am quite conscious. But the duties which have fallen to me in connection with many important functions at the Abbey will be of some little interest to my friends at least. . . . The difference between the present time, with its opportunities for young musicians, and the distant time of my own youth is immense. Then, there was only one Musical College, the Royal Academy of Music; there was only one scholarship (outside the R.A.M.) available for young musicians—the Mendelssohn; there were no Local Examinations in Music. . . .

Most of my life has been devoted (though not exclusively) to the service of the Church. As boy and man I have served under seven Deans, I have worked with eleven Precentors, while Canons, Vicars-Choral, and Choristers are too numerous to mention. Outside the Church I have laboured at my Profession as Conductor, Teacher in Colleges, Lecturer, and University Professor. In all these various ways I have tried to serve the cause of Music. Whether I have done all that in me lay, readers of the following pages must decide. But, at any rate, I can conscientiously say I have done my best to fulfil worthily the duties of any position to which I have been called.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

"Westminster Bridge."

(From the original of the "Vanity Fair" Cartoon by SIR LESLIE WARD, now in the possession of the Author.)

"Old Cathedral . . . earthy smell."

Organists of Rochester Cathedral.

Chapter House Doorway, Rochester.

Six Poor Travellers, High Street, Rochester.

Figurehead of H.M.S. "Cressy."

Miss Maria Hackett (1783-1874).

Manchester Cathedral: the Choir.

The Author's House in the Little Cloisters.

Rod and Gun.

Three Ex-Organists of Manchester Cathedral.

The Author's Home at Glass, Aberdeenshire.

The Choir and Organ of Westminster Abbey.

A Curious Bass Trombone.

Littlington Tower in 1840.

Captain Cooke's Signature.

The Medal of the Musicians' Company.

Room in Purcell's House in Bowling Alley.

Henry Purcell (1658-95).

Sir Frederick Bridge in his Doctor's Robes.

Three Veterans.

Samuel Sebastian Wesley (1810-76).

Silver Rose-water Dish, presented to the Author by the Samuel Pepys Club.

Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy (aged 12).

Portrait of the Author (aged 9).

Contemporary Bust of Handel.

Garcia and Hallé playing Chess.

Organists of Westminster Abbey.

Portrait of the Author.

(Specially drawn for this book by SIR WILLIAM RICHMOND, K.C.B., R.A.)

CONTENTS.

CHAPTER I.

Duke of Wellington's Funeral—Rochester Cathedral—
Mr. J. L. Hopkins—Private Theatricals—A Barrel of Apples
—A Caning Incident—Mr. Miles—An Ingenious Use of a Mirror—Joseph Maas—Launch of the "Cressy"—Landing of Princess Alexandra at Gravesend—An Ideal Precentor.

CHAPTER II.

Opening of the Crystal Palace by Queen Victoria—Miss Hackett and Sydney Smith—The Crimean War—Musical Evenings with Officers of the Garrison—Removal of the Old Stone Bridge—Deans and Canons of Rochester—Mr.
Whiston v. The Dean and Chapter—Competition for the Organistship of Rochester—Quaint old Customs—Two Terrible Melodramas—Rochester Subscription Concerts in the 'fifties—Sims Reeves at a War Concert—An Historical Extravaganza.

CHAPTER III.

First Organ Lessons—Blind Fred as Critic—An Obstinate
Alto—Organ Interlude and the Man with the Glass-Eye—
Recollections of Charles Dickens—Early Appointments—
The Volunteer Band—Marching Past Her Majesty at the Hyde Park Review—Humiliation at a Review—Jenny Lind in "Elijah"—Hearing Wesley open an Organ—Pupil of Goss, at St. Paul's.

CHAPTER IV.

Canvassing the Parish—Appointment at Windsor—The Hawtreys—Private Theatricals—Mrs. Oliphant—Early Choral Works—Life-Guardsmen at a "Churching"—
"Reform" Election at Windsor—A Political Parrot—Musical Degree—Ouseley and the "Stretto maestrale"— Arthur Sullivan at Windsor—Cathedral Appointment.

CHAPTER V.

A Stroke of Fortune—Life in Manchester—Professorial
Work—Music in the Cathedral—Inadequate Choir—Mass Weddings—New Organ—A tremendous choral bass—"The little 'beggars' in front"—Prescient Remark concerning "Gerontius"—Mus. Doc. Degree—Hallé at Manchester—

Hallé and Dreams—An Involuntary Immersion—Refused admission to Westminster Abbey—Retirement of Turle—
The Vacancy and Dean Stanley—"Choosing an organist more difficult than choosing a wife"—Organist of Westminster Abbey.

CHAPTER VI.

Westminster Abbey—Death of Turle—Dean Stanley's rôle of Musical Critic—Dean Stanley and Bach's "Passion" —Early Difficulties with the Choir—The Press and the Vicars-Choral—An "Error of Judgment"—A Dental
Interlude—"Bellows v. Diaphragms"—Professorial
Appointments: National Training School and Royal College of Music—Sir George Grove and Sir Hubert Parry —Three Registrars of the Royal College—Attwood and Mozart: Exchange of Compliments—Educational and Literary Publications—The Caxton Celebration.

CHAPTER VII.

First visit to Scotland—First Salmon—A Great Success in the "Lower Beat"—"Catch" to commemorate a Catastrophe—"Sit down on him"—Fishing Record on the Deveron—Caught by the Tail—A Distressing Accident with a Fly—The Valley of Glass—Anecdotes of the Minister—"I gae'd oot at the window"—A Peninsular Warrior—The Dominie and the "Examiners."

CHAPTER VIII.

A Grouse Drive—Deer Stalking—Sir George Martin and the Deer—Edward Silas and the "Amorous Goat"— Railway Incidents—Slatin Pasha—Debates in the House of Commons—A Nocturne.

CHAPTER IX.

Lord Tennyson's "The Goose"—Presentation of the Musicians' Company's Medal to H.R.H. The Prince of Wales (Edward VII.)—Bach's "Christmas Oratorio"—
Music-makings at Worcester Festival—Festival Compositions —Grieg and Dvorák at the Birmingham Festival—Visit to Gounod, at Paris—Processional effect in Notre Dame.

CHAPTER X.

Queen Victoria's Jubilee—An Expensive Fanfare—An Awesome Serpent—Fenian Alarm: a "Black Bag" in the Organ-Loft—Queen Victoria at the Jubilee Festival—The National Anthem in the Abbey—Lockhart's Jubilee Picture—A "Devoted Friend" at the Auction—A Distinguished "Man-Servant."

CHAPTER XI.

The Browning Memorial Service and Mrs. Oliphant—The Madrigal Society—The Gresham Fellowship—Funeral of Lord Tennyson—The Marquess of Lorne's Hymn—Princess Beatrice's Bazaar Book—The Jenny Lind Memorial—Death of Canon Prothero—Musicians' Company's Exhibition—Dr. Pearce and the "Common C(h)ord."

CHAPTER XII.

Purcell Celebration—Purcell's Te Deum, a Dramatic Incident—Purcell Memorial in the Abbey—Purcell's Residence—Relics—A Purcell Myth—Purcell Stops in the Abbey Organ—Conductorship of the Royal Choral Society—A "Cabman Critic"—A Contrapuntal Waiter.

CHAPTER XIII.

Diamond Jubilee Celebration—Knighthood—Sir William Gowers—Sir William Crookes: "Timing" a Knighthood—Dean Hole and his "West Front"—The "Flag of England"—Mr. Rudyard Kipling and his Poem—Funeral Service of Mr. Gladstone—Duke of Westminster and "Westminster Bridge."

CHAPTER XIV.

Coronation of their Majesties King Edward VII. and Queen Alexandra—Earl Marshal's Letter—The Bishop of Winchester and the Music—Canon Armitage Robinson and his Valuable Work—A Learned Gillie—Musicians who contributed to the Service—The Problem of the "Vivats"—A Veteran Singer from Wells—An Admirable Choir Secretary—Dr. Borland and the Band.

CHAPTER XV.

Coronation (contd.)—Composers and their Contributions—Sir Francis Bertie and Dr. Saint-Saëns—Rehearsals in the Abbey for the Processions—Postponement of the Coronation—King Edward and the Music at the Postponed Ceremony—The "Vivats" at the Coronation—The Procession of the Regalia—Trinity College of Music and Foundation of King Edward Choir.

CHAPTER XVI.

Interesting Details of the Musical Arrangements at Previous Coronations—Meagre Choral Force at Coronation of William IV.—Letters of Sir George Smart—Braham and Balfe—Old Members of the Coronation Choir at Windsor—Goss as a Lay-Vicar—18th Century Coronation Music.

CHAPTER XVII.

The Bi-Centenary of the Birth of Pepys—Foundation of the Pepys Club—Funeral Service for the Duke of Cambridge—Memorial Service for the Marquess of Salisbury—Editorship of the Methodist Hymn Book—Handel and Water—Speech at the Sheffield Conference—Some Native Humour.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Memorial Service to Christian IX. of Denmark—Thanksgiving Service for Safe Return of Prince and Princess of Wales from India—Orlando Gibbons' Commemoration—Lecture Tour in Canada—Dr. Vogt and the Mendelssohn Choir—Meeting with Sir Robert Borden and Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

CHAPTER XIX.

Memorial Window to Sir Benjamin Baker—Death of King Edward—National Memorial Service—Lying in State in Westminster Hall—S. S. Wesley Centenary—Dean Armitage Robinson leaves the Abbey: his Help in Editing some Motets of Dering—Only Survivor of Abbey Community of 1875.

CHAPTER XX.

Coronation of King George and Queen Mary—Another Homage Anthem—A Shrewd Suggestion from Sir Walter Parratt—Sir Henry Irving as a Musical Critic—Edward Lloyd's Solo—Awarded the C.V.O.—Dinner given by the Coronation Choir—Presentation—Coronation Baton: Two Inscriptions.

CHAPTER XXI.

Funeral Service of Lord Lister—Memorial Window to Lord Kelvin—First Service for the Knights of the Bath for a Hundred Years: Letter from Bishop Ryle—Memorial Service for the Duke of Argyll—Speech by Mr. Rudyard Kipling—Welsh National Service: Letter from Mr. Lloyd George.

CHAPTER XXII.

Royal College of Organists—Dr. Turpin—National Training School—Sullivan as a Teacher of Counterpoint—Dr. Prout as Orchestral Critic—Royal College of Music—Professorial Appointment suggested by the Prince of Wales—Death of Sullivan—Joachim and the Examination Paper—Trinity College—Tour with Dr. McNaught.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Gresham Professor—Fraternal Visit of London University to the University of Paris—Imperial College of Science: Laying Foundation Stone by King Edward—Royal Choral Society—Conductorship, and a Letter from Sir George Grove—Prout as a "Toucher-up"—Joseph Bennett and Mozart—Royal Philharmonic Concerts.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Renewed Acquaintance with Maas—An Operatic Effect that Miscarried—A Light Opera that was Lost to the World—Co-Director in an Opera Company—Ganzas Entrepreneur—Fortuitous Intervention of a Sidesman—A Ludicrous Faust.

CHAPTER XXV.

The Musical Association—Re-opening of Manchester Cathedral Organ—Career and Death of Malibran—Manuel Garcia: Centenary Banquet and Honours.

CHAPTER XXVI.

Résumé of Canadian Journey—The Scotch Element in Canada—Canadian Musicians: the Cathedral Tradition—Dr. Charles Harriss—Ottawa and its Historic Associations—Colours of Canadian Regiments at the Abbey—Anniversary of Confederation of Canada: A Memorable Service.

CHAPTER XXVII.

An Early Canadian Friend—Madame Albani and Queen Victoria—Oratorio, "The Repentance of Nineveh"—Norwich Festival and "Morte d'Arthur"—An Incident in the Highlands—Randegger and the Coronation Choir—Jubilee of Cambridge University Musical Society—Tchaikovsky and Saint-Saëns—Grieg at a Philharmonic Concert.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

The Muniment Room—Early Records concerning the Organ—A Quaint Epitaph—Thomas Dallam's Journey to Constantinople: Presentation Organ by Queen Elizabeth to the Sultan of Turkey—Portrait Gallery of Abbey Organists—Purcell Score: Autograph Corrections—The Abbey Bells: an Historic "Ringer's Bill."

CHAPTER XXIX.

Résumé of the Work of a Cathedral Organist—Necessity for Harmonious Collaboration with Colleagues—Causes of Failure—Some Amusing Stories—Duties and Emoluments of Lay-Vicars—Choirboy Education—The Archbishops' Report—Status and Privileges of the Organist: Some Suggestions—Organists' Benevolent League—The Question of Musical Education: Provision for Students.

CHAPTER XXX.

Some Devoted Assistants in the Organ-Loft—Relations with Precentors—Service Music for the Abbey: "Palestrina and His School"—Splendid Work of Choristers during the War Period—End of Pilgrimage: the Philosophy of Humour—Apothegm of Lord Houghton's—A Lancashire Adage—Letter from Bishop Ryle—Valediction.

Prepare yourselves again

COMPOSED BY

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

- | | | |
|--|---|--|
| 49. God be merciful S. S. Wesley 3d. | 43. Hosanna ... O. A. Macfarren 3d. | 134. I will sing of Thy power Greene 4d. |
| 236. God be merciful unto us C. F. Lloyd 6d. | 657. Hosanna to the Lord W. Jordan 4d. | 192. I will sing unto the Lord Wareing 3d. |
| 105. God came from Teman Steggall 4d. | 646. Ditto ... Luard-Selby 3d. | 6. I will wash my hands Hopkins 3d. |
| 967. God is a Spirit ... W. S. Bennett 12d. | 1021. Hosanna we sing John E. West 3d. | 710. If any man hath not H. W. Davies 4d. |
| 128. God is gone up ... Croft 4d. | 260. How beautiful are the feet Handel 3d. | 819. If Christ be not raised Macpherson 4d. |
| 892. Ditto ... O. Gibbons 3d. | 691. How blest are they Tschaiakowsky 4d. | 979. If the Lord had not E. C. Bairstow 3d. |
| 864. Ditto ... Walter B. Gilbert 2d. | 321. How excellent is Thy ... Cowen 6d. | 825. If the Lord Himself W. Child 3d. |
| 605. God is my salvation C. F. Bowes 4d. | 615. How great is the loving West 3d. | 758. Ditto ... Walmisley 6d. |
| 131. God is our hope ... Greene 6d. | 373. How long wilt Thou Oliver King 2d. | 53. If we believe that Jesus died Goss 12d. |
| 332. God is our refuge ... A. Foote 4d. | 867. Ditto ... Jeremiah Clarke 3d. | 544. If ye love Me ... B. Steane 2d. |
| 101. Ditto ... H. Hiles 6d. | 647. How lovely are ... C. Salaman 3d. | 453. Ditto ... H. W. Wareing 3d. |
| 75. God said, Behold G. Macfarren 4d. | 104. Ditto ... Spohr 8d. | 789. If ye then be risen Ivor Atkins 4d. |
| 969. God so loved the world H. Moore 3d. | 988. Ditto ... J. Brahms 2d. | 469. Ditto (S.A.) M. B. Foster 3d. |
| 1012. Ditto ... E. G. Monk 4d. | 766. I am Alpha ... Ch. Gounod 3d. | 58. Ditto ... Naylor 3d. |
| 473. Ditto ... J. V. Roberts 3d. | 539. Ditto ... J. V. Roberts 3d. | 61. In Christ dwelleth John Goss 3d. |
| 342. God, that madest earth A. C. Fisher 2d. | 623. I am He that liveth T. Adams 4d. | 913. In divers tongues Palestrina 2d. |
| 1056. God the All-fatherly A. Hollins 3d. | 664. I am the Resurrection ... Croft 4d. | 619. In every place incense John E. West 3d. |
| 344. God, Who at sundry times J. H. Mee 4d. | 662. Ditto ... R. Rogers 4d. | 655. In heavenly love ... H. Parker 3d. |
| 715. God's peace is peace eternal Grieg 3d. | 268. I am well pleased J. Rheinberger 3d. | 403. In my Father's house Crament 3d. |
| 550. Grant, we beseech Thee M. Elvey 4d. | 120. I beheld, and lo ... Blow 6d. | 777. Ditto ... H. Elliot Button 3d. |
| 388. Ditto ... Roberts 3d. | 280. Ditto ... Elvey 6d. | 102. In sweet consent E. H. Thorne 3d. |
| 517. Great and marvellous J. F. Bridge 3d. | 496. I came not to call ... C. Vincent 3d. | 802. In that day (Christmas) Bridge 3d. |
| 187. Ditto ... Monk 3d. | 207. I cried unto the Lord ... Heap 4d. | 278. Ditto ... G. Elvey 4d. |
| 848. Ditto ... T. Tomkins 3d. | 537. I declare to you Cruickshank 4d. | 720. In the beginning C. Macpherson 4d. |
| 223. Great is Jehovah (Male) Schubert 4d. | 168. I desired wisdom J. Stainer 4d. | 582. Ditto ... F. Tozer 4d. |
| 987. Ditto ... Schubert 4d. | 230. I did call upon the Lord Pattison 4d. | 890. In the day shalt ... H. W. Wareing 3d. |
| 602. Great is our Lord M. B. Foster 4d. | 515. I do not ask, O Lord ... Roberts 3d. | 338. In the fear of the Lord J. V. Roberts 3d. |
| 136. Great is the Lord ... Hayes 4d. | 117. I have set God ... Blake 6d. | 980. In the hour of my ... Davies 4d. |
| 708. Ditto ... A. W. Marchant 3d. | 420. Ditto ... Hamilton Clarke 4d. | 659. In the Lord ... C. Macpherson 4d. |
| 237. Ditto ... F. Ouseley 6d. | 130. Ditto ... J. Goldwin 3d. | 282. Ditto ... R. Stewart 6d. |
| 481. Ditto ... B. Steane 3d. | 122. I have surely built ... Boyce 4d. | 385. In Thee, O Lord ... S. C. Taylor 3d. |
| 813. Ditto ... E. A. Sydenham 3d. | 219. Ditto ... T. T. Trinnell 4d. | 33. Ditto ... B. Tours 3d. |
| 220. Grieve not the Holy Spirit Stainer 3d. | 590. I heard a great voice G. F. Cobb 2d. | 148. Ditto ... J. Weldon 3d. |
| 609. Guide me, O Thou H. Blair 3d. | 396. I heard a voice John Goss 2d. | 725. Is it not wheat-harvest T. Adams 3d. |
| 427. Hail! gladdening Light J. T. Field 4d. | 903. I looked, and behold H. Willan 3d. | 467. Is it nothing (S.A.) M. B. Foster 3d. |
| 545. Ditto ... Martin 4d. | 1029. I love to hear M. B. Foster 3d. | 571. Ditto (4 voices) M. B. Foster 3d. |
| 326. Hail, thou that art A. Carnall 4d. | 1022. I saw the Lord ... C. Harris 3d. | 91. It came even to pass Ouseley 4d. |
| 563. Hail to the Christ J. Barnby 3d. | 171. Ditto ... J. Stainer 6d. | 180. It is a good thing J. Barnby 6d. |
| 945. Hail, true Body ... H. Willan 2d. | 114. I was glad ... T. Attwood 4d. | 231. Ditto ... T. M. Pattison 4d. |
| 499. Hallelujah, Christ is risen Steane 3d. | 993. Ditto ... A. H. Brewer 3d. | 215. It shall come to pass ... Garrett 6d. |
| 382. Hallelujah! the Light Oliver King 3d. | 32. Ditto ... G. Elvey 3d. | 908. Jesu, Lord of life and glory Elgar 3d. |
| 173. Happy is the man ... E. Prout 8d. | 79. Ditto ... C. E. Horsley 6d. | 397. Jesu, lover of my soul (Male) F. Liffie 2d. |
| 681. Hark, the glad sound M. B. Foster 3d. | 743. Ditto ... C. H. H. Parry 4d. | 907. Jesu, meek and lowly Elgar 3d. |
| 909. Ditto ... A. R. Gaul 3d. | 379. Ditto ... T. T. Trinnell 4d. | 1031. Jesu, our Lord ... Ch. Gounod 2d. |
| 487. Ditto ... E. V. Hall 3d. | 119. I was in the spirit ... Blow 6d. | 654. Jesu, Thou joy ... E. H. Davies 3d. |
| 345. Hark, the herald angels E. V. Hall 3d. | 205. I will always give thanks Clarke 3d. | 844. Jesu, Thou sweetness H. J. King 3d. |
| 444. Hark! what news Oliver King 3d. | 1034. I will cause the shower Naylor 3d. | 904. Jesu, word of God incarnate Elgar 2d. |
| 404. Harvest Hymn ... F. Tozer 3d. | 874. I will cry unto God H. J. King 3d. | 455. Jesu Christ is risen Oliver King 4d. |
| 820. Haste Thee, O God John Shepherd 3d. | 73. Ditto ... Steggall 3d. | 788. Jesu Christ is risen to-day Gaul 4d. |
| 784. Have mercy upon me J. Barnby 3d. | 502. I will extol Thee ... C. M. Hudson 4d. | 971. Jesus lives! no longer now Foster 3d. |
| 535. Ditto ... J. Goss 4d. | 29. I will give thanks J. Barnby 4d. | 618. Jesus of Nazareth ... G. Byrd 4d. |
| 1013. Ditto ... E. Minshall 3d. | 156. Ditto ... E. J. Hopkins 6d. | 548. Joy in harvest ... B. Steane 3d. |
| 307. Ditto ... Kellow J. Pye 3d. | 568. Ditto ... Mozart 2d. | 7. Judge me, O God Mendelssohn 12d. |
| 401. Ditto ... J. Shaw 3d. | 915. I will give unto him H. Blair 2d. | 677. Just Judge of Heaven Garrett 6d. |
| 794. He sendeth the springs Wareing 4d. | 674. I will give you rain H. W. Wareing 4d. | 614. Justorum animæ ... Byrd 3d. |
| 701. He shall swallow up ... Greenish 3d. | 225. I will give unto Gauntlett 2d. | 179. King all glorious J. Barnby 6d. |
| 707. He that dwelleth ... J. Booth 4d. | 591. I will go unto the altar C. Harris 3d. | 997. Ditto (4 voices) J. Barnby 4d. |
| 898. He that shall endure Mendelssohn 2d. | 1037. I will greatly rejoice Cruickshank 4d. | 581. Kings shall be thy G. C. Martin 2d. |
| 900. He that spared not His Gladstone 3d. | 495. I will lay me down A. C. Edwards 3d. | 894. Kings shall see and arise Bridge 6d. |
| 389. Hear me when I call (Male) Distin 2d. | 209. Ditto ... H. Hiles 3d. | 425. Lead, kindly Light R. Dunstan 3d. |
| 339. Hear my prayer Mendelssohn 3d. | 958. I will lift up mine eyes J. V. Roberts 3d. | 528. Ditto ... C. L. Naylor 4d. |
| 1001. Ditto ... H. Purcell 3d. | 739. I will love Thee ... D. S. Smith 3d. | 589. Ditto ... D. Pughe-Evans 3d. |
| 146. Ditto ... C. Stroud 4d. | 126. I will love Thee ... J. Clark 4d. | 37. Ditto ... J. Stainer 4d. |
| 442. Hear my words C. H. H. Parry 3d. | 1058. Ditto ... Oliver King 3d. | 132. Let all the world ... W. Jordan 4d. |
| 310. Hear, O God ... A. Friedländer 3d. | 394. Ditto ... W. H. Bell 4d. | 467. Let God arise ... Greene 6d. |
| 138. Hear, O heavens P. Humphreys 3d. | 760. I will magnify Thee J. B. Calkin 4d. | 345. Ditto ... T. T. Trinnell 4d. |
| 94. Hear, O Lord ... John Goss 3d. | 78. Ditto ... John Goss 3d. | 375. Let my complaint Arthur Batten 2d. |
| 139. Ditto ... C. King 2d. | 27. Ditto ... F. Liffie 3d. | 467. Let not thine hand J. Stainer 3d. |
| 162. Ditto ... F. Ouseley 3d. | 633. Ditto ... E. M. Lee 3d. | 807. Let not your heart Eaton Fanning 3d. |
| 831. Hear, O My people J. Holbrooke 3d. | 405. Ditto ... C. H. Lloyd 3d. | 438.* Ditto ... M. B. Foster 3d. |
| 203. Hear, O Thou Shepherd Clarke 4d. | 780. Ditto ... A. W. Marchant 3d. | 795. Let the heavens be glad M. Higgs 4d. |
| 522. Ditto ... T. A. Walmisley 3d. | 1910. Ditto ... W. Byrd 3d. | 226. Let the peace of God J. Stainer 4d. |
| 776. Hear the voice and prayer Tallis 3d. | 929. Ditto ... B. Steane 2d. | 565. Let the righteous ... R. F. Lloyd 3d. |
| 773. Harken unto Me W. H. Bell 3d. | 886. Ditto ... J. Shaw 3d. | 328. Let the words of my A. D. Culley 3d. |
| 376. Hide not Thy face Kellow J. Pye 3d. | 153. I will mention A. Sullivan 6d. | 494. Let Thy merciful ears W. B. Bell 2d. |
| 366. Ho! every one ... J. M. Crament 3d. | 790. I will not leave you W. Byrd 3d. | 962. Let us now praise (Male) Thorne 3d. |
| 246. Ditto ... G. C. Martin 4d. | 575. Ditto ... B. Steane 2d. | 308. Ditto ... A. J. Silver 3d. |
| 330. Holy Ghost, to earth ... Dvorák 4d. | 519. I will open rivers E. Pettman 3d. | 96. Lift up thine eyes John Goss 6d. |
| 111. Holy, holy, holy ... Crotch 4d. | 371. I will set His dominion H. W. Parker 4d. | 897. Lift up your heads O. Gibbons 3d. |
| 842. Holy, Lord God ... T. Bateson 4d. | 100. I will sing a new song Armes 8d. | 18. Ditto ... J. L. Hopkins 12d. |
| 112. Honour the Lord ... J. Stainer 4d. | 608. I will sing of the mercies J. Booth 3d. | 409. Ditto ... S. Coleridge-Taylor 3d. |
| 429. Honour (in C) O. Gibbons 3d. | | 847. Ditto ... William Turner 2d. |
| 1015. Ditto (in E flat) O. Gibbons 3d. | | |

PEACE LIVES AGAIN

MOTET FOR FOUR VOICES

THE WORDS BY SHAKESPEARE

(FROM KING RICHARD III., ACT V., SCENE IV.)

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE C.V.O.; M.A.; MUS. D.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Lento espressivo.

SOPRANO. p God, . . if . . Thy will be so, if . . p

ALTO. p God, . . if . . Thy will be so, if . . p

TENOR. p God, . . if . . Thy will be so, if . . p

BASS. p God, . . if . . Thy will be so, if . . p

ACCOMP. ad lib. Lento espressivo. ♩ = 72. p p

cres.

Thy will be so, . . En - rich . . the time to cres.

Thy will be so, . . En - rich . . the time to cres.

Thy will be so, . . En - rich . . the time to cres.

Thy will be so, . . En - rich . . the time to cres.

PEACE LIVES AGAIN.

First system of the musical score. It consists of four vocal staves (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and a piano accompaniment. The key signature has two flats (B-flat and E-flat), and the time signature is 4/4. The lyrics are: "come with smooth-fac'd peace, . . with smooth - - fac'd peace, . .". The music features a melodic line in the vocal parts and a harmonic accompaniment in the piano. Dynamics include f, dim., and pp.

Second system of the musical score. It continues the vocal and piano parts. The lyrics are: "With smi - ling plen - ty, . . and fair pros - per - ous days, . . with". The piano accompaniment features a steady rhythmic pattern. Dynamics include cres. and f.

Third system of the musical score. It concludes the piece. The lyrics are: "smi - ling plen - ty, and fair pros - per - ous days! . . Let". The music includes a pp (pianissimo) section and a a tempo section. The piano accompaniment features a melodic line in the right hand and a harmonic accompaniment in the left hand. Dynamics include allargando., a tempo., and pp.

PEACE LIVES AGAIN.

them not live to taste this land's in - crease, That would with trea - son

them not live to taste this land's in - crease, That would with trea - son

them not live to taste this land's in - crease, That would with trea - son

them not live to taste this land's in - crease, That would with trea - son

The first system consists of four vocal staves and a piano accompaniment. The vocal parts are in treble and bass clefs, while the piano is in grand staff. Dynamics include cres. and f. The lyrics are: "them not live to taste this land's in - crease, That would with trea - son".

wound . . this fair land's peace, . . this fair land's wound . . this fair land's peace, . . this fair land's wound . . this fair land's peace, . . this fair land's wound . . this fair land's peace, . . this fair . . land's wound . . this fair land's peace, . . this fair . . land's

The second system continues the vocal and piano parts. Dynamics include dim., pp, and rall.. The lyrics are: "wound . . this fair land's peace, . . this fair land's".

PEACE LIVES AGAIN.

peace! . . . Peace lives a - gain, . . . Peace lives a .

peace! . . . Peace lives a - gain, . . . Peace lives a peace! . . . Peace lives a - gain, . . . Peace . . . lives a .

peace! . . . Peace lives a - gain, . . . Peace lives a - pp p f

- gain, . . . Peace . . . lives a - gain; . . .

- gain, . . . Peace . . . lives a - gain; . . . That she

- gain, . . . Peace . . . lives a - gain; . . .

- gain, . . . Peace lives, . . . lives a - gain; . . .

allargando. a tempo. sostenuto. p a tempo. a tempo. a tempo. allargando. a tempo. p sostenuto.

PEACE LIVES AGAIN.

The musical score is written for a vocal soloist and a piano accompaniment. The key signature has two flats (B-flat and E-flat), and the time signature is common time (C). The score is divided into two systems, each containing four staves. The vocal part is written on the top staff of each system, and the piano accompaniment is written on the bottom three staves. The lyrics are written below the vocal staff. The score includes various musical markings such as sostenuto., p, cres., and f. The lyrics are: "That she may long live here, . . . that she may may long live here, . . . live here, . . . That she may long live here, . . . may That she may long live here, . . . may long live here, . . . that she may long . . . live . . . may long live here, that she . . . may . . . long . . . live . . . may long live.. here, that she may . . . long . . . live long live here, that she . . . may . . . long . . . live long live here, that she . . . may . . . long . . . live".

sostenuto. cres.
That she may long live here, . . . that she may
cres.
may long live here, . . . live here, . . .
sostenuto. p cres.
That she may long live here, . . .
p sostenuto. cres.
That she may long live here, . . . may
That she may long live here, . . . that she may long . . . live may long live here, that she . . . may . . . long . . . live
may long live.. here, that she may . . . long . . . live long live here, that she . . . may . . . long . . . live long live here, that she . . . may . . . long . . . live

PEACE LIVES AGAIN.

here, . . . long . . . live here, . . . God . . .

here, . . . long . . . live here, . . . God . . .

here, . . . long . . . live here, . . . God . . .

here, . . . long . . . live here, . . . God . . .

ff marcato. p poco riten.

say— A - men, . . . A - men.

say— A - men. . . A - men.

say— A - men, . . . A - men.

say— A - men, . . . A - men.

ppp

NOVELLO'S

OCTAVO EDITION OF ANTHEMS.

343. Lift up your hearts J. Barnby 4d.	406. My mouth shall speak John E. West 4d.	880. O heart subdued with J. Brahms 3d.
972. Light in darkness D. C. Jenkins 3d.	190. My soul is weary ... Beckwith 4d.	982. O holy night ... A. Adam 2d.
595. Light of the world ... E. Elgar 3d.	911. My soul, O praise the Lord Bach 3d.	47. O how amiable ... J. Barnby 3d.
408. Lighten our darkness G. R. Vicals 2d.	885. My soul truly waiteth ... Attwood 3d.	752. Ditto ... E. Fanning 3d.
1027. Light's glittering morn J. E. West 4d.	1041. Ditto G. F. Cobb 3d.	347. Ditto ... Oliver King 4d.
393. Like as the hart Thomas Adams 3d.	586. Ditto ... B. Steane 2d.	963. Ditto ... J. H. Maunder 3d.
799. Ditto H. Clarke 3d.	295. My soul, wait thou still F. J. Read 4d.	233. Ditto ... T. M. Pattison 3d.
530. Lo, God, our God B. Haynes 3d.	960. Nazareth ... Ch. Gounod 2d.	48. O how plentiful ... T. M. Pattison 3d.
335. Lo, summer comes again J. Stainer 6d.	629. Nearer, my God, to Thee T. Adams 3d.	490. O Jerusalem, look about E. Naylor 4d.
504. Lo! the winter B. Farebrother 3d.	560. No pomp of earthly ... Barnby 3d.	301. O Jesu! Victim blest ... Powell 3d.
883. Look down, Holy Dove Selby 3d.	920. Not unto us, O Lord T. S. Dupuis 3d.	536. O joyful Light ... B. Tours 4d.
711. Look on the fields C. Macpherson 3d.	210. Ditto H. Gadsby 6d.	543. O Lamb of God ... J. Barnby 3d.
859. Look upon mine adversity Blow 2d.	558. Ditto John E. West 4d.	870. O Lord, from Whom all West 2d.
639. Look upon the rainbow T. Adams 3d.	592. Now is Christ risen T. Adams 3d.	204. O Lord God ... Clarke 3d.
843. Look, ye saints ... M. B. Foster 3d.	612. Now is come salvation C. Harris 3d.	251. Ditto (Male) Ernest Ford 4d.
801. Lord God of Abraham A. H. Brewer 2d.	718. Now know I that the M. B. Foster 3d.	1030. O Lord God of hosts ... Greene 3d.
165. Lord, how are they H. Clarke 6d.	695. Now late on the Coleridge-Taylor 3d.	926. O Lord, have mercy ... Pergolesi 3d.
391. Lord, I have loved ... F. Liffie 3d.	673. Now sinks the sun H. W. Parker 4d.	1038. O Lord, I will praise ... H. Blair 3d.
722. Ditto G. W. Torrance 3d.	868. Now when Jesus Joseph Holbrooke 3d.	942. O Lord Jesu Christ ... Wesley 2d.
54. Lord, let me know mine end Goss 3d.	489. Ditto W. A. C. Cruickshank 3d.	184. O Lord, look down J. Battishill 3d.
351. Lord of all power (Male) J. Barnby 2d.	505. O all ye people ... H. Purcell 3d.	702. O Lord, my God ... Nares 3d.
1025. Ditto E. T. Chipp 3d.	833. O all ye that pass by ... Vittoria 3d.	306. O Lord of Hosts Kate Boudry 3d.
566. Lord of life A. C. Mackenzie 3d.	928. O be joyful in God John E. West 3d.	25. O Lord, our Governor H. Gadsby 3d.
459. Lord of our life ... J. T. Field 3d.	506. O be joyful in the Lord G. Martin 6d.	727. O Lord, Thou art my God J. Goss 3d.
411. Lord of the Harvest J. Barnby 4d.	1018. Ditto E. Prout 3d.	395. Ditto C. H. Lloyd 6d.
1051. Ditto R. Redhead 3d.	891. O clap your hands O. Gibbons 3d.	845. Ditto C. Lee Williams 4d.
404. Lord of the rich and golden F. Tozer 2d.	133. Ditto ... Greene 4d.	690. O Lord, Thy Word J. F. Bridge 6d.
1049. Lord of the worlds John E. West 3d.	686. Ditto J. L. Hopkins 3d.	326. O love most ... A. H. Brewer 3d.
318. Lord, Thou art God J. Stainer 8d.	82. Ditto ... J. Stainer 6d.	3. O love the Lord ... A. Sullivan 2d.
803. Lord, Thou art good H. Coward 3d.	80. Ditto E. H. Thorne 6d.	588. O lovely peace ... Handel 4d.
434. Lord, Thou hast A. Whiting 3d.	217. Ditto T. T. Trimnell 3d.	380. O perfect Love ... J. Barnby 3d.
1023. Lord, Thy children J. H. Maunder 3d.	877. O come, all ye faithful Tredaway 2d.	124. O praise God ... Clarke 6d.
830. Lord, we leave Thy ... Brahms 4d.	656. O come and behold Longhurst 4d.	355. Ditto Theodore Distin 3d.
1032. Lord, what is man W. Boyce 3d.	202. O come before ... G. C. Martin 6d.	429. Ditto ... G. C. Martin 2d.
274. Lord, what love have I ... Stegall 6d.	241. O come hither ... W. Jackson 3d.	40. Ditto ... T. T. Trimnell 4d.
267. Lord, who shall dwell ... Roberts 4d.	875. O come hither and hearken Crotch 3d.	479. O praise our God, ye people Boyce 4d.
835. Love divine, all love E. V. Hall 3d.	569. O come, let us sing M. B. Foster 3d.	782. Ditto Bühler 3d.
350. Magnify His Name G. C. Martin 4d.	12. O come near to the Cross Gounod 8d.	14. O praise the Lord J. Barnby 4d.
290. Make a joyful noise A. C. Mackenzie 6d.	1007. O come, Redeemer Marchant 3d.	178. Ditto John Goss 6d.
108. Make me a clean heart J. Barnby 3d.	11. O day of penitence ... Gounod 6d.	683. Ditto ... Handel 3d.
431. Ditto A. W. Batson 3d.	730. O death, where is thy A. Hollins 4d.	71. Ditto ... Ouseley 3d.
899. Make me, O Lord God J. Brahms 3d.	832. O everlasting Light John E. West 3d.	232. Ditto T. M. Pattison 3d.
436. Man goeth forth ... A. Carnall 3d.	16. O give thanks ... G. Elvey 3d.	358. Ditto W. G. Wood 4d.
694. Man that is born ... S. S. Wesley 2d.	42. Ditto ... John Goss 3d.	266. Ditto ... Zingarelli 8d.
1047. May my heart ... Dvorák 3d.	599. Ditto ... E. V. Hall 3d.	824. O pray for the peace ... W. Child 4d.
222. Me ye have bereaved C. Morales 3d.	596. Ditto ... H. J. King 3d.	166. Ditto E. H. Thorne 3d.
527. Mercy and truth are met J. Stainer 3d.	144. Ditto ... H. Purcell 6d.	837. O rest in the Lord Mendelssohn 2d.
211. Mine eyes look unto Thee H. Baker 3d.	17. Ditto ... William Rea 3d.	492. O Saving Victim Cruickshank 3d.
818. Miserere mei, Deus G. Allegri 4d.	520. Ditto ... B. Steane 3d.	51. Ditto (No. 2) Gounod 4d.
500. Ditto J. Barnby 3d.	816. Ditto E. A. Sydenham 4d.	486. Ditto ... Rossini 3d.
665. Ditto Novello 2d.	66. Ditto ... S. S. Wesley 3d.	970. O Saviour of the H. Moore 3d.
811. Ditto G. P. Da Palestrina 4d.	35. O God, have mercy J. B. Calkin 4d.	508. Ditto (Male) Roberts 2d.
518. Ditto E. Pettman 1d.	698. O God, my soul ... F. R. Greenish 3d.	551. O sing unto the Lord Cruickshank 4d.
464. Ditto J. Stainer 3d.	775. O God of my righteousness Greene 4d.	142. Ditto H. Purcell 6d.
765. Morn's roseate hues Chadwick 3d.	106. O God, the King of Glory H. Smart 4d.	1011. Ditto J. V. Roberts 3d.
726. Most blessed Jesus ... Brewer 3d.	141. O God, Thou art my God H. Purcell 3d.	1009. O Strength and Stay ... Barnby 3d.
1059. My Beloved is mine ... Robson 3d.	585. Ditto B. Luard-Selby 4d.	8. O taste and see ... John Goss 3d.
512. My beloved spake H. Purcell 6d.	679. Ditto F. Tozer 4d.	263. Ditto ... A. H. Mann 3d.
428. My God, I love Thee G. J. Bennett 3d.	34. O God, Thou art worthy A. Sullivan 4d.	87. O that I knew where I ... Bennett 3d.
617. My God, I thank Thee E. H. Lemare 3d.	188. O God, Thou hast H. Purcell 4d.	998. O that men would Hugh Blair 3d.
288. My God, look upon J. L. Hopkins 3d.	978. O God, wherefore art Thou Blow 3d.	772. Ditto J. B. McEwen 3d.
10. My God, my God Mendelssohn 6d.	418. O God, Who hast A. S. Baker 2d.	896. Ditto W. Wolstenholme 3d.
353. My heart is fixed W. Cruickshank 4d.	30. Ditto A. W. Batson 3d.	1048. O Thou that hearest R. W. Robson 3d.
564. My heart is inditing M. B. Foster 4d.	507. Ditto J. V. Roberts 2d.	806. O Thou the Central Orb Gibbons 3d.
460. My heart was glad A. Carnall 4d.	919. O God, Whose nature Dupuis 3d.	663. O Voice of the Beloved H. J. King 3d.
199. My hope is in the J. Stainer 6d.	999. O harken Thou ... E. Elgar 3d.	123. O where shall wisdom Boyce 6d.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

FOUNDED IN 1844.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH.

No. 916.—Vol. 60.

Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage.

JUNE 1, 1919.

Price 4d.; Postage 1½d.

Annual Subscription, Post-free, 5s.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.

(Season 1919—1920.)

There are now VACANCIES in the CHOIR for SOPRANOS, CONTRALTOS, TENORS, and BASSES. Applicants should have STRONG VOICES OF GOOD QUALITY, and should be prepared to pass an examination in SIGHT-READING. Address, The Secretary, Royal Choral Society, Royal Albert Hall, S.W. 7.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARLYBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W. 1

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: SIR A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

MIDSUMMER HALF-TERM begins June 9th. Entrance Examination, Wednesday, June 4th, at 3.

Fortnightly Concerts, June 14th and 28th, at 3.

Orchestral Concert, Queen's Hall, June 20th, at 3.

L.R.A.M. Syllabus is now ready.

A Junior Department is now open.

Prospectus can be obtained on application.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W. 7

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams—"Initiative, Southkens," Telephone—"1160, Western." London."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: PROFESSOR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc.

Honorary Secretary:

The MIDSUMMER HALF-TERM commences on Tuesday, June 18th, 1919.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age.

Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from The Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (Founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Sec.

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC,

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C. 4.

PRINCIPAL LANDON RONALD

HALF-TERM BEGINS TUESDAY, JUNE 10TH.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £7 17s. 6d. and £10 10s. per term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects, Harmony, Sight-Singing, and / or Orchestra.

Weekly Orchestral Practices.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local Schools Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Tel.: Cent. 4459.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM Secretary.

THE IMPERIAL CHOIR

10,000—CHORUS—10,000

OF

PEACE AND THANKSGIVING

AND

THE MASSED BANDS

OF THE

BRIGADE OF GUARDS

Consisting of the

1ST LIFE GUARDS, 2ND LIFE GUARDS, ROYAL HORSE GUARDS, GRENADIER GUARDS, COLDSTREAM GUARDS, SCOTS GUARDS, IRISH GUARDS, WELSH GUARDS.

(By permission of General G. P. T. FEILDING, C.M.G., C.B., D.S.O.)

GREAT CHORAL CELEBRATION

ON

EMPIRE DAY

MAY 24, 1919,

IN

HYDE PARK

AND TO CELEBRATE

THE PEACE DAY

when officially declared by

The War Cabinet Committee

ON

Peace Celebrations

CONDUCTOR:

DR. CHARLES HARRISS

FREE TO ALL.

GOD SAVE THE KING.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Lessons. Full Orchestral Class, Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Opera, Ensemble, Elocution, Choral, and Harmony, &c., Classes. Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

The Summer Orchestral Concert will take place in the Houldsworth Hall on July 5. The programme will include Edward German's New Orchestral Work, "Theme and Six Diversions" and Percy Pitt's "Serenade," Op. 39.

ADVANCE IN PRICES.

The prices of certain of the Novello publications are again advanced but the charges are still unaltered in the advertisement columns.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD OF THE R.A.M. AND R.C.M. FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Examinations in Theory held in March and November at all Centres. In Practical Subjects in March-April at all Centres, and in the London district and certain Provincial Centres in November-December also. Entries for the November-December Examinations close Wednesday, October 15th, 1919.

SCHOOL EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., October-November, March-April, and June-July. Entries for the October-November Examinations close Wednesday, October 8th, 1919.

Theory papers set in Examinations of past years (Local Centre or School) can be obtained on application. Price 6d. per set, per year, post-free.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at the R.A.M. or R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from—

JAMES MUIR, Secretary,

14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.-1.

Telegrams: "Associa, London."

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £30. Special fee for Organ Course, £20, and for Wind Instrument Course, £15.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE. SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor.. .. Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A.

SESSION 1918-1919.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 23 to December 21); WINTER TERM (January 20 to April 5); SUMMER TERM (April 7 to June 28).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

UNIVERSITY OF DURHAM.

Examinations for degrees in Music are held as follows: Matriculation, January, July, and October; First Mus. B., March and September; Mus. B. and Mus. D., September only.

For particulars, apply Secretary of Examinations, University Offices Durham. Copies of former Examination Papers, rs. 61. per set.

THE BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY.

Offices: 19, Berners Street, W.-1.
FOR THE FOSTERING OF BRITISH MUSIC.

Membership open to all music-lovers.

Patron: The Rt. Hon. A. J. BALFOUR.

President: THE LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.

Director: A. EAGLEFIELD HULL, Mus. Doc. Oxon.

Committee of Management:

Mr. Adrian C. Boulton
Mr. W. W. Cobbett
Mr. Alvin Langdon Coburn
Sir Edward E. Cooper
Mr. W. R. Davies
Mr. Edward J. Dent

Rev. E. H. Fellowes, Mus. Doc.
Col. W. Johnson Galloway
Mr. H. Cart de Lafontaine
Mrs. W. Lee Mathews
Mr. G. Bernard Shaw
Major Geoffrey Toye

W. R. DAVIES, Treasurer.

Particulars from the Acting-Secretary, A. Eaglefield Hull, Mus. Doc. Oxon., 19, Berners Street, W. 1.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC. GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W.-1

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION.

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.A.M.
DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.

G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Violin Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held at Scotch and Irish Centres in JUNE (last day of entry, May 15th), and in London and at the various Local Centres in the Provinces in JULY (last day of entry, June 14th).

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, may be had on application to the Secretary.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate (A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, July, and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A. Mus. L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L. Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship (F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented, either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date. For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.

Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 3870.

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC, LONDON

(Under the direction of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.)

INCORPORATED 1891.

158, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W.-11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc., Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.

Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.M.

Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.

Rev. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. Oxon.

Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects, including the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M., F.V.C.M., also for the Teachers' Professional Diploma in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and December.

Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition.

Local Secretaries required for towns not represented.

Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint; and all other Subjects connected with the culture of Music.

SPECIAL CINEMA COURSES in Orchestral, Piano, and Organ-Playing.

All communications to be addressed to The Secretary, Registered Office, 11, Burleigh Street, Strand, W.C. 2.

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH MUSICIANS.

Founded 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI.
Victoria, Cap. cxxxi., § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.D., DEAN OF DURHAM.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.), LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.), FELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London and at approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

Sept. 11th, 1919, 3.30 p.m.—Lecture, "The Ethics of Criticism," by Dr. Churchill Sibley.

Chairman, J. Haworth Roberts, Esq., M.A. Cantab.

COMPETITIONS, 1919.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best ANDANTE for the ORGAN, and a SHORT ANTHEM with Treble Solo.

BRONZE MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, DOUBLE CHANT, and KYRIE.

Organists (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Vacant Appointments.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of DR. LEWIS, Warden
158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

THE INCORPORATED LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

22, Princes St., Cavendish Square, W. 1.

Branches; Hampstead Conservatoire, N.W. 3, and

117, Seven Sisters Road, N. 7.

Principal: T. H. YORK-TROTTER, M.A., Mus. Doc. (Oxon.).

Rhythmic Method of Music Teaching. Special Classes for Teachers. Special Training in Music and Elocution. Private and Class Lessons in every subject by the best Teachers.

ORCHESTRAL AND CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES WEEKLY.

Frequent Students' Concerts. Examinations in Music and Elocution, July and December. Spong Rhythmic Dancing. For Prospectus and Examination Syllabus apply to the CENTRAL ACADEMY, 22, PRINCES STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W. 1.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, Blomfield Crescent, Paddington, W.-2

Founder and Director: MR. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, Concerts, &c. Telephone Paddington, 5990. Sec., E. B. GOLDING.

MR. CHARLES TREE.

"ELIJAH." "Small is the number of baritones capable of doing full justice to the great rôle. Mr. Tree rose to the full height of his opportunities, and created an intense and abiding impression."—Liverpool Daily Post.

"GOLDEN LEGEND." "He stands alone in the part of 'Lucifer.'"—Sheffield Independent.

RECITAL-LECTURES ON THE ART OF EASE IN SINGING.

HENRY NICHOLSON, A.R.C.O., says: "Your lecture is likely to assist, to a tremendous extent, the physical side of the art in this country. Since teaching on the lines of the book, I have won eight firsts, out of nine, with my choir."

MR. TREE'S BOOK ON VOICE-PRODUCTION. Publisher, Joseph Williams.

It is extraordinary how large a percentage of voices are almost in position. But absolutely perfect placing must be acquired to obtain good quality, to enunciate freely, and to keep the voice fresh and clear. Concerts, Lectures, &c. Address, 29, King's Road, Chelsea, S.W. 3.

WILLIAM WOLLER'S

TEACHERS' AND HOLIDAY COURSES.

"PRINCIPLES OF PIANOFORTE TECHNIQUE."

"PRACTICAL VOICE-PRODUCTION."

These Courses, specially designed for Teachers, Choirmasters, and all engaged in Vocal and Pianoforte Teaching, have been worked by Advanced Students and Professionals with unflinching success for upwards of eighteen years.

L. R. A. M. AND A. R. C. M.

DIPLOMAS FOR TEACHERS AND PERFORMERS

Solo Singing & Pianoforte Playing

Special Coaching for the above Examinations.

Letters to WILLIAM WOLLER,

14, Hanover Street, London, W. 1.

THE TECHNIQUER

(THE MASTER KEY TO TECHNIQUE.)

Patented in Great Britain and U.S.A. For all instrumentalists.

Copy of testimonial from the eminent violinist, SPENCER DYKE, Esq., F.R.A.M. Professor and Examiner R.A.M. "I consider the 'Techniquer' quite the best aid of modern times for a violinist. The claims you make for it are by no means exaggerated, and a few minutes' use before starting to play renders the muscles of the left hand as supple as an hour's practice would do. I have produced actual sound results with pupils whose hands are naturally stiff and whose fingers are incapable of stretching even with hard technical work. The points which appeal to me are (a) its splendid value for developing the stretch, suppleness and strength of the fingers, (b) the great saving of time and mental effort used in acquiring these qualities."

Send for particulars and list of testimonials. "Hand Development," (3rd edit.), 7d. post free. Secretary, Miss Cooper, 33, Orchard St., W. 1.

THE SINGER'S GUIDE. By Marie Witt.

Natural Voice-Training Method, with well-graded exercises. Novello & Co., 25. 6d. net. Mrs. Witt receives pupils, 5, Blomfield Road, Maida Vale, W. 9.

TE DEUM in F. MAGNIFICAT and NUNC DIMITTIS in F. 3d. each. By A. Toase, Novello & Co. Ltd.

CAPTAIN

CHARLES KNOWLES

Now demobilised after 4½ years' active service.

CAPTAIN

CHARLES KNOWLES

Available for Concerts, &c.

CAPTAIN

CHARLES KNOWLES

Address usual Agents, or

IBBS & TILLET, 19, HANOVER SQUARE, W. 1.

THE ART OF VOICE-TRAINING.

In response to a desire expressed by Members of the last Vacation Course,

MR. FIELD HYDE

(Lecturer at the R.A.M. &c., Author of "The Art of Voice-Training," "The Singing-Class Teacher," &c.)

WILL AGAIN CONDUCT A

HOLIDAY COURSE IN LIVERPOOL

FROM TUESDAY, JULY 29TH,

TO WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 6TH.

THE COURSE WILL INCLUDE, AMONGST OTHER THINGS,

1. A Complete Exposition of the ART OF VOICE-TRAINING.
2. Comparisons of the VARIOUS SYSTEMS which are founded on OPPOSED THEORIES.
3. PRACTICAL DEMONSTRATIONS in Voice-Training and the ART OF TEACHING.
4. CHOIR-TRAINING AND CONDUCTING.

MR. FIELD HYDE's method and the Course of Lecture-Demonstrations have had the recommendation of many of the best Authorities Musical and Medical, Cathedral and University Organists, Conductors, Principals and Professors of some of the largest Musical Institutions, the Editors of the chief Musical Journals, and of EVERY Teacher and Student who has attended the Course.

The following are selected from amongst hundreds of similar expressions of opinion:—

"The Course afforded me one of the MOST ENJOYABLE WEEKS I ever spent, the educational value of which I can never forget."

"I wish to say how much I enjoyed your Holiday Course. You score where others fail, in that you back up all you say or teach by demonstrations with your own or pupils' voices. I have attended a good many courses, but I can honestly say that yours beats them all, and easily too."

"You SOLVED, I might say, ALL MY DIFFICULTIES, and I don't regret having travelled the thousand miles, which I did, as the Course was worth it."

"Your hints on the ART OF TEACHING were alone worth coming my four hundred miles for."

"Your Course seems ideal in that it can be taken by Teachers using different methods from your own. They must INEVITABLY BE BETTER TEACHERS afterwards."

FOR FULL PARTICULARS, ADDRESS:—

MR. F. C. FIELD HYDE,

4, WIGMORE STUDIOS, 40, WIGMORE ST., LONDON, W. 1.

How to play difficult music with ease. . . .

Pianists who wish to play the music which affords the greatest enjoyment and relaxation—the compositions of the world's greatest musicians—and who are averse to the drudgery and wearisome keyboard practising in order to obtain the necessary technical proficiency, will find the "Brain to Keyboard" method of the greatest possible help.

Practice on this system, much of it away from the keyboard, is never wearisome, and after some weeks of it, spending quite a short time every day, a degree of technical proficiency is obtained which would be otherwise impossible, even after years of keyboard practising for several hours daily.

Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 10,000 successful students add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System
of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C.1.

Leamington & County Open Competitive Musical Festival.

JULY 3rd, 4th, 5th, 1919.

TOWN HALL, LEAMINGTON SPA.
SPECIAL COMPOSITION TEST.

Syllabus from Secretary, Mrs. Bernard Green, 175, Rugby Road, Leamington Spa.

Morecambe Musical Festival.

It is proposed to hold the

NEXT ANNUAL FESTIVAL

DURING THE WEEK ENDING MAY 8, 1920.

Syllabus will be ready August 1.

WM. C. FAWCETT, Secretary

WOLSELEY MUSICAL FESTIVAL

AT

WARD END PARK, BIRMINGHAM,

AUGUST 16, 1919.

Open Competitions will be held for:—

Male-Voice Choirs.

Tenor, Baritone, and Bass Solos.

Syllabus may be obtained from:—

Mr. T. ROCK, Secretary, W.A.C.,

Wolseley Works, Adderley Park, Birmingham.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MR. ERNEST A. FLAMBE (BASS).

Oratorio, Concerts, Receptions, &c. For vacant dates, address
67, Ashbourne Avenue, Mitcham Surrey.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS
(TENOR).

Address—164, Bank Buildings, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique: How it feels to Sing." 3s. 6d. each, post 3s. 10d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y.

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—Gentlewoman.

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—Eastern Morning News.

"Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald.

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury.

"Is an acknowledged authority."—Western Morning News.

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H. Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

MR. AMBROSE COVIELLO

Associate and Professor of the Royal Academy of Music, is now demobilised, and arranging times for Private Tuition in Pianoforte Playing and Teaching, at his studio (Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W. 1.

G. HUBI-NEWCORBE.

Author of "Whisper and I shall hear" (Piccolomini), "Within your heart" (Trotter), "Love's Devotion" (A. F. Tate), "Heart's Delight" (Tosti), "A Summer Song" (Guy d'Hardelot), "I heard a Sweet Song" (Dorothy Foster).

ADAPTATIONS AND TRANSLATIONS.

1,200 SONGS SOLD. 300 ADAPTATIONS.
STOCKTON HEATH, WARRINGTON.

Successes 33

MATRIC.

Obtain the
MUS. BAC.
and secure:

1. A better appointment.
2. Higher Fees for Tuition.

My Postal Course will enable you to Pass Matric in SIX MONTHS.

A. McALISTER, B.A., 209, Castle Boulevard, Nottingham.

MUSICAL REVISOR TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-FOUR YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING.

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W. 2.

. The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Major H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.B. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of F.L.C.M., L.Mus.L.C.M., A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916), and L.R.A.M. Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, "Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the College of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.
Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

DR. CROSSLEY.—SINGING, PIANO, COMPOSITION. Special coach for Degrees, &c. Lessons at Forsyth Bros., Deansgate, Manchester; also by Correspondence Terms, &c., Radcliffe, Manchester.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-19 .. 136 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-19 .. 33 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION: 362 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey. 'Phone, Burgh Heath, 346.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS. FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written and Works Scored for Orchestra. Address as above.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS in MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.-11

ENGAGEMENTS ACCEPTED AND POSTAL LESSONS given by Mr. C. T. HEAVISIDE, SOLO PIANIST, Cellist, &c., 27, Torwood Street Torquay.

ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (formerly Mangelsdorff), of the British Expeditionary Force, France. Pianist and Teacher of Pianoforte, Cole Bank School of Music, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

MR. T. W. HOLGATE, Professor of Singing, 99A, Queen's Gate, South Kensington, S.W.-7. Voice Trial and Advice free by appointment.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address, 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.-3

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Professor of Singing, R. A. Music. Private Pupils received at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.-1

DR. LEWIS, Mus. Doc., F.E.I.S., Warden, Incorporated Guild of Church Musicians, gives LESSONS, Personally or by Post, in HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT. 158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W.-11.

DR. LEWIS' TEXT-BOOKS:

- HARMONY. (2 vols.) 5s. each, net.
COUNTERPOINT. 5s. net.
DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT AND CANON. 5s. net.
FUGUE. 1s. 6d. net.
ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. 2s. 6d. net.
DEVELOPMENT OF ANGLICAN CHURCH MUSIC. 2s. net.
PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
MATERIAL OF MELODY. 3d. net.
IMPROVISATION. 1s. 6d. net.

The above, complete, will be forwarded (carriage paid) or £1 5s.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony, 'Form and Teaching,' &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes, L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd. West Kensington.

DR. H. H. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.-1.

L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING Exams. Special Correspondence course and personal tuition for the above examinations. Complete preparation. This course includes all the essentials of voice-production, and also hints on the classification and rendering of songs of all styles and periods. Write for particulars to Mr. W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), 22, Lucknow Avenue, Nottingham.

ALTO REQUIRED for Church near Sloane Square, Chelsea. £12. Light duties. Write, "A. H. B.," 63, Oakley Street, Chelsea, S.W. 3.

TENORS and BASSES REQUIRED for Church near Edgware Road Station. Small remuneration. Apply. "Organist," 145, Hilliard Road, Northwood.

TENOR and BASS REQUIRED. £12. City Church. Write Choirmaster, St. Andrew's Undershaft, Leadenhall Street, E.C. 3.

TENOR (Soloist) DESIRES APPOINTMENT. Reliable Reader; wide experience. Frederick Edwards, 15, Lorrimer Street, Kennington, S.E. 17.

KING'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.—There is a VACANCY in the Choir for a BASS CHORAL SCHOLAR. Choral Scholarships are tenable by those who intend to take a University Degree. The value of the Scholarship is £80 a year, with certain allowances. The competition will be held on Friday, June 13. Applications to be sent in not later than June 5. For further information apply to The Dean, King's College, Cambridge.

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—VACANCY for BASS LAY-CLERK. Salary, £95. Applications, on forms to be obtained from The Chapter Clerk, The Precinct, Rochester, should be made by June 12.

QUEENS' COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.—ORGAN SCHOLARSHIP VACANT. £60 a-year. Examination on June 13. Successful candidate required to reside in the College and read for a Degree. Entries to be sent to The Dean, who will supply details.

AN ELECTION to an ORGAN SCHOLARSHIP at Pembroke College, Cambridge, is about to be made. The Scholarship will be tenable for three years from October next, and will be of the value of not less than £60 per annum. Candidates are requested to send their applications, accompanied by testimonials, to the Dean of Pembroke College, before July 10. Preference will be given to a Public School man, and the successful candidate will be expected to read for a Degree.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Grange U. F. Church, Kilmarnock. Two-manual Pipe Organ. Salary, £80. Applications, with copies of testimonials, to be sent not later than 7th June, to Mr. John Muir, Session Clerk, 24, Lindsay Street, Kilmarnock.

CATHEDRAL ORGANIST willing to DEPUTISE the first two Sundays in August. Bournemouth or district. Apply "Oboe," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

MR. CHARLES S. KNIGHT (late Organist and Choirmaster of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Kensington Gore) is at liberty to DEPUTISE or to train Choirs, &c. Address Belle-vue, Mayfield.

HOLIDAYS.—Organist—Choirmaster, fully experienced and qualified, OPEN to take duty August. Seaside preferred. J. B., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER requires appointment in Midlands. Communicant; Recitalist. Good testimonials and references. "Organist," Hill Crest, Dockey, Stafford.

SINGER COMPANION.—Young Lady Requires Holiday Engagement 6 to 8 weeks (from end July) in musician's family. Assist light housework. Excellent needlewoman. H. M., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

YOUNG LADY seeks an ENGAGEMENT in Private Family or School as Pianoforte Teacher, or to play in Luncheon Room. Pupils coached for Exams.—All successes. Write Florence Tilling, A.L.C.M., 9, Moreton Place, Belgravia.

COMPOSERS' MSS. placed to best advantage by Experts who protect their clients' interests. Terms for stamp. Cambridge Music Agency, 8, Henrietta Street, W.C. 2.

PIANISTE wishes to meet Singer or Instrumentalist for practice and concerts. Evenings, E. S., 20, Lambourn Road, Clapham, S.W. 24.

MUSIC PUBLISHERS' CLEARING HOUSE.— Manager is required who has had good general experience with Music Sellers, and in Collecting Houses. Please apply, giving full particulars, as to age, experience, and salary required, to Mr. C. J. Dixey, Secretary, Music Publishers' Association, 27, Regent Street, S.W. 1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.— Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

STANDARDISED ORGANS (Pipe).—TWO-MANUALS and Pedals, as built to order, by Richardson's, specially to meet the requirements of the times. 100 to 500 guineas; in nine sizes. Entirely new introduction. These Organs are voiced and toned and adapted according to size, &c., of Church. Specifications and Estimates, W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

FOR SALE.—FIVE-OCTAVE REED AND PIPE ORGAN; 10 stops; fine walnut case. Seen by appointment, £50. Arnold, 36, Walford Road, Stoke Newington, London, N. 16.

WANTED, SECOND-HAND PIPE ORGAN
London Church. Send specification and price to "L. D.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

WANTED.—SECOND-HAND THREE-MANUAL ORGAN. Give specification, dimensions, price, and builder's name. Photo if possible. C. W. Strange, 79, Berkshire Gardens, Palmers Green, N. 22.

ORGAN, CLOUGH WARREN Detroit, 21 stops, swell, coupler, handsome walnut. Pre-war 100 Guineas, accept half. H., 36, Mall, Southgate, London, N. 14.

FOR SALE, UPRIGHT IRON GRAND PIANO (Brinsmead). £60. Also Organ Pedal Attachment and Stool (Norman & Beard). All in excellent condition. View by arrangement. G. B. E., 26, Totteridge Lane, Whetstone, N. 20.

OPOLLO or HOLT REED ORGAN WANTED. "M." 1, Damer Terrace, Chelsea, S.W. 10.

TECHNIQUER FOR SALE.—New this year. Cost (with booklet) 42s. 6d.; 35s., or offer. P., 56, Mayall Road, S.E. 24.

VIOLIN BY ANTONIUS AND HIERONYMUS AMATI, CREMONA, 1623. One of the finest known specimens in existence. Full tone of superb quality; labelled, Hill's guarantee. J. E. Lacy, Baden House, Felixstowe.

ORGANIST'S LIBRARY FOR SALE.—Modern, and in splendid condition; 112 Pieces, 47 Volumes. Particulars, J. W. Combe, 95, Brisbane Street, Greenock.

WANTED, HULLAH'S PART MUSIC. Sacred, Parker's Edition, the two volumes. Scores or Treble parts. Precentor, Ely Cathedral.

WANTED.—12 SECOND-HAND CLAPHAM ANTHEM BOOKS, by Clement Colman. Voice-parts only. J. H. Fisher, 7, Cumberland Road, Reading.

BARITONES & BASSES should buy "Strengthen, my Love, this Castle of my Heart" (Oakley). Compass, B to D. Price 1s. 6d. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W. 1.

PIANO PEDALS with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

"Orrisdale," 418, Chorley Old Road, Bolton.
DEAR SIRS,—I have opened many organs by various builders, but I wish to say this: That I have never played on a finer Pedal Board than the one which you make.

ARTHUR E. JONES, F.R.C.O., L.T.C.L.

Terms: Cash, or instalments of 20s. per month.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

Works—Hanley, Staffs.

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF HUDDERSFIELD

"MRS. SUNDERLAND" MUSICAL COMPETITIONS. PRIZES FOR ORIGINAL MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS SUITABLE FOR TEST PIECES.

Adjudicator—GRANVILLE BANTOCK, Esq., M.A.

Unaccompanied Choral Number for Mixed Voices (mainly in four parts)—1st prize £5 5s. and £5 towards cost of publication; 2nd prize £2 2s.

Pianoforte Solo (Senior Competition)—1st prize £5 5s. and £5 towards cost of publication; 2nd prize £2 2s.

Compositions to be forwarded to the Secretary not later than July 1st. For further particulars apply,

T. THORP, Secretary, Technical College, Huddersfield.

JUST PUBLISHED.

I WILL EXTOL MY GOD

ANTHEM FOR THANKSGIVING
AFTER WAR, OR GENERAL USE

COMPOSED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

PRICE THREEPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SPECIAL PEACE HYMN

WORDS BY

"TOUCHSTONE."

THE MUSIC BY

NORMAN B. HILL

(Late Organist of Tewkesbury Abbey).

PRICE TWOPENCE.

Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100.

- f* OUR enemies have fallen, and the sword
Of lust and tyranny is beaten down.
Joyful, the nations shout with one accord
And eager hands entwine the victor's crown.
pp Lord, grant that in this hour we may be still In everything obedient to Thy will.
- p* The night was long and dark, and hard the way,
But ever to the distant goal we pressed.
Weary and faint, sore stricken in the fray,
But never yet by craven fears distressed.
f We kept our living faith, undimmed and bright,
In Thee, our glorious Captain in the fight.
- mf* Thou gavest us one heart, one mind, one soul,
To battle nobly in a noble cause.
To keep the very heart of freedom whole
And still uphold the high and sacred laws
Of justice and of right on many a field,
Trusting in Thee, Who wert our sword and shield.
- ff* Grant us to-day a spirit calm and strong,
That in our hour of victory we may claim,
dim Who spent our dearest blood to right the wrong,
A triumph over every selfish aim.
pp Lord God of Hosts, that bid'st the conflict cease,
Grant us that we be worthy of Thy peace.

ALL PROFITS WILL BE USED FOR THE BENEFIT OF BLINDED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Copies may be obtained from

THE SECRETARY,

National Carol League,

National Institute for the Blind,

224, Great Portland Street, W. 1.

or from

MR. NORMAN B. HILL,

"Springfield," Tewkesbury.

Specimen copies gratis.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE LORD'S PRAYER

COMPOSED BY

BORTNIANSKY

Arranged for use in St. Margaret's, Westminster,

BY

EDWIN STEPHENSON.

Price 4d. net.

J. & W. CHESTER, 11 Great Marlborough Street, London, W. 1.

TRUST IN THE LORD.

ANTHEM FOR GENERAL USE

BY

JOSEPH WHITAKER.

Copies 3d. each, from Novello & Co., Ltd.

JUST PUBLISHED.

REFLECTIONS

FOR
PIANOFORTE SOLO

(AFTER VERSES FROM LONGFELLOW)

BY
PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALE ARABESQUE

FOR PIANOFORTE SOLOCOMPOSED BY
PERCY E. FLETCHER.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALE IMPROMPTU

FOR PIANOFORTE SOLOCOMPOSED BY
ALFRED HOLLINS.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S ELEMENTARY MUSIC MANUALS

No. 1.—PART-WRITING FOR BEGINNERS, by J. W. IVIMEV.
The Rules tabulated are for the guidance of beginners in the Art of Part-writing. Many of them change from rules to recommendations, when the student becomes more advanced. Bound in linen covers. Price 6d.

No. 2.—LESSONS IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Many elementary students of harmony can satisfactorily add parts to figured basses, but are unable to harmonize even simple melodies. This book gives minute instruction which any student can understand. Part I. Price 1s. 6d.

No. 6.—LESSONS IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Part II. Price 1s. 6d.

No. 7.—ADDITIONAL EXERCISES IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Price 6d.

No. 3.—AN ELEMENTARY MIXED-VOICE SIGHT-SINGING COURSE (Staff Notation through Tonic Sol-fa), by GEORGE LANE. The Exercises are written in the Treble and Bass Clefs, in order that the Book may be used by Male and Female voices in one class. Suitable for Evening Continuation Schools. Part I. Price 6d.

No. 4.—AN ELEMENTARY MIXED-VOICE SIGHT-SINGING COURSE (Staff Notation through Tonic Sol-fa), by GEORGE LANE. Part II. Price 6d.

No. 5.—HINTS TO YOUNG VIOLINISTS by C. EGERTON LOWE. Price 1s.

No. 8.—HINTS ON PIANOFORTE TEACHING (chiefly to Boys) by E. D. RENDALL. Price 1s. 6d.

No. 9.—SCHOOL CHOIR TRAINING, by MARGARET NICHOLLS. A Practical Course of Lessons on Voice Production for the Guidance of Teachers of Class Singing. Price 2s. (The Appendix, published separately: Hints on Part-Singing and Exercises, 2d.; Sol-fa, 2d.).

No. 10.—THE COMPOSITION OF SIMPLE MELODIES by ROBERT T. WHITE. Price 1s. 6d.

No. 11.—PHYSICAL EXERCISES IN THE INFANT SCHOOL, by MARGARET A. HUGHES. Price 4s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

QUARTET

FOR STRINGS

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR

(Op. 83)

Score, Price 5s.; Parts, 8s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SONATA

FOR

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

Op. 82.

Price Six Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

COMPOSITIONS

BY

B. J. DALE.

		s.	d.
SONATA IN D MINOR, for Pianoforte		5	0
SUITE, for Viola and Pianoforte		5	0
BEFORE THE PALING OF THE STARS, for Chorus and Orchestra		1	0
TWO SONGS FROM SHAKESPEARE (In the Press):
1. O MISTRESS MINE	.. Two Keys, each	2	0
2. COME AWAY, DEATH	.. Two Keys, each	2	0
IN BETHLEHEM, THAT NOBLE PLACE (Carol)		0	1
THE HOLY BIRTH (Carol)		0	1

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE ELEMENTS OF PIANOFORTE TECHNIQUE ARRANGED UPON A RHYTHMIC BASIS.

BY

DR. R. H. BELLAIRS.

Strongly recommended by the highest authorities.
More work can be done with Dr. Bellairs' Method than with any other.

Eliminates Mechanical Drudgery.
Interests the pupil from the very beginning.
List of companion works and testimonials on receipt of a post-card.

Price 2s. 6d. net. Of all Musicsellers.

ENOCH & SONS, LONDON.

Enoch House, 58, Great Marlborough Street, W.1.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: E. W. PEARCE, Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

June 4th, at 3 p.m.—Students' Concert.

June 9th.—Half-Term begins.

June 11th, at 3 p.m.—Violin and Pianoforte Recital by Messrs. Arthur Beckwith and Henry Geehl.

June 18th, at 3 p.m.—Students' Concert.

June 25th, at 3 p.m.—Recital by Mr. Alec Rowley, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.O., assisted vocally by Miss F. Hall.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Any number of subjects—from one to the Full Course—may be entered for. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student.

Approved complete Courses for the University of London Degrees in Music under recognised Teachers of the University.

Students are prepared for the Degrees in Music of the London and other Universities, the Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, Trinity College of Music, &c.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College students for other subjects.

All modern systems of Technique (whether for the Pianoforte, Violin, or other instrument) and of Vocal Training are taught by qualified professors.

The Class for Training Boys for Cathedral Choirs is held on Saturday mornings.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

Students not older than 16 years are admitted to the JUNIOR SCHOOL at reduced fees.

There are Thirty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music of the London University and are open only to Students who have satisfied the Matriculation requirements of that University.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, on application to the undersigned,

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1

HAROLD WALLIS

FIVE ALBUMS FOR

THE PIANOFORTE.

EACH CONTAINING 4 OR 5 SHORT PIECES.

Price each 2s. 6d. Net Cash.

"COUNTRY THOUGHTS."

"DECLINING DAY."

"EVENING SKETCHES."

"LYRIC SKETCHES."

"VISIONS."

"Harold Wallis is a young composer who has not been before the public long, but already the charm and fragrance of his little piano pieces are quickly winning their way into the hearts of those who have had the good fortune to come across them." :: :: ::

From a critical article by George Lowe.

"The books are replete with graceful numbers and will come as a boon to music teachers."—The Halifax Guardian.

ELKIN & CO. LTD.,

8 & 10, Beak Street, Regent St., London, W.

And of all Musicsellers in the United Kingdom and Colonies.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.

NEW

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

FOR

SMALL ORCHESTRA, PIANOFORTE, AND ORGAN AD LIB.

1s. 9d. each.

A Good-bye, Intermezzo	Huyts
Symphonie Pathétique, 1st and 2nd extract	Tschaikowsky
Zizica	Byford
My Dream	Bonheur
Valse Masquerade	Sullivan
Passing Serenade	Provincy
A Watteau Picture	Sturdy
Hearts and Flowers	Czibulka
Till Death	Mascheroni
For Remembrance	Byford
Napoli	Ison
Joy Minuet	Ison
Valse Nebula	Lewis
New Moving Picture Book for Pianoforte Solo ...	Ketélbey

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Publishers of the Five Great Pinno Methods:

BERINGER'S TUTOR. WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR. HENY'S TUTOR. WICKINS'S RAPID TUTOR. GRAHAM P. MOORE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES.

Publishers of Sevcik's Violin Method, Beringer's Daily Technical Studies. Macfarren's The Child's First Music Lesson.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A

WESTMINSTER PILGRIM

BY

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE

PRICE SIXTEEN SHILLINGS NET.

A Selected List of Press Notices will be found on page 320.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

JUNE 1, 1919.

OUR SEVENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY.

With this number the Musical Times completes its seventy-fifth year, having made its bow on June 1, 1844. Although the mere length of the period is a matter for reasonable pride, we find a much deeper satisfaction in reflecting on its importance in the musical history of this country. Since 1844 a definitely native school of composition has come into being, and is now in full and vigorous growth. When Parry, Mackenzie, Stanford, Cowen, and others who did so much to found this school, came on the scene, the Musical Times was already there. We may fairly claim that the efforts of these men and their contemporaries never lacked such support as we were able to give. As to their successors, the young men of to-day and to-morrow, our present pages contain ample evidence of sympathy and appreciation.

For a variety of reasons the best work of the Musical Times has been done in connection with popular choral music. Its sub-title, 'Singing-class Circular,' describes its chief original aim. Although this aim has since been very largely supplemented, it remains a cardinal point in the policy of the journal. The growth of choral music in Great Britain during the past half-century has been one of the most potent of artistic and social factors, and nothing gives us greater pleasure than the knowledge that the Musical Times has played no small part in so beneficial and democratic a movement.

Birthdays have their serious side, and we celebrate our seventy-fifth with a keen sense of the responsibilities attached to the position the journal now occupies. The variety of interests with which it deals makes our task both easier and more difficult. It is easy to avoid monotony when our field ranges from organ recitals to the Russian Ballet. It is not so easy to maintain a high level of interest, with the relative importance of the various topics nicely balanced. The Musical Times of to-day, therefore, has its special problems, and we ask our readers' forbearance if their particular interests are sometimes less fully considered than they would wish.

So, with greetings and thanks to our contributors and readers, we resume our innings,—seventy-five, not out, with the century well in view.

MODERN BRITISH COMPOSERS.

BY EDWIN EVANS.

IV.—EUGÈNE GOOSSENS.

In the preceding articles of this series we have dealt with the works of composers who, notwithstanding the development of strongly defined individuality, have maintained an intimate relation with the tradition bequeathed by the German classics. It is paradoxical, and yet in keeping with our attitude towards music, that the first composer we come to who displays some measure of independence of that tradition should not be of English extraction. Although Eugène Goossens in himself gives the impression of an English personality, it is scarcely to be expected that one should find in his music the characteristic traits which are not his by inheritance, but at the same time he is more free than the majority of English composers from those acquired characteristics which, in defiance of the laws of biology, English composers have transmitted through several generations. It is this circumstance that has caused some of his critics to impute an exotic flavour to his writing, for it has really come to this, that music which does not recall at least the later German classics has an exotic sound to English musical ears, and the irony is only perceived by the few who have in recent years adopted a wider outlook. Other critics again, are inclined to attribute Eugène Goossens's style to different paternities not less pronounced than the German influence in his contemporaries. The fact of the matter is that no composer has ever been free of debt to his predecessors, but that Goossens has shown an unusual rapidity in liquidating this debt. He has had his German phase which, as a consequence of the date at which he began to write, took a Straussian form. He has also learned from the French, as have indeed all composers of this generation. I would not completely absolve him from certain affinities with those later Russian developments to which one habitually pins the label of Stravinsky, though these elements are harder to trace because he does not follow the banner of extreme modernism. His whole musical personality would have to become transformed before one could class him with the vanguard of composers who are breaking up the effects of sound in response to the same impulse which led the painters, two or three generations ago, to break up the effects of light. In that sense he is neither a modern nor an impressionist, nor in fact anything else in -ist. It would be more logical to describe him as a neo-classic, that is to say a composer whose formal principles are classic but who works in a medium which is largely novel. This is the opposite of a post-classic, in whom both form and medium remain those established by classic usage.

Yet his medium is only relatively novel. In distinction from the three composers hitherto reviewed, whose musical thought, despite richness in expression, was severely diatonic, Goossens thinks chromatically. Others may clothe the diatonic structure in chromaticism, but in Goossens the structure itself is so essentially chromatic that he occasionally even has resource to the opposite device of introducing a diatonic element as a subsidiary. To put it another way, others build upon the tonal relations of a seven-note scale with five ornamental notes, whilst Goossens builds upon a scale of twelve notes, among which he gives special tonal importance to a selected group only when it happens to suit his purpose. This is not new, but sufficiently unfamiliar to retain a flavour of novelty as compared both with the diatonic composers and with those moderns who either reject all tonal systems, or, like Scriabin, endeavour to replace those in existence with others of their own invention. In fact, in music, as in other arts, the obvious development is less prevalent than the arbitrary, and the most genuine revolutionary is not the most subversive. One might even extend the argument beyond the confines of art, and find it still conclusive.

Purely technical considerations lie outside the scope of these articles. Yet there are some points raised by Goossens's method of writing which play an important part in determining the quality of his medium. In my lectures on 'The Foundations of Twentieth Century Music,' I pointed out the transition of music, first from an art of simple line to one of combined lines which produced colour, and then from this stage to one of combined colours. The device of colouring a melodic line with one sweep of the harmonic brush is the oldest in our music. The organum of Hucbald is in its essence naught else. But the laws of line-polyphony caused it to be rejected, and it is only in the last half-century or so that it has gradually returned to favour. Nowadays, however, it is no longer the simple combination of 5th and octave that serves to colour a melodic line, but practically any interval, or combination of intervals. Presently some theorist will lay down laws determining when a chord may follow each note of a melodic line, without internal change, and when it must be modified to suit the position in the scale. Possibly the principle will correspond to that which governs the two forms of answer to a fugal subject. Almost certainly it will be derived in the end from the difference between diatonic and chromatic structure. Meanwhile composers are, as always, making their own laws and defying the theorist to do his worst. Goossens naturally follows the chromatic method. He will repeat the same chord formation, without internal change, upon every note of the part, melodic or subsidiary, which he desires to colour in the harmonic tint he has selected. Owing to the deficiencies of our notation, which was invented for the convenience of diatonic writers, this brings about a profusion of accidentals and gives the music a complicated aspect. A little while ago I was experimenting with one of the many projects now current for basing our notation upon the chromatic scale of twelve notes. I transcribed into this notation one of Goossens's most complicated pages, and found that the notes proceeded everywhere in chord formation with the regularity of troops on a parade ground.

Goossens's music, in reality, is very simple. He rarely writes in more than two real parts, and one of these will constantly be found moving by step in contrary motion to the majority of the intervals in the other. Assume, then, that he colours one part with a chord repeated in parallels to each note, and the other with the greatest harmonic freedom, and the most complicated page clears up at once. Naturally all manner of accidental chord-formations may result, just as all manner of accidental intervals result from the playing of scales in contrary motion; but they have no more perplexing features in one case than in the other. Already now much of modern harmony is explained as the product of converging lines of chords. Goossens's converging lines are marshalled with the precision of some of the figures in our folk-dances, only each dancer is a chord:

'PROMENADE,' OP. 18, NO. 2

(From 'Kaleidoscope').

In all this there is nothing that makes him an ultra-modern composer. He is far too prim for that, though I am afraid not many critics will take that view of him. There is, however, in his method one factor which does actually correspond to a vital tendency in modern music. It is his fondness for elliptical writing. Practically all modern composers are striving, by diverse means, to eliminate the superfluous. Many elements which were hitherto regarded as indispensable on formal grounds are now omitted because, if the structure is sound, they may be taken for granted. A great deal of what startles the ear in modern harmony results from the fact that the composer no longer considers it necessary to give every step of a chord-progression, when the modern ear can be trusted to supply the intermediate chords for itself. In the case of Goossens the same applies to phrases. He will begin a phrase which, stated in full, ought to occupy a given number of bars, but when he has given so much of it that the rest may be safely assumed, he calmly assumes it as contained in the foregoing, and hastens to the conclusion with a leap which can disconcert only the inattentive listener. This impatience is very characteristic of the times we live in, and stamps Goossens as a man of to-day in a sense which seldom applies to musicians. It is this feature in his work which tends to become accentuated. It is very pronounced, for instance, in his Pianoforte Quintet, the last of his works to come before the public. In all probability it is in this direction that the most interesting developments are to be expected. It is not without its dangers, but happily his personality is too thoroughly musical for him to permit it to degenerate into any resemblance to the shoddy cleverness of the modern paragraphist. He has a remarkable sense of proportion. Small ideas have served him for small compositions, of which he has written many. Large ideas result in large works, with an increasing tendency to curtail their length. Never does a small idea result—as, alas! with so many composers—in a ponderous and lengthy composition. That alone is almost sufficient to mark him out as a musical personality of an unusual type.

Eugène Goossens was born May 26, 1893, in London, and is thus just twenty-six years of age. He is the son of a well-known conductor who, though belonging to a Bruges family, was born in France, but, as so often happens in this absorbent country of ours, the son inherits little of the foreign origin of his father, though there are fundamental traits in his character and general outlook upon life that betray Latin leanings. He studied first at the Bruges Conservatoire from 1903, then at the Liverpool College of Music in 1906, whence a scholarship brought him to the Royal College in London. There his masters were Sir Charles V. Stanford, Dr. Wood, M. Rivarde, and Mr. Dykes. He left with an Associateship and the Silver Medal of the Worshipful Company of Musicians. From 1911 to 1915 he was a member of Sir Henry Wood's orchestra, and from then onwards he has been associated with Sir Thomas Beecham in all his ventures, operatic and symphonic, as conductor. It is needless to inform English readers that he has secured in that capacity a degree of success that rarely befalls a man of his years.

There can be no doubt that his practical experience as a performer has played an important part in equipping him with the remarkable facility which is his chief asset both as composer and as conductor. This facility is such that it has caused misgivings among his friends. One remembers Rossini's rather bitter comment on the effect of facility upon his own career, when he had reached the age of retrospect. Happily, it is Sir Thomas Beecham's habit to keep his entourage so busy that they have little time to indulge any other facility than that of doing his work with credit to himself and to them. This has preserved Goossens from the cardinal sin of over-writing himself, or of writing elaborately and at length when he had nothing to say. Perhaps it is the origin of that sense of proportion to which reference was made above. A busy man is not inclined to waste time and effort upon the development of an idea that can be adequately expressed within the limits of one folio of manuscript paper.

I have also referred to his indebtedness to his immediate predecessors and contemporaries, but already his earliest works display so much originality that the rapidity with which he emancipated himself from such outside influences comes as no surprise. His first works were performed in 1912 and 1913. With the exception of a Miniature Phantasy for Stringed Orchestra these have remained unpublished. In the two Trios, a Suite for flute, violin, and harp, and 'Five Impressions of a Holiday,' for pianoforte, flute, and 'cello, first heard in 1915, there emerges a definite personality in outline, and from the Concert Study for Pianoforte, Op. 10, the same personality begins to acquire the deeper elements which inspire his present work. The imitative period, never very pronounced, ended not only unusually early, but with a remarkable suddenness. From then onwards his debt to others is negligible, and confined to the links which connect him with the main trend of present-day musical thought.

It is perhaps time to dwell upon the somewhat contradictory traits composing his musical physiognomy. It is probably due to his Latin associations that a vein of playful irony, at once sceptical and poetic, places him in direct opposition to the 'patheticism' of the 19th century. Those who were brought up upon the pathos of perpetual suspensions are apt to regard this as evidence of a lack of those emotional tendencies that find a too easy expression by such means. He is naturally disinclined to play upon the feelings of his listeners. He prefers to interest their intelligence. In that he is a true child of the age, for we are far from the days of Tennyson or Victor Hugo. The article on 'The Revolt against Idealism' which appeared in The Times 'Literary Supplement' of May 15, opens with a clever exposition of the new attitude, but the writer also says that our day 'remains ever ingenuous in the face of disillusion.' It is that ingenuousness which disciples of the romantic find so difficult, not merely to understand but to appreciate with justice to the underlying human quality. It is too often forgotten how much feeling may be disguised in playful ingenuity. It is not until some later works are reached, such as the concluding section of the 'cello Rhapsody, and portions of the recent Violin Sonata and Pianoforte Quintet, that the romanticists may find something to correct the impression of coldly glittering ingenuity they may have gathered from the 'Holiday Impressions.' Even then a subtle vein of good-natured irony remains as a wholesome corrective. Those who seek the real, complete Goossens in the amusing bibelots of the 'Kaleidoscope' are judging Cyranó by his wit alone—not that I would directly associate Goossens with that prince of stage gasconades. He is of another mettle, equally prone to pass off a sentiment with a jest, equally ready for some exquisite fooling, but without disdain for the tenderness which so constantly traps the ironist and the cynic. It is this tenderness that is now working its way to the surface. See, for example, the brief extract from the Phantasy Quartet, Op. 12:

PHANTASY QUARTET, OP. 12.

Andante espressivo.

The musical score is written for a string quartet. It features five systems of staves. The first system is marked mp (espress.). The second system is marked pp. The third system is marked dim.. The fourth system is marked f. The fifth system is marked &c.

This is, in fact, a critical period in Goossens's development as a tone-poet. It might conceivably bring about a relapse into the pathetic, though it is difficult to believe that his musical sense of humour will not keep him immune, or that his innate scepticism will not step in and curb whatever tendency to romanticism may be seeking expression. We have had enough and to spare of romantics. We have been starved of humour in music. We crave for what music hitherto has most lacked. However, there is little ground for anxiety. Just as Goossens has successfully withstood the dangers of superficial cleverness, after having toyed with them for a time, he will in all probability surmount those of sentiment, so soon as he has learned what they have to teach him.

With that we may pass on to a review of his works in detail.

(To be continued.)

IGOR STRAVINSKY.

BY LEIGH HENRY.

The triple performance of Stravinsky's 'Three Pieces for String Quartet' by the Philharmonic String Quartet this season seems to imply a certain obscurity, if not incomprehensibility, in that composer's style and technical methods. This, however, probably exists, not so much in Stravinsky's work itself, as in the conventional attitude of the musical public towards questions of musical form and technique. Concert-goers and musicians generally, as the result of the practices and consequent traditions of centuries of musical writing dominated by an arbitrary system—the diatonic—have become so habituated to the melodic construction and intervals, and the mathematical harmonic and harmonic-contrapuntal formulæ which that system has produced, that their hearing capacity has become almost entirely subservient to these peculiarities. They are scarcely able to listen to music in any other way than subjectively, that is, in relation to the associations which the diatonic system and traditions have created. To comprehend both the spirit and the musical content of Stravinsky's work, however, it is necessary to put all such pre-occupations aside, and approach his compositions objectively. His music marks a new direction in creative musical art, in which both the dogma and arbitrary premises of a fixed theoretical system, and the metaphysical significances of philosophic intent, play no part.

THE SPIRIT OF STRAVINSKY'S MUSIC.

The music of Stravinsky, in impulse and content, as in technique, pertains to the domain of the actual rather than to that of ideas. His works are the antithesis of metaphysical in essence. All Stravinsky's compositions, even where his music forms part of such imaginative and fantastic art-combinations as the ballet-themes with which it has been associated, always retain a pure musical value, and are informed by a consciousness essentially ego-centric in the best sense—that is, never tending towards abstraction, but always widely radiative in scope, and keenly alive to sensory influences and physical stimuli. It is this type of consciousness which renders all Stravinsky's music so intensely virile, and which gives to it an immediate human appeal. From the same source arises also its extraordinary variety and subtlety of content, its stimulative psychological suggestiveness and interest. For Stravinsky is one whose consciousness has attained the fullest modern development. The complexities of contemporary existence in no way confuse him, or cause him to withdraw from a close contact with actuality. They tend to tense-up and render more acute the workings of his intelligence, giving to him a subtlety and—more important—a clarity of perception arising from the more diversely reactive nature of modern sensibility. Through all the moods which he treats musically—as in certain of his songs and ballets—his objective mentality consistently asserts itself. No confusion, no emotional hysteria, is ever discernible in his work. He possesses a complete certitude with regard to the source, character, and range of his moods which keeps his music entirely free from redundancy, over-emphasis, or exaggeration. In Stravinsky's compositions nothing of the acuteness and poignancy of immediate sensations is avoided: nothing is toned-down, or artificially supplemented by sentiment or subjective feeling or associations. He states; he does not expound. Hence his music, while technically having certain characteristics in common with that of the French impressionists, is fundamentally different in character. The work of Debussy and his followers is, in varying degree, generally of a subjective order. The emotion and thought-content which it embodies, though more subtly realised and stated than in any earlier type of music, are yet more abstract in quality than that of Stravinsky. More definitely, it may be said that the impressionist consciousness, while essentially personal in its reactions to actuality, is of a more culturedly intellectual type. While refining their mood-expression to an exceptional degree of subtlety, it yet does so by a process of reflective thought which, by superimposing secondary associations, tempers the primary acuteness of the realisation, and thus renders the expressed significance somewhat remote, if not sentimental. With Stravinsky nothing is ever diluted with introspection or metaphysical speculation. Objective in his emotional responsiveness, his thought-direction, and his expression, he perceives all aspects of life that impinge upon his consciousness with such clarity and penetration of vision that he is aware of a myriad subtle facts undiscerned by his musical forerunners. Hence his work is full of that freshness, that sense of exquisite wonder which emanates from all virginal impressions of reality, a feeling of spiritual expansion and novel adventure. He presents us with an art not merely distinguished by an extraordinary technical development and an unprecedented richness of texture, but also a living expression of a spirit essentially pagan, but yet so informed by modern sensitiveness that it reaches far beyond the elemental and obviously physical feelings which constitute the common acceptance of paganism, to moods which, while plainly of tangible origin, are of extraordinary rarity, poignancy, and subtlety. His music approaches perhaps nearer to the conciseness and intensity of Chinese poetry than anything else, by reason of its intimacy and subtlety of expression, its vivid and direct delineation of imagery, its fine demonstration of the indissoluble association of all vital feeling with concrete actuality. Yet it has no archaism, no retrospective or sentimental romanticism. One is always aware of a highly-developed modern psychology beneath his music, a natural expansion of human sensory and mental capacity which has nothing to do with the tedious learning of scholastic culture, but which constitutes a new type of sensitive development produced by the new elements and group-force combinations creating the aspects and characteristics of to-day.

THE CHARACTERISTICS OF STRAVINSKY'S MUSICAL STYLE.

Such psychological influences have naturally had much to do with the production of Stravinsky's musical style. The immediate and delicate responsiveness of his sensibility has necessarily rendered it imperative for him to seek correspondingly immediate and subtle methods of expression. At the same time, and from the same cause, his work being informed by the multiple and interpenetratively complex moods of his modern consciousness, has gained in significance and richness of musical content a range hitherto unknown. For the keenness of Stravinsky's sensitive faculties has enabled him to discern tonal relationships more actual, more intrinsic to sound observed objectively, than any defined by the conventional academic theories of music. It is this objective perception and utilisation of such relationships which form the source of his harmonic originality and distinction. Stravinsky's methods of harmonic succession, correspondence, and contrast are based entirely upon an objective investigation of the aural values of sound, particularly with regard to the affinity of chords—i.e., the aural relationship or relativity of effect existing between any combination of sounds enunciated together as compared with any other given combination of sounds. The ordinary academic classifications of chords are negated by him; he realises that academic dogmas of harmony are all based on an arbitrary delimitation of the complete resources of musical sound and sound-combination to a diatonic system (which is in reality only one of many musical modes), and are only applicable to, and capable of, the necessarily limited range of expression obtainable from that system. He recognises in the term 'chord' any combination of sounds enunciated together, utilising as basis the harmonic series already so greatly exploited by Debussy, Ravel, and Scriabin, but more variedly and more exhaustively than they. The chord itself he treats as a mobile colour-quantity, without quibble concerning suspension or resolution, in this particular taking common stand with the now familiar methods of the French impressionists, as he also does in the method of block-form chord-succession which is so marked a characteristic of their style, and which he utilises frequently, though not so exclusively as they do. To a much more pronounced degree than Debussy, Ravel, De Severac, Roussel, Florent Schmitt, and kindred French composers, however, his form is dependent on what may (taking over a term from painting) be designated 'quantities'—i.e., sequential treatment of tonal colour-combinations on related or deliberately and acutely-contrasted harmonic planes, or polytonic treatment and chord-successions determined by tonal affinity, that is, chord-changes in which the root or other given interval shifts, leaving the other intervals common to both chords, that at first enunciated and its successor, as :

'The Nightingale,' Act 1, Air of the Kitchenmaid.

STRAVINSKY.

His modulating method is not subservient to any system of modal intervals or diatonic key-relationships. A real psychological insight is evident in other characteristics of his style. Realising, probably, that to-day no emotional state is simple, but that it almost invariably consists of psychological mood-complexes, owing to the multiplication of modern aspects and associations, the scope of his harmonic writing has been extended by Stravinsky in such a way that it has produced a correspondingly wide and multiple medium of expression. Thus the earlier writing on a pedal, so marked a characteristic of the neo-Russian group, has been developed by Stravinsky in such manner that it has been converted into a harmonic pedal-group, used singly on any degree of the harmonic parts, or, in a sense, polyphonically on many together. This, combined with the ordinary harmonic, sequential, or block-form movement of his harmonies above or below, produces entirely novel and highly-expressive and subtle harmonic effects, while at the same time removing the monotonous mood-crudity of the older method of utilisation, such as that to which Grieg was so greatly addicted, and giving to the pedal device a more diverse colour-value. In a similar way he also utilises a shifting pedal-note, as :

Deux Chansons, No. 2, 'La Lune Blanche.'

VERLAINE.

Similarly, Stravinsky combines harmonic chord and part-writing on different harmonic planes, but sounded simultaneously in combination, a method allied in essence to his use of the pedal-group. Similar also is his use of dual pedals, one static, in the older manner, the other moving by direct, unresolved chord-transposition to successive planes by steps of thirds, fourths, fifths, and other intervals, in the manner foreshadowed by Granville Bantock in the opening bars of his 'Sappho' Prelude :

'Sappho' Prelude.

BANTOCK.

'The Nightingale,' Act 3.

STRAVINSKY.

Beyond such devices and methods of effect, Stravinsky's writing is also interesting by reason of the direct, objective investigation of actual tonal values and relationships, apart from all theoretical premise which it evinces, and which is particularly manifest in his exploitation of hitherto neglected intervals, such as the second. By this exploitation of the more acute intervals his music has obtained a subtlety of tonal nuance which gives to his tonal colouring a breadth, richness, and mosaic diversity, a cumulative force of appeal and significance which renders it a more extremely accurate medium for mood-expression than any other yet discovered. From the purely musical point of view, the personal style of Stravinsky has inestimably enriched the store of musical resources, while at the same time maintaining in his music a simplicity and directness of treatment which obviates any vestige of pedantry or ostentation.

Characteristics emanating from a spirit identical with that underlying his harmonic—or, more accurately, tone-combination—methods and style of construction have been the source of Stravinsky's distinctive orchestral scoring and instrumental technique. Stravinsky differs from all preceding orchestral and chamber-music composers in that he treats his instruments as objectively as his tonal and harmonic effects—that is, not as harmonic or contrapuntal parts, but solely as expressive media, investigating by direct experiment the individual timbre and peculiar expressive qualities of each instrument, and seeking by particularised treatment to utilise the most extensive possible capacity of its characteristics, both independently and in combination with other instruments. Thus all Stravinsky's instrumentation is of an unparalleled plasticity, being unweighted by the mass-combinations of the conventional orchestral instrumental-group divisions. His orchestration, like his harmonic writing, is therefore distinguished by the independence and significance of its component factors, and thereby gains an extraordinary clarity of effect, being 'real part-writing' in the most accurate sense. Nor does Stravinsky so constitute his thematic writing as to obtain the old, conventional counterpoise and alternation of 'masculine' and 'feminine' feeling. His colouring is obtained by combining or contrasting the brilliant or delicate tonal capacity of the instruments selected and treated objectively with that purpose primarily in view. Hence in his scoring every instrument functions in the fullest and subtlest independent manner, the ensemble presenting a richness and interoperative diversity of content impossible to obtain by means of the older methods of mass or instrumental-group treatment. This fusion of constantly interactive streams of instrumental tone-colour also results in a remarkable general orchestral mobility and a capacity for graduating orchestral dynamics, emphasising and refining them by subtle degrees, which gives to Stravinsky's orchestral music a wide range of atmospheric quality without any suspicion of artifice, particularly in creating an impression of movement and actual imagery without any imitative devices. In considering this latter quality, however, Stravinsky's keen rhythmic sense is a powerful factor, transcending the function of securing only musical mobility. For in Stravinsky's rhythmic expression we obtain a unifying factor which, far more efficiently than the ordinary formal or structural divisions of academic composition, creates for his work its strong feeling of natural development, and consequently a striking individuality of personal form. Neglecting exclusive obedience to the detailed arithmetical sectioning which is known as 'time,' Stravinsky uses the rhythmic movement of sound as a delineative factor, co-ordinating by its means all the constituent thematic subtleties, the decorative musical figures and harmonic tints of which his music is made up, in much the same manner as Cezanne and other modern painters co-ordinate the component colours of their landscapes in broad, simple planes of colour-design. By this treatment, also, he imparts to his work a centrifugal force which permeates his music with a definite impulse and direction, and which combined with the subtlety and plasticity of his harmonic colouring and instrumentation, gives to even the most heavily-scored passages of his work a certain rarity, a peculiarly ethereal atmosphere. As Ernest Newman has said: 'Instruments are used in a way without precedent; all sorts of new colour-effects are drawn from them; in particular, Stravinsky excels in the suggestion of rapid movement and of light.'

With regard to the general structural form of Stravinsky's compositions but little analysis is necessary. The composer has given his purpose in the following words:

I want neither to suggest situations or emotions, but simply to manifest, to express them. I think there is in what are called 'Impressionist' methods a certain amount of hypocrisy, or at least a tendency towards vagueness or ambiguity. That I shun above all things, and that perhaps is the reason why my methods differ as much from those of the impressionists as they differ from academic conventional methods. Though I find it extremely hard to do so, I always aim at straightforward expression in its simplest form. I have no use for working-out in dramatic or lyric music. The one essential is to feel and to convey one's feelings.

Hence it is not surprising to find that synthesis and elision are marked characteristics of Stravinsky's musical forms. By reason of this they have an unique modern interest and significance. For with the speeding-up of modern existence the thought and expression of the modern being have undergone a corresponding concentration and acceleration. We have been forced to become brisker, more direct, practical, and natural than formerly. New necessities have brought about the 'scrapping' of many old methods and machineries, and, as a natural consequence, a scrapping of many theories and ideas. Stravinsky has realised the need for this in music. He is not content to 'carry on' with obsolete machinery. Directness and the elimination of everything superfluous, these are the keys to his musical form. This tendency towards condensation is, paradoxical though it may seem, the cause of his music being so rich, and, in a manner of speaking, so decorative, in harmonic colouring. There are never any bald or tedious moments in Stravinsky's music. His work is so concise in structural dimensions that every phrase, note, and chord necessarily has an acutened and carefully-selected value. Not a vestige of prolixity is discernible. He has always something clearly apprehended to state in equivalent terms, and he realises that to inflate or prolong it in accordance with the formulæ of academic musical development would probably bring about an obscuring of its direct presentation. His work, after the often unbearably redundant artifice of the symphonic form and the over-elaboration of musical architectonics such as one finds in the work of Wagner, Brahms, and other Teutonic composers, comes like a breath of clear fresh air, with nothing of the fustiness of the study about it. His music is a clear expression of the modern requirement of quality in preference to quantity. This in itself is a manifestation of the real mental value of Stravinsky, and separates him at once from all hint of vulgarity. For, as William James says:

When two minds of a high order, interested in kindred subjects, come together, their conversation is chiefly remarkable for the summariness of allusions and the rapidity of its transitions. . . . Some persons have a real mania for completeness, they must express every step. They are the most intolerable of companions, and although their mental energy may in its way be great, they always strike us as weak and second-rate. In short, the essence of plebeianism, that which separates vulgarity from aristocracy, is perhaps less a defect than an excess, the constant need to animadvert upon matters which for the aristocratic temperament do not exist.

Here we have the clue to the real distinction which all Stravinsky's music possesses. Compared with the harmonic and thematic content of the work of earlier composers, the difference apparent in Stravinsky's work may be roughly said to be analogous to the difference existing between mural decoration as exemplified in the elaboration of a given form-motive, and the decorative quality of a drawing by Hokusai, or a print by Harunobu or Hiroshige, and kindred Japanese masters, work in which the definite decorative quality of the particular is preserved, and given expressive value by combination with similar particulars treated in a balance which is dependent upon quantities and relative proportions, not subordinate to any abstract or pre-fixed formula or theory, but consequent upon the nature of the images and mood-essentials by which they are evolved and expressed.

These particulars briefly comprise the characteristics of Stravinsky's musical style, a style which grows more and more definite with every step he takes away from conventional musical systems. He has methods, but no mannerisms—unless, indeed, an impatience with everything prolix, a desire to eliminate all abstractly architectonic detail of musical construction, and a persistent striving towards brevity, conciseness, and directness of musical expression, achieved by a ruthless repudiation of everything liable to obscure the essential purport of his conceptions, may be termed such. All Stravinsky's musical characteristics are consequent upon his objective consciousness, which is concerned only with vital actualities and their adequate and precise incorporation into musical expression. This has led him to devote himself to concrete experimental research, the result of which has given him tangible justification and a solid basis for his certitude and independence. It enables him to apprehend and state without need of the old type of laboured self-explanation and rhetorical working-out of those who went before him. For Stravinsky's mind has been cultivated in a real sense, cultivated in the sense indicated by William James: 'The first effect on the mind of growing cultivated is that processes once multiple get to be performed by a single act. Lazarus has called this the progressive "condensation" of thought.' This quality of condensation Stravinsky possesses in a highly-developed degree, and it gives to his music at once its swift movement and equally swift appeal, its inner variety of content comprised within great, illuminative flashes of expression. His musical characteristics are the expression of a vitality of spirit developed by energetic mentality and acute physical consciousness. Those who seek to base musical dogma on his work will have but little material to work with. The key to the significance of Stravinsky's musical innovations is not to be found between the leaves of the manuals of musical pedants: it is in the tendency of all virile modern thinking, such as is excellently expressed in the words of Remy de Gourmont: "Flecte ramos, arbor alta."—We want fewer models and more of the free air of life which you hide from us.'

On May 13, at Æolian Hall, Mr. Cecil Sharp lectured on the people of the Appalachians, their manners, their conditions, and their folk-songs. He said that certain districts of this wide region were inhabited by the direct and unmixed descendants of the original English colonists, and that as a self-supporting pastoral community in a district untouched by big transport routes the inhabitants had kept aloof from modern progress and influences. For this reason their traditional music was precisely that which their ancestors had brought from England, and included probably the purest form of English folk-song.

Interludes.

In the Musical Times for February, when making my timid début as a heretic in regard to some departments of Beethoven's work, I remarked that I could see 'the devout Beethovenite looking round for a missile.' The devotees have lately showered so many verbal bricks on me that, at the risk of being tedious, I must endeavour to hand some of them back. So far as I am concerned, the subject then drops.

First, a word or two in reply to Dr. Froggatt. When I said that I had never yet seen a claim put forward that Beethoven was other than a failure as a song-composer, I stated a fact. A hundred quotations cannot alter that fact, though they might instruct me and modify my opinion. The extracts from Parry and Ritter do neither. Failure of course is a comparative term, and success in a smaller man may be failure in Beethoven. More than two or three swallows are needed to make a summer, and Parry's remark that 'Beethoven several times actually attained the ideal of a modern song' is not sufficient to establish Beethoven as a song-composer in the sense that Schubert, Schumann, Brahms, Wolf, Grieg, Parry, Stanford, and a good many others, are song-composers. Ritter is more positive, but we must remember that his history was written about half-a-century ago, and the intervening years have seen a good deal of winnowing, especially so far as songs are concerned. Dr. Froggatt is pained and shocked at my daring to express an opinion without having read Parry's 'Summary' and Ritter's 'History.' I cheerfully plead guilty.

My opinion on the songs, right or wrong, is my own. It is based on an examination of the music, and is not an echo of somebody else's judgment. It would be an excellent thing for our art if we pronounced no opinions that were not first-hand. We should make plenty of mistakes, but on the whole they would be more than balanced by the scrapping of a vast pile of old and middle-aged music that owes its vogue to our lazy habit of opening our mouth and shutting our eyes, and taking what the German classics send us. Meanwhile, my opinion is backed up by the hard fact that although Beethoven's orchestral, chamber, and pianoforte works are constantly performed, his songs are rarely heard. I am writing this on Saturday, May 10, and in order to verify this, I turn to the front page of the Daily Telegraph of that date. What do I find? The page contains six programmes of vocal recitals, by Mesdames D'Alvarez, Muriel Foster, Melba, Astra Desmond, Megan Foster, and Mr. Kingsley Lark, but not one song by Beethoven is down for performance. The page gives also the programmes of the six concerts of the Beethoven Festival at Queen's Hall. If Beethoven was a successful song composer how is it that not a single example of his work in this field is included in the scheme? I turn also to the R.A.M. Syllabus for the current year, and note (without surprise) that among the thirty-eight songs set for the L.R.A.M. candidates there are none by Beethoven. Our academical institutions are not as a rule lacking in loyalty to the classics, so the omission is significant. Facts, like women, are stubborn things. Here are some that are far more convincing than anything Herr Ritter said fifty years ago. But even Beethovenites have misgivings, and such an enthusiast as Mr. Pitcher said in his letter in last month's Musical Times that 'all the world knows that Beethoven was no song composer.'

Not quite 'all the world,' as is proved by the letter signed 'Ein Fest Burg.' My correspondent's first point is not well made, I think. He says that a condemnation of Beethoven's songs is a 'revival of an old cry, and seems to indicate a return of the mental inertia of the mid-Victorian era.' But the mid-Victorian era was just the one most capable of appreciating the sentiment and style of the songs. If they were not sung then, they must have failed even more completely than I had imagined. And if 'Ein Fest Burg' thinks they are too difficult to be popular, I can only suggest that he knows very little of the type of modern song in favour at recitals. By the side of these, Beethoven's are child's play for both singer and accompanist.

'Ein Fest Burg' asks for a critical analysis of a dozen selected songs. Such an analysis would need more space than can be spared, and would be of little interest to the average reader. A man's work in a particular field must be judged as a whole. When a composer of Beethoven's standing writes seventy songs, we expect to find more than a dozen able to bear strict scrutiny. If I am to give a reason for the faith—or unfaith—that is in me, I must be allowed to say wherein the works in bulk seem to me to fail. Instead of examining the dozen mentioned by 'Ein Fest Burg,' I have waded through the seventy, doing my best to put the composer's name and fame on one side, and so judging the music on its merits. The examination has confirmed the poor impression the songs made on me twenty-five years ago, when, full of expectation, I bought my first volume. In those days I was as ardent a young Beethovenite as even 'Ein Fest Burg' could wish to meet, and well do I remember my disappointment. On taking up the works afresh, the first thing that strikes me is the extraordinarily uninteresting vocal part. You may blame some modern composers for being unvocal, or unpleasing, but you cannot as a rule charge them with writing uninteresting voice parts. They generally present some kind of problem for the singer to get over, and often a vocal line that appears to be unsatisfactory when sung alone becomes charged with significance when it is taken in conjunction with its accompaniment. I say 'accompaniment' for lack of a better word. Most of the best songs are duets for voice and pianoforte. The singer who is something more than a mere voice finds interest and scope not only in cantabile. The voice-part of most of the songs before me lacks interest because it lacks enterprise. Far too often it deals with groups of repeated notes, with no compensating interest in the pianoforte part. Here is an example from 'An die Hoffnung,' one of the songs mentioned by 'Ein Fest Burg':

EX. 1.

Then bid him at the close of earth - ly dream-ing, Be - hold the light up - on him streaming, For through the clouds there shines . . the sun,

An even worse example occurs in the 'Liederkreis'—usually regarded as the composer's best work as a song-writer. In No. 2 we find the whole of the second verse—thirteen bars of six-eight—set to a monotone, while the pianoforte plays a tame series of tonic and dominant chords. Beethoven may have meant something subtle, but the effect is miserably weak.

Too often the melodies are constructed on arpeggios of common chords. Here is an extract from 'Neue Liebe, neue Leben,' Op. 75, No. 2:

EX. 2. Vivace, ma non troppo.

Say, my heart, what means this feel - ing? Whence has Vivace, ma non troppo.
come this bur - den sore! Strange the

Here, in addition to a square and inexpressive vocal line, we have an accompanimental scheme which in a smaller man would be called a 'wretched tum-tum.' The writing for the keyboard usually contains far too much passage-work of a purely conventional type. Opening a volume almost at random, I find in 'Wonne der Wehmuth'—another of 'Ein Fest Burg's' choices—this opening:

Ex. 3. Andante espressivo.

Dry them not, dry them not,

Andante espressivo.

which strikes me as a not very convincing setting of 'Dry them not, Tears of a love everlasting.' But Beethoven was so pleased with the little scale (perhaps it represents the tears) that he ends the song thus :

Ex. 4.

Dry them not !

'Ein Fest Burg' evidently likes this sort of music. Most of us have no use for it. The curious thing is that much of this feeble writing dates from Beethoven's best period. It almost seems as if, when composing songs, he considered any scrap of passage-work or series of notes good enough. Often such passages would to some extent justify themselves if they were laid out with more regard for sonority. But the keyboard writing is generally of the most elementary description. Even the favourite 'Adelaide' is spoilt by such complacencies as :

Ex. 5.

&c.

with the right hand doubling the voice part, while the left 'tum-tums.'

It would be easy to fill several pages of this journal with similar examples of writing worthy of a Hummel or a Hiller, but not of a Beethoven.

It is an uncongenial task, this dwelling on the weaknesses in a great man's work, so I will merely draw attention to two other points. First, in far too many cases Beethoven is content to make the same music do duty for several verses, regardless of its fitness. This was chiefly due to the fact that the bulk of his songs were of a type just then becoming popular in Germany—a kind of half-way house between the folk-song and the modern song. Hiller and other third-rate men turned out such things by the score. A straightforward tune, with some of the stock phrases of folk-song, and none of its rhythmical and modal peculiarities—such was the melody. The accompaniment was modest and unconventional, and one setting did duty for any number of verses. It is odd that the man who did so much to develop instrumental forms should have done so little for the song. He rarely seemed to realise the importance of making the music faithfully reflect the sentiment of the verse. His easygoing methods in this respect are in marked contrast with the vivid touches in Bach's vocal writing, especially in the cantata solos. Note Bach's habit of seizing on such salient words as 'death,' 'bitter,' 'sighs,' 'tears,' 'trust,' 'joy,' 'sleep,' and increasing their significance by some striking harmonic or melodic feature. Compare also his accompaniments with those of Beethoven, and you will see that the older music is by far the more modern.

Another irritating habit of Beethoven's is that of repeating the last line of a verse, chiefly in order to round off his musical form. The result is usually an anti-climax.

But after all the chief reason for Beethoven's failure as a song-writer lay in the fact that his genius was dramatic and epic rather than lyrical. Moreover, the peculiar excellence of Beethoven—his skill in development—is one that finds little scope in the smaller vocal forms. Many of the insignificant phrases in his songs, had they occurred in a big instrumental work, would no doubt have been developed with splendid effect. In a form where the confines are narrow, and spontaneity is of vital importance, Beethoven could not spread himself. The modern song was established years later by a composer whose equipment was on opposite lines. Schubert had little skill in development, but he had what Beethoven lacked—an inexhaustible fund of lyrical invention.

'Ein Fest Burg's' request for a list of songs as good as his dozen selections from Beethoven is hardly to be taken seriously. If he really cannot find scores of much finer examples by Schubert, Schumann, Brahms, Wolf, Dvorák, Grieg, Strauss, Debussy, Mallinson, Parry, Stanford, Ireland, Frank Bridge, Martin Shaw, Moussorgsky, Cui, Tchaikovsky, and Charles Wood—the list could be made much longer—I fear he is beyond any help that I can give him. Even Purcell can furnish a handful fresher and more vital than any of Beethoven's. Give me 'When I am laid in earth,' 'The knotting song,' 'Nymphs and Shepherds,' 'Fairest isle,' 'I attempt from love's sickness to fly,' 'What shall I do to show how much I love her,' 'Arise, ye subterranean winds,' 'O let me weep,' 'Muses, bring your roses hither,' 'Come, if you dare,' and a few others, and Dr. Froggatt and 'Ein Fest Burg' may have the seventy of Beethoven's for keeps.

'Ein Fest Burg' is even less convincing when he takes me to task on the orchestral question. The songs are a matter of taste. If 'Ein Fest Burg' likes the kind of music I have quoted, that is evidently the kind of thing he likes. Far be it from me to grudge him such simple pleasures. His taste is that of few to-day, but it is his own. I will assume that he has his reasons for liking the songs, as I have mine for disliking them. Beyond that point the matter is not arguable. But when he comes to a comparison between the modern orchestra and that of Beethoven's day, he is dealing with facts. His condemnation of the 'vulgarity' of the modern orchestra may be left to speak for itself. He gives himself away so completely that there is nothing left for me to do.

Mr. Cooper's letter calls for few words. I need only point out that re-scoring would not necessarily lead to the music being noisy. As a matter of fact, the result would sometimes be the reverse. For example, the passage I quoted from the Finale of the seventh Symphony, as scored by Beethoven, is decidedly noisy, for the reasons I gave. The suggested re-scoring would be much less strident. The expression 'a jolly good row' was applied to a section which Beethoven marked fff. If he didn't want tremendous power, why did he employ such an unusual direction? Mr. Cooper, like 'Ein fest Burg,' seems to think that 'power' and 'vulgarity' are synonyms.

On the whole, if my criticisms of Beethoven's songs and my suggestions as to the re-scoring of certain passages in his orchestral works can call forth no more powerful arguments than those in the correspondence so far received, I go on my heretical way hardened and unrepentant.

FESTE.

P.S.—Bearing in mind the indignation Dr. Froggatt and others expressed at my suggestion that the Scherzi of Beethoven's Symphonies should sometimes be played as detached works, I am interested in the following item in the programme of one of the Beethoven Festival concerts:

PIANOFORTE SOLOS.

- (a) Rondo in G major (Op. 51, No. 2) } .. Beethoven
(b) Scherzo from Sonata (Op. 31, No. 3) }
LAMOND.

What will the purists say?

THE RULES OF COMBINED COUNTERPOINT.

BY GEORGE J. BENNETT.

(Concluded from May number, page 218.)

3.—A CROTCHET AT THE END OF THE BAR MAY NOT BE TIED TO A CROTCHET IN THE FOLLOWING BAR.

This is also really a syncopated minim, and was so written in the early music. Early English composers were partial to it, but the Italian School used it less frequently than the syncopation already dealt with in the previous section.

EX. 45. PALESTRINA.
Jesu Nostra Redemptio.

EX. 46. DI LASSO. Quinti Toni.

EX. 47. DI LASSO.
Pauper sum ego.

EX. 48. GABRIELLI. Missa Brevis. EX. 49.

EX. 50. ANERIO.

EX. 51. MARENZIO. Magnificat.

EX. 52. TALLIS.

'I call and cry.'

EX. 53. BYRD (in D minor).

EX. 54. GIBBONS (in F).

EX. 55. GIBBONS.

'Almighty and everlasting God.'

See also Exx. 13 and 40.

Albrechtsberger allowed the crotchet tied to a crotchet even in Simple Counterpoint. Later theorists wisely discouraged its use in Simple Counterpoint; but, as in other cases, it is only in recent years that we find theorists forbidding its use under all circumstances.

In combining two or more florid parts its occasional use may give a certain elasticity to the part, and avoid a monotony likely to ensue from a too frequent repetition of the same rhythmic figure. It is also useful when combining the 5th and 2nd Species.

4.—A CHANGE OF HARMONY MAY NOT BE TAKEN ON THE 2ND OR 4TH CROTCHET OF THE BAR.

The fallacy of so hard-and-fast a rule has been already exposed by Dr. Kitson (see Musical Times, August, 1914). If teachers were content to say that a change of harmony on the 2nd or 4th crotchet (especially on the 2nd) should be employed very sparingly, as the effect may be disturbing, it would be sufficient.

It is less likely to be disturbing if all the parts move by 2nd, as in Ex. 56; but it would be ridiculous to argue on that account that there is no change of harmony within the bar. (See also Bridge's 'Counterpoint,' Ex. 98a, bar 7, where there is clearly a change of harmony at the last crotchet.)

The same remark applies to Ex. 57. At the 4th crotchet there is a $\frac{6}{4}$ on F, with an accented passing-note in the bass, the tenor sustaining a pedal note.

Further instances, in some of which the change of harmony is not in the nature of a passing chord, may be found in Exx. 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, 42, 49 and 50.

EX. 56.

VITTORIA.

Quinti Toni.

EX. 57.

PALESTRINA. Sine Nomine.

EX. 58.

DI LASSO.

Laudate Dominum.

5.—OF THE CHANGING FIGURES REPRESENTED BY THE NOTES C D B C, C B D C, ONLY THE FIRST IS PERMISSIBLE.

Neither of these figures was employed by composers of the 16th century. If from reasons of utility one form is permitted, there seems to be no valid reason for excluding the other.

It is a pity that no use is made of the far more melodious Nota Cambiata, as employed with such striking effect by Palestrina and Gibbons. Pedants might cavil at the leap from the 7th in Ex. 59, even though it has the authority of the above-named masters; but there could hardly be any objection to its use over a $\frac{6}{4}$ chord, as in Ex. 60:

EX. 59.

EX. 60.

6.—NO PART MAY HAVE CROTCHET ARPEGGIO MOVEMENT THROUGHOUT THE BAR.

Fux, Albrechtsberger, and Cherubini made use of crotchet arpeggio movement throughout the bar, even in Simple Counterpoint.

Examples of its employment in Combined Counterpoint may be found in nearly every text-book on the subject, both ancient and modern.

Only recently has objection been taken to it. This objection is probably founded on the fact that arpeggio movement is contrary to the spirit of 16th century Counterpoint. If that is the case, in order to be consistent we should go still further, and exclude all such passages as the following.

Palestrina's extended crotchet movement consisted of scale-passages, perhaps varied by the leap of a 3rd. Other masters used the leap with rather more freedom, but two consecutive leaps in the same direction are practically non-existent in the music of that period:

EX. 61.

This inconsistency draws attention to the fact that Strict Counterpoint as now practised is to some extent in the nature of a compromise, and so it must remain unless we are prepared to admit everything characteristic of the 16th century, such as bare consecutive 4ths between upper moving parts, and consecutive 5ths separated only by a suspension, and exclude such things as the changing figures of modern type referred to in Section 5.

But, as our Counterpoint is after all founded mainly on 16th century practices, it seems absurd to prohibit anything which the composers of that period employed with good effect, such as the syncopated minim, and the dissonance approached by leap in one part.

Surely musical effect should have some consideration, even in Strict Counterpoint!

Our system becomes more and more clogged up with arbitrary restrictions adopted by teachers indiscriminately from various sources. The student's task has been aptly described as that of having to make bricks without straw.

The memorandum issued some time ago by the Union of Graduates has proved of great value in standardising the rules of Simple Counterpoint. It is devoutly to be wished that the same body of musicians could be induced to deal in a similarly broad-minded manner with Combined Counterpoint.

Occasional Notes.

When, in 1903, Sir Ernest Palmer THE PATRON'S founded the Patron's Fund with a FUND: generous gift of £27,000 it looked A NEW as if the way of the young and DEVELOPMENT. struggling composer was made plain. But a few years' trial of the original scheme has shown the concert side of the Fund to be of little use. Two concerts a year brought far too few works to a hearing. Moreover, a programme consisting entirely of novelties, chiefly by more or less unknown composers, never has been and never will be attractive to the general public. The new plan is certain to be of great value to composer and public. Instead of two concerts a year the committee proposes to hold ten public rehearsals. Many more works will thus be heard, composers will have the opportunity of discovering how far their effects 'come off' or merely remain on paper, and the public will be given a fine opportunity of familiarising itself with orchestral and other details that must inevitably to a great extent escape its notice at a concert performance. For the first year the rehearsals will be confined to orchestral works. But Dr. Allen and the committee are not overlooking the claims of choral writers. It is hoped that later an efficient choir, able to read at sight, will take its place with the orchestra in the trial of new works. The first ten rehearsals will be held at the R.A.M. and R.C.M., but operations will if possible be extended to such provincial centres as are able to provide a first-class orchestra. Composers are to be invited to conduct their own works, but (an excellent proviso) they must satisfy the authorities that they have sufficient ability in the direction of an orchestra. We shall be surprised if the rehearsals do not discover some promising conductors as well as composers. The new working of the Fund will be watched with the greatest interest. So broadly conceived and practical a scheme certainly deserves success.

The admission of the public to rehearsals is such a valuable means of education that we wonder it is not a regular feature of the musical life of our great towns. How much of a complex modern work can a hearer—even a good musician—take in at one performance? Think of the insight to be gained at a rehearsal, with its repetition of difficult passages and its experiments of various kinds. The benefit to students of composition and orchestration would be incalculable. Admission need not be free. Why not make a charge of sixpence, and allow visitors to choose their seats? We know that one of the obstacles to the production of orchestral novelties is the cost of rehearsals. Could they not be made, to some extent, self-supporting?

SEASIDE ORGAN RECITALS FOR 'THE MUSICIANS' GIFT.'

The organ recital has proved so successful a factor in raising funds for 'The Musicians' Gift' that the committee is anxious to enlist the help of players at holiday resorts. At most of our seaside towns series of recitals are given during the summer months, either by the local organists or by visiting players. It is suggested that the collections at one or more of these recitals be for the benefit of musical work among the troops abroad. Judging from the average collection at 'Musicians' Gift' recitals given so far, we are sure that the object is one that appeals to the public. There is no better time for such an appeal than during the holiday, when folk are in an expansive mood, and not given to close consideration of ways and means. A good many offers of help have already been received, and we commend the idea to all players who will be giving recitals this summer. An interesting scheme is announced for June and July at St. Stephen's, Walbrook. It will extend over three weeks, and the following are the provisional arrangements: June 16, Mr. Edgar T. Cook; June 17, Mr. H. G. Ley; June 19, Dr. Conway; June 20, Mr. Stanley Roper; June 23, Mr. Reginald Goss Custard; June 24, Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson; June 26, Mr. Herbert Weatherley; June 27, Mr. Francis W. Sutton; June 30, Mr. J. T. Crawford; July 1, Dr. Stanley Marchant; July 3, Mr. F. W. Holloway; July 4, Mr. Harold Darke. This is one of the finest series of recitals arranged for many a long day, the St. Stephen's organ is one of the best in London, and the list of players needs no comment. The recitals begin at 1.10, and visitors should note that none take place on Wednesdays.

Readers of the Daily Express

THE FINEST OPERA. have been much exercised lately by the knotty question, 'Which is the finest opera?' As the days proceeded the list of claimants gradually spread itself over the whole current repertory from Wagner and Moussorgsky to Gounod, not forgetting Puccini and late Verdi. This was only to be expected. There are many ideals in opera, and each has its shining example. One correspondent had the courage to say that he thought the finest existing opera was 'La Traviata.' May we put in a plea for 'Electra' and 'The Bohemian Girl'? The classical purity of the former and the emotional intensity of the latter are surely unequalled.

THE HUNT IS UP.

An interesting experiment—we do not know how new or old it may be—has been performed by Mr. Frank Armstrong at Æolian Hall lately. He has used the mechanical organ to reproduce the orchestral part of pianoforte concertos, and done his best to make the combination good enough for public performance. The idea was certainly worth putting to the test, but we are extremely dubious as to its artistic success. We heard Miss Adela Hamaton play the Schumann Concerto under these conditions, and most of the while enjoyed the pleasures of the chase more than the music. Mr. Armstrong was alert in his manipulations, and the pianist was quick to give and take, but the result was to rub the edge off the rhythm—and sometimes more. It helped one to realise how much responsibility is on a conductor's shoulders when he guides an orchestra in accompaniment to a soloist. When the pianist had a passage to herself we found ourselves getting extremely nervous as to the organ's coming re-entry—often with good cause, as the event showed. We are tempted to suggest that the idea should be carried further. A pianola should be hitched into the mechanism and the two machines be under one control. The result might tend to be soulless, but it would not be out of joint.

Many musicians appear to regard the oratorio as a stodgy and obsolete form. It was therefore a pleasant surprise to read the following in the Observer of May 4, in a notice of the first performance of

Mr. Arnold Bennett's Biblical play, 'Judith':

There is nothing in 'Judith'—not even the great scene of the murder—so dramatically exciting as the effect which Sir Hubert Parry won in so unpromising a field for dramatic effect (in saying that, we are not forgetting the 'Elijah') as an oratorio. Who that ever heard returning Judith's cry, 'Ho! ye upon the walls, open to me!' (the 'Ho!' on a tremendous B flat) breaking upon the chorus, can forget it? Mr. Bennett gives us nothing so thrilling as that.

This drew the following interesting letter:

DEAR SIR,—You allude to Parry's work, 'Judith,' in your criticism of the play in to-day's Observer. It may interest you to know that at the first rehearsal, when I rang out the B flat and sang the unaccompanied phrase, Hubert Parry turned to me with a big smile and said, 'By Jove! I had no idea it would sound like that!' I really felt the situation, and seemed to swing the head of Holofernes up in my mind, and I think perhaps that gave the exultant cry. It was a wonderful moment for—Yours faithfully,

ANNA WILLIAMS
(The first and original Judith).

72, Comeragh Road, Barons Court, W.14,
May 4, 1919.

Our readers may like to see the passage, so we reproduce it:

JUDITH.

WOMEN OF JERUSALEM.

MANASSEH.

THE WATCHMAN.

His peo-ple. God suc-cour-eth His peo-ple. Ho! ye up-on the walls, O - pen to me, ple.

ple. &c. ple.

It is certainly a fine example of a great effect produced by simple means.

Dr. Charles Harriss's 'great choral concert in Hyde Park was announced for May 24. We hope to give an account in our next issue.

THE SACKBUT'S PRELIMINARY BLAST.

If the new musical journal, the Sackbut, does all it hopes to do, we shall join in the warm welcome it will deserve. We must confess, however, that the tone of its prospectus strikes us as being unnecessarily offensive. It ought to be possible to start a new journal without throwing stones at those already existing. As Mr. Ernest Newman said in the Observer of May 18, 'nothing is to be gained for the new paper by making the older papers out to be worse than they are.' The Sackbut's implications that existing musical journals are merely tradesmen's circulars, or publications intended to bolster up cliques, firms, or individuals, is well answered by Mr. Newman, whose generous references to the Musical Times we may be allowed to quote, much as we dislike blowing our own sackbut:

Except that they have naturally wished to make their papers as sound business propositions as possible—and I hope the proprietors of the Sackbut will be able to do that also—the owners of the present musical journals do not come any more than the owners of any literary or political journal do under the reproach of betraying a trust for money. When has the fact that the Musical Times, for instance, belongs to Messrs. Novello & Co. stood in the way of free discussion in its columns of most subjects under the sun? I say most subjects, because one is naturally barred. No man in his senses would expect Messrs. Novello & Co. to allow the Musical Times to be used for disparaging their own publications, any more than we should expect the Daily News to print articles against cocoa, or the Tablet articles against religion. Messrs. Novello have used their journal singularly little to push their own publications, while the paper has afforded a free platform for every musician who had anything to say that was worth saying. The wares of other publishers have had much more space allotted to them in the editorial columns of the Musical Times than the wares of Messrs. Novello have.

This testimony could not come at a happier time than on the date of our seventy-fifth anniversary.

Mr. W. W. Cobbett, unwearied in his efforts on behalf of native chamber music, announces another competition. He offers a first prize of £50, and supplementary prizes of £15 for a Dance Phantasy for pianoforte and strings. The competition is open to British subjects only. The entries close on December 31. Full details may be had from Mr. W. W. Cobbett, 34, Avenue Road, N.W.

Mr. Augustus J. Littleton has been elected a member of the Worshipful Company of Musicians, on the proposition of Past-Master Alderman Sir E. E. Cooper (on behalf of Sir Frederick Bridge, who is in Scotland), seconded by Past-Master Arthur F. Hill.

From a newly-published History of English Music

Folk-music is always being evolved. If the writer dared be rash enough to assume the mantle of a prophet, he would predict that not many generations will need to have passed before Sir Villiers Stanford's 'Land of Hope and Glory' will have assumed the character of folk-song; indeed, there are not wanting signs that it has done so already.

Nevertheless, we believe that when Sir Edward Elgar's setting of the same words is a little better known it will be quite as popular.

With this number we present a facsimile of the first number of the Musical Times, June 1, 1844.

A NEW FORM OF CHORAL COMPOSITION.

BY S. ROYLE SHORE.

There were no parochial musical problems in pre-Victorian days. There was a well-established tradition which had nothing but custom to recommend it. It was not inspiring, its ceremonial surroundings were squalid, no one wants to revive it, and it has gone for ever. In 1841, at the consecration of Leeds Parish Church, came the first parochial application of the Cathedral service. Three or four years later witnessed at the Margaret Street Chapel (now represented by the stately Church of All Saints) the revival of plain-chant for the Canticles and Psalter, after about a century of complete disuse,—for the Anglican Chant, a child of the Restoration, it has been conjectured did not entirely supersede its Gregorian parent until about 1730 or 1740. The adoption of the Cathedral form of service was but gradual at first, and met with considerable opposition. Later it grew to be very general, and even popular. In the improvement of the parochial service it became in fact an axiom that the cathedral in matters musical should be the model for the diocese. It is common knowledge how thoroughly this has been exploited, and how diocesan choral associations have assisted in encouraging and organizing things. It is outside the scope of this article to refer to the vicissitudes of the music in those churches that adopted the revived plain-chant, and the unfriendly relations which were set up between the two systems, the memory of which hampers Church music reform until this day. This might well be dealt with in these columns at some future date.

It is quite certain that a great reaction has set in. What was once a good working principle, a sheet anchor for the average Anglican place of worship, and an ideal for organists, their pupils and singers, has been seriously discredited for the majority of our parish churches, and some reconstruction must take place. The former is frankly recognised in the recent Report of the Archbishops' Second Inquiry on the Worship of the Church, but on the latter, the reconstruction side of things, it is not particularly helpful. It is necessary, however, to remind ourselves of what the adoption of the ideal has done for us in improving musical taste, encouraging skill in our organists, choirmasters, and singers, and developing that particularly British institution, the singing-voice of the boy. Whatever takes place in the future, these things must be jealously safeguarded, and encouraged in every way possible.

In the interests of simplicity, and that development of congregational singing which is largely the true reformer's objective in matters parochial, nothing has suffered more than the Canticles at Mattins and Evensong, for the set services formerly in use, in emulation of the cathedral tradition, have been very generally displaced in favour of the Anglican chant. The present writer is not one of those who take up the hostile attitude assumed by so many towards this overdone maid-of-all-work. There is nothing necessarily unrighteous in singing the Psalms in vocal harmony on either ancient or modern lines. A tradition which goes back at least to Josquin Desprès in the 15th century, the beautiful literature of Continental faux-bourbons of the 16th century, and our own Tudor and pre-Rebellion harmonized chants, about which the present writer was privileged to discourse in these columns in the autumn of 1912, should forbid indiscriminate condemnation. He is at one with those who would like to see the best made of it, and its liberation from certain features, and trusts that the efforts now being made to arrive at some permanent reform, with general acceptance, will be successful. The earnest and costly experiments of so many enterprising musicians of recent years should bear fruit from the examples or warnings that they give.

However inevitable the Anglican chant may seem to be for the Psalms in most churches, something more dignified ought to be devised for the Canticles. The solemn form of the tones of plain-chant for some of the same Canticles partly points the way. Extended forms of modern chants could certainly be popularised for the Canticles, with some occasional embellishments in faux-bourdon. Where the Te Deum is concerned it is universally admitted that the Anglican chant breaks down completely from its want of elasticity and the shortness of so many of the verses. Here an extended chant is of no help to us. It aggravates the evil. A chant which allows of being shortened to fit short verses is possible, though perhaps hazardous. The present writer has experimented. A special short form of chant does not seem to suit the dignity of a great hymn which clearly calls for special treatment on the lines of a service setting.

The purpose of this article is to urge the composition of settings to the Te Deum and Canticles for parochial and even wider use, containing both choral and congregational features, on a new method. The Communion Service is capable of being treated in a similar way. There has been hitherto a kind of working compromise on the basis of the cathedral model. A certain number of settings have been composed, simple in form and low in pitch, so that the congregation, besides following, can reproduce the top part when they have succeeded in picking it up from frequent repetition. This is unsatisfactory and unfair to the choir—who are an entity in themselves, and are not only leaders of the congregation—because the trebles and generally the other choralests are singing in the ineffective range of their respective voices. It is also inartistic, inasmuch as the treble part will be doubled in octaves with overwhelming force if the congregation are doing their duty, and all pretence of a choral balance will be at an end. The problem really is how to combine artistically the voices of a congregation singing in octaves in the limited range of from about D to D with the harmony of a choir singing in the effective range of the respective voice parts. It is now intended to show how this can be solved. Hitherto no music of this character has been known to the writer as existing in this country outside some chant settings, with a small reservation about to be noted, and certainly none has enjoyed any vogue. As a matter of history, when the Latin rites were in use the Canticles in our cathedrals were rarely set in full, and the polyphony of the day alternated with plain-chant. The congregational principle was still respected, although the lay people probably did not sing in the service, but the clergy almost certainly joined in the plain-chant. At the Reformation composers felt no call to consider anyone but the choir, and the complete settings as we know them were the result. In the 18th century, however, 'Chanting Services,' as they were called, were composed by Hawkins, Kempton, and Langdon. These consisted of an Anglican chant alternating with figured music, and apparently were an attempt to revive at Ely Cathedral, where these composers were organists, the ancient model, a tradition possibly inherited from the Italian, Ferrabosco, through his grandson, their predecessor. The following is an example from a 'Chanting Service' of Kempton (d. 1762) from a transcript from the Ely books by the Rev. Walter Slater, and kindly placed by him at the writer's disposal some six years ago :

thro'-out all KEMPTON.

A. thro'-out all, thro'-out all, all, all, all,

T. all gen - er - a - tions.

B. all gen - er - a - tions.

Chant.

S. He hath shewed, &c.

A. He hath put down the, &c.

T. He hath put down the, &c.

B. He hath put down the, &c.

There are two ways in which service music can be laid out to comply with the conditions above indicated : the antiphonal, according to ancient forms,* and reflected to some extent in the 'Chanting Services,' or with more or less continuous strains for unison-singing, with overlapping optional choral harmony for the choir at certain points. The germ of such a composition on antiphonal lines may be found in the well-known Cathedral service of Walmisley in D minor, from which the following is extracted :

FULL. Boldly. WALMSLEY.

S. and my spi-rit hath re-joic - ed

A. and my spi-rit hath re-joic - ed

T. and my spi-rit hath re-joic - ed

B. and my spi-rit hath re-joic - ed

ORG. f Prin. & Sw. coupled. Ped. sempre.

in God my Sa - viour.

For he hath re - gard - ed the &c.

Choir Org. sen. Ped.

The custom of the polyphonists in laying out passages and movements for the higher voices, without basses, and the beautiful resulting effect of detachment from things terrestrial, are well known. Walmisley to some extent reproduces on simple lines this effect, admirably contrasted with the unison of the basses and tenors, but the bass of his accompaniment, though without pedals, keeps him somewhat anchored to the earth.

If the popular parochial evening service of Bunnett in F had been provided with more independent choral relief, in passages sometimes overlapping the unison strains and going above them, it would form a very fair model of what is in view for the other kind of composition. To the following extract the present writer has ventured to add a choral passage for the harmony singers of the choir, adapted from the organ harmonies. This will help to illustrate his meaning :

BUNNETT.

S. = 120.

A. = 120.

T. = 120.

B. = 120.

VOICES IN UNISON WITH ORGAN. p f blessed. For he that is might-y hath mag-ni-fi-ed

VOICES IN HARMONY. p and ho - ly, ho - ly is his Name. me and ho - ly, ho - ly is his Name.

Without Org.

The concluding five bars illustrate clearly the new choral effect in service music of a strong melody proceeding in octaves in the mezzo-soprano and baritone ranges amidst a framework of vocal harmony, in place of the too-familiar weak alto part, which could frequently be dispensed with entirely, the choralists proper merely adding three-part harmony to the inside octave melody. The 'Tenor Tune Book' * shows how this effect can be realised in hymn-singing, by a judicious use of the means it so effectively provides.

* E.g., The Evening Canticles, edited by Francis Burgess and S. Royle Shore. (Novello & Co.)

Whilst nothing has come down to us in a non-antiphonal form, an interesting model may be found in a composition of the well-known French organist, Ch. M. Widor, probably a 'Pièce d'occasion,' in the shape of a Mass written for performance in the Church of St. Sulpice, Paris, for two choirs, one of two hundred Seminarists singing mainly in unison, and the other of forty choralists proper, with two organs. The method of scoring for the large organ in detached chords, as against the sustained chords of the little organ and choralists, and the solo work of the former in the symphonies and interludes, should be noted. Whatever may be thought of the music according to our ecclesiastical standards of taste, the marked effectiveness of a great body of men's voices singing in unison, and telling out in the midst of, and coming through, a mass of choral tone soaring above, faux-bourdon-like, is something of which we have had little or no experience.

In one of our great cathedrals a large body of soldiers had their parade service just before the usual Sunday choral office. The effect of the great unison hymn-singing of these men was impressive to the last degree, as was the contrast it presented to the choral harmony of the choir at the succeeding service. How much more impressive it would have been had the two effects been combined in the same service! Yet this has never apparently occurred to any of our cathedral organists, though they have had their Walmisley in D minor at their elbows to point the way. The new form of choral service music now being advocated has its message to the cathedral at times as well as the parish church.

The following example is taken from the opening of the Kyrie after an eight-bar organ symphony, and eight bars of the unison choir. To the latter the first eight bars of the example from A are the complement :

Messe à deux chœurs et deux orgues—Kyrie.

CH. M. WIDOR
(Op. 36).

Moderato.

BARYTONS. (ff)

A

1^{er}
CHŒUR.

2^d
CHŒUR.

PETIT ORGUE.

GRAND
ORGUE.

son, . . . Ky-ri-e . . .

e - le - i - son, Ky - ri - e

f

f e - le - i - son.

(S.A.T.B.)

mf Ky - ri - e

ff

Ky - ri - e
Ky - ri - e e - e - le - i - son, Ky - ri - e, Ky - ri - e
e - le - i - son,
e - le - i - son.
le - i - son.
e - le - i - son.
e - le - i - son.
8 bars Interlude.

[A copy of this Mass will be available for inspection at 160 Wardour Street, by the kindness of Messrs. Novello.]

In the concluding portion of this article examples will be given from recent compositions published, or, in course of publication, more or less illustrating the principles advocated by the writer.

(To be concluded.)

ELGAR'S NEW CHAMBER MUSIC.

One of the most interesting musical events of the year has been Sir Edward Elgar's entry into the field of chamber music. His Violin and Pianoforte Sonata was dealt with in our issue for April. It has already been widely played, and has won golden opinions wherever heard. Since its appearance a String Quartet has been published, and a Pianoforte Quintet is in the press.

The first performance of the two latter works took place at Wigmore Hall on May 21, the players being Messrs. Albert Sammons, W. H. Reed, Raymond Jeremy, Felix Salmond, and William Murdoch. The concert was devoted entirely to Elgar's music, consisting of the two new works, and the Violin and Pianoforte Sonata. Although our concern here is mainly with the novelties, we cannot refrain from alluding to Sammons's and Murdoch's playing of the Sonata. Wonderfully fine throughout, with all the mingling of the rugged and the tender called for by the music, it reached its highest point in the Romance. The delicate and expressive playing of the final section seemed to lay a spell on those so fortunate as to hear it. Not often do we enjoy such perfection.

The first movement of the Quartet has many poignant moments, and is full of characteristic touches. It opens simply, but is on the whole restless and questioning. The slow movement—piacevole—is a lyrical gem. From its opening—in simple three-part harmony—to its close, it is a stream of beautiful, expressive music.

The Finale is tremendously vigorous, with many passionate moments. A striking feature is a bustling semiquaver subject which comes on the scene early, and has a great deal to say during the rest of the movement. The Quartet was splendidly played, save for a few passages in the Finale, which sounded a trifle rough.

The Quintet strikes a new note for Elgar. On first acquaintance we observe less of the characteristic minutiae of the Elgar manner—the musings and whisperings that so often carry his argument from page to page—and more effects of emotional colour. We feel, too, that the composer's handling of the pianoforte is rather less distinctive and original than his treatment of the strings. The first movement has a mixed atmosphere, often hinting at southern countries, and suggesting at times a programmatic basis. The Adagio is an essay in beautiful sustained sonority. The Finale—Allegro nobilmente—will probably come to be recognised as the finest of its three movements. It is passionate and highly-coloured, and has an acute harmonic interest.

The works had an enthusiastic reception, the players being recalled many times. The composer was present, and at the end of the concert received an ovation.

We hope to deal more fully with the Quartet and Quintet in a future issue.

In regard to Elgar's success in the writing of slow movements, we quote the following from Mr. Robin Legge's report of the concert in the Daily Telegraph of May 22:

It is particularly curious, moreover, that in all the three works, works written at much the same time a year or so ago in the country, the slow movement is that in which Elgar seems to express most poetically, and in most lovely phrase, the thoughts that arise in him. In the whole history of chamber music the slow movement has invariably been the test; in the whole history of Elgar the slow movement has proved, abundantly, his great gifts. In all the three slow movements heard on this occasion there is a beauty and a poetry and, above all, a spontaneity and inevitability that is astounding by its very rarity.

WALT WHITMAN.

(Born May 31, 1819)

BY SYDNEY GREW.

Shakespeare, Browning, and Whitman show in their works knowledge of music as a practical art blended with understanding of music as a means of spiritual expression and as a force influencing human development. Their musical faculty is a natural expansion of their large and objective minds. Coleridge, Tennyson, Swinburne, and other poets whose mentality is the reverse of the mentality of Shakespeare, Browning, and Whitman, are at once insensitive to music and incapable of understanding it.

Shakespeare for the most part deals with music dramatically; he works it into dramatic situation or mingles it with other qualities in the creation of dramatic character. He rarely philosophises on music or speaks of it subjectively. Browning on the other hand philosophises very frequently. He is interested chiefly in what we might term the metaphysics of music. Whitman looks on music as a great moral force. He holds it to be as necessary in the complete life of the individual or of the race as love, or freedom, or religion is necessary. He places it on a level with all matters which inspire deep thought and lofty contemplation (as the sea, night, death, heroism, and the like), and the musician he places in the foremost line of fighters for freedom and workers for progress.

As Browning ('Paracelsus,' part 2) regards music as 'a luminous haze linking star to star' and as the art which 'fills all chasms' in and between other arts, so Whitman regards it ('Democratic Vistas') as 'the combiner' of all human thought and expression—'nothing more spiritual, nothing more sensuous, a god, yet completely human . . . holding highest place; supplying in certain wants and quarters what nothing else could supply.' Yet he holds that 'imaginative literature, especially poetry' is the art that 'serves beyond all' in the task of developing humanity and shaping democratic civilisation. To Whitman, poetry is 'the stock of all,' and (to my mind) the reason why he places poetry ahead of music in this vital respect is that while music influences and represents soul only, poetry influences and expresses both mind and soul, and that in the matter of human development mind is as important a factor as soul.

Whitman was moved by music more strongly than any other poet. He expresses himself on the subject with an intensity that poets usually reserve for the subject of love. Also more profoundly than any other writer was he influenced, personally and artistically, by music. He deliberately based his poetry on ideas derived from music; and I consider that the problems of Whitman's art—the problems of his forms, rhythms, sentence-structure, and 'catalogues,' no less than the problems of his moods, subjects, and ways of thought—are to be understood from the standpoint of music and explained in terms of music. Other literary artists have based their art on principles proper to music: Thomas de Quincey, for instance, Browning, and (as I myself feel) Sir Thomas Browne. But Whitman's success was the most complete. De Quincey failed because his sympathies were subjectively narrow and because his mind was incurably artificial. Browning failed in part because his mind was too passionately intellectual. Whitman succeeded, first because he was charged with that illimitable spiritual elevation which belongs to music, secondly because as artist he was natural and sincere, and thirdly because his 'subjects' were suitable for quasi-musical treatment. So fully did he succeed, that his poetry at his best is of unsurpassable tonal grandeur and emotional beauty, matched for rhythmic balance and verbal nuance only by the Bible and such works as 'Religio Medici,' and equalled for general power and moving force only by the grander passages of music. Whitman, therefore, is pre-eminently the musician's poet; and I think that eventually his art will as inexhaustibly influence music in the larger forms as lyric poetry hitherto has influenced it in the smaller.

To describe Whitman's musicianship and to analyse his 'philosophy' of music is too great a matter to be undertaken here. And to describe his musical experiences would be to give a history of music in New York from 1835 to 1861. This also is impossible at the moment. It must suffice to say that he had exceptional opportunities for hearing music and observing musicians and audiences (so far as music was publicly practised in New York and therefore in Europe generally before the rise of Wagner) from his sixteenth to his forty-third year. With but brief exceptions he was so placed as newspaper man and printer that he had free entry to all public performances of music in New York and Brooklyn up to the year 1861. From 1862 to 1873 he was first in the military hospitals and then in the Government Offices at Washington (a town where there were neither books nor music), and from 1873 to the year of his death (1892) he was either an invalid in Camden or a gentle traveller West and North. He observed military music between 1862 and 1865, and natural sounds—particularly the songs of birds—between the years 1875 and 1879 or thereabouts. When occasion served, he went to concerts during the first ten years of his invalidism (as on February 11, 1880, when he heard at a concert in Philadelphia, Beethoven's Septet). But his mind was musically formed and fixed before the new modern music of Liszt and Wagner entered into America, and it is not likely that even if circumstances had brought music into his life as fully during his last thirty years as they had brought it during his first forty, he would have changed with the times. Writing in 1891 he says: 'The experts and musicians of my present friends claim that the new Wagner and his pieces belong far more truly to me' than the Italian composers and Italian operas of 1800-50, and 'I to them, likely. But I was fed and bred under the Italian dispensation, and absorb'd it, and doubtless show it.' Yet he was not ignorant of what was developing in music in those later years, nor was he unsympathetic towards it. In 'Poetry To-day in America,' which was written in 1881, he quotes a passage from some musical writer which shows that he adequately understood both the older Italian music that had formed him and the newer French, German, and Italian music that was escaping him—'The music of the present, Wagner's, Gounod's, even the later Verdi's, all tends towards this free expression of poetic emotion, and demands a vocalism totally unlike that required for Rossini's splendid roulades, or Bellini's suave melodies.' It was opera that made and influenced him—Italian opera, French as of Auber, German as of Flotow, and English as of the semi-ballad type. Instrumental music had less effect upon him. 'Absolute' music seems to have moved him only slightly; though one could not say this decisively without very exhaustive consideration of what is implied by the musical references in the 1890 prose passage entitled 'A Death-Bouquet.'

Whitman was most deeply and permanently affected by the definite movement and tangible life of opera, and he received the 'magnetic, electric thrill' that made music so essential to him chiefly from the actual singers. He refers to operatic singers continuously in his poems; and even when he names operas (as he does frequently) he names them in such a manner as shows that the inspiration derives from the players of certain parts. The singers he refers to most warmly are Marietta Alboni, Mario, Marini the bass and Bettini the tenor (who are these two?), and Cesare Badiali. I consider (though on internal evidence alone) that the singer addressed in the poem 'The Dead Tenor,' is Mario, and I imagine that the singer addressed in the 'inscription' 'To a certain Cantatrice,' is Alboni. (Whitman was not of course insensitive to the other workers in opera. He knew the value of every individual, from conductor, leader of the orchestra, and stage-hand up to the composer, and in one place or another of the 971 pages that comprise his works he finds some occasion to mention them all). There is no need to imagine that he belonged to the class of people whose admiration for the operatic singer approaches worship. He probably understood his or her nature well enough; but since it was his custom to enlarge only on the good of things, leaving the bad or weak to fade and pass out of its own insufficiency, he found no occasion to speak of those negative qualities which seem inseparable from the constitution of the operatic artist. Once at least, however, he analysed the operatic singer adversely,—in 'The Bible as Poetry,' where this very plain description occurs in passing: '... in operas, a tenor with blooming cheeks, black mustache, superficial animation, and perhaps good lungs, but no more depth that skim-milk.'

Whitman's philosophy and his theories of art and life suggest the reasons why opera so powerfully affected him, and why he so highly regarded the opera-singer. Opera is of all forms of music the quickest to have 'direct or indirect reference continually to the hearer . . . to the mighty Ego'—thereby stimulating in the hearer thought, imagination, and reflection, and from that helping in the development of individual personality;* and in Italian opera the voice is the thing,—the human voice, which to Whitman is 'the representative apex and final charm and captivation of humanity.' Opera to Whitman was living poetry; the opera-singers were symbols of the moods and matters of the opera; he praises the symbols, not the persons simulating those symbols. Yet I think that the singers may take the praise to themselves if they will only see themselves as Whitman saw them.

Opera, however, was very far from being the extent to which Whitman observed and celebrated music. All music was within the range of his vision and interest, from oratorios, symphonies, and elaborate religious services to organ caprices, hymns, and simple songs with their insignificant singers ('"The Sea" at the bijou Olympic Theatre was always welcome'—between the Acts of a play—'from a little Englishman named Edwin; a good balladist'). No voice, and no combination of voices, goes unmentioned in his prose or poetry, whether solo or choral. Almost every instrument is referred to, and generally in terms of exact characterisation; for Whitman's faculty of describing sound was perfect—see, for instance, 'Locusts and Katydid's' in 'Specimen Days.' The violin and organ moved him more than any other instruments apart from the instruments used in military processions and funerals. In 'Proud Music of the Storm' are two passages of extreme poignancy and grandeur, the one speaking of the violin:

The tongues of violins,

(I think O tongues ye tell this heart, that cannot tell itself,
This brooding, yearning heart, that cannot tell itself)

(these three lines are as the three lines that constitute the second section of Browning's passionate love-poem 'Rudel to the Lady of Tripoli'), and the other passage speaking of the organ.* The organ Whitman 'catalogues' with 'saloon, academy (organ), exhibition-house, library.' The organist he places exceptionally high in the list of noble workers, his art one of the 'masculine trades, sights, sounds.' The pianoforte he did not understand. He speaks of it invariably in terms of disparagement. ('The accepted notion of a poet would appear to be a sort of male odalisque, singing or piano-playing a kind of spiced idea, second-hand reminiscences, or toying late hours at entertainments in rooms stifling with fashionable scent.') But Whitman never heard true pianoforte-music. In New York in his day pianoforte-music was merely brilliant operatic transcriptions or the sentimental morceaux of composers like Gottschalk. Musical terms and expressions occur continuously in his writings. 'No dainty dolce affettuoso I,' he says in his first poem, and they occur with perfect accuracy—except perhaps when they arise out of the harp—for Whitman's musicianship was derived from personal experience, and thus all his thoughts, ideas, and expressions with regard to music had exact concrete significance. I imagine he could not sing himself. His speaking-voice was high in pitch and monotonous in tone. I am sure he could have read Chinese as easily as music.

Whitman's philosophy of music, as the philosophy of Browning, is still to be studied. It is still to be expounded for the guidance of musicians. We musicians consider carefully the philosophical theories of professional composers: Gluck, Berlioz, Schumann, and Wagner; but the theories of the great objective poets—of men who by nature and circumstance are far more likely to understand things than are the musical specialists—these we more or less ignore.

I consider that we shall one day find from men like Whitman and Browning (and from others who, like Coleridge, are the direct antithesis of the musician) all we need to dissipate the darkness that still obscures not music itself, which is as clear as daylight, but the philosophy of music—the study of music as a phenomenon.

For the present it will perhaps suffice to consider the following touch of poetico-philosophical rapture,

* Now the great organ sounds,

Tremulous, while underneath—(as the hid footholds of the earth,
On which arising rest, and leaping forth depend,
All shapes of beauty, grace and strength, all hues we know,
Green blades of grass and warbling birds, children that gambol and play, the clouds of heaven above)—

The strong base stands, and its pulsations intermits not,
Bathing, supporting, merging all the rest, maternity of all the rest,
And with it every instrument in multitudes,
The players playing, all the world's musicians,
The solemn hymns and masses rousing adoration,
All passionate heart-chants, sorrowful appeals,
The measureless sweet vocalists of ages,
And for their solvent setting earth's own diapason,
Of winds and woods and mighty ocean waves,
A new composite orchestra, binder of years and climes, tenfold renewer,
As of the far-back days the poets tell, the Paradiso,
The straying thence, the separation long, but now the wandering done,
The journey done, the journeyman come home,
And man and art with Nature fused again.

Proud Music of the Storm.)

o List close, my scholars dear

All music is what awakes from you when you are reminded by the instruments,

It is not the violins and the cornets, it is not the oboe nor the beating drums, nor the score of the baritone singer singing his sweet romanza, nor that of the men's chorus, nor that of the women's chorus,

It is nearer and farther than they
All architecture is what you do when you look upon it

'A Song of Occupations.')

to-day already a half-century old, but still glowing as effulgently as ever :

Composers ! mighty maestros !
And you sweet singers of old lands, soprani, tenori, bassi,
To you a new bard carolling in the West,
Obeisant sends his love.

(Such led to thee, O soul,
All senses, shows, and objects, lead to thee,
But now it seems to me sound leads o'er all the rest.)

THE EIGHTEENTH AND THE EARLY NINETEENTH CENTURY IN ENGLISH MUSIC.

By F. A. HADLAND.

(Continued from May number, page 219.)

A little-known composer is John Christian Mantel, who was organist at Great Yarmouth, and in 1730 of the Parish Church of South Benfleet, Essex. The dictionaries are silent about him, with the exception of Eitner, who Germanises his first name and calls him Johann. The same authority names only his 'Six Lessons for the Harpsichord,' but the Concertos for organ or harpsichord are at least worth mentioning. A Larghetto and Allegro for violin and pianoforte attracted the attention of another German, Otto Peiniger, who edited it some years ago.

Richard Jones, who succeeded Stefano Carbonelli as leader of the band at Drury Lane Theatre about 1730, appears to be almost ignored, at any rate as far as any real acquaintance goes with his music ; but both Peiniger and Moffatt found it worth while to edit some pieces of his composition. An Air and Jigg and a Preludio e Vivace deserve attention. Mr. Moffatt, who developed a strong affection for German publishers, due no doubt to his long residence in Germany, arranged a Sonata for Violin and Pianoforte, and also two Gavots. There is little of Jones's music extant, but such as there is is distinctly worth preserving. The two Gavots are excellent.

Mr. Barclay Squire remarks that Jones displays a violin technique which for its period may be considered advanced.

William Russell, who was organist of the Foundling Hospital and of St. Anne's, Limehouse, composed a fine Mass in C minor. There are twelve Voluntaries of his for organ or pianoforte which do not appear to be well known. They contain some capital preludes and fugues. No. 10 has a fugue the subject of which is 'from Haydn.'

Dr. Blow is too well known to require much addition to the existing stock of information about him in the possession of most musicians, but it would not be good to allow his Harpsichord Lessons to be forgotten. An interesting MS. volume in the library of the Royal College of Music contains an Almand, Tune, Jigg, Ground, Minuet, Almand, Corant, Saraband, Gigg, Corant, Saraband, and Gavatt.

Burney's elaborate judgment on Dr. Blow's 'crudities' has long since reacted on his own reputation as a critic, and, as Sir Hubert Parry remarks, Blow's works sometimes evince a power in advance of his contemporaries. It might be added that they are also in advance of Burney.

Dr. Croft's Six Sonatas or Solos in the library of the Royal College of Music are excellent specimens of the composer's genius.

The 'Musicus Apparatus Academicus,' two odes which were composed for Croft's exercise for his Doctor's degree at Oxford, performed July 13, 1713, the words by Joseph Trapp, A.M., are, as far as the words are concerned, a fulsome eulogy of Queen Anne, and are out of date even mutatis mutandis, but the two Overtures deserve revival.

The first movement of No. 1 consists largely of trumpet fanfares with imitative accompaniments for strings. The Overture to the second Ode is also in two movements, the second being a sprightly Allegro. This is also for strings. It is worth consideration whether the inclusion of some old English music would not form a very suitable feature of the coming Peace observances, and if so the 'Musicus Apparatus' of Croft would be very well adapted, as the subjects of both Odes are the triumphal close of a long war and the establishment of Peace. If, as may be expected, music is to form a leading feature, it should to some extent be historical and illustrative of the past glories of Britain, and Croft's Exercise is specially appropriate, as it breathes the soul of patriotism.

Of William Bates, the dates of whose birth and death may be approximately 1720-90, an opera remains, 'Pharnaces,' with an overture in two movements, Allegro con spirito and Andante. Violins, oboes, and horns are employed, and the key of D predominates through the work. In the course of the opera there is a March worthy the attention of military bandmasters for parade purposes.

'Pharnaces' is entitled 'An English Opera performed at Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, composed by William Bates, London, printed by Welcher, Gerrard Street, Soho.'

The secular instrumental compositions of Dr. Greene are of considerable importance. They include collections of Lessons for the Harpsichord, and six Overtures for violins, flutes, and hoboys. There are also twelve fine voluntaries for organ or harpsichord. The Royal College library has a small volume of 'Select Minuets,' melody only. Articles on Greene's life and works appeared in the Musical Times for June, 1888, and February, 1903.

There are many Suites of Dr. Greene's in MS. at the British Museum.

Joseph Gibbs, organist of Dedham, Essex, is ignored by Grove. He was organist of St. Mary-at-Tower, Ipswich, in 1748. He composed 'Eight Solos for a Violin with a thorough Bass for the Harpsichord or Bass Violin,' published, without date, by Peter Thompson at the Violin and Hautboy in St. Paul's Churchyard, with an imposing list of a hundred and sixty subscribers, including Boyce and Greene.

Eitner ('Quellen Lexicon') gives his name and mentions these works, which appear to be all that are accessible.

Francis Piggott.—In a small printed book in the British Museum there is a 'Set' by Mr. Francis Piggott, consisting of a Prelude, Almand, Corant, Saraband, Jigg, and a March followed by a Minuet, all in the key of C. Piggott was appointed organist of the Temple Church in 1688, after filling a similar post at Magdalen College, Oxford, for twelve years. He died in 1704.

A Suite in MS. in the British Museum by John Weldon is worth attention. It is in four movements : Allmand, Courant, Minuet, Jigg. Weldon's name as a Church composer is too well known to require much comment. He died in 1736.

Dr. Arne, although known far and wide as the composer of many songs which seem destined to enjoy a perennial reputation, is hardly noticed at the present day, and the proportion of his compositions which are now heard in relation to the full list is indeed small. But it is interesting to open the score of 'Alfred,' and to scan the work from the Overture—which is written for two horns, two oboes, two violins, viola, bassoon, and bass, and is a very spirited movement—to the final chorus, 'Rule, Britannia.' There is a fine March which may be known to some of our military bandmasters, but I have never heard it. The Guards are fond of old marches, such as the March in 'Scipio' and the 'Duke of York's March,' which are constantly in use. Arne's March would be a good addition to their repertoire. The Overture to the Masque 'Britannia' is fine. It is in three sections—Largo, Allegro (a Fugue), ending with a charming Gavot. The Overture to 'Comus' is somewhat longer than most such movements of the period, and would form an effective item in a concert programme.

The suggestion as to the revival of a good deal of old English music in connection with Peace Celebrations may be repeated here. Arne's flow of melody is unfailing, and is peculiarly English. The patriotic vein of the 18th century is not out of date in the 20th.

(To be continued.)

THE LEAGUE OF ARTS.

As we frequently receive inquiries regarding the work of the League, it may be useful to give some account of the arrangements so far made. The League is publishing immediately a book on the management of public processions. It will be finely-printed, and will contain examples of appropriate music and illustrations (in colour) of flags, costumes, and decorations generally. There will be articles on 'Street Decoration' by Profs. Anning Bell and N. MacDermott, 'Flags and Heraldry' by Prof. Kruger Gray, 'The Organization of Processions' by Sir Frank Benson, 'Music' by Mr. C. Kennedy Scott, and 'Dancing' by Mr. Cecil Sharp. Other articles will deal with costume, lettering, &c. The book will cost about 5s., and will be a valuable work of reference for all who have to do at any time with public celebrations.

The League has been asked to undertake the decorative work and to provide music in connection with the River Pageant in honour of the Mercantile Marine on a date not yet fixed. They are engaging twenty-five military bands, and choirs will also take part. Vol. ii. of 'The Motherland Song-Book' has been issued by Messrs. Stainer & Bell. It contains twelve sea-songs and chanties, arranged simply for four voices. A further collection of chanties, edited by Dr. Vaughan Williams, is in the Press. These books will be used at the River Pageant. Band parts (orchestral, military, and brass), for vol. i. of 'The Motherland Song-Book' are now ready.

The League hopes to issue shortly a selection of band-music for processional use. Arrangements are also being made for the manufacture of a series of flags designed by eminent artists. The flags will be ready by the end of June. About a third of the London boroughs have their musical and other organizations complete, and others are in the inquiry stage. Apropos inquiries, some idea of the extent of the appeal made by the League may be gathered from the fact that during the past six weeks over three thousand letters have been dealt with. The only department in which there is no feverish activity is the treasury. The expenses are very heavy, and we hope that the public, which shows itself so ready to use the organization, will do its duty in regard to finance.

It is hoped that a large permanent choir will be formed, to be called 'The London National Choir,' which will be available for any kind of public function. The nucleus of such a choir already exists, and made its first public appearance at Trafalgar Square on 'Lifeboat Saturday,' when sea-songs and chanties were sung. Full particulars as to membership of the choir are to be had from the secretary, Mr. J. S. Ardley, 124, Grosvenor Road, Pimlico, S.W.1.

Messrs. Adrian Boult, W. W. Hedgcock, Allen Gill, and other well-known conductors will be in charge.

All inquiries as to League matters should be addressed to the secretary, Captain J. F. Thisleton, 36, Cornhill, E.C. 3.

SEA-SONGS IN TRAFALGAR SQUARE.

We quote the following from the Daily Telegraph of May 7:

At five o'clock Lifeboat Day was honoured in the Square by an open-air concert, arranged by the League of Arts. The League has great ideas for brightening our lives. It commands an excellent choir, which gathered on the plinth of Nelson's column, and four hundred male and female voices sang the old sea songs we all love. How well they sounded there in the open air—'The Bay of Biscay,' 'Heart of Oak,' 'The Mermaid,' 'Tom Bowling,' 'Spanish Ladies,' all the old favourites. Old Nelson up aloft on his column must have enjoyed it. The lilt of the songs created enthusiasm, and the thousands who gathered to listen clapped their applause, and coins for the lifeboats showered into the ring. Why cannot we have more of this simple open-air enjoyment? Is there adequate reason why Trafalgar Square should always be desolate as a wilderness? Perhaps the League of Arts will see to it. We are only beginning to learn to use London.

THE RUSSIANS AT THE ALHAMBRA.

It would be an injustice to the Russian season at the Alhambra to head an account of it with a title indicating only Russian Ballet. Not only has M. Diaghileff given us in profusion the creations of the older choreography of Fokine, and the newer choreography of Massine, but he has associated with them what is in substance the most ambitious 'scheme of symphony concerts given in London for many years. Before the War 'first performances' were not so rare as the costliness of rehearsals has since made them, but unfortunately many important works thus introduced were never made familiar to the public. The great advantage of the plan followed at the Alhambra is that each symphonic work included in the scheme is performed often enough to give it every chance of becoming known. Forty works were originally selected, and on a rough calculation four out of every five are 'first performances,' the remainder being works like Glazounov's 'Stenka Razin,' which, though their artistic worth is acknowledged on the Continent, have had but one hearing in London. The list is of course predominantly Russian, but it includes a large proportion of modern French works besides some Spanish and some English. The last consist of Goossens's 'Four Conceits,' three orchestral pieces by Lord Berners (Gerald Tyrwhitt), a Russian Suite by Arnold Bax—who is specially orchestrating his Gopak, Nocturne, and Vodka Shop—and a Suite by Herbert Howells. All these works, and probably more, will be heard at the Alhambra before the season is ended. The orchestra is by far the best that has been heard in a London theatre apart from those devoted to opera, and in M. Ernest Ansermet, the conductor of the Geneva Symphony Concerts, who has made these symphonic interludes his special care, M. Diaghileff has secured a very talented collaborator.

M. Ansermet, who is a personal friend of Stravinsky, also took charge of the latter's two ballets, 'Petroushka' and 'The Firebird,' on their revival after five years' interval. The performances were in both cases of the highest order. Madame Lopokova need fear no comparison with her predecessors in the part of the dancing-girl, and M. Massine's 'Petroushka' has, like all his interpretations, a personal quality that makes it convincing. It is too often forgotten that the underlying idea of these 'burlesque scenes' is essentially the tragedy of human helplessness. Their symbolism is subtle. The Moor, having failed to master the cokernut by violence, proceeds to worship it as being more powerful than himself, thus hinting at the origin of primitive religion. It is this feature of combining deep inner significance with outward burlesque that makes 'Petroushka' as thoroughly modern in its dramatic conception as it is in its music. 'The Firebird' is Stravinsky's earlier ballet. The music of it was originally ordered from Liadoff, but he procrastinated, and meanwhile M. Diaghileff heard the 'Scherzo Fantastique' by Stravinsky. It was only five or six minutes of music by a then unknown graduate of the Petrograd Conservatoire, but the creator of the modern ballet is a man of quick decisions, and within twenty-four hours Stravinsky received the commission that proved his stepping-stone to fame. There are fewer folk-tunes in this ballet than in 'Petroushka,' but one of these is a very beautiful theme which had already been employed by Rimsky-Korsakoff in the slow movement of his delightful 'Symphonietta.'

By the time these notes appear in print Tcherepnin's 'Narcisse' will have been added to the list of revived ballets, and a few days later a new ballet, the first to be actually produced in London, will make its appearance. It is based on lesser-known compositions by Rossini, with choreography by Massine—consideration of it must be reserved for our next issue.

Meanwhile most of the ballets recently performed at the Coliseum have made their re-appearance. We have had the ever-fresh 'Good Humoured Ladies'—a 'musical comedy' if ever there was one—to music by Scarlatti. We have renewed acquaintance with Schumann's 'Papillons' and 'Carnaval.' We have seen again the Oriental splendours of 'Scheherazade' and the Tartan exuberance of the dances from 'Prince Igor.' The delicate romantic rêverie of 'Les Sylphides' still lures us with Chopin's music, and last, but not least, the 'Children's Tales' have lost none of their popularity. In fact we would couple this last production with 'Good Humoured Ladies' as the two most noteworthy emanations of the new movement, for they indicate in outline the direction it is taking and the prospect is an alluring one. M. Henry Defosse and M. Ernest Ansermet have shared the honours of the répertoire, and each in turn has handled the orchestra in masterly fashion.

To revert to those 'orchestral interludes,' they opened with Rimsky-Korsakov's Overture on Russian Themes and Glazounov's 'Stenka Razin.' The latter is an early work approximately contemporaneous with his second Symphony, another remarkable composition of which London knows nothing. Like Mendelssohn, Glazounov wrote most of his best work in early youth, when his ideas flowed more consistently to academic devices. Hence in Germany, and in countries influenced musically by Germany, he is best known by Symphonies like the sixth and eighth, which are a joy to the schools, whilst the Latin countries, not to speak of Russia itself, favoured the second Symphony and 'Stenka Razin.' Unfortunately it is a little long for the present purpose, and its performances are therefore not frequent.

A delightful introduction was the Overture to Moussorgsky's unfinished opera, 'The Fair at Sorotchinsk,' followed by a Scherzo that proved equally pleasing though much less characteristic. Another was the Scherzo which Borodin dedicated to T. Jadoul, and which was afterwards incorporated in the orchestral version of his 'Petite Suite,' where it is combined with the Nocturne in the place of the conventional Trio.

The Frenchmen have not been neglected. Florent Schmitt has contributed a Rhapsody-Valse. This was originally one of three rhapsodies for two pianofortes, labelled respectively 'Française,' 'Polonaise,' and 'Viennoise,' but its waltz character is so pronounced that no apology is needed for giving it that title in the orchestral version. From Albert Roussel was taken the second of the three 'Evocations' which he wrote on his return from a visit to India, with which he was already acquainted, in the winter of 1909-10. It will be remembered that Sir Henry Wood recently introduced at Queen's Hall the first of them, entitled 'Les Dieux dans l'ombre des Cavernes.' In this the Wagnerian influence which predominated at the Schola Cantorum whilst Roussel was studying there is more apparent than in 'La Ville Rose,' the picturesque tone-painting performed at the Alhambra. Despite an outburst of uncontrolled loquacity in the stalls—a rare occurrence at these musical feasts—this 'evocation' made so favourable an impression that one looks forward eagerly to hearing the third of the series, 'Aux bords du Fleuve Sacré,' which, however, is not included in M. Diaghileff's announcements. French music was further represented by the 'Clair de Lune' from Debussy's 'Suite Bergamesque,' in the orchestral version of Eugène Goossens, which has already done service elsewhere. Goossens's 'Four Concepts' were announced for May 26, under his own conductorship, but cannot be reviewed until our next issue.

EDWIN EVANS.

Church and Organ Music.

CHURCH MUSIC: THE USE OF BANDS.

BY ULRIC DAUBENY.

Ecclesiastical journals have lately been discussing the musical aspect of Church services, particularly with regard to the employment of instruments other than the organ or harmonium. The need for some such procedure—it would scarcely be an innovation—is very pressing, and it is to be hoped that favourable and energetic action will ensue, for the introduction of more lay effort, in the form of small orchestras or bands, could result in nothing but the satisfaction and betterment of all concerned.

Music, it has always been admitted, claims a position as the most elevating of all the arts, and at the present time we hover upon the brink of a musical revival such as this or any other country has never seen. During the last four years, scores of bands and orchestras were formed, not only in the Army and Navy, but among the great munition works; countless persons have striven to acquire and perfect musical skill for the entertainment of fighting men or wounded; hundreds of amateurs have come forward to fill the vacancies and new demands of bands in theatres, cinemas, and tea rooms. In fine, there can be no exaggeration in suggesting that the present number of musical performers must be at least a hundred per cent. more numerous than was the case in August, 1914, while the general standard of competence has very considerably increased.

Whatever happens when military and civil bands and orchestras are finally demobilized, such a vast increase of talent must not be permitted to slip away by the old paths of apathy and neglect. Probably no such general tendency will show itself, yet in order to sustain public appreciation and enthusiasm, in order to spread rather than confine this wonderful revival, and to fulfil the dreams of Britain's greatest musicians—who hoped to see their country take its place as premier musical nation of the world—very definite and immediate action will be necessary.

Musicians from all demobilized or disbanded orchestras must be afforded every facility for joining or forming fresh organizations—not necessarily professional, for in music, the amateur must always be the essential bed-rock and main support of all successful effort. Brass bands, string bands, orchestras, choral societies, these in great plurality will be required to meet the needs of worker-musicians, and the more such associations are available, the more permanent—nay, rapidly evolving and increasing—will become the popular interest in music. Granted this should come about, it were unnecessary to point the moral when communities meet to perform or listen to music (whether it be indifferent or good), instead of passing leisure hours entirely immersed in idleness and mental vegetation.

Now there happen to be three fundamental requirements common to all musical organizations: the need of a conductor, a practice room or concert hall, and an audience. The conductor must be a competent musician, keen on the work, and able to sustain enthusiasm in his band. The practice room must be of sufficient size, well aired, lighted, and heated, and supplied with chairs and possibly a pianoforte. This in many cases will prove the stumbling block, for apart from the question of expensive hire, the number of halls or rooms capable of accommodating even from a dozen to a score of players is very strictly limited. Thirdly, to keep awake the necessary enthusiasm, and to ensure a regular attendance on the part of members, frequent performances must be given before a public audience. The old methods of practising a restricted set of works during a whole season and of finishing up with a single concert is incompatible with any appreciable national advance, for as the enthusiasm and skill of the performers increase, so must the number of works increase, also the number of public performances. Unfortunately the poor support given even to amateur bands whose musical interpretation is almost if not quite professional, renders it impossible for an unendowed association to give anything but very rare performances in public—funds all disappearing in hire of practice room and concert hall.

It is here that the Church finds unexampled opportunity, not only for forwarding the cause of music but for helping humanity, and its own uplifting cause, all at a single step. The Church has its organists, many of whom are expert instrumentalists, while others, with the necessary study, might be excellently fitted to conduct. It also has its parish rooms, its mission halls and clubs, wherein is generous accommodation, lighted, heated, and with the necessary chairs, if not also a pianoforte. The larger parishes can boast of operatic and entertainment clubs, to which the orchestra might prove of invaluable assistance, receiving in return the opportunity for public performances, unhampered by the usual difficulties of finance.

But to arrive at the real object of this paper, it is within the precincts of the Church itself that orchestras and bands would be of greatest value to the clergy. Apart from the accompaniment of hymns and psalms, there is ample opportunity for the performance of high-class music (with organ) in the times immediately before and after service, now usually devoted to a voluntary to which few if any listen. In combination with the choir fine anthems could be performed, as well as cantatas, oratorios, and other more ambitious pieces on festival or special occasions.

Services thus rendered more full and interesting would attract larger congregations, and the clergy would have additional satisfaction in feeling that members of the orchestra, perhaps not otherwise church-goers, were at least engaged in honourable and uplifting occupation, which in due course could not but produce its goodly harvest. From the other point of view, helping in a 'live' concern, the musician would be afforded opportunity for the study of a wide field of orchestral and choral music, with his interest kept awake and talent fostered by the frequent performances in public. All practices being run on strictly non-sectarian lines, and music of all descriptions studied (as would be the case in a private rehearsal hall), such associations would become highly popular, each Church having its orchestra and every village at least its trio or quartet of strings or wind.

In these enlightened times it seems unlikely that any widespread objection could be offered to such use of bands and orchestras, even by the most old-fashioned church-goer. True it is that Church bands of a century ago in certain cases still remain a byword, but the behaviour of their members, if disgraceful, merely magnified the deportment of the parson. A band of adult instrumentalists can be trusted to behave more soberly than any choir of boys, while such doubts as may be entertained on grounds of religious authority or doctrine soon should be dispelled by reference to the Bible, or any history of the early Church. For instance, the Mosaic Codes are rich in references to music in connection with religious observance, and it remains an article of Christian faith that the Jewish religious ceremonies were influenced by divine direction, and not merely instituted at the personal caprice of the priests. To offer but a single example, 2 Chron. v. 12. describes 'The Levites which were the singers . . . being arrayed in white linen, having cymbals, and psalteries, and harps, stood at the east end of the altar, and with them an hundred and twenty priests sounding with trumpets. It came even to pass, as the trumpeters and singers were as one, to make one sound to be heard in praising and thanking the Lord; and when they lifted up their voice with the trumpets and cymbals and instruments of musick, and praised the Lord . . .'. To turn to comparatively modern times, even in that excessively strait-laced period which followed upon the Reformation, we read of 'cornetts and sackbuts' being used in Worcester Cathedral on the occasion of Queen Elizabeth's visit in 1575, while in the time of James I. the same instruments were included among the choir of Westminster Abbey; and in 1636 Archbishop Laud ordered 'two cornetts and two sackbuts' to be played in Canterbury Cathedral, similar instruments at that time finding a permanent place in the minsters of York, Durham, and elsewhere. The anthems of Byrd, Orlando Gibbons, and Tallis are scored for voices and strings, the organ only appearing 'in the full parts,' and after 1650 the great writers of Church music scored for the usual orchestral instruments. Purcell included trumpet parts in his famous Te Deum, and Boyce, in 1755, added to this work parts for oboes, bassoons, and drums. Handel's Chandos Anthems, in addition to the organ, demanded for their performance strings, oboes, flutes, bassoons, and often trumpets. Surely all this is but carrying out the exhortation of the Psalmist: 'Sing unto the Lord with the harp: with the harp, and the voice of a psalm. With trumpets and sound of cornet make a joyful noise before the Lord, the King.'

The inclusion of orchestral instruments in Church choirs would thus accord with the fullest, and most worthy precedent. Nor could any such general revival be regarded wholly in the light of an experiment, for in the instances where it had been tried before the War nothing but success resulted.

Obviously the first step lies with the Church itself—and to hesitate now will be to throw away the golden opportunity.

Mr. William H. Harris, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O., assistant-organist of Lichfield Cathedral, and organist and choirmaster of St. Augustine's Church, Edgbaston, has been appointed to succeed Prof. H. P. Allen (director of the Royal College of Music and Professor of Music in the University of Oxford) as organist of New College, Oxford. Dr. Harris's setting of Francis Thompson's 'Hound of Heaven' has recently been accepted by the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust for publication. His musical training was received at the Royal College of Music, where he studied the organ under Sir Walter Parratt, and composition and counterpoint under Dr. Walford Davies. He has been closely associated with Prof. Granville Bantock in connection with the University musical work at Birmingham during the last four years.

Dr. Alan Gray's recitals at Trinity College for the present term are, as usual, made up of the best of various schools of organ writing. The programmes include Parry's Preludes on 'Eventide,' 'Ye boundless realms of joy,' and Fantasia and Fugue in G; Schumann's Fugue on BACH, No. 6; three movements from Vienne's second Symphony; Bairstow's Toccata-Prelude on 'Pange Lingua'; Gigout's Toccata; Jongen's Cantabile; some manuscript works from his own pen; and three Choral Preludes by Vaughan Williams, also in manuscript.

This is the day of the youthful organist. Probably the youngest is Master Alwyn Surplice, aged twelve, who has been appointed organist at the Nautical College, Pangbourne. This appropriately-named boy has been deputising at the Parish Church, Pangbourne, and is a pupil of Mr. W. D. Boseley, of University College, Reading.

The Tide rises, the Tide falls.

PART-SONG FOR FOUR VOICES.

Words by LONGFELLOW.

Composed by ADAM CARSE.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Andante sostenuto.

SOPRANO. pp The tide ri - ses, the tide falls, The

ALTO. pp The tide ri - ses, the tide falls, The TENOR. pp The tide ri - ses, the tide . . falls, The

BASS. pp The tide . . ri - ses, the tide falls, The ACCOMP. (ad lib.) pp Andante sostenuto. ♩ = 69.

twi - light dark - ens, the cur - lew calls; . . A - long the sea - sands, twi - light dark - ens, the cur - lew calls; . . A - long the sea - sands, twi - light dark - ens, the cur - lew calls; . . A - long the sea - sands, twi - light dark - ens, the cur - lew calls; . . A - long the sea - sands,

p

Copyright, 1919, by Novello and Company, Limited.

damp and brown, The trav - 'ler has - tens to - ward the town, And the damp and brown, The trav - 'ler has - tens to - ward the town, And the damp and brown, The trav - 'ler has - tens to - ward the town, And the damp and brown, The trav - 'ler has - tens to - ward the town, And the tide ri - ses, the tide falls. . . Dark-ness set-tles on tide ri - ses, the tide falls. . . Dark-ness set-tles on..

tide ri - ses, the tide falls. . . Dark-ness set-tles on tide . . ri - ses, the tide falls. . . Dark-ness set - tles on roofs and walls, But the sea in the dark - ness calls and calls; The roofs and walls, But the sea in the dark - ness calls and calls; The roofs and . . walls, But the sea in the dark - ness calls and calls; The roofs and walls, But the sea in the dark - ness calls and calls; The lit-tle waves, with their soft white hands, Ef-face the foot-prints in the sands, lit-tle waves, with their soft white hands, Ef-face the foot-prints in the sands, lit-tle waves, with their soft white hands, Ef-face the foot-prints in the sands, lit-tle waves, with their soft white hands, Ef-face the foot-prints in the sands,

And the tide ri-ses, the tide falls. . . The

And the tide ri-ses, the tide falls. . . The

And the tide ri-ses, the tide falls. . . The

And the tide .. ri-ses, the tide falls. . . The morn-ing breaks; the steeds in their stalls Stamp and neigh, as the hos-ler calls;..

morn-ing breaks; the steeds in their stalls Stamp and neigh, as the hos-ler calls;..

morn-ing breaks; the steeds in their stalls Stamp and neigh, as the hos-ler calls;..

morn-ing breaks; the steeds in their stalls Stamp and neigh, as the hos-ler calls;..

The day re - turns, but nev - er more Re - turns the trav - 'ler

The day re - turns, but nev - er more Re - turns the trav - 'ler

The day re - turns, but nev - er more Re - turns the trav - 'ler

The day re - turns, but nev - er more Re - turns the trav - 'ler

to the shore, And the tide ri - ses, the tide falls. . .

to the shore, And the tide ri - ses, the tide falls. . .

to the shore, And the tide ri - ses, the tide .. falls. . .

to the shore, And the tide .. ri - ses, the tide falls. . .

Two oratorio services were held in Peterborough Cathedral on May 8, in the afternoon and evening, when Parts 1 and 2 of 'The Creation,' Elgar's 'Spirit of England' and 'As torrents in summer,' and 'The night is departing,' from the 'Hymn of Praise,' were performed by the Peterborough Choral Union and Orchestral Society. Miss Doris Baker, Mr. Thomas Coates, and Mr. Samuel Mann were the soloists, and Mr. E. Fairclough was at the organ. The performances were conducted by Mr. A. E. Armstrong, whose Overture in G was an enjoyable feature.

We have received the ninth annual report of the Organists' Benevolent League, and are glad to see that this excellent fund has survived the war-years, and is in a flourishing condition. The receipts for 1918 exceeded those of any year during the war, and have been exceeded only twice since the League's inception in 1909. Mr. Thomas Shindler, at the Royal College of Organists, continues to act as secretary.

Mr. Malcolm C. Boyle has been appointed organist and choirmaster of Holy Trinity, Windsor. Mr. Boyle is seventeen years old, and was recently elected Goss Scholar at the Royal Academy of Music. His father is well-known as a tenor lay-clerk at St. George's Chapel. Holy Trinity, Windsor, is the post held by Sir Frederick Bridge in his youth.

Mr. W. Bertram Collingwood has been presented with a gold watch, an illuminated address, and a cheque, on leaving Queenstown, South Africa, after thirteen years' work, to take up the appointment of organist and choirmaster at Kimberley Cathedral. Mr. Collingwood was formerly organist and choirmaster at St. Edmund's School, Canterbury.

Dr. George Oldroyd has been appointed to the important post of St. Alban's, Holborn. Dr. Oldroyd is an enthusiast in the matter of English Church music, including the older polyphonic writers. His new position should give him a fine opportunity.

At the first of a series of organ recitals at St. Mary Abchurch, given by Mr. Henry Riding, a collection for the Y.M.C.A. Musicians' Gift to the Forces realised £5 11s.

ORGAN RECITALS.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Chorus 'In tears of grief,' Bach; Choral Improvisations (Nos. 45 and 50), Karg-Elert; Soliloquy and Finale from Sonata in E minor, Lyons; Lied, Vierne; Prelude and Fugue (St. Ann's), Bach.

Mr. Cyril Pearce, Unthank Road Baptist Church, Norwich—Grave and Allegro (Fantasia Sonata), Rheinberger; Scherzo in A flat, Bairdston; Fantasia on 'Old Hundredth,' Parry; Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach.

Mr. S. Wallbank, Hexham Abbey (two recitals)—Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Andante con Moto, Saint-Saëns; Choral Song and Fugue, Wesley; Nocturne in G minor, Bonnet; Fantasia in F minor, Mozart.

Mr. Walter Hoyle, Coventry Cathedral—Schiller March, Meyerbeer; Idyll, 'The Sea,' Arnold Smith; Allegretto and Finale (Symphony No. 3), Vierne; Scherzo in F minor, Sandiford Turner; Finale in B flat, Wolstenholme.

Mr. Claude A. Forster, St. John's, Forfar—Suite, Borowski; A Noel Souvenir, Wolstenholme; Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach.

Mr. Herbert Gisby, St. Thomas's, Regent Street, W. (five recitals)—Easter Morn and Old Easter Melody with Variations, West; Finale from Sonata in E minor, Merkel; Passacaglia and Riposo, Rheinberger; Meditation-Elegie and Marche Solennelle, Borowski; Two Sketches, Op. 58, Nos. 1 and 2, Schumann; Andante from second Sonata, Borowski; Intermezzo, Visione, and Marcia Funèbre, Rheinberger; Fantaisie, Dubois.

Mr. W. P. Jones, Christ Church, Loch Gilphead, N.B.—Prayer, Guilmant; Improvisation and March; Berceuse, de Lillo; Vaterlandisches Lied and Wachterlied, Grieg; Hallelujah Chorus.

Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool (four recitals)—Postlude in D, W. G. Wood; Fantasia and Fugue on the Choral in Meyerbeer's Opera 'The Prophet,' Liszt; Overture to the Opera 'Raymond'; Offertoire No. 4, Lefebure-Wély; Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Andante from String Quartet, Debussy; Fugue alla Gigue, Bach; Finale from Sonata, Reubke; Choral Song and Fugue, Wesley; Requiescat, Cyril Scott; The Holy Boy, Ireland; Coronach, Barratt.

Mr. Albert Orton, Walton Parish Church (three recitals)—Offertoire in D minor, Higgs; Canzone in A minor, Guilmant; Toccata in F, Widor; Church Festival March, Best; 'Fiat Lux,' Dubois; Lied des Chrysanthèmes, Bonnet; Sonata Pascale, Lemmens; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Allegretto ('Hymn of Praise' Symphony); Imperial March, Elgar.

Dr. R. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End (four recitals)—Sonata Pastorale, Rheinberger; Prelude on 'Melcombe,' Parry; Capriccio, Ireland; Fantaisie in F minor, Mozart; Pastorale, Vierne; Rhapsody, Saint-Saëns; March from second Suite, Boëllmann; Finale from Sonata, Reubke; 'Ad nos ad Salutarem Undam,' Liszt; Villanelle, Ireland; Finale in B flat, Frank.

Mr. J. Charles McLean, St. Peter's, Aberdovey—Fantaisie Overture, George Garrett; Légende, Dvorák; Andante from String Quartet, Debussy; Solemn Melody, Walford Davies; Choral Prelude, 'St. Michael,' West.

Mr. B. Langdale, St. George's, Barnsley (three recitals)—Allegro-Allegretto from Sonata, Elgar; Pedal Etude, Bossi; March from 'Casse Noisette' Suite, Tchaikovsky; Barcarolle from Concerto No. 4, Sternedale Bennett; Pastorale, 'The Storm,' Claussman; Largo-Allegro-Pastorale (Sonata No. 1), Guilmant; Fugue in G minor, Bach; Minuet, Langdale; Ballade, Wolstenholme; Grand Chœur, Salome.

Mr. W. J. Comley, St. John's, Red Lion Square—Sonata No. 1, Harwood; Allegro Cantabile (Symphony No. 5), Widor; Marche Funèbre, Tchaikovsky; Pastorale (Sonata No. 12), Rheinberger; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Marche d'Ariane, Guilmant.

Mr. J. A. Meale, Wesleyan Central Hall, Westminster (two recitals)—Alla Marcia, Holloway; Festival Toccata, Fletcher; Minuet, Paderevski; Marche Hongroise, Wollenhaupt; Prelude and Fugue on the name BACH, Liszt; Evening Song, Bairdston.—At Wesleyan Church, Retford—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Overture to 'Oberon'; Nocturne in B, Julian Clifford; Concert March, 'The Tritone,' Wolstenholme.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (two recitals)—Sonata in F minor, Rheinberger; Overture, 'Athalia.'

Dr. Sydney Scott, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (two recitals)—Finale from Sonata in F sharp, Rheinberger; Villanelle, Ireland; Basso Ostinato, Arensky; Prelude in A, Liadov; March from 'Casse Noisette' Suite, Tchaikovsky.

Mr. W. E. Hopkins, St. Mary's, Donnybrook—First movement, Concerto in B flat, Handel; Prelude à l'Après-midi d'un Faune, and 'La Cathédrale Engloutie,' Debussy; Preludes Nos. 1 and 2, Scriabin; 'Verdun, 1916,' Stanford.

Mr. Harry Wall, St. Paul's, Covent Garden (four recitals)—Prelude on 'Angelus ad Virginem,' Pearce; Ave Maria, Reger; Arabesque, Vierne; 'Prière à Notre Dame,' Boëllmann; Prelude and Fugue, Op. 92, Reger; Allegro Cantabile (Symphony No. 5), Widor; Adagio in E, Frank Bridge; Prelude on 'Pange Lingua,' Pearce; Chorale Preludes, 'Jesu, my chief pleasure,' Reger; 'My heart is filled with longing,' and 'Lord, hear the voice of my complaint,' Bach; Meditation, Vierne; Prelude on 'Rockingham,' Parry.

Mr. T. A. Beirs, Parish Church, Sturminster, Dorset—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Rêverie, Stainer; Intermezzo, Chipp; Rêverie Dramatique, Vodortinski.

Corporal Leonard Brown, Central Mission, Nottingham—Melody and Intermezzo, Luard-Selby; Solemn March, Hancock; Andante from Violin Sonata, Schubert.

Mr. C. E. Blyton-Dobson, Central Mission, Nottingham (two recitals)—Concert Allegro, Dobson; Fugue in B minor, Bach; Fantasia and Toccata in D minor, Stanford; Choral Prelude No. 11, Brahms.

Mr. Gerald W. Spink, St. John's, Roundhay (two recitals)—
Fugue in G minor, Bach; Idylle in B, Bossi; Arabesque
No. 2, Debussy; Finale in D from Sonata Britannica, Stanford; Bridal Chorus, Guilmant; Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Romance sans Paroles, Bonnet.

APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. W. Bertram Collingwood, organist and choirmaster,
Kimberley Cathedral.
Mr. J. H. Jackson, organist and choirmaster, St. Matthew's, Southsea.
Captain Walter Pickford, organist and choirmaster, St.
Mary's, Newton Moor, Hyde.
Mr. Edgar Workman, organist and choirmaster, St. George's, Palmer's Green.

Reviews.

I will extol my God. Anthem for thanksgiving or general use. By John E. West.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

A note on the first page of Mr. West's anthem tells us that it was 'composed more expressly for use at Thanksgiving Services for Peace, 1919.' It is admirably fitted for such occasions, not only by reason of its words and music, but because it produces just the right note of solemn festivity without being unduly difficult. The average parish church choir is still either below its normal strength or short of practice, and Mr. West has done well to write an anthem that gives plenty of scope without being more than moderately difficult. The three opening pages contain some imposing and effective antiphonal passages for choir and organ. Contrast is provided in the middle section by a change of key (A to F), and a quasi-recit. for tenor and bass, followed by a delightful quartet or semi-chorus, into which the chorus breaks with a broad mf unison phrase. With a return to the original key, the choir delivers a variant of the phrase with which the anthem opened, and then proceeds to sing 'Alleluia, Amen' to flowing counterpoint, interrupted by a fine appearance (in G sharp major) of the variant. The final section gives us a return to the antiphonal manner of the commencement, and the work ends with a striking and unusual cadence. With its happy combination of tunefulness and breadth, unaccompanied passages, and free and vigorous organ part, the anthem strikes us as showing the composer at his best.

The Voice Beautiful in Speech and Song. A Consideration of the Capabilities of the Vocal Cords and their Work in the Art of Tone Production. By Ernest G. White.

[London and Toronto: J. M. Dent & Sons, Ltd.]

This remarkable book is a new and enlarged edition of 'Science and Singing,' which appeared a few years ago. In it the author sets forth his views on the art of singing, which are at variance with generally accepted theories on the subject.

'The whole burden of this book [says the author] is to show, and, if possible, convince the world in general, that the vocal cords—situated on the top of the windpipe, in what we call our throat—are not the seat of sound. That is to say, in neither speech nor song do the vocal cords actually create the tone.'

Mr. White advances many and various arguments to prove that sound is produced, not by vibrating cords, but by vibrating air, and that 'the vibrations are formed in the head, where there are free air chambers—the sinuses, strong and light, of very thin texture, admirably suited for the purpose claimed for them. . . . The pupil must be made to realise that in breathing only, the air cannot go higher than the nose; but in singing it has a longer journey to take before it leaves the body, as it continues its course upwards past the nostrils, so into the head, and then returns down the nostrils in a state of vibration, that is to say, as sound, the vibrations having been caused by the tortuous passages through which the breath has travelled, and also by the several slight bony obstructions or pillars past which it has to go.'

In the first part of the book the author fully develops his theory of sinus tone-production. Then follows an exhaustive discussion of the probabilities of vocal cord production, in which arguments are brought forward in support of the theory that the sole function of the vocal cords in singing is to govern and direct the amount of air which passes upwards through the head, and that the cords themselves are quite incapable of setting up those tonal vibrations which we term 'voice.'

The book shows evidence of deep research, and the author has been at great pains to educe evidence in support of his theories. He tabulates some remarkable facts which, in his opinion, should go far to destroy the theory that voice is created by the vocal cords. We quote the following:

A medical man introduced to me one of his patients, a man about twenty-eight years of age, who for twenty-five years had been unable to speak clearly, in consequence of his having lost both his vocal cords in an operation. This man was sent to me as a test case. What was the result? In two months he was able to speak clearly, and to sing a simple melody; and although the tone of his voice was not altogether beautiful, yet it was certainly not objectionable, and he had the compass of an octave under excellent control.

To strengthen his case, Mr. White carries his investigations into the animal world, and produces a considerable amount of interesting information to back up his contentions. He instances the snake, with vocal cords and without sinuses, unable to make any sound beyond a hiss; the sheep, practically without vocal cords and with sinuses, is able to speak well—to its own kind.

The author recognises that the acceptance of his theories will mean a very considerable revision of medical works, and also of medical practice with respect to the voice; but he enters an earnest plea for a reconsideration of the whole position of vocalization and speech.

Meanwhile, he looks forward hopefully to the time, perhaps not many years hence, when the 'throat and vocal cords will be considered as feeble a means of producing sound as implements of the Stone Age would now be considered feeble for producing power, and throughout the world everyone with power for speech and vocalization will be making use of and acknowledging the benefits of sinus or head-tone production.'

There is an excellent chapter on 'Inhalation and Enunciation,' and some valuable remarks on the so-called 'falsetto' voice. The book (which is written in a very interesting and persuasive manner) contains much information of real value to students and teachers of singing, and well deserves careful study. Its usefulness is enhanced by some excellent diagrams and reproductions of photographs.

SOME NEW SONGS.

Two striking songs by Janet Hamilton—a composer new to us—come from Winthrop Rogers. Both draw on 'A Shropshire Lad' for their words. The first is a simple and reticent setting of 'With rue my heart is laden'; the second adds yet one more to the many versions of 'On Bredon Hill.' Opinions may differ as to whether the bells in a setting of these words should be merely suggested, or treated as an ostinato. The composer has adopted the latter plan—not the right one, in our opinion, but undoubtedly the more picturesque. At all events, a very effective and well-written song is the result.

Sir Charles Stanford's 'The fair hills of Ireland' (Enoch & Sons) is a song with a good tune flowingly accompanied, with just a hint of monotony towards the end.

Cyril Scott's 'Oracle' and 'Sea-Fret' (Elkin) are characteristic examples of the composer's work. Only singers able to think harmonically will be quite at home with the first. For example, the bare notes of the melody are not much help when chords of C minor, G flat, E flat, C major, E minor, C minor, G, E major, D flat, and B flat, in root position, follow each other at a beat's distance, as they do in 'Oracle.' In 'Sea-Fret' the subtleties in rhythm and melodic curve, with the picturesque pianoforte part, make a striking piece of tone-painting.

'Adrift' is the third of Granville Bantock's 'Songs from the Chinese' (Elkin). It is a fine song, in which good singers and pianists will revel.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Cyril Scott's 'Caprice Chinois' (Elkin) may or may not have anything in common with Chinese music, but it is a delightful piece of bizarrierie. The main part consists of apparently inconsequential, rapid chords, appropriately played in what we believe is known as 'chopstick' fashion. Contrast is provided by a brief section tranquillo e poco improvisatore. 'In the Forest,' from the same composer and publisher, opens with a page marked 'Light and capricious, like birds,' and then proceeds 'murmuringly like the leaves of beeches.' It is a charming piece of descriptive music, though we doubt whether even the very best of pianists will be able to make his hearers understand that the murmuring leaves are those of the beech. We should have thought that any old leaves would do.

C. à Becket Williams' 'Hampton Court' Suite (Augener) is an essay in old style. Its three movements are called 'A la Passepiéd,' 'In the time of Watteau,' and 'Powder and Patches.' They are simple, pleasant, and well written; but a composer who deliberately adopts the idiom of a past day—especially one of the most artificial of past days—will find it difficult to say anything original. There will be too many well-worn clichés lying handy. Mr. à Becket Williams has been rather liberal in the use of these, and we advise him to leave the rather easy 'olden style' vein for one more natural and spontaneous.

The British Music Society's Bulletin. No. 2.

[19, Berners Street, W. 1.]

The second Bulletin of the British Music Society consists of a pamphlet on 'The Elizabethan Madrigal Composers,' by the Rev. Edmund H. Fellowes. It is a scholarly piece of work which deserves to be widely read.

The Musical Quarterly.

[Schirmer.]

The April issue contains much of interest to English musicians. Cyril Scott writes on 'The Two Attitudes,' dealing with the question of the past versus the present; G. Jean-Aubry treats of 'British music through French eyes' (doing a little less than justice to Elgar, we think); Edwin Evans has an excellent article on John Ireland; and W. Barclay Squire gives some letters of R. L. Pearsall. Other contributions include 'Balzac, the musician,' by D. C. Parker; 'The two trends of modern music in Stravinsky's works,' by Rudhyar D. Chennivière; 'The conventions of the music-drama,' by Brander Matthews, &c.

Letters to the Editor.

BARRING AND RHYTHMIC ACCENT.

SIR,—More than one writer in your pages has recently touched upon a subject of great importance, but one which has hardly received the investigation it deserves, namely, the perfect adaptation of the rhythm and phrasing of speech, and of the English language in particular, to musical setting, especially where part-writing is employed. I write merely as an amateur with limited experience, but with the hope that better qualified musicians may perhaps be induced to give some opinions on these points.

Foremost must come the question of the interpretation of the great madrigalists of the past. Was Milton accusing the Elizabethans of wearing 'Midas' ears' when he wrote his sonnet to Henry Lawes, or was he thinking of his own contemporaries, Locke and Gibbons for example? Or had the influence of instrumental music, and especially of dance measures with their strict barring, led men to misinterpret the freer rhythms of a century before? If this is so, is it not to be regretted that even the latest and best editors of the old works, both sacred and secular, still adhere to the rigid barring which has prevented so many from seeing the true beauties of our greatest English composers? I suppose the best apology for this system is to be found in the introduction to 'The English Madrigal School,' by the Rev. E. H. Fellowes. But the impression left after reading that introduction is that the bars are to be neglected by the singers, and the phrasing taken from the printed accents instead. Now if the bars are not a guide to the rhythm, why print them at all? Their places could be better taken by frequent lettering for practice purposes, and except perhaps where all parts are singing the same words together, it would be a help in this type of music for the conductor to make all his beats alike.

An experiment which seems worth trying is to bar the words instead of the music. This is simple enough in the Ayres, but should also be applicable to the more complicated rhythms of the Madrigals and even to the prose words of the sacred works. It would be a real relief to find an edition of Gibbons which gave choirs no temptation to sing 'Hosanna to the so-on of David.' To take a simple illustration of how this might be done I quote the words of No. 20 of Morley's Ballets for five voices:

Why | weeps a - | las my | la-dy | love and | mistress

Sweet- | heart | fearnot, | what though ã - | -while I | leave thee ?

My | life may | fail, but | I will | not de - | -ceive thee.

The above lines are not scanned: for then they would be divided into iambic or spondaic feet. They are merely barred as they would be if they were about to be set to a simple measure of the hymn-tune type. The accent in the second line is used to denote the simple inversion of stress, surely a more legitimate use of the symbol than that made of it by Mr. Fellowes! If these lines, thus barred, be written in under Morley's music and the existing bar-lines erased, the singers would never be in doubt as to how any line should be phrased. It is true that the bar-lines will not come together in the different parts, but is there a single valid reason why they should? Provided that the conductor makes his beats all alike, what is the first beat for the alto may be the fifth for the bass and the second for the tenor, but it will not take a great deal of practice to become used to this. Provided also that the time-value of the minim or crotchet remains the same, there is no need to place a fresh time-signature every time the length of the bar changes. Of course lettering for practice purposes would require to be frequent. Under the old system the phrase:

why weeps a - las.

in one part occurs in another as

why weeps a - las.

which has a most unsatisfactory result.

If it be conceded that this method of printing and conducting music is a legitimate one, perhaps the path would be smoothed not only for editors and performers of old music, but for composers who wish to adopt the maximum of freedom in rhythm with a view to adorning rather than mutilating their native language by wedding it to music.

As a study of delicate and graceful treatment of rhythms in their simplest form, one can hardly do better than go through John Dowland's 'First Book of Ayres,' as published by the Musical Antiquarian Society, re-barring each song according to the metre of the words. In one, for instance, the words:

If my complaints could passions move,
Or make men see wherein I suffer wrong, &c., have been beautifully phrased by the composer in a subtle combination of triple and quadruple measure. But the editor has entirely camouflaged this by forcing words and music into a rigid triple time, and putting false accents on the words 'or,' 'see,' and 'I.' The same complaint may be made of the treatment of the other songs in the book.—Yours, &c.,

HUGH GARDNER.

Kyle Akin, Isle of Skye.

NASAL RESONANCE: VOCAL UNANIMITY AND SINGING TECHNIQUE.

SIR,—After the extremely doubtful statements of Mr. Houston respecting nasal resonance (vide your November issue), I was delighted to read the letters of Messrs. Robertson and Humphreys, for I am a firm believer in this, the only resonance, which is ever taught or considered by the true vocal specialist.

No one who had had the pleasure of taking in hand the delicate, modestly used soprano voice, of scarcely an octave of notes, of a little Dutch girl of seventeen years and watching it develop into a sturdy compass of two octaves and a minor sixth—from the low F sharp to the D in alt.: no one whose most noticeable successes had been secured from vocal 'corks' and 'aged' male adults—many European-trained by noted professors—would fail to believe in the rejuvenating influence of nasal resonance of the right type!

Nasal resonance of the right type, as I understand it, is an effect or consequence of concentrated tone (and herein lies the test of the individual artist's artistic cunning), the high class result of which is, in plain English, the echo of the resonance.

Obviously the resonance of voice is not the same thing as the resonance of resonance, literally its own echo; and I venture to suggest to believers in this factor that to do away with an inevitable prejudice they, as teachers, should substitute for 'nasal' the more self-explanatory term 'echo.'

To enumerate the physical and artistic advantages of acquiring this echo, beyond stating that its most gratifying features are, in the long run, its automatic and preservative qualities, would unduly prolong and pass the limits of your correspondence column, but you will perhaps pardon me, at this distance, if I comment upon another matter concerning English voice-production.

Needless to say I refer to the actual position this musical subject should, and, I venture to think, will, take in the world of music after the great war; and I would couple with this consideration the question of greater unanimity in teaching as proposed by the British Singers' Society, and also the criticism of Dr. Percy Buck to the effect that when he learned singing he found that the professors 'either would not or could not explain the technical.'

As to the future position of singing, the outlook is rosy, always assuming that the leading teachers will adopt a process which makes for simplification—a sure sign of correct analysis! For it must not be forgotten (and I am now considering the question of unanimity) that the Anglo-Saxon temperament is to be allowed for, the phlegmatic Englishmen, the 'nation of shopkeepers,' and that singing professors are now more than ever being subjected to a national internal criticism, and when that has been swept away, as far as is possible in an art, a definite English 'School' will surely arise.

This criticism, this demand for 'chapter and verse' in regard to technical points, emanates from the intellectuals of the profession, the doctors of music, conductors and composers; but I would respectfully remind these, and many others, that it is not an intellectual disgrace that comparative unanimity or a satisfactory explanation of the technical have been so long delayed. Other musical subjects have experienced their 'intellectual travail,' strict counterpoint for one. Forty years ago, as a small boy, I have a lively recollection of hearing of the existence in violin circles of two 'schools,' called the 'stiff wrists' and 'loose wrists'; and certainly a more correct diagnosis of pianoforte technique is also a recent development.

The actual history of the teaching of voice-production in England is a comparatively short one, and though Dr. Buck's criticism is practically correct it ignores one aspect of English musical history—I refer to the institution of that educational blessing known as the 'open scholarship.' Viewed from this standpoint, a circumstance arises which I have not seen put forward as a reason for the slow diagnosis of vocal technique in professional singing circles; in fact it is a reason why the actual band of teachers leaving our leading institutions of professorial or academic mould is a negligible one.

The consequence has been that the general English musical world has become impregnated with thousands of high-class performers and numerous earnest students—the latter possessed of so lengthy a training that frequently the teaching instinct has also developed, to the ultimate benefit of both teachers and taught.

Now comes my point. A vocal scholarship is merely awarded to the possessor of the most promising natural organ, and previous lengthy training is by no means necessary. Appearance and personality are borne in mind by the adjudicators, who practically ignore technical ability, and are decidedly not on the look out for a serious, academic type of man—they remember the public!

A singing scholarship can scarcely be awarded in any other way, but surely here is one good reason why a satisfactory diagnosis of vocal technique has been slow to mature in Anglo-Saxon circles, for with this method of award a candidate with gifts as a teacher has won a scholarship only occasionally, through the misjudgment of the adjudicators—to err being human.

I am not ashamed to confess that a form of this mistake was evidently made the year I won my singing scholarship. On that occasion a soprano, a tenor, and myself—for three vacancies—were considered of sufficient promise to over-ride the claims, among others, of a candidate who ultimately became a regular singer at Covent Garden and who has probably sung there more frequently than any other English-speaking artist.

This fact speaks for itself, whereas in my own case the majority of the incidents in my thirty years' musical career have pointed to teaching rather than public performance being my métier.

I trust this personal reference may be viewed in the right way, for I am very keen that a satisfactory and simple explanation of vocal technique should emanate from Englishmen. To me this matter offers no difficulties, for guided by the preserved condition of my own voice—open scholarship, and twenty-seven years' teaching experience of one method and master—vocal technique is no mystery, its difficulty of attainment being its simplicity. However, the semi-unravelling of the same, and a consequent theoretical diagnosis—aided by a partly natural and largely cultivated optimism born of my being originally the resident articulated organ pupil of a great musical enthusiast—have more than compensated me for any disappointment I may have experienced from time to time at the absence of the excitement of the more public career.

To sum up, therefore, the outlook for English singing is a most promising one. Under the influence of modern analytical tendencies a diagnosis of technique in singing is about to mature, and as regards nasal resonance it most certainly is a factor in all singing which is truly brilliant; but the reasons, acoustical or otherwise, are too many to allude to in a letter. Finally, when considering the finest exponents of 'echo,' if, when they sing, this matter of nose is not audible, my readers must not forget that many a point technically in an art is more real than apparent. This is the Art-fulness of it all—the singer's art—for obviousness is not Art!—Yours, &c.,

HERBERT HILTON.

45a, St. George's Street,
Cape Town, S.A.

SIR,—The acquisition of tone reinforcement obtained by striving for nasal resonance is liable to lead, in my opinion, to disastrous results. Voices trained on this principle may acquire a penetrating tone, but they are liable to become hard and monotonous in timbre.

There are only three sounds in the English language in which the tone should pass through the nose. These are m, n, and ng. It is certainly true that vibrations are felt in the head when singing vowels, but these are caused by the resonating cavities in the head vibrating in sympathy with the note produced in the larynx, and not by the breath even partially passing through the nose. The chest also vibrates, but no one has yet discovered that the column of breath is sent back into the chest in order to arouse vibrations there after it has passed through the glottis.

When the larynx is low (not resulting from tongue depression, but unconsciously drawn down by the action of the sterno-thyroid muscles when the breath is controlled), the voice is rich in quality, and the sympathetic head and chest vibrations add their quota to those in the expanded neck and open mouth.

The following experiment will serve to prove this contention: hum the sound of m on any convenient note so that the vibrations are felt directly in the nose. Then open the mouth to the ah position (thus singing the syllable mah). The vowel sound ah will then be of a mean quality (even if pinching the nose whilst singing proves that this sound is not actually nasal), and a looking-glass will show that the larynx is in a high position. Now repeat the experiment, but this time in such a manner that the vibrations of the m are felt on the lips (although the sound is really nasal). On opening the lips for the ah the tone will be rich, and the larynx will have been in a low position during the whole time mah was being sung. Therefore it proves that the position of the larynx adds richness to the voice, and the different sensations felt when humming the m are the result and not the cause of bad or good tone.

The use of the nasal cavities when singing English vowel sounds for the purpose of dramatic expression is quite another matter, but the normal tone of the voice should not suggest any one particular resonator.—Yours, &c.,

DAWSON FREER.

Wigmore Studios, W.-1.

MODERN BRITISH COMPOSERS.

SIR,—It is to be hoped that Mr. Edwin Evans will give us proof of his own eclecticism by devoting one or two of his articles on 'Modern British Composers' to the writers of so-called light music, who, while they receive the acclamation of the multitude as contributors to the gaiety of a popular show, are apt to be under-estimated as musicians pure and simple.

It is true there are many who write for popularity alone, and care nothing for the artistic finish of their work: in many cases they hand it over in a rough state to one more competent than themselves, whose orchestration will be the making of the piece. But there are others in whose work the musician cannot fail to detect finesses of workmanship and a technical mastery that many 'serious' composers conspicuously lack.

It is almost impossible to define where 'serious' music ends and 'light' music begins. Most people would say at once that the quality of the thought marked the difference; but an incompetent amateur striving ineffectually to utter his lofty thoughts is in no artistic sense superior to the man who can achieve a perfect expression of a less exalted idea.

The greatest composers have at times descended to trivialities, and it is a notable fact that their trivialities are seldom as good as the trivialities of those who aim at nothing higher.

In the majority of cases, the 'serious' composer who turns to deliberate 'pot-boiling' either fails altogether to boil the pot, or else does nothing else for the rest of his life, having at last found his true métier.

I venture to assert that if any musician will leave all his prejudices at home and visit, say, the Comedy Theatre, where Mr. Philip Braham is composer-conductor, he will hear a small orchestra whose ensemble it would not be easy to better, and scoring of a sureness and subtlety for which one might search in vain in some of those neglected native masterpieces for which the poor worn-out 'classics' are expected to make room in our concert-programmes.—Yours, &c.,

PHILIP HESELTINE.

35, Warrington Crescent, W.-9.

[Mr. Heseltine apparently forgets that the successful composer of light music needs no propaganda. For example, Mr. Philip Braham (whose gifts we fully appreciate) has a large audience guaranteed every time the Comedy opens its doors. The composers of whom Mr. Evans writes have few opportunities for reaching the public, either through performance or publication, and therefore need such help as can be given in the musical Press.—ED., M.T.]

MR. BENJAMIN DALE'S SONATA.

SIR,—In his interesting article on Benjamin Dale, appearing in this month's Musical Times, Mr. Edwin Evans omits to mention the circumstance which brought this gifted young composer's name to the fore. It was in 1906 that Mr. Mark Hambourg offered three prizes of twenty, ten, and five guineas each for pianoforte works of a serious character by British composers. The adjudicators were the late Coleridge-Taylor, Messrs. Mark Hambourg, Landon Ronald, Gilbert Webb, Alfred Kalisch, and the writer of these lines. No fewer than sixty compositions were received, and the first-prize was awarded to Mr. Benjamin Dale for his beautiful Sonata in D minor. Mr. Percy Pitt gained the second prize with a 'Fantasia Appassionata,' also a very remarkable work, and the third prize was allotted to Miss Emmeline Brook for an attractive Scherzo. I remember that the pieces sent in included several of more than average merit. Mr. Dale is still a young man, and much may be expected of one who has commenced so brilliantly. At the close of his article, Mr. Edwin Evans remarks that 'the present trend of musical psychology favours ruggedness rather than polished utterance, and the cult of beautiful phrases is giving way to a search for greater veracity.' Surely beautiful phrases are not necessarily incompatible with veracity! The search after novelty, if improperly directed, often leads the inexperienced composer into morasses whither few care to follow. So well-balanced a musician as Mr. Dale, however, may well be trusted not to allow himself to be led astray by the many will-o'-the-wisps which lure the unwary to destruction, and, while keeping in touch with the times, to avoid the eccentricities of passing fashions.—Yours, &c.,

1, Norfolk Crescent,

Hyde Park, W.,

May 2, 1919.

ARTHUR HERVEY.

MERBECKE.

SIR,—Dr. Terry, contrary to his custom, views this composer and adapter's methods merely from an antiquarian standpoint. As it does not fall within the 'scope of his employment' (to use a legal phrase) to handle the music in a practical way, perhaps he would not mind one who does saying something on one or two points raised in his interesting lecture.

Whilst Merbecke appears to have assigned varying values to the different notes that he used, these were not intended to bear the absolute values of measured music. The true traditions of plain-chant were obscured in his day, and the notation had become debased. We all know how the diamond note had got to mean a short one, instead of merely an ornamental lower note, and how long this survived.

Sir John Stainer, apparently despairing of the plain-chant of his day, thought that it could only be preserved by its being frankly converted into modern music. This he did in treating Merbecke by confining it within bars with definite note-values, and accompanying it with modern harmony. But this had nothing in common with the conceptions of Merbecke. When the new light came through Solesmes, Sir John doubtless repented himself of everything, but all that has been recorded in public was a certain recommendation of his in 1895 in the interests of freedom in performance. This is entirely opposed to what Dr. Terry says, and nothing was mentioned about the accompaniment, as he suggests. I might add that the accompaniment as it stands is, I am afraid, quite prohibitive of any freedom in the modern sense, even if the bars be ignored.

The musician who really endeavoured loyally to reflect what must now be regarded as the muddled ideas of Merbecke, was Dr. Basil Harwood, in his interesting edition of 1908, for there he attempts to reproduce the not-quite-measured and not-quite-free methods of Merbecke, and accompanies the music with the counterpoint of the period, unbarred. Dr. Terry should refer to the useful preface, as well as Helmore's treatment of the music in his 'Accompanying Harmonies to the Brief Directory of the Plain-song' &c., of 1853. As a universal working principle this half-and-half treatment of plain-song is, however, bound to fail. The other day I taught thirteen-hundred people to sing portions of Merbecke's Communion Office as modern syllabic plain-chant on Solesmes principles. This was perfectly easy; but it would have been impossible on the intermediate principle attributed to Merbecke. I should add that the former method, which Dr. Terry condemns, was adopted on high authority, and seven years' experience proves to me that it is the only one that has the slightest chance of permanent survival. There are signs indeed that it may become universal in the Church.

As Dr. Terry knows full well, antiquarian ideals cannot always be applied strictly to old forms of music in practical performance.—Yours, &c.,

S. ROYLE SHORE.

THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS OF GREAT BRITAIN.

SIR,—In the interest of musicians generally, may I venture to ask if you can mention in the Musical Times that the Royal Society of Musicians is now again open for the election of new members, no males of military age having been proposed for the last four years. The great advantages of membership are manifold, and all professional British musicians who have studied and practised music for seven years are eligible for election.

The cost of membership to a male musician of twenty-one years of age is £10 10s. entrance fee, and an annual subscription of £3 3s. (less than 1s. 3d. a week); to a female musician of similar age, £5 5s. entrance fee, and an annual subscription of £3 3s. The benefits which may be granted by the Governors and Court of Assistants out of funds contributed by past members and the generous music-loving public, may amount to as much as £175 a year for life in case of total incapacity to continue a musical career, and smaller sums in case of sickness or temporary incapacity, besides grants to widows and children for maintenance, schooling, and apprenticeship.

From Handel to the present day most of our leading musicians have been members, some of them in their declining years thankfully availing themselves of the benefits of the Society.

All particulars can be obtained from the secretary, Mr. J. F. C. Bennett, 4, Bishopsgate, Cornhill, E.C.2.—Yours, &c.,

W. H. BRERETON

(Hon. Treasurer, the Royal Society of Musicians of Great Britain).

May, 1919.

MISTAKEN PRONUNCIATION, ETC.

SIR,—Your correspondent of Manchester in the May number of the Musical Times makes a mistake in saying that Catalani's opera 'La Wally' is, when naming it, to be pronounced 'Vallée' as in French. It is pronounced 'Vallee' (of course with no accent) as in English. At least thus it is always called in Italy. I wonder if Mr. O'Mara has come across the same composer's best opera, one very superior in every way to that under discussion? I refer to his 'Loreley.' It is dramatic both in libretto and music, containing some beautiful vocal melody and some most charming ballet music which is frequently included in high-class orchestral concerts. There is also much scope for beautiful scenic effects. It is given twenty times in Italy to once of 'La Wally.' Alluding to the discussion going on in your paper regarding Beethoven as a song-writer, surely 'Feste' when he speaks of the great Bonn master as 'a failure as a song composer' must have heard Beethoven's Creation's Hymn, 'Ah! Perfido,' and his fine 'In questa tomba,' and yet one would scarcely think so!—Yours, &c.,

CLAUDE TREVOR.

BEETHOVEN.

SIR,—I know of no more stimulating writer on musical matters than 'Feste,' and this although one may not always agree with him. Every month I look forward to a perusal of his remarks, and rarely do I not find something which makes me think. There may be much in the April 'Interludes' with which many might disagree, but all the same there are so many deep penetrating truths expressed that the whole must command respect. One only regrets that he thought fit to excuse his temerity by appealing to the opinion of other musicians. The time is past for writers to confine themselves to things palatable to the public—each man ought to say what he believes and draw the consequences.

The whole article raises the very important question of taste. In literature, one man takes delight in reading drama, another essays, another lyrical poetry, and another biographies, and most blessed is the man who finds pleasure in all. But how rare such a man is! Yet no one would find fault with the taste of any of them devoted to one line; his taste might be perfect in the special department in which he was interested. It is forgotten that music is, if anything, more expressive of temperament than even literature, and that consequently much music which is of the very best will not appeal to some, with whose taste no fault can be found, simply because the temperaments of composer and listener are not compatible.

No doubt, too, one changes with time. Does not one, for instance, change his political opinions? Mine are not those I held ten years ago; more experience has altered my views. But it is not everyone who has the frankness to be convinced by experience. It is the same in music. A man ought to develop all his life, and each year he ought to be able to mark himself as being different from the year before. In this way one's life becomes rich, and it is a pity that when one is dead he is precluded from reviewing each year's enthusiasm. This year I find myself devouring the music of Byrd and Farnaby, last year I was specially enthusiastic over modern Britons, and next year I hope to be lunatic over some other group. I have not yet reached the stage when I tire of Beethoven or am bored with Haydn or Mozart, or am in other than ecstasies over Purcell, and my hope is that I never shall. But, then, who knows?

'Feste' hits at the root of the whole matter. There are fashions in art, and these fashions are not entirely artificial as some pundits would have us believe. From time to time we have great movements of thought which cannot leave us entirely unaffected either in our expression or in our tastes. In the 20th century there has become prevalent great dissatisfaction with the complicated social system, the product of a mechanical age. People are filled with aspirations they know not how to define. Their hopes are vague and chaotic. Who, in looking through Russian art—whether in literature or music—does not perceive the foreshadowing of an anarchist revolution? Who does not observe the same symptoms of chaotic emotional outburst, perhaps somewhat less disordered, in all our arts—literature, painting, and music alike? Such art may not be good, but on that point unsentimental time will give its verdict.

There is a special remark of 'Feste's' which goes home, I regretfully admit, in my own case. I am among the conservatives in music. I like intelligibility, and a disordered intellect makes little or no appeal to me. But probably this is my own fault: it is perhaps due to mental laziness. As 'Feste' says, 'It is much easier continually to renew our acquaintance with an old symphony than to get at the heart of a new one.' Yes, there is a great deal in this. I have suffered headaches in the attempt to understand some contemporary works, but no doubt it indicates an unwillingness to change. One ought to understand and appraise properly contemporary art. Any fool can applaud that in which he has had the judgment of many eminent critics to whose discernment much homage has been paid. The real criterion of good taste is to be able to anticipate the opinion of posterity, and this will never be achieved by him who refuses to consider the art of his own age. We must either go forward or else go back; we cannot stand still. And if we refuse to give living artists a fair chance, we are only repeating the crimes of those in past ages whom we denounce for having allowed artists to die in want.—Yours, &c.,

JOHN ABTHORNE.

April 13, 1919.

SIR,—May I venture to challenge the statement made by 'Feste' to the effect that Beethoven was a failure as a song composer. This revival of an old cry seems to indicate a return of the mental inertia of the mid-Victorian era—the songs are not easy, therefore they are not good.

This leads me to ask, has 'Feste' studied the Beethoven songs, sung and played them—studied them as he would a sonata or symphony, until they reveal their beauties? If he has not so studied them, he has no right to dogmatise on the subject, and if he has so studied them, I ask him to formulate a critical analysis, showing how and why the songs are failures. To render his task less difficult, I give a list of twelve songs by Beethoven, and I ask 'Feste' not only to give the reasons for their failure to achieve greatness, but also to give a parallel list of songs by any other composer which reach as high a standard: 'An die Hoffnung,' Op. 12; 'Adelaide,' Op. 48; (Cycle) 'Sechs Lieder von Gellert,' Op. 48; 'Mignon,' Op. 75, No. 1; 'Wonne der Wehmut,' Op. 83; 'Der Wachtelschlag'; 'Abendlied.'

As to the Symphonies, surely 'Feste' is not serious in wishing to exchange the austere purity of the Beethoven scores for the vulgarities of the modern orchestra! The fact that the fever of modern life is revealed in modern orchestral (and other) music does not prove that the feverish state is preferable to health. Beethoven achieved colossal effects (spiritual and aural) with a limited orchestra. Strauss achieved a colossal noise by dint of straining the resources of the modern orchestra.

If 'Feste' is desirous of arguing that noise is synonymous with power, I humbly suggest that he re-score the first bars of the Symphony No. 5 for two hundred timpani in G and E flat. He will surely get a colossal noise, the sole raison-d'être of most modern orchestral works.

Knowing that 'Feste' carries very heavy metal (and hoping for a salvo therefrom), I beg to subscribe myself

EIN FEST BURG.

SIR,—'Feste' has entirely missed the point of my letter, which dealt, not with a question of opinion, but with one of fact. He stated that he had 'never yet seen any claim put forward that Beethoven was other than a failure as a song composer.' I gave quotations to the contrary from books by Ritter and Parry—books with which 'Feste' ought to have been acquainted. In reply, he gives an extract from a book by Sir Henry Hadow, to prove that the latter has a poor opinion of Beethoven as a composer of songs. (His second quotation does not even serve his own mistaken purpose.) But if he could give a hundred such opinions, his case would be no better. A man who is unacquainted with, or who has forgotten, the writings of such well-known historians as Ritter and Parry, is unwise when he makes such a sweeping assertion as the above.—Yours, &c.,

5, Richmond Mansions, ARTHUR T. FROGGATT.
Denton Road, Twickenham,
May 4, 1919.

SIR,—In my humble opinion this Beethoven controversy, which 'Feste' is conducting so ably, is a significant musical event. Sooner or later it is going to be of inestimable value to the cause of music, and I only hope you will not let it drop too soon. My only quarrel is that 'Feste' is too lenient to Beethoven in the matter of the limitation of the instruments of his time, and this is my reason: Surely the most astounding fact in the whole of musical history is that Weber died before Beethoven. Now Weber had the same limitations imposed on him as Beethoven, and yet I do not think the former's orchestral works will ever need re-scoring. The opening of the 'Oberon' Overture, for instance, sounds as modern to-day as it must have done when it was first played. Will 'Feste' discuss this point in a future article, and thus much oblige?—Yours, &c.,

ROBERT E. LORENZ.

14, Craven Hill, W.-2.

SIR,—'Feste' wishes to re-score Beethoven, or at any rate to have him re-scored—'a matter of the letter versus the spirit': he says, 'I do not care for this or that passage as it stands; it is obviously a miscalculation on the part of Beethoven. Let us re-score the symphonies—bring them into line with modern orchestral requirements; let us have the spirit of Beethoven rather than the letter.'

Unfortunately the spirit of Beethoven is rather elusive. Can we be sure that the result of this titivation will not be rather the spirit of 'Feste' or of Sir Hugo Burls and his learned collaborators?

Now, how is he going about it? By adding instrumental parts?—by increasing the volume of sound?—by making 'a jolly good row'? So, 'the spirit of Beethoven' is to be produced by sacrificing to Jumbo!

We all know the sad fate of Bach. Any day of the week we can hear some pianist straining every muscle of his body in thumping out a thundering 'Bach so-and-so piano-forte arrangement,' or in plodding through one of the Preludes and Fugues in the approved bag-pipe manner—without graces, without silences d'articulation, with the appoggiature either left out or played short, and yet, doubtless, the arrangers and editors thought that they were reproducing the spirit of Bach!

A little clavierchord that I know, and on which I have often heard Bach played as he should be played, with the spirit which is in the letter, bears the motto 'Plus fait douceur que violence.' Perhaps 'Feste' knows it too.—Yours, &c.,

GERALD M. COOPER.

18, Park Street,
Grosvenor Square.

[We are unable to print all the letters we have received on this subject. The majority of the writers are decidedly against the views and suggestions of 'Feste.' Their opinions, however, would have carried more weight if they had not apparently been under the impression that the best way to defend Beethoven was to attack modern composers and the modern orchestra. We have had several requests for a continuation of the discussion, but in view of the present great musical activity, with the consequent demand on our space, we must close it. 'Feste' deals with some of the above letters in 'Interludes.'—ED., M. T.]

Obituary.

We regret to record the following deaths:

REV. SIR JOHN PENTLAND MAHAFFY, G.B.E., C.V.O., D.D., LL.D., Mus. D., D.C.L., on April 30, aged eighty, Born of Irish parents at Chapponnani, near Vevey, on the lake of Geneva, on February 26, 1839, he was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and obtained a Fellowship in 1864. For full fifty-five years Prof. Mahaffy was identified with Dublin University, becoming Vice-Provost in 1913, and finally Provost in 1915. No man in his generation was more popular than the 'old General,' as the 'boys' called him, and he was a good sportsman as well as a world-famed Greek scholar. He was honoured by the leading Universities of Europe, and was a corresponding member of many learned Academies, being also a Knight Commander of the Order of the Saviour, in Greece. The list of his published works would fill half-a-column. As a musician he was in high repute, and was Precentor of the College chapel for half-a-century, being also for forty-two years a member of the University Choral Society. Through his efforts the status of the Professorship of Music was raised and the salary increased in 1871, and he also raised the standard for musical degrees in his old University, of which he was granted the honorary degree of Mus. Doc. in 1891. Through his influence Prof. Prout was appointed in 1894, as was also Prof. Buck in 1910. His personality will long be missed, as he was one of the most versatile men of his time.

DR. ARTHUR STEPHEN HOLLOWAY, organist and composer, on March 23, aged seventy. He graduated Mus. B. in 1875, and proceeded Mus. D. in 1894, at Oxford. He was also a Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, and was one of the examiners of the London College of Music. Among his published compositions are masses, anthems, hymns, and organ music, and he edited 'Hymns on the Deeper Life,' and the 'Choir Companion.'

WILLIAM J. DEVERS, composer of popular songs, on May 6, aged fifty-eight. He was a native of Belfast, and was not brought up to music, but had a genuine gift of melody, and in 1879 published his first song, 'Our Jack's come home to-day,' which had a wonderful vogue. Other songs of his, such as 'Moriarty' and 'The shamrock, rose, and thistle,' were more or less successful, and he never essayed higher flights.

MISS M. PIERCE, organist for forty years of the Franciscan Church, Wexford, on May 12. Her sister had been for over forty years organist of the Loreto Convent Church, Gorey, and died recently. Both were very talented musicians.

Sixty Years Ago.

From the Musical Times of June, 1859.

TO BE SOLD, a good BARREL-ORGAN, by Bates. Has been built about six years, of average power, with four stops; two barrels, each containing eleven tunes, and three chants; in Gothic case, oak-painted. Price £25. Apply to the Rev. T. Mason, Shapwick Vicarage, Bath.

From an article, 'TEACHERS & METHODS OF TEACHING.' By DR. MARX.

There are, indeed, masters who limit themselves to approved works, on the sole authority of the name, without taking any lively interest in them; in this case, certainly, their instruction can be but of small benefit.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A Singing Master desires our opinion respecting the 'morality' of the words of a certain English song, and says he has been found fault with, for giving it to a young lady pupil. The words are not worse than a thousand other love ditties, and might be sung by any lady if it pleased her to do so; but we think it highly objectionable for a singing master to place such impassioned love effusions in the hands of his young pupils.

NEW SONG.

RIFLEMEN, FORM! By ALFRED TENNYSON and M. W. BALFE. Price 2s. Sung at the Canterbury Hall and Evans's, every evening, with the greatest success. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street, London.

Just published.

CATHOLIC SONG, 'THE FLOWER GATHERERS.' Respectfully dedicated to the Very Rev. F. W. Faber, D.D., by ALEXANDER J. PECKET. Price 2s. Published by J. Alfred Novello. To be had of the Author, at his Music Saloon, Scarbro'. A considerable allowance made to the Clergy, the Young Men's Society, Schools, &c., &c.

THE MUSICIANS' Y.M.C.A. GIFT.

This is a scheme for providing additional musical facilities for the members of His Majesty's Forces in the 2,600 Huts and Centres of the Y.M.C.A. at home and abroad.

Committee.—The Editors of all the Musical Papers of the Country.

Hon. Treasurer.—Dr. H. Walford Davies

Hon. Secretary.—Percy A. Scholes, Mus. Bac.

Organizing Secretary.—Madame Lily Henkel.

Office.—Y.M.C.A., Universities House, 25, Bloomsbury Square, W.C.1.

	£	s.	d.
Total received	3,853	0	0
Total received since December 31, 1918	932	0	9
Receipts during the month April 11 to May 11, 1919	277	0	0

(a) PROCEEDS OF CONCERTS AND ENTERTAINMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Dublin	105	0	0
Chester	45	18	4
Warrington	20	0	0
Teddington	13	13	6
Hereford	4	12	0
Chilworth	3	10	0
Belfast	2	15	0

£195 8 10

(b) ORGAN RECITALS.

	£	s.	d.
Worcester	21	0	0
London	11	10	9
Birtley, Co. Durham	5	11	0
Newport, Mon.	1	16	2
	0	12	0
	6	7	6
	2	8	0
	£55	14	5

(c) DONATIONS AND COLLECTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Wolverhampton High School for Girls, per Miss Kirkman	14	0	0
Miss D. L. Rattey and Pupils	3	12	0
Collection at 'Youth and Music' Meeting at Abercorn House, Tunbridge Wells, per Miss M. E. Smith	1	15	0
Queen's School, Chester, per Miss B. Clay	1	10	0
Miss Audrey Paddon (collection at Miss Lownds' Studio)	1	10	0
Mr. Newton Marsden (subscribed at Plaistow 'Youth and Music' Club)	0	10	0
Mr. Robert R. Broome	1	1	0
Miss A. Bullard (second Donation)	1	1	0
Miss Agnes Fennings	1	1	0
Miss Margaret Lucas	0	2	6
Miss J. Murray	0	10	6
	£26	13	0

The above account of the month's receipts is very cheering. Evidently the great need which still exists is recognised all over the country. Opportunities for musical activities amongst the troops are still urgently required. The men have now leisure—and every reader of this paper will want to see some of that leisure occupied in music.

There are three ways in which help can be sent—first (and most important), Money; secondly, Disused Instruments; thirdly, Disused Music and Books on Music.

Please help now; do not delay!

If intending to give a concert or entertainment for the Fund, apply for the authorization to the above address.

SOME MUSICAL SIGNS.

By C. EDGAR THOMAS.

The signboard occupies a distinct and picturesque niche in the somewhat diversified and romantic history of trade and commerce. In common with most other ancient customs, its origin must be sought for amidst the twilight of antiquity: the ancient Egyptians and Greeks are known to have employed signs extensively, and many beautiful Roman specimens have been preserved to us.

Of all shapes and sizes, many of the old-time signs possessed great artistic merit—especially those of the 16th and 17th centuries, when, indeed, they may be said to have reached their zenith—while in many instances the posts or metal supports protruding from the houses over which the signs were hung were elaborately wrought, and many beautiful examples of hammered-iron supports still survive both in England and on the Continent. At this period they were a prominent feature of the streets of London town and other large cities; but in course of time they became a danger, and not infrequently a nuisance, in the narrow ways, a circumstance which eventually led to the discarding of this picturesque method of advertising.

The proprietors of the old-time 'musick-shoppes' invariably adhered to the primitive custom of utilising the instruments they dealt in as their signs; for instance, the 'Harp and Hoboy' in Catherine Street, Strand, was the place of business of John Walsh, the music publisher and instrument maker. Walsh, it is interesting to note, was the first to be appointed 'Musical instrument maker and music seller to the King,' and this appointment extended to the son, John Walsh, jun., through the succeeding reigns. Down to the year 1705, the sign appeared as 'The Golden Harp and Hoboy,' and about 1710 Walsh took into partnership P. Randall, who advertised from the same address 'Mr. Pepusch's Airs for Two Violins.' It was from the 'Harp and Hoboy' that Walsh issued the compositions of the distinguished composer and violinist, Francesco Geminiani, among which was 'Concerti Grossi per Due Violini, Viola, e Violoncello di Concertino Obbligati e Due Altri Violini e Basso di Concerto Grosso da Francesco Geminiani . . . Opera terza.'

Among the files of the Craftsman for 1729 may be found Walsh's advertisements, in which he described himself as 'servant to His Majesty,' and later as 'Music Printer and Instrument maker to His Majesty George II.' The old house in which the Walsh's carried on their business—and at which many of the principal works of Handel were printed—is now no more, for it disappeared, together with Wych Street, booksellers' row, and many other quaint old thoroughfares, during the Aldwych improvements.

At the 'Golden Harp' in New Street, Covent Garden, Ben. Cooke carried on his music publishing business, certainly from 1733 to 1742, and here in all probability was born his son, the distinguished English composer, Benjamin Cooke.

A contemporary of Walsh's was Joseph Hare, whose place of business was the 'Viol and Hoboy' in Cornhill, near to the Royal Exchange, as well as another establishment in St. Paul's Churchyard, the 'Golden Violin.' This latter sign more generally stood as the 'Golden Viol,' and more frequently still as 'Viall.'

John Johnson's sign was the 'Harp and Crown,' and his premises were situated 'facing Bow Church' in Cheapside. After his death, cir. 1762, the sign was adopted by James Longman, afterwards Longman & Broderip, who was then commencing a music-selling business at another part of Cheapside.

Walsh at the 'Harp and Hoboy,' Ben. Cooke at the 'Golden Harp,' and John Johnson at the 'Harp and Crown,' would appear to have been the three leading mid-18th century music publishers.

The sign of Henry Fougat, a printer and publisher of sheet and other music, and the inventor of various improvements in the matter of metal types, was the 'Lyre and Owl,' St. Martin's Lane, where he commenced business in or about 1767. His success would appear to have aroused the jealousy of his competitors, and Hawkins remarks that the London music-sellers afterwards copied his publications on pewter plates, and thus by underselling drove him out of the kingdom. This statement is, however, open to grave suspicion, for at that time sheet music cost on an average sixpence a page, while Fougat sold his sheets at one penny. Fougat obtained a patent for the sole printing of music on letterpress types of his own founding, but from all accounts this patent would have been declared void had it been contested at law, for the device was not altogether a new one.

About the year 1685 there resided at the 'Golden Ball,' Royal Exchange, a music engraver and seller named Joseph Hindmarsh; while another early music-seller was Humphrey Salter, who established himself at the sign of 'The Lute,' St. Paul's Churchyard, in 1683, and continued to publish until at least 1705. A still earlier music and letterpress printer was Peter Short, who from 1584 to 1603 lived at the sign of the 'Star' in Bread Street Hill. From here he issued quite a number of early musical works, madrigal books, &c., among them Morley's 'Plaine and Easie Introduction to practtall Musick, 1597,' Cavendish's 'Ayres,' and Morley's 'Canzonets.' Short was succeeded in the business, with the same sign, by Humfrey Lowndes, who remained there until 1608.

John Cullen succeeded to the famous music publishing business of the Playfords, and appears to have been at the zenith of his fame between 1705-10. His sign was variously given as 'At the Buck without Temple Bar,' and 'At the Buck between the two Temple Gates.'

At the 'Signe of the Blew Anchor,' in the New Exchange, there to be found during the latter half of the 17th century the premises of Henry Herringman, who issued, among many musical works, the first edition of D'Urfey's 'A Fool's Preferment,' 1688, and several works of Purcell; and a century later 'Dr. Arne's Head,' in Cheapside, was the place of business of J. Harrison, a London music publisher, who had originally established himself in Fleet Street. Towards the end of the century this latter business became 'Harrison, Cluse & Co.,' with an address first in Fleet Street and afterwards in Newgate Street. It is to be feared that the new business did not long survive the birth of the new century. The firm, however, is deserving of notice as having specialised in the issue of the Pianoforte Magazine, consisting of operas, pianoforte pieces, &c., and which totalled some thirty volumes. It was issued at half-a-crown a part, and from advertisements of the time we find that purchasers were entitled, after a certain number of payments, to a pianoforte!

But we have gone on apace. Mention should have been made ere this of Edward Alde, a music publisher who, between 1587 and 1600, did business at the 'Sign of the Golden Cup,' without Cripplegate, and of whom little is known; also Thomas Adams, of the 'White Lion,' St. Paul's Churchyard, whose activities ranged from 1603 to 1614, and of whom also little is known.

Among the Elizabethans there was 'honest' John Windet, whose sign was the 'White Bear,' and whose shop was in Adling Street, near Bernard's Castle. In 1594 he had removed to the 'Cross Keyes,' near St. Paul's Wharf, where he issued several editions of Sternhold's Psalms. His business career is said to have extended from 1586 to 1651, but this is probably wrong. Among his publications may be mentioned: Hume's 'Ayres, French, Polish, and others,' 1605; Greave's 'Songs of Sundrie Kindes'; the quaint 'An Howres Recreation in Musicke,' by Richard Alison, 1606; and Robert Jones's 'First set of Madrigals.'

John Young was a music publisher and musical instrument dealer at the sign of the 'Dolphin and Crown,' St. Paul's Churchyard, at the latter end of the 17th century. From here were issued 'A Choice collection of Ayres,' by Blow, Piggot, Clarke, Barrett, and Croft; 'The Flute Master Compleat; Improved, or the Gentleman's Diversion'; and the 'Compleat Tutor to the Violin,' of John Bannister, &c. Old John had a son named Talbot, who had been a chorister in St. Paul's Choir, and had attained to some proficiency on the violin. Hawkins informs us that the merits of the two Youngs, father and son, were celebrated in the following lines which were set to music in the form of a catch, and published in 1726:

You scrapers that want a good fiddle well strung,
You should go to the man that is old while he's Young.
But if this same fiddle you fain wou'd play bold,
You must go to his son, who'll be Young when he's old.
There's old Young and young Young, both men of renown,
Old sells, and young plays the best fiddle in town.
Young and old live together, and may they live long,
Young to play an old fiddle, Old to sell a new song.

The 'Gun' was the sign of Henry Brome, who was established at the west end of St. Paul's in 1678. A musical bookseller and publisher, he issued Simpson's 'Compendium of Practical Music,' 1667; and also published 'New Ayres and Dialogues for Voices and Viols,' by John Bannister and Thomas Law, 1678.

The 18th century provides us with many musical signs: 'The French Horn and Violin,' 'The Violin,' the 'Hautboy and German Flute,' and the 'Hautboy and Two Flutes,' to mention but a few. The 'Hautboy' particularly was a very favourite sign, as it was a very favourite street instrument, being frequently heard at the Christmas 'waits,' and on occasions of public rejoicing. Waits, by-the-way, are said by one authority to have derived their name from the hautboy, but this is possibly a mistake, for the waits were 'watches'—guets, who went round certain hours of the night with music, to let it be known that they were on the look out, and to make people feel secure. However, Butler, in his 'Principles of Music,' says: 'It is remarkable of this noun [Waits] that it has no singular number; for we never say a Wait, or the Wait, but the Waits. In the Etymologicum of Junius the word is used to signify the players on these instruments, and is thus explained: "Waits, lycrines, tibicines, citharædi, f. a verb, to wait, quia f. magistratus & alios in pompis instar stipatorum, sequuntur, vel a G. guet, vigilia, guetter, quia noctu exubias agunt quæ eandem agnoscunt originem ac nostrum watch, vigilie."'

John Brown, an 18th century music-seller and publisher, and musical instrument maker, had two signs, first the 'Sun' in Cornhill, where he conducted his business from 1727 to 1730, and afterwards at the 'Black Lyon'; Daniel Browne, a musical bookseller, was at the 'Black Swan' without Temple Bar, where in 1749 he published with the music from movable type, a book entitled 'An Antidote against Melancholy; being a collection of four merry songs . . . never before set to music'; and Thomas Cahusac, sen., the famous 18th century music publisher and musical instrument maker, was at the sign of 'Two Flutes and Violin,' in the Strand, near by St. Clement's Church. Cahusac was in business from 1755 to 1798, specialising in the manufacture of flutes, violins, and the smaller types of musical instruments, besides much sheet music. The two sons, Thomas and W. M. Cahusac, founded a separate business in the Strand, but the partnership lasted only a year or two; the former eventually retained the Strand business, and Thomas set up as a musical instrument maker in the Haymarket. When Cahusac, sen., died in 1798, a contemporary in the course of an obituary notice described him as 'the oldest musical instrument maker in and near London.'

Three signs, at different periods, indicated the business of Joseph Hill, the London violin and musical instrument maker: first the sign of 'Ye Harp and Hautboy' in Piccadilly; secondly, the 'Violin' in Westminster; and finally, the 'Harp and Flute' in the Haymarket, at which latter place he owned premises in 1762. Most of his publications were for the harpsichord, although he issued many volumes of other music. He has been mentioned by Pepys as 'Mr. Hill the instrument maker.'

The Rutherfords—David and John—kept a music business at the sign of the 'Viol and German Flute,' St. Martin's Court, and published books of minuets, country dances, and works for the violin and flute. David was also the author of a quaint and curious instruction book, entitled, 'The art of playing on the Violin, showing how to stop every note exactly.'

The sign of the 'Virgin's Head,' frequently supplemented with 'against the new church in the Strand,' marked the business house of J. Wilcox, who in 1737 issued Lampe's 'Treatise on Thorough Bass,' and that of the 'Black Lyon,' Exeter Change, the headquarters of Henry Waylett, who set up as a music publisher somewhere about 1740. He chiefly issued half-sheet songs, flute and violin tutors, country dances, &c., but is particularly deserving of notice as having been the first to publish 'Rule, Britannia.' It was thus announced: 'The music in the Judgment of Paris . . . to which (by particular desire of several encouragers of this work) are added the celebrated Ode in Honour of Great Britain, call'd Rule Britannia. . . . By 1769, Waylett's business had been transferred to Richard Bride, who continued to publish the Waylett productions, and retained the sign of the 'Black Lyon.'

Henry Thorowgood, who flourished about 1760 to 1765, had a music shop at the sign of the 'Violin and Guitarr,' at No. 6, 'under the North Piazza, Royal Exchange,' where he made and sold violins and other musical instruments. He also published many reprints of music and popular operas, such as 'Maid of the Mill,' 'Thomas and Sally,' 'Artaxerxes,' &c.

An important London musical house, dating from the 18th century, was that of Goulding & Co.—afterwards D'Almaine & Co.—founded about 1784, and three years later having an address at the 'Haydn's Head,' St. James's Street. The business evidently developed rapidly, for an additional shop was shortly afterwards opened at 17, Great Turnstile, Holborn, and subsequently in Bishopsgate Street. At the beginning of the 19th century the firm commenced a series of removals to various addresses.

The 'Two Flutes and Hautboy' was the sign of Ch. Schuchart, a music publisher of Chandos Street; 'The Little a'—quite a unique sign—that of W. Bailly, a music publisher who flourished in Leadenhall Street between 1770 and 1785; and the 'Orpheus' in Russell Street, Covent Garden, the sign of L. Pippara, a music publisher of the early 18th century.

The curious sign of the 'Temple of Apollo' belonged to W. Wybrow, of 24, Rathbone Place, who published from about 1820 onwards. He issued a large quantity of sheet-songs, &c., and purchased the original sheets of Dibdin's songs, which he afterwards re-issued.

A London music-seller of some note was John Simpson, who began business for himself about 1734 at the 'Viol and Flute,' or the 'Bass Viol and Flute,' in Sweeting's—or, as it was earlier called, Swithin's—Alley, 'opposite the east door of the Exchange.' Originally publishing sheet-songs, he proceeded to more ambitious work, and is principally remembered for having issued 'Thesaurus Musicus,' in which 'God Save the King' is said to have first appeared. Simpson, who died about 1747, was in all probability related to the eminent 17th century musician, Christopher Simpson, who, among other learned treatises on musical subjects, wrote 'Chelys Minuritum,' printed in columns, English and Latin, in 1665, and dedicated to his patron and scholar, Sir John Bolles. John Cox succeeded Simpson in the business, continuing to issue his predecessor's publications, and some thirty years later the premises were in the possession of John and James Simpson—possibly descendants—who were principally musical instrument makers, and only in a small way publishers.

Other musical signs included the 'Purcell's Head,' the Golden Lyre, and the 'Golden Bass,' the latter in Middle Row, Holborn, and from which the works of Arne were first issued.

MUSIC LIBRARIES AND CATALOGUES.

The paper read before the Musical Association on April 8 by Mr. W. Barclay Squire dealt with a matter concerning which, as the lecturer pointed out, this country is far behind what it ought to be. The great public libraries which should have a special department devoted to music, were chiefly those which were entitled to receive copies of everything published, though with the exception of the British Museum they were at liberty to decline anything they did not want. Since the abolition of registration at Stationers' Hall, the Museum had to keep all copies, in case they were required for evidence of copyright, with the consequence that the shelves were burdened with vast quantities of rubbish. A simple amendment in the law would obviate this. None of these great libraries had a special department for music. In the British Museum, musical MSS. formed a part of the Department of MSS., and printed music of the Department of Printed Works. In neither case were there separate funds and staffs officially allocated to music. Although the system had not worked badly, and the heads of the departments had been very sympathetic, still it was undoubtedly very inconvenient to students that the musical MSS. should be separated from the printed music, besides which the separation involved two staffs of officials with special musical qualifications, where one would be quite sufficient.

It was undoubtedly a defect of the great national libraries that they did not, except in the case of the University Libraries under certain restrictions, lend books. Lending of course involved considerable wear and tear and expense, but the lecturer thought it would be worth while to increase the powers of lending certain classes of books. The British Museum during the last four years had lent many thousands of books to Government departments engaged in war work, and only two volumes had been lost.

Free libraries, which lent books almost without restriction, should obviously contain a selection of music, though this was very seldom the case. What sort of music ought they to buy? The aim should be to include (1) a good selection of up-to-date books on theory, (2) as many full scores as possible, and (3) a selection of pianoforte scores of operas and oratorios. The main consideration should be that the object was not to supply music for mere temporary amusement, but to provide works that a student of moderate means could not afford to buy for himself, or that he only required for occasional reference. Turning to the smaller libraries which contained a certain amount of music, these were mainly attached to Cathedrals and Colleges, in which the music formed a very neglected class. What there was had mostly drifted there. But it was just in those places that one was apt to find rare and valuable books and MSS. Musicology had been so little studied in England that one could not expect the ordinary Cathedral or College librarian to know what was valuable or otherwise, and the result generally ensued that if the library was well cared for a great deal of rubbish was carefully preserved, and if (as was oftener the case) all music was looked upon as worthless, some rare books and MSS. might be consigned to oblivion. Mr. Barclay Squire said that he had visited many libraries of this kind, generally to find the state of any music they contained to be simply deplorable. The remedy for this condition of things seemed to be that these libraries should either sell their music or deposit it in a larger library on permanent loan, or in default should get it catalogued by some qualified specialist. This cataloguing had in some cases been done already.

Cataloguing was the main business of a librarian's work, for a library without a catalogue was to all intents and purposes useless. The British Museum had published catalogues of its musical MSS. and of its early printed music; the Fitzwilliam Museum had published a catalogue of its music; Christ Church, Oxford, the first volume of its musical MSS.; and the Royal College of Music of its printed music. But there ended the catalogues of music in English libraries which were generally accessible. In this respect we were behind foreign countries. Berlin indeed had published nothing, and Vienna little, but there were splendid catalogues at Paris, Bologna, Upsala, Brussels, and many other places. The French Ministry of Public Instruction and Fine Arts had for years been bringing out a great series of catalogues of the MSS. in the public libraries of the country, and in these music had not been neglected. But Italy had done even better. The 'Associazione dei Musicologi Italiani' had been engaged in publishing complete catalogues of Italian collections. Looking at this admirable series, one could not help asking whether our own country might not undertake something of the sort. There was plenty of material. What was wanted was a scheme on the Italian method—a series of catalogues drawn up on the same plan, for a bad catalogue was worse than none. Such a work would be a noble one for the Musical Association to undertake.

Prof. H. P. Allen, who was in the chair, the Rev. Dr. Fellowes, Dr. R. R. Terry, and others took part in the discussion which followed the paper, and finally it was resolved to ask the Council to take the matter into consideration.

THE MODERN SPIRIT IN MUSIC.

The paper read before the Musical Association on May 13 by Mr. Philip Heseltine took the form of a criticism in relation to a suggested definition of musical art, and an attempt at a new perspective. He said that strictly speaking there was no such thing as the modern spirit in music—nor for that matter an ancient or mediæval spirit in music. There was simply music, and the spirit that informed it was fundamentally the same, yesterday, to-day, and for ever. It was only in particular and accidental respects that it ever underwent any change. The history of music was a history not of epochs or movements, but of individual achievements. To consider an artist solely in relation to his epoch was to make a superficial estimate of his work, and one that was wholly irrelevant to the question of his value as a creator.

Many people confined themselves, when they spoke of music, to discussing the technicalities of the medium by which it was conveyed, to the exclusion of any consideration of its essential qualities. One could not throw much light upon any particular aspect or tendency in music, unless one had already established some quite clear criteria by which to assess its value. The usual method of comparing particular modern works of art with particular ancient masterpieces was rather futile. We ought to be able to perceive not merely the relative value of different works, but the absolute and intrinsic significance of any single one. And although it was, naturally, impossible to express a musical creation in words, we could at least indicate approximately what it was we turned to music for—what we could not find elsewhere, what we required of music, what we considered to be its function, its scope, its limitations. When we had determined these points—each one to his own satisfaction, then and only then should we be in a position to estimate the musical achievement of any school or period, and to discover whether the tendencies exhibited by any musician or group of musicians, could be identified with the principles that had guided the creative artists of other ages, and whether we were confronted with what Blake described as 'a pretence of art to destroy art.'

The function of music might be defined loosely as the outward and audible signification of inward and spiritual realities. A piece of music was not merely 'the articulation of sweet sounds together,' it was a definite record of thought and emotion. One might make a formal standard analysis of it, or analyse it logically, theme by theme, or chord by chord; it should stand both of these tests, but neither of them would give the quintessence of the music. If you wrote nonsense in words you were very quickly found out, but you could write nonsense in music, and not only avoid being found out but even be acclaimed as a genius by that section of the public that was always ready to accept as magnificent anything that it found completely unintelligible. It was so easy to cheat in music, and to deceive—so easy, that the first person to be thoroughly cheated and deceived was almost invariably oneself. There was not so much insincerity amongst musical composers as there was commonly believed to be, but there was no doubt that a great deal of sincerity was the result of self-deception and persistent blindness to the true function and dignity of art.

All through the ages the failure to take the physical sound for granted and to look beyond it had been the great stumbling-block in the way of appreciation of the ever-new messages that music had to offer. There was nothing so idiotic in musical criticism as the pedant's systematic and indiscriminate condemnation of every novelty and innovation, unless it was a converse attitude, the intolerance of uneducated youth for all achievements of the past that it was not yet ripe enough to comprehend. The mere fact of criticising the sound of a work apart from its content betrayed the critic's inability to probe beneath its surface. We could not estimate the true import of music by consideration of its style, or manner, or technique. A modern, working in his own idiom, might come much nearer to the spirit of Bach by sheer force of sympathy and natural affinity than the most meticulous archaeologist in his most carefully wrought stylistic imitation. But there would always be critics in whose estimation the material differences of style would far outweigh, if they did not obliterate, the spiritual similarity.

It was highly significant to observe that one of the chief tendencies of modern music was its frequent invasion of the provinces of the other arts, in an endeavour to compete with descriptive speech or representative action in their own fields. Music was not a representative or imitative art any more than painting or sculpture were necessarily representative. The very word 'representative' was almost the antithesis of the word 'creative.' Representation could in no sense be regarded as anything more than a separable accident in art. But in art, as in religion, an age of decadence would exalt the sign above the thing signified, and would materialise the symbols of those spiritual realities whose true significance it had forgotten. And thus it happened that in a great deal of modern art we found materialistic conception in the ascendant, and the representative element occupying the foremost place.

It was not generally realised that in harmony, relation was of far greater importance than range. Variety, contrast, emphasis, and climax, all these were secured by judicious selection and juxtaposition of the possible tonal relations within a determined range. However much we might widen the limits of the range, we did not materially alter the propositions that had to be observed, and unless the increase in the number of sound-combinations at our disposal were accompanied by a corresponding increase in the subtlety of our sound-perceptions, we actually lost rather than gained expressive power by extending the boundaries of our harmonic range. There were two very curious beliefs current with regard to music at the present time. One was that the diatonic and modal systems were already worn out, and consequently that nothing new and vital could be expressed in their terminology to-day. The other was the somewhat arrogant assumption that it was only at the present day that we had attained the means of adequate expression in terms of music. The prevalence of these two beliefs was widespread, and very seriously impaired the modern critic's verdict not only of those works which he might with some justice regard as 'antiques,' but even of composers as near his own day as Meyerbeer or Verdi.

In our modern passion for 'nationality' in music we had concentrated our attention on yet one more particular and unessential aspect of music to such an extent that we had almost forgotten the necessity for first testing a composer's value by universal canons before indulging any pride we might feel in knowing him our compatriot. Whichever way we turned in our examination of modern music we found an insistence upon the unessential and accidental attributes of music. We heard modern music praised for the novelty of its orchestral colour or harmonic combinations, for its realistic imitations of extraneous objects, for its supposed 'national characteristics,' or for its qualities as a source of physical stimulus and sensual excitement. People had become so interested in discovering what music could be perverted into becoming that they seemed completely to have lost sight of what music fundamentally was.

What would ultimately stand out from all the welter of activity which was apparent in the musical world to-day? It was safe to say that those composers whose reputation rested upon the novelty of their instrumental effects or the startling nature of their technique or sound-combinations, rather than on any intrinsic importance in their spiritual message, could not reasonably hope that their novelty would not soon wear off, and that those very effects which were most startling at the time they were first introduced would not become the merest commonplaces after the lapse of a few years. If it was as yet impossible to foresee with any certainty what direction the course of musical creation would take during the next few decades, it was at least not too soon for some of us to re-examine our æsthetic values and to take stock of our mental equipment for understanding and appraising new works. We must learn to think less about the physical sound of music and more of the nature and quality of what it signified. On the one hand we must not be baffled by new words and phrases that we had not met with before, nor on the other hand must we fail to keep a sharp critical look-out for what might be essential gibberish concealed beneath a novel and high-sounding musical utterance. We must not be surprised at any extension of the range of harmony, nor must we allow a surfeit of complex combinations to lessen our ability to appreciate the subtleties of the simplest idiom of antiquity. And we must always bear in mind that music does not spring from other music, but from life, and that it is not by mere comparisons but by ever-renewed consideration of the extent to which it might be regarded as a vital and necessary expression of the human soul, and by this regard alone, that we can estimate the real value of any work of art—whether it be new or old.

RESTAURANT MUSIC.

The practice of supplying music in restaurants and tea-rooms is one which has grown very much in recent years. As only the lightest kind is suitable for performance on such occasions, this branch of the art may not be considered very important. But it is important in that large numbers of musicians are employed therein, and might be still more so if better managed. It must not be supposed that there is no ground for complaint because the public appears to be satisfied with what is offered, for this is only because the majority pay little or no attention. Musical people, however, have also to eat and drink, and while naturally resenting music being placed in so subservient a position, would bear the inevitable with better grace if their ears were not tortured with the present general matter and style of the performances.

Cannot some improvement be effected? In the first place, why do the arrangers of the music played still adhere to the stupid old tradition that a small band must include a pianoforte? It is considered that this is necessary in cases where only three or four musicians are employed; but the practice has resulted in a deplorable style of scoring which is in part responsible for the unpleasant nature of the playing. The method aims at achieving tonal effects with wholly inadequate means, the result inevitably being strident, coarse, and crude. The remedy lies in more instrumental independence; in other words, more real part-writing, modelled on the lines of chamber-music. Thus in small bands the Pianoforte Trio or Pianoforte Quartet is the natural model. As to the larger orchestras, the proper basis is the String Quartet, necessitating real part-writing, other instruments—double-bass, more violins, flute, clarinet, horn, bassoon, &c.—being added as required. Music properly written is of course more difficult to play; but this would be no obstacle to success, as observation shows that the musicians responsible for the present deplorable performances are really very capable players. They are, indeed, evidently worthy of—and would surely much prefer—playing music so written as to set forth their capabilities in a more favourable light.

Improvement is also required in the repertory. As already said, only light music is suitable, which, like other things, is good, bad, and indifferent, and the complaint is that these restaurant programmes are not selected from any standpoint of real merit. One does not ask for concert-room pieces: only for pieces which are tuneful, direct in rhythm, and simple in sentiment; but they must at least have character and be alive. Considering the vast amount of suitable music in existence from which to choose, there can be no excuse for the performance of such trivial and characterless stuff as is now in vogue. It may be said that there is no good light music being written, and that the selection is made from current popular pieces. Of course a Sullivan, Offenbach, J. Strauss, Audran, or Waldteufel are not to be met with in every generation, but the writings of such men are still available, and surely could be drawn upon more frequently. What has become of all the delightful waltzes of the past, or the pot-pourris of famous comic operas?

Such things rearranged on the lines suggested, and played well, as they would be by the restaurant bands, would add so much to the amenities of dining-out that one wishes for a musical proprietor to take up the matter with his conductor, and see what could be done. It is just a matter of taking a little trouble over the initial difficulty of the re-scoring and re-arranging, and of that amount of courage required for getting away from the conventional.

NICHOLAS GATTY.

MR. ALBERT COATES.

It was in the early months of 1914 that London first became acquainted with Mr. Albert Coates as a leading personality among English musicians. He came from Russia to conduct the Covent Garden Winter season of opera in German—the memorable season that first brought 'Parsifal' to London. His mastery of the conductor's art was so evident that the Royal Opera Syndicate engaged him for the following Summer season, when he conducted both German and Italian opera. The beginning of the war found him back in Russia. A short account of Mr. Coates's life and work was given, with a portrait, in our issue for April, 1914.

We are glad to welcome Mr. Coates back to England after his protracted trials of war-time. He re-introduced himself with a concert of familiar music at Queen's Hall on April 29, with Beethoven's seventh Symphony as the principal work in hand. There could be no doubt as to his mastery of the orchestra and his ability to draw out the full meaning of the music, but there was room for question—which recurred during the 'Siegfried Idyll'—on the subject of his tempi. He seemed prone to dwell too lovingly on a passage of slow music as if bent on squeezing it dry rather than allowing a natural flow. However in Tchaikovsky's 'Romeo and Juliet' Mr. Coates asserted his gifts without any loophole for questioning. It was a great interpretation, finely designed and eloquent. At the second concert, on May 8, Mr. Coates conducted Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony with the special insight that we now expect from him, some Wagner excerpts, and Saint-Saëns's 'Africa' Fantasia, with Miss Hilda Dederich as solo pianist. A third concert, given by Mr. Coates on May 16, was devoted to Russian music. Tchaikovsky loomed rather largely in the scheme, being represented by his 'Romeo and Juliet' and B flat minor Pianoforte Concerto, played by Miss Katharine Goodson, but it was interesting to hear Rimsky-Korsakoff's Suite from 'The Legend of Tzar Saltan' with its invigorating rhythms, and Scriabin's 'Poème de l'extase.' This latter work had been heard only once before in London, if memory serves correctly, and had made a strong impression with its richly woven design. Intervening years have enabled us to perceive the strands of the texture more clearly, and to know them as harmonies which, once considered exotic, are now becoming typical of Marylebone and Kensington. The skill of Scriabin's weaving is however none the less open to admiration.

ROYAL OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

SUCCESSFUL REOPENING.

One of the things that shows without any doubt that the war is over is the reopening of the Royal Opera, Covent Garden. After being postponed for a week—nothing in comparison with the closing for five years—the doors were once more opened to the public on May 12. A very curious mental impression was produced on one as he entered the foyer, for, so far as a first glance was concerned, everything seemed the same as in 1914. Familiar faces greeted one on all sides, though on closer inspection there were evidences of the passage of just upon five years of trial. But the personnel remains much the same, with Mr. Percy Eales, for so many years the genial acting-manager—now at the head of affairs in the place of Mr. Neil Forsyth.

Change is also found in the undertaking itself. The season is announced as being given in conjunction with Sir Thomas Beecham, an association which really began in 1911, and, resumed three years later, is now made clear to the public. With the Syndicate's fine judgment and experience on the one hand and Sir Thomas Beecham's progressive methods on the other there seems no reason why increased prosperity should not come to the old-established and world-renowned Royal Opera Syndicate. Considering the enormous difficulties in the way of arranging a season of opera on the cosmopolitan lines that have always been followed at Covent Garden, a good start has been made. Several familiar names are missing from the preliminary prospectus, and it seems that London will have to wait to hear again Tetrazzini, Caruso, Franz, McCormack, and the others. Fortunately Melba is available, and her presence gave great distinction to the opening performance.

It was a memorable event in every way for many reasons. Everyone was glad to find the Royal Opera open once again, and the occasion being graced by the presence of the King and Queen, and many members of the Royal Family, was like old times. But that it was not the old time was very soon made clear. In the first place the conductor was Sir Thomas Beecham, and in the second there was something entirely new, not so much in the ruddy hue of the re-upholstered boxes or the glint of the re-gilded walls, as on the stage, where, with the exception of Dame Melba, nearly all were strange and new. The biggest novelty was a British tenor with the voice and style of an Italian. This was Mr. Thomas Burke, the Rudolph of the evening, who made his first appearance on the operatic stage in his native country. He did well if only for one reason, that he has that rare and precious thing a genuine tenor voice. It is not large in volume, nor does it give any very great suggestion of having much behind it, but it is a pleasant voice which the possessor puts to good use in Italian opera. The new-comers included a Musetta of becoming brilliancy in Miss Destournel and in MM. Maguenat and Cotreuil among 'the happy few, we band of brothers,' which included M. Huberdeau and that genuine humorist Signor Malatesta,—welcome reappearances. Everyone was delighted to hear Dame Melba again, and her singing had all its old distinction and charm. Much enthusiasm prevailed, occasionally extending itself to the orchestral tone, which was exuberant.

The season's brief passage down to the time it is possible to record includes a revival of Massenet's 'Thais,' in which Madame Edvina made her reappearance with augmented powers of voice and gesture, excellent work coming from M. André Gilly and M. Couzinou. The familiar has included 'Traviata,' with a new soprano endowed with fine technical command in Mlle. Borghi-Zerni, a child of vocal parents, whose powers were further displayed in 'Rigoletto.' In 'Traviata' there was a new tenor in Signor Capuzzo, and a Germont in M. Maguenat, who put a new complexion on the music by his glorious phrasing, unspoiled by the fact that he sang in French while the rest employed Italian. Signor Leopoldo Mugnone appeared once again in London to show us the true method of interpreting Verdi. The 'Rigoletto' performance also introduced Mr. Burke as the Duke with satisfactory results, and gave us a notable Jester in M. Maguenat, of bilingual attainment, since he sang in both French and Italian. Under the hand of Signor Mugnone, its original conductor, Puccini's 'La Tosca' was added later, with Madame Edvina once more as Floria, and with a tenor of uncommon promise in a Greek singer, M. Ulysse Lappas, on whom it will be worth while to keep one's ear. A Scarpia who acted as well as sang the part was found in M. Couzinou. For the first of the Saturday evening performances at reduced prices—an excellent plan for these democratic days—Miss Rosina Buckman, 'from over the way,' appeared as Mimi, ably seconded by Mr. Burke.

FRANCIS E. BARRETT.

London Concerts.

THE ROYAL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

Three young musicians—Major Geoffrey Toye, M. Moiseiwitsch, and Mr. Eugène Goossens—shared with Sir Charles Stanford the honours of the Royal Philharmonic Society's concert at Queen's Hall on April 29. As conductor Major Toye came successfully through the exacting test of a programme largely unfamiliar. He is getting the whole technique of conducting within his grasp, and can show an inside knowledge of the scores he is interpreting. M. Moiseiwitsch gave a brilliant and poetical performance of a Pianoforte Concerto by Sir Charles Stanford that had been heard in America but not before in London. It is a thorough example of the composer's power to give rein to a rich fancy and write in freely expressive terms while retaining as a groundwork the essentials of a style honoured by tradition. It is not music that appeals by warmth, but it is eloquent. There are moments of outstanding beauty, and among them the passage that brings the slow movement to a close. The final movement has a robustness that does not arise solely from the necessarily bright rhythm of finales. Mr. Goossens was represented by his short pieces 'By the Tarn'—a re-scoring of his string quartet—and 'Tam o' Shanter,' a successful and riotous piece of descriptive music. The concert opened with the 'Flying Dutchman' Overture, and concluded with Dvorák's seldom-heard fourth Symphony.

On April 25 Mr. Frank Armstrong inaugurated a series of Friday mid-day organ concerts at Æolian Hall, the object of which is to collect funds for the Sunday evening smoking concerts and to provide Bond Street shoppers with the opportunity for pleasant relaxation from their labours. The recitals are free, but a collection is made.

A specially-designed programme like that of Moiseiwitsch at Queen's Hall on April 26 is a boon. There are several among Chopin's 'Etudes' that are permanently excluded from haphazard programmes by their more popular neighbours, and a complete performance of the whole series serves to recall their merits. M. Moiseiwitsch devoted the whole programme to Studies, including the 'Etudes Symphoniques' of Schumann and five by Liszt.

A vocal recital by Mr. Hubert Eisdell at Wigmore Hall on April 28 brought to notice some new songs by English composers—'A boy's song' by Cyril Rootham, 'The bells of San Marie' by John Ireland, 'To a water-lily' by Herbert Bedford, 'Love in Summer' by Katherine Parker, and 'Dream valley' by Roger Quilter.

Miss Gladys Moger's vocal programme at Wigmore Hall on May 1 gave prominence to Italian and British songs—among the latter being three attractive examples by Mr. E. J. Dent entitled 'The three cherry-trees,' 'The oxen,' and 'The piper.'

The late Lieut.-Commander F. S. Kelly will be remembered by many as a capable and earnest musician from Oxford who earned a wide reputation as a pianist and a composer. A tribute to his memory was paid on May 2 at Wigmore Hall in the form of a concert of his works. The artists who assisted were Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. Leonard Borwick, M. Fleury (flautist), and the Queen's Hall small orchestra under the conductorship of Mr. Frank Bridge. The chief of many estimable works given on this occasion was an Elegy for string orchestra and harps written in memory of Rupert Brooke.

The viola is so rarely used as a solo instrument that particular mention must be made of the recital given by M. Zenobe L'Hoest in conjunction with Signor Ferruccio Dini (vocalist) at Æolian Hall on May 2. The principal feature of his programme was a Concerto by D. Heynderg.

A series of Popular Concerts by the London String Quartet was begun at Æolian Hall on May 3. The Pianoforte Quintet in G minor, Op. 30, by Arthur Hinton, was played with the help of Miss Katharine Goodson, and proved well worth revival. The concerts are arranged to take place every Saturday afternoon until July 19.

On the occasion of the recital given by Mr. Albert Sammons and Mr. William Murdoch, at Queen's Hall, on May 3, the feature most worthy of record was the size of the audience. Not many years ago such a recital by young British artists would have been given to a more than half-empty hall. Of the qualities of the playing there is no need to write.

A 'Ballata,' and 'Ballabile' for violoncello, by Sir Charles Stanford, performed by Miss Beatrice Harrison at Wigmore Hall on May 3, made pleasant hearing. The same programme included Ravel's Trio, with Miss May Harrison as violinist and Mr. Hamilton Harty as pianist.

An Oratorio by Mrs. Margaret Meredith, entitled 'The At-one-ment,' designed on a religious and dramatic basis in commemoration of the war, was performed at Steinway Hall on May 3.

One of the most interesting and attractive chamber works that have recently come from Italy was a Pianoforte Trio by Giacomo Orefice, given by the London Trio at Æolian Hall on May 6. It satisfies both the popular and the critical taste, and should be heard again.

The Catterall String Quartet came from Manchester to play for the London Chamber Concert Society at Wigmore Hall on May 6. They gave the three Idylls by Mr. Frank Bridge—pleasant works that are heard less often than they deserve—and were assisted by Miss Katharine Goodson in César Franck's Pianoforte Quintet.

A new Violin Sonata (Op. 165, No. 2), by Sir Charles Stanford was played by Miss Murray Lambert and Mr. Hamilton Harty at Wigmore Hall on May 7, and proved characteristic of the composer in merit, while tending to an unusually simple style.

Mr. Frederic Lamond's great and popular gifts were displayed at Queen's Hall on May 10 in Beethoven's 'Emperor' Concerto and that of Tchaikovsky in B flat minor. It is gratifying to observe that this British-born pianist, who makes his appeal by the strength and purely-musical value of his interpretations, and never by display, has a big following, and can always attract a large and interested audience. He was accompanied on this occasion by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under Sir Henry Wood, who also conducted a performance of Bantock's characteristic and picturesque tone-poem, 'Fifine at the Fair.'

Two new Violin Sonatas, by E. J. Moeran and Miss Mary Barber, were performed at Wigmore Hall on May 10 by M. Edgardo Guerra, accompanied by the composer, on the occasion of a joint recital with M. José de Moraes (vocalist).

Mr. Cyril Scott's delicate fancy was responsible for the most interesting feature in Miss Astra Desmond's recital at Wigmore Hall on May 12. His 'Idyllic Phantasy' for voice, oboe, and violoncello, written to his own words, is a curious and pretty whimsicality. Its theme is the musings of a solitary wanderer in the woods and the airy, faery thoughts that come to him on hearing a vague, plaintive music in the air. Mr. Scott's music fulfils its function and cleverly conveys the suggestion of unearthliness and disembodiment. The illusion was heightened by keeping the instrumentalists unseen. The whole idea so captured the fancy of the audience that the piece was repeated.

With the capable help of Miss Daisy Kennedy, M. Benno Moiseiwitsch, and Captain Herbert Heyner, Mr. Sydney Rosenbloom gave a concert of his compositions at Wigmore Hall on May 14. His fluent and graceful style gained much approval.

A vast audience assembled to greet Melba at the Royal Albert Hall on May 17. They were well repaid, for her singing had all the charm and purity that made it famous many years ago. Mr. Thomas Burke, the new tenor star of Covent Garden, was also there, and went a further stage of making good his reputation. With Miss Katharine Goodson as solo pianist the high tone of the concert was well sustained.

The vocal recital of Madame d'Alvarez at Queen's Hall on May 17 was announced as her 'last appearance.' It is to be hoped that, following notable precedent, she will reconsider her decision. On this occasion her great gifts were displayed in a worthy selection of songs given with accompaniment by the Queen's Hall Orchestra under Sir Henry Wood.

Music in the Provinces.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

BIRMINGHAM.

Elgar's new Violin and Pianoforte Sonata created an excellent impression when Mr. Appleby Matthews introduced it at the Scala Sunday Concert on April 13, having for his coadjutor the excellent violinist, Mr. Alexander Cohen. In a few words addressed to the large audience present Mr. Matthews referred to his desire to give English music 'a fair chance.' He concluded the series of Sunday Orchestral Concerts—which, started last October, have continued without a break—with a splendid concert given in the Town Hall on April 27, at which he revived Elgar's first Symphony (in A flat, Op. 55). On this occasion the orchestra was augmented by a contingent of instrumentalists from Manchester, the total rank and file numbering seventy-five performers. Mr. Matthews gave a noble performance of a noble work, and in spite of its great length the audience listened to its wonderful strains with unabated interest. Finely played too was Granville Bantock's symphonic poem 'Dante and Beatrice,' which gains at each fresh hearing. Indeed the whole concert was a fitting finale to a magnificent series of orchestral concerts.

Two performances of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion—one in the afternoon, the other in the evening—were given on Good Friday at the Repertory Theatre by Mr. Appleby Matthews's choir and orchestra, with Mr. Alexander Cohen as leader and solo violinist. The singing of the choir was devotional and pure in tone-quality, especially the interpretation of the many beautiful chorales, while the orchestra, although small in numbers, proved quite adequate, the various obbligati for flutes, oboe d'amore, and violin being excellently and effectively played. Mr. Appleby Matthews, who conducted, was also fortunate in his principals. No better choice could have been made than Miss Emily Broughton, Miss Helen Anderton, Dr. Goodey (Evangelist), Mr. William Hayle, the excellent basso from Leeds (Christ), Mr. Harold Howes (Pilate), and Mr. W. Willetts (High Priest, Peter, and Judas) who comprised the list of soloists.

The same evening the Midland Musical Society gave a performance of 'Messiah' at the Town Hall, under Mr. A. J. Cotton's conductorship. The choir as usual carried off the honours of the performance, Mr. C. W. Perkins admirably supporting the choristers on the organ. The principals were Madame Waldron, Miss Alice Vaughton, Mr. L. P. Grice, and Albert T. Townsend.

Miss Elma Baker's annual vocal recital was given at the Repertory Theatre on May 9, in the afternoon. Relying entirely on her own efforts, the concert-giver divided her programme into four groups, the most interesting of which was the first group, consisting of eight old-world songs by Pergolesi, Robert Johnson, Henry Lawes, Monsigny, Gluck, and others. These were accompanied on the harpsichord, an instrument by Jakob and Abraham Kirkham, dated 1785. The tone was very small, and one doubted if the singer could hear any sound at all. Mr. George Russell, who was an excellent accompanist, managed the harpsichord very well indeed, and later he presided at the pianoforte, his accompaniments being always sympathetic and artistic.

The other groups included German, Spanish, and English songs, all of which Miss Baker sang effectively, and with excellent diction.

The principal musical event of the past month was the fortnight's operatic season held at the Prince of Wales Theatre from May 5 to May 17, provided by the Beecham Opera Company, who did as well as ever, the theatre being crowded nightly as well as at four matinées. The only novelties produced were Verdi's 'Falstaff' and the Persian Ballet Scene from Moussorgsky's opera 'Khovantchina,' otherwise the repertory was made up with the familiar operatic works—'Le Coq d'Or,' 'Madame Butterfly,' 'La Bohème,' 'Tannhäuser,' 'Magic Flute,' 'Faust,' 'Aida,' 'Tristan and Isolde,' 'Louise,' 'Othello,' 'Marriage of Figaro,' 'Il Trovatore,' and 'Samson and Delilah.' The artistic personnel included no new names, and there is hardly any need to comment upon the capabilities of Sir Thomas Beecham's well-known principals. The orchestra was again a feature of the season, the chief work as conductor resting with Mr. Eugène Goossens, jun. 'Falstaff' proved an instantaneous success, and was admirably cast, the principals being Mesdames Agnes Nicholls, Gladys Ancrum, Miriam Licette, and Edith Clegg, Messrs. Frederick Ranaflow, Frederic Austin, Maurice D'Oisly, Alfred Heather, and Arthur Wynn. Every note of the wonderful orchestral score seems to express the action of the characters on the stage, and the whole work abounds in ingenuity and originality,—indeed Verdi at eighty years of age created here one of the greatest lyrical comedies in existence.

A chamber concert was given at the Royal Society of Artists' Exhibition Room on April 28 by Miss Joyce Thursfield, a talented violinist. The principal works included César Franck's Quintet in F minor for pianoforte and strings (the executants being Miss Thursfield, Mr. Paul Beard, Mr. Percival Hodgson, Miss Joan Willis, and Miss Irene Berry), Mozart's String Quartet in C major, and Brahms's Sonata in D minor for violin and pianoforte.

In connection with the Edgbaston Botanical Gardens Summer fixtures, the only vocal and instrumental concert provided for the season was given on May 17, an excellent programme having been arranged for the occasion by Mr. Oscar Pollack, when the following artists appeared: Miss Margaret Harrison, Miss Mary Foster, Dr. Tom Goodey, Mr. Arthur Cranmer, and the Merry Makers' Mixed Quartet, Madame Judith Leeuw-Moore (pianoforte), M. Jacques de Leeuw (violin), and Mr. Richard Wassell (accompanist).

BOURNEMOUTH.

The Winter series of Symphony Concerts—the most important orchestral event here—reached its appointed end midway through May. Mr. Dan Godfrey is indeed a fit subject for congratulation in that he has achieved so much success throughout the season in the face of steadily-multiplying difficulties. It is extremely doubtful whether any other musical director in this country has ever rendered such continuously valuable service to the cause of orchestral music—certainly none of his colleagues have excelled him in that respect. Honour must also be paid to the members of the Municipal Orchestra, whose fine work, whether considered individually or as a whole, is worthy of the highest praise. Mr. Godfrey's tribute, at the final concert of the season, to their achievements and loyal support was well-merited. It is the sincere hope of all supporters of music in Bournemouth that, with a world once more dedicated to the pursuits of peace, the next series of concerts will be inaugurated under less disadvantageous conditions, thus allowing for further developments of Mr. Godfrey's progressive policy.

The programmes of the concluding concerts of the series contained much pleasurable music. First in importance were Scriabin's second Symphony, a masterly score which includes a really beautiful slow movement, Glazounov's dignified Symphony in E flat, and—well known as it is—the still treasured 'Jupiter' Symphony of Mozart, a work whose greatness is apparent to-day as in time past. Tchaikovsky's F minor Symphony, perhaps the most completely satisfying of all the composer's works in that particular form, was played at the twenty-ninth concert. All the foregoing are compositions that permit of no inattentiveness in performance if every detail is to be brought out, and consequently we must compliment all concerned on the adaptability they displayed in revealing the various shades of expression which these diverse compositions required. For, though the earlier Scriabin has something in common, temperamentally, with Glazounov, yet both these composers need very different treatment from that which is accorded to either Mozart or Tchaikovsky. The splendid performance of the Scriabin Symphony calls, indeed, for special mention. Among other works of interest played may be cited the Morceau Symphonique, 'Redemption,' by César Franck, and the Prelude and Love-Death from 'Tristan and Isolde.' The novelties of the month were an Overture, 'To the Fallen,' by F. King-Hall, late principal violin of this Orchestra, who himself conducted his composition; an orchestral Fantasia, 'Virgil,' by H. Orsmond Anderton; and Edward German's 'Theme and Six Diversions.' The Overture and Fantasia were actual 'first performances,' and that of Mr. German's new work was the first in the provinces. The latter met with a rapturous reception, which was well deserved, inasmuch as it is a merry, brightly orchestrated composition, and one calculated to radiate good-humour wherever it is heard. The other novelties were creditable to their composers, but did not reach any exalted level of interest.

So far as the soloists are concerned, Mr. Herbert Fryer deserves our thanks for affording us another opportunity of hearing Sir Charles Stanford's Pianoforte Concerto in C minor (Op. 126), an undoubtedly attractive work of which Mr. Fryer gave us a distinguished reading. The third appearance during the season of Mr. Arnold Trowell gave sufficient proof that his artistic playing is increasingly appreciated here. On April 24 he played with much delicacy Tchaikovsky's Variations for violoncello and orchestra. The Thursday following introduced to us the recently-appointed leader of the orchestra, Mr. Bertram Lewis, in the capacity of solo performer, many good qualities being forthcoming in the polished performance of Saint-Saëns's Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso for violin and orchestra. At the final concert, Mlle. Juliette Folville, whose uncommon musical abilities we alluded to last month, once again essayed her own Pianoforte Concerto in D minor. Frequent re-hearings both of this Belgian artist and of the particular composition in question confirm us in our opinion that she is a musician whose talents have not yet met with due appreciation in this country—though this surely should not be long delayed.

BRISTOL.

The well-attended series of organ recitals at Bristol's historic Parish Church of Redcliff was continued on April 28 by a classical programme by Mr. C. Hylton Stewart, organist at Rochester Cathedral. On May-Day, Dr. Norman Sprankling, who has made a special study of Liszt, gave a delightful programme at the Victoria Rooms. His educative scheme omitted the familiar Rhapsodies, and included the Sonata in B minor, Etude in D flat, Impromptu in F sharp, 'Variations and Choral,' and 'Valse Caprice,' all very masterfully presented. A choir of 650 voices under Mr. G. T. Cooke, with the veteran George Riseley at the organ, took part in the fifty-fourth May Festival on May 5 at Colston Hall. Bristol Madrigal Society had a special evening service at the Cathedral on May 15. There was a very large attendance, the Cathedral choir assisted, and Dr. Basil Harwood (president) played organ solos. The scheme originated in the mind of Dr. Hubert Hunt, organist of the Cathedral and director of the Society. A selection of anthems by composers of the English Madrigal period (Tallis, Pearsall, Redford, Byrd, Weekles, Wilbye) was rendered with the beautiful finish of the Madrigalians. Contemporary organ solos and an address by the Rev. Dr. E. H. Fellowes, of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, on 'The Church Music of the English Madrigal Composers,' made up the unique programme. This first presentation by the Society of examples of the beautiful Church music of that period will doubtless be followed by others, so great was the interest shown by the congregation. The Mid-Somerset Musical and Folk-Dance competitions were also opened at Bath on May 15. The entries numbered nearly a thousand, and there were many successful Bristol competitors. Mr. Geoffrey Shaw, one of the adjudicators, gave a lecture in the afternoon on 'The League of Arts for National and Civic Ceremony,' in which he spoke of 'the great revolt against classicism' and the longing for the natural in modern composers.

CAMBRIDGE.

Messrs. Albert Sammons and William Murdoch gave a recital in the Guildhall on May 7 to a crowded house. Their programme consisted of Bach's Violin and Pianoforte Sonata in E major, Beethoven's 'Kreutzer' Sonata and Romance in G, Mozart's Rondo in G, and pieces by Debussy. The May week concert of the University Musical Society takes place on June 6, and the items to be performed are Bach's 'Sing ye to the Lord,' the 'Emperor' Concerto of Beethoven, 'The Wasps' Overture by Vaughan Williams, and 'L'Après-midi d'un faune,' by Debussy.

The membership of the Musical Club continues to increase, and the committee is contemplating the acquisition of larger premises. The weekly concerts are held as usual, the standard of the programmes being quite in keeping with the traditions of the Club.

Most of the College Musical Societies are holding the May week concerts again, and the Scales Club of Caius gives weekly concerts on Sunday evenings.

DEVON AND CORNWALL.

DEVON.

Good Friday was recognised in many churches by the performance of appropriate music. At Exeter Cathedral the anthem was 'O Saviour of the world,' and the solo 'He was despised' was sung, Dr. D. J. Wood being at the organ. Stainer's 'Crucifixion' was sung at Broad Clyst, Whitchurch (Mr. M. Bodinner, organist); at St. Simon's, Plymouth (Mr. W. G. Nelder, organist), and St. Mary Major, Exeter (Mr. W. A. Cole, organist). Gaul's 'Prince of Peace' was performed at Mount Gold, Plymouth, Mr. N. H. R. Normington conducting choir and orchestra of seventy, and Mr. D. Parkes playing the organ. Maunder's 'Olivet to Calvary' was selected at Totnes Parish Church, conducted by Rev. A. J. Clark, with Mr. H. Worth at the organ, and at Kilkhampton, conducted by Mr. G. H. Stainton; J. S. Witty's cantata, 'The Great Light,' was given by Lynton Congregational choir, conducted by Mr. Jordan; and 'Jesus of Bethany' (Jamouneau) was sung at Stratton twice by a choir of fifty voices, conducted by Mr. J. Hancock. The cantata, 'Soldiers of the Cross' (Hemery), was given at Southernhay Wesleyan Church, Exeter, by a choir and orchestra of seventy performers, Mr. W. Slader conducting; and at the Mint Church Mr. L. Holden organized a concert of sacred music, at which the choir sang choruses from the Passion music of 'Messiah,' good singing being also heard from a quartet of artists. Mr. Holden's organ solos were well chosen, and Mr. S. W. A. Moyle played 'cello music with much charm. Passion music from 'Messiah' was also given at Tavistock, Mr. W. Clotworthy conducting.

Easter Day was recognised also, music from 'Messiah' being sung at Exeter Cathedral, and during the week a concert of praise music was given by Teignmouth Wesleyan Choir, conducted by Mr. F. Ward.

The Sunday concerts in Plymouth Theatre Royal closed down for the Summer on April 20 with a programme given by the Theatre orchestra, conducted by Mr. J. W. Wingate, with Mr. Frank Tapp (pianist), and Messrs. H. G. Uglow and Frederick Allen (vocalists).

Dr. H. J. Edwards, the distinguished pianist and composer who resides in North Devon, paid his first visit to Plymouth on April 16 under the auspices of Plymouth Female Choir, conductor, Mr. P. Butchers. With the R.M.L.I. band a brilliant and perfect reading was given of the Mendelssohn Concerto in G minor, Mr. P. S. G. O'Donnell conducting. Dr. Edwards played also music by Debussy and Chopin. The band achieved its usual high standard in music by Luigini and Saint-Saëns, and the choir sang part-songs by Christie ('Galway Piper'), Colin Taylor ('Slumber Song of the Madonna'), Wurm, Marks, Boyce, Bellingham (alias Mr. Gerald Phillips, a gifted local composer), and Elgar.

Plymouth Orpheus Choir (conductor, Mr. David Parkes) brought a very brilliant season to a brilliant close on May 23, securing a visit from Madame Melba, who sang a choice selection of French music and several English songs. The choir, among other beautiful performances, gave a striking interpretation of Percy Fletcher's arrangement of the traditional air of 'The British Grenadiers,' and the beautiful pianoforte playing of Miss Katharine Goodson made the occasion memorable.

Two organ recitals have been given in St. Sidwell's Wesleyan Church, Exeter, by Mr. W. Rains, his programmes including music by Rheinberger, Smart (the too much neglected Chorale with variations), Wolstenholme, D'Erry, Handel, Dubois, and Mendelssohn (fourth Sonata). The vocalists were Mr. J. B. Passmore and Mr. H. S. Reynolds. At Southernhay, on April 23, Mr. C. Wheaton, organist of St. Thomas's, gave a recital of French music.

Mr. Allan Allen showed excellent judgment in his choice of music performed in collaboration with performances of 'The Tempest' by the boys of Exeter School on May 8 and 9. A small orchestra was led by Mr. Montague Rendle, with Mr. R. B. Moore at the pianoforte; entracte music was 'Dreaming' (Berthold Tours), four numbers of Gade's 'Aquarellen,' a Serenade by Haydn, and a 'Chant' by Lemare. Incidental music was the 'Storm on a lake,' by Neukomm, and an Elegie by Tchaikovsky. 'Come unto these yellow sands' was sung to Purcell's music, 'Full fathom five' to a setting by John Ireland, and 'Where the bee sucks,' to Arne. A speciality dance was 'Sea Nymphs' (A. E. Curtis), and the country dance was 'Dargason.'

A choir of forty voices formed by G.W.R. men from Newport, sang with much enthusiasm, rich tone-quality, and fine precision at Exeter, on May 10, Mr. W. H. Bryant conducting.

Mr. Vladimir Cernikoff, at Torquay, on April 16, played pianoforte music by Bach, Schumann, Beethoven, Liszt, and Chopin, and introduced a Cradle Song and 'Scaramouche' by Holland. Madame Alice Montague showed special skill in songs by Purcell. Easter week found the band of the R.M.L.I. from Plymouth giving a four days' season in the Pavilion, Mr. P. S. G. O'Donnell conducting. Three concerts were given by Miss Margaret Cooper and party, and Madame Melba and Miss Katharine Goodson gave a vocal and pianoforte recital on the Saturday afternoon.

At an organ recital at Budleigh Salterton on May 3, Mr. F. J. Pinn played an Andante with Variations by Rea, and music by Cooke, Widor, Callaerts, Silas, and Merkel. Mr. S. J. Bishop sang a beautiful Prayer by Kalinnikov, and the air 'It is enough.'

A successful performance of German's 'Merrie England' was given by Ilfracombe Choral Society on April 24, under the conductorship of Mr. G. K. Batten.

CORNWALL.

During Passion-tide Stainer's 'Crucifixion' was given at Wadebridge, Maunder's 'Olivet to Calvary' at Carbis Bay (conductor, Mr. E. White), and St. Blazey (conductor, Mr. C. S. Edwards); 'Christ and His soldiers' was sung at West Looe (conductor, Mr. H. Mutton), and 'The Scene on Calvary' at St. Columb.

Choral music has been demonstrated by a performance of 'Elijah,' at Camborne, under the conductorship of Dr. H. V. Pearce, with Miss G. Carling leading the orchestra; a performance of Cowen's 'Rose maiden' by St. Ives Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Ernest White; a presentation with scenery of 'The enchanted glen,' by Menheniot G.F.S. choir, trained by Mrs. Leverton. Other societies which have been heard are St. Minver new Choral and Dramatic Society, Wadebridge Male Choir, and St. Blazey Brotherhood Choir.

A vocal festival, held at Bugle on April 23, was adjudicated by Mr. G. A. Russell. Regrettably, most of the classes were for solo-work. For choral-singing, Indian Queen's Council School Choir won the challenge shield, Bugle Junior Choir and Indian Queen's Council School Choir being tied in winning the same marks.

At the Assembly Rooms, Peterborough, on May 15, two successful concerts were given. The performers were Miss Doris Baker, Miss Sybil Eaton, Miss Alice Mandeville, Mr. Gervase Elwes, and Canon Cary-Elwes (violinello). The Hon. Mrs. Sandars and Mr. Alfred Baker accompanied. Modern British music was well represented by Frank Bridge's Trio for violin, 'cello, and pianoforte, Hamilton Harty's Passacaglia for violin, and songs by Mallinson, Cyril Scott, O'Connor Morris, Roger Quilter, John Ireland, and C. A. Lidgley. There were large and enthusiastic audiences.

GLASGOW.

The only item of interest to be recorded this month is the decision of the management of the Choral and Orchestral Union to resume operations in the Autumn. The appointment of Mr. Landon Ronald as conductor of the Scottish Orchestra has given universal satisfaction, and there is every reason to hope that the coming season may prove very successful. Mr. James G. Mackerracher, for many years manager of the City Hall Saturday evening concerts, has been appointed secretary and manager to the Choral and Orchestral Union, a post for which his experience and organizing ability well fit him.

The ninth Competitive Festival (April 26 to May 3 (referred to in the School Music Review for June) was one of the most successful yet held.

LIVERPOOL.

Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus,' the oratorio which was composed to celebrate the Duke of Cumberland's victory at Culloden in 1746, received an excellent performance at the concert given by the Philharmonic Society's choir on April 26 in aid of St. Dunstan's Hostel for blinded sailors and soldiers. Conducted by Dr. Arthur W. Pollitt the choral singing was instinct with spirit and intelligence. Under his excellent training the singers are finding new interest in their work, which in this case offered such fine opportunities. Dr. Pollitt maintained Handelian traditions in tempi—with perhaps one exception in 'See the conquering hero,' which was taken rather fast. In the tenor airs Mr. Frank Mullings electrified the audience by his inspired singing. The heroic Jewish leader lived again in a singer whose clarion notes and dramatic instinct render him a Handelian tenor beyond compare. The other principals achieved similar if lesser distinction, and it would be difficult indeed to associate Mr. Mullings with finer exponents of their respective rôles than Madame Agnes Nicholls, Miss Astra Desmond, and Mr. Robert Radford. Coloratura singing is evidently not yet a lost art. It is due to state that this memorable concert was organized by a committee of the Philharmonic choir, of which Mr. E. Thraves was chairman and Mr. W. J. Riley hon. secretary.

The time-honoured free performance of 'Messiah' was given on Good Friday. Fortunately on this occasion St. George's Hall was available, and Mr. Riley as usual organized an excellent choir which was conducted by Mr. Branscombe, with Mr. Ellingford as organist. The vocal principals were Miss Jennie Atwill, Miss Dorothy Ledsome, Mr. Roland Jackson, and Mr. Fowler Burton.

Concerts of sacred music also attracted large audiences on Good Friday evening, to the Royal Court and Shakespeare Theatres. In the former locale the Carl Rosa Opera Company sang Rossini's 'Stabat Mater,' in which the solos were taken by Miss Beatrice Miranda, Miss Gladys Parr, Mr. Hughes Macklin, and Mr. Arthur Winckworth. The conductor was Mr. H. de la Fuente.

At the Crane Hall popular Wednesday Afternoon Concert, on April 30, Mr. Anderson Tyrer gave another exhibition of masterful pianoforte playing in examples of Palmgren, whose music has in it so much freshness of expression, in Etudes and Valses and the C sharp minor Scherzo of Chopin, and in pieces of the prodigious order by de Schlozer, Domanievsky, and Liszt. A violin débutante, Miss Jo Lamb, made a highly favourable impression by her expressive tone and technical skill in playing Saint-Saëns's Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso. At the recital on May 7 another newcomer, Miss Marion K. Snowden, exhibited considerable powers as a pianist. They are, however, not yet wholly under control. She has brightness and vivacity, but her quieter moods are preferable, as in Chopin's Berceuse. The vocalist was Mr. W. H. Atkinson, who sang very well in baritone songs.

The Crane Hall Wednesday Recital on May 14 was devoted to a vocal programme carried through by two earnest singers, Madame Lottie Beaumont and Mr. Harold Hallas, with Mr. James Stott as an expert accompanist at the pianoforte. Madame Beaumont has a voice of excellent, even quality and good range, which she uses especially well in songs of a lyrical type. Mr. Hallas has limitations of voice and style which are not exactly suited to Korbay's dramatic Hungarian songs. In other items he was pleasantly heard. Too many songs were in serious vein. The English School was well represented by G. H. Ford (five MS. songs), Bantock, F. Bridge, Hubert Bath, and Herbert Hughes.

With Dr. James Lyon in the chair, the annual meeting of the local Organists' and Choirmasters' Association was held in Rushworth Hall on May 5. It appeared that but few members had availed themselves of the invitation to send in and perform original compositions at this meeting, so that expectation was confined to pieces by Mr. F. Whatmoor, Mr. G. Mc. N. Harvey, and Mr. Clifford Marshall. Quite the feature of the evening's music was Dr. Lyon's clever pianoforte improvisation on distinctly modern harmonic lines.

Thanks to the enterprise and ability of Mr. John Tobin, the Crosby Choral Union is making headway, and the singing of this excellent choir of forty was good and effective in the performance given on May 3 of Hubert Bath's Nautical Suite 'England Expects,' for baritone solo (Mr. Albert Kirkman), chorus, and orchestra. The adequate band of twenty was no less a feature. Led by Miss Lucy Beasley, it contained notable local players in Mr. Stanley Redfern (flute) and Mr. A. Camden (whose bassoon solo was a highly appreciated novelty). The Garden Scene from 'Faust' was subsequently performed, with Miss Lily Edwards, Miss Marie Skellorn, Mr. George Barnett, and Mr. Albert Kirkman as vocal principals.

The eightieth report of the Philharmonic Society's committee was presented at the annual meeting held on May 13, with Mr. W. E. Willink in the chair. The season of eight concerts was reported as highly successful musically and also financially, for the debit of £228 last year had been turned into a credit balance of £324. This, however, was owing to the remarkable increase from the lettings of the Hall. The committee was authorised to arrange for ten concerts to be given in the ensuing season, and not more than twelve during 1920-21. These are to be held on Tuesday evenings in preference to Saturday afternoons. The time of commencement in the evenings would depend on railway facilities. If the later trains to Manchester were resumed the concerts would commence at the old hour of 7.45, otherwise they would commence at 7 to enable certain members of the orchestra to catch the last train. The time has come for something to be done to obviate the necessity for going to Manchester for the brass and wood-wind. Mr. Behrend's suggestion of founding an orchestral school in Liverpool for the training of such instrumentalists is good and surely feasible.

Cowen's 'Rose Maiden' received a fresh lease of life by the performance which Madame Fanny de Boufflers conducted in Crane Hall on May 14. Notable among local lady musicians, Madame de Boufflers keeps her Liverpool Ladies' Choir at a high standard of efficiency, and with the aid of the Liverpool Vocal Union of male voices there was much to commend in the singing of the graceful music. Excellent vocal principals were found in Miss Maud Barry, Miss Lilian Elliott, Mr. Lloyd Moore, and Mr. Ralph Smith. The Bootle Musical Club Orchestra also assisted.

The sixth annual Musical Festival given by the children in the Liverpool Elementary Schools was successfully held in St. George's Hall on May 16. The choir of eight hundred children had been selected from seventy schools, and the conductor—elected by the teachers from their own body—was Mr. W. H. Fell. An account of the proceedings will be found in the current issue of the School Music Review.

The British Music Society (National and International) held an inaugural meeting of the Liverpool Centre of the Society (the first centre to be established out of London) in St. George's Hall on May 17. The president, Lord Howard de Walden, was in the chair, and the objects of the Society, so sensibly beneficial in their aim, were explained in speeches made by Dr. Eaglefield Hull, the Rev. Dr. E. H. Fellowes, and Mr. Francis Toye. The audience included representative local musicians, both professional and amateur, and the establishment of the Liverpool Centre, which was proposed by Dr. A. W. Pollitt, was a motion duly carried. Many members were enrolled at the meeting.

Captain Charles Knowles, after four and a-half years' active service, has now returned to the concert-platform.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.

As this message goes to print the Beecham Opera commences its sixth season, introducing for the first time at Manchester the 'Khovantshina' ballet scene (Moussorgsky); 'Night of May' (Rimsky-Korsakov), on June 6; 'Nail' (de Lara), on Whit Friday; and Borodin's 'Prince Igor' on July 16 and 21.

The afternoon of June 21 has been fixed for the choral Peace Celebration Festival at Belle Vue. Sixty choirs are expected to assemble, mustering approximately two thousand voices. The famed Besses o' th' Barn Band will also take part, in addition to an orchestra. Accommodation for thirty to forty thousand people is possible, so that the King's Fund for the widows and orphans of fallen soldiers should benefit handsomely. The Hallé chorus-master, Mr. R. H. Wilson, will conduct the choirs. For such a gathering the music must have simplicity and breadth. The appended programme, with possibly one exception, fulfils these requirements:

IN MEMORIAM.

Funeral March	Chopin
'Into the silent land'	A. R. Gaul
'Say, watchman, what of the night?'	Sullivan
'Happy and blest are they'	Mendelssohn
'Blest are the departed'	Spohr

THANKSGIVING.

Anthem	'O give thanks'	Goss
Chorus	'How lovely are the messengers'	Mendelssohn
Chorus Duet	'O Lovely Peace'	Handel
Chorus	'Achieved is the glorious work'	Haydn

PATRIOTIC.

Choral Epilogue	'It comes from the misty ages'	Elgar
Tenors and Chorus	'Come, if you dare'	Purcell
Choral Refrain (Soprano)	'Land of Hope and Glory'	Elgar
Chorus	'Hallelujah'	Handel
March	'Pomp and Circumstance'	Elgar

Three or four hymns to be interspersed among these items. The programme would gain if Gaul's part-song were replaced by, say, Cooke's 'How sleep the brave,' which has practically every quality that a simple 'In Memoriam' choral-song should have, or one of the various quite good settings of Scott's 'Marmion' fragment, 'Soldier, rest.' These occur to one whilst writing, and careful search would produce many more thoroughly appropriate numbers.

The Summer programmes of Park outdoor music began on May 18, and in advance would indicate a growing popularity for the concerts given by numerous Manchester small choirs. Probably not fewer than fifty such will be given in the small recreation grounds of the poorer parts of Manchester and Salford. It is one thing ministering to needs like these in the wintry dark days, but the devotion of singers to such social duty after a strenuous day's work, when the soul is crying for country air and country sights, always seems to me to gain an added value—'they also serve!'

Some time back I referred to our Manchester Sunday Concert problem and the policy of the City Council Watch Committee, which decreed that such might only be given if proceeds were for War-time charities, the idea of systematic Sunday concerts being ruled out entirely. Now a curious discrimination has arisen. Owing to an oversight no provision had been made for the annual Pension Fund Concert of the Hallé Orchestra (usually held the week after the close of the Hallé season). Orchestra, chorus, conductor, and soloists have always given their services, and during the current Beecham Opera season, with Sir Thomas at hand and the New Queen's Theatre to be had for the asking, the Hallé Society's executive applied for permission for a Sunday concert: but such a vital charity as this (members of the Orchestra have given their lives) not falling within the four corners of the Watch Committee's definition of War charities, was ignored. Habitual seven days to the week working in any fixed round of activity is not endurable in the long run—our munitions experience has taught us that very clearly—and many of the æsthetic and other arguments advanced for a systematic establishment of Sunday concerts would founder on that rock, but is recognition of such facts any reason for barring an occasional affair of this sort, where the conditions are everywhere known to be quite plain and above board?

The events of recent weeks undoubtedly were Rosing's two recitals, and two performances of the new Elgar Violin and Pianoforte Sonata. The purely Russian programme of Rosing I did not hear; his second recital was an endeavour to treat love in verse and music in the manner of the rolling seasons. As an idea I doubt its real value. Whatever he may be as an interpreter of Russian thought and feeling—and two items in his miscellaneous recital stirred him to unusually passionate vehemence—my impression was that, in a long and varied selection of songs, he would hardly seem to possess such outstanding qualities as an interpreter as one had been led to expect. He was, however, suffering somewhat acute pain from a knee damaged in the hotel just before the concert, and such physical distraction must have had effect on his night's work.

The Elgar Sonata was played the same afternoon (April 15) by Messrs. Hamilton Harty and Arthur Catterall: also on April 9 by Miss Ethel Midgeley and Mr. John Bridge. The earlier performance was quite the fuller revelation. Mr. Harty handled the pianoforte part with the utmost boldness, and against this background the brilliancy of the violin-playing left an indelible impression in the opening and closing movements. The fleeting beauty of the detached, fragmentary manner of writing in the 'Romance' section was even more arresting. It distils its own Elgarian fragrance, and in me produces just the same kind of tranquillising joy as does our country-side in all its virgin freshness of blossom and leafage.

The songs of Mr. Leo France, sung on May 12 by Miss Muriel Robinson and accompanied by Miss Edith Webster, have the supreme merit of fine verse. There were over a score given, of which I heard about half. One does not often happen on an effort of this type so finely sustained. In a few numbers there was a consciousness of dexterous toying with externals; in Francis Thompson's 'Messages' the emotional content of the verse and music gripped one powerfully—Arthur Symonds's 'Fountain Court' is a perfect miniature of drowsy beauty. Not all, however, were so graphic as these. Masefield's 'Tewkesbury Road' is no woman's song, but if essayed by the gentler sex, wants handling as a mettlesome horse.

The Opera House plan proposals have been made public, although so far no decisions are reached. If present ideas move forward it will have a bow-shaped façade opposite the Midland Hotel.

Can the clangour of street traffic be excluded in so central a position with a car service on three of its four sides?

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.

Newcastle being at present without an adequate concert-hall—the venerable Town Hall having been appropriated to one of the many controllers who have regulated our daily lives for the past three or four years—the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union was driven to give the first of its revived performances (on Wednesday, May 7) in the Cathedral Church of St. Nicholas. The principal choral works were Elgar's Te Deum and Benedictus and Parry's 'Voces Clamantium,' and a selection of sacred songs from 'The Motherland Song Book.' The accompaniments were given by a string orchestra led by Mr. Alfred Wall, with the wind-parts on the organ by Mr. W. Ellis. The programme also included Walford Davies's 'Solemn Melody' for strings and organ, Frank Bridge's 'Lament,' Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on a theme by Tallis, and Elgar's Elegy for strings, and 'Sursum Corda' for strings and organ. Miss Ethel MacLelland sang the Scena 'The sun goes down,' from 'The Kingdom,' and Mr. Ernest J. Potts two of Stanford's Bible Songs. Mr. W. G. Whittaker conducted.

In continuance of the policy followed by the Society for many years, the Northern Section of the I.S.M. gave a concert on Saturday, May 10, in the Literary and Philosophical Hall, Newcastle, with a programme of compositions by three of its members: Edgar L. Bainton, Alfred Wall, and W. G. Whittaker. The Northern Section feels just a little proud of itself since Edgar Bainton and Alfred Wall have both won prizes from the Carnegie Award Trust. The programme was divided into three groups, Mr. Whittaker leading with two pianoforte solos—a 'Trill' and a 'Lament'—followed by a group of songs for one and two voices. Mr. Wall was to May this be the forerunner of many Dieppe Festivals, and may it not be the last time that French and English choirs combine in paying tribute to the greatest of the Arts !

The soprano solo competition on this day left Mlle. Meyer as first-prize winner; the tenor solo, Staff-Sergt. Barnaby; and in the baritone, 2nd Lieut. Bourke and Sergt.-Major Jackson shared honours. The competition for violin solo was won by M. Léfébure, and that for pianoforte solo by Mlle. Barthés.

* The audience was invited to stand up and sing the chorus, 'Land of Hope and Glory,' which comes at the end of the March.

The choir consisted of ladies of the Q.A.I.M.N.S. (R.), T.F.N.S., and V.A.D., and members of His Majesty's Forces. The band was that of the Artillery Training School. This body of players consisted of fifteen strings, flute, piccolo, oboe, clarinets, horns, cornets, trombones, drums, and pianoforte, and was originally organized by Capt. H. C. Colles. The choir was admirably trained by Capt. Vowles, who conducted the first part of the programme. Mr. G. T. Holst, who was sent out by the Y.M.C.A. to look after things musical, directed the second half. Apart from 'Hiawatha,' which was specially ordered, the programme consisted of British music which happened to be on the spot.

Evidently this concert was the event of the season. Enormous enthusiasm was aroused. A lecture on British music by Mr. Holst at Summerhill Camp on February 17, at which five hundred were present, was followed by the whole programme except 'Hiawatha.' It was feared that this might spoil the concert, but it was very much the reverse. On Sunday night a full rehearsal was held at the 52nd General Hospital Theatre. 'No audience was invited, but four hundred or five hundred men did not worry about that.' On Monday afternoon another five hundred listened to the rehearsal. Then came the concert. Hundreds, including many red-hatted staff officers, were turned away. Some five hundred sat on chairs, others on the ground, in the orchestra, in the dressing rooms, behind the choir and in other odd corners (five men and a dog sat on the double-bass case!). People stood right round the building from four to six deep, while crowds of people stood or sat outside the theatre, which was a canvas one, so that they heard quite well.

The performance was excellent, the choir having been splendidly trained by Capt. Vowles. The concert had to be repeated the next night ('in order to prevent a free fight'). Undoubtedly a deep impression was made on the men, whose great cry was 'it ought to have been done before.' This indeed is a lamentable fact. Great opportunities have been lost, often owing to the ridiculous theory that Tommy likes nothing but rag-time. All honour to those who took the truer view, and organized this memorable concert.

Capt. Vowles, Mr. Holst, and Capt. Johns, R.A.M.C. (secretary), are to be congratulated on a wonderful piece of work, successfully carried out under tremendous difficulties, not the least of which was the bringing together of the band from many quarters. To this must be added the fact that some of the men were worn out with malaria and other troubles incidental to the climate and conditions.

A PARRY WORK IN BELGIUM.

Parry's Suite in F ('Lady Radnor's Suite') was in the programme of a popular Symphony concert given at Charleroi on April 25, conducted by M. Martin Lunssens. We extract the following from the Journal de Charleroi of April 27:

Le concert de l'Académie.—L'Académie donnait hier son cinquième grand concert symphonique; le programme, des plus attrayant, débutait par la Symphonie Italienne de Mendelssohn. Disons de suite qu'elle bénéficia d'une interprétation remarquable, ainsi que l'ouverture de 'Guillaume Tell.' Ces deux œuvres formaient la partie de musique ancienne de la séance. La 'Suite en fa,' de sir Hubert Parry, nous fait faire connaissance avec nos amis britanniques; reconnaissons franchement que si elle n'exprime aucune idée nouvelle, le charme et la mélodie enveloppent toute cette page; c'est de la saine musique.

Future Charleroi programmes will contain works by Hamilton Harty, Elgar, German, and Bantock.

The performance of 'Messiah' at the British Embassy Church, Paris, on April 18, was probably the first given in the city by an all-British choir. The soloists were Miss Gaskin, Mrs. Clarke Holland, Mr. Rudolph Plamondon, and Mr. John Byrne, and Mr. John West supplied organ accompaniments. The choir, directed by Mr. Percy J. Vincent, numbered between sixty and seventy voices, and its work appears to have been on a high level.

Country News.

BANGOR (NORTH WALES).—On April 30 the University College Choral Society gave an excellent performance of 'The Banner of St. George' (Elgar) accompanied by the College orchestra, which was augmented for the occasion by members of the Hallé Orchestra. Preceding the work a miscellaneous programme was given, when songs were contributed by Mrs. Hughes-Williams and violin solos by Mr. S. A. Duce, together with the Vivace movement from the 'Scotch' Symphony, Mendelssohn. Dr. Caradog Roberts, director of music at the College, conducted.

COVENTRY.—A programme of rare value was carried out by the Coventry Choral Society at the Empire Theatre on April 15, under Mr. Potter's direction. It included Bach's 'Sing ye to the Lord' and Elgar's six-part song 'Go, song of mine,' both of which were given in a manner worthy of the choir's traditions.

Craven Arms.—At its eighteenth concert the Craven Arms and District Choral Society performed 'Judas Maccabæus' in the Assembly Rooms on May 7. The soloists were Miss Dorothy Freeman (Birmingham), Madame Garnier, Mr. Aikens (Hereford Cathedral), and Mr. W. Batey (Hereford Cathedral). Miss Monique Poole, of Miss Lena Ashwell's Concert Parties, led the orchestra, which was drawn from Ludlow. Mr. H. H. Salt, of Shrewsbury, played the 'cello, and Mr. F. Bastick, of Ludlow, was at the pianoforte. The conductor was the Rev. W. D. Latouche.

HARROGATE.—An interesting scheme is put forward by Mr. Julian Clifford for the coming season of symphony concerts. The programmes are to include Arensky's Symphonique Suite 'Silhouettes,' Glazounov's Suite 'Moyen-Age,' Fauré's Suite 'Pelléas et Melisande' (first performance in England), a new Symphony by Arnold Trowell, Holbrooke's Pianoforte Concerto 'Gwyn ap Nudd,' and a new tone-poem by Mr. Clifford, 'Lights out,' also new works by Norman O'Neill, John Ansell, and Arthur Hervey.

HEXHAM.—The Gentlemen's Glee Club, founded by Mr. S. Wallbank (Abbey organist in 1912), was suspended during the war. Under Mr. Wallbank's conductorship it has now been resuscitated, and it is hoped that the organization will meet with such support in Hexham and district as will ensure its success.

LEICESTER.—An exacting programme was adopted by Mr. Vincent Dearden's Ladies' Choir for a concert at the Edward Wood Hall on May 5. In it were included Coleridge-Taylor's 'From the green heart of the waters' and 'What can lambskins do?' Vaughan Williams's 'Sound sleep,' Colin Talyor's 'Slumber Song of the Madonna,' and Percy Fletcher's 'Follow me down to Carlow.'

NORWICH.—The Philharmonic Society brought its series of concerts to a very successful conclusion for the present season on Thursday, May 8. The chief attraction was Elgar's Violin Concerto, which was heard for the first time at Norwich. Albert Sammons was the soloist, and played magnificently. He was most ably supported by the orchestra. The work had a splendid reception from a crowded audience. The other orchestral works were Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony and Beethoven's 'Egmont' Overture. The vocalist was Miss Minnie Searle, who sang Mozart's 'Non mi dir' from 'Don Giovanni,' and a group of songs with pianoforte accompaniment with complete success. Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' given in the evening, was marked by the fine singing of the choir. Miss Searle, Mr. A. E. Benson, and Chorister Wilson were the soloists, and the work was received with enthusiasm by the audience. Dr. Frank Bates conducted both concerts.

SUFFOLK.—With the multitude of military in East Anglia during the war, what remained of musical talent was busily employed, but as was only to be expected the energies of choral societies and other musical bodies remained dormant. With the more serious aspect of war now ended, evidence is not lacking of a general awakening, and Autumn will find enthusiasts alive. In the Spring of 1915 the well-known Ipswich Choral Society managed a remarkable presentation of Verdi's 'Requiem,' and since has not emerged. Stowmarket was the first of the premier choral societies in this part of the country to make a fresh start. Here is a very live Society which with the new year began rehearsing to present at its May concert a performance of 'Judas Maccabæus' which was probably the best in the creditable history of the organization. The choral singing was quite an enjoyable feature. This Society has a very indefatigable conductor in Mr. William Hockey, who imbues his choir with his own tremendous enthusiasm, the ensemble owing much to his persistently good service. Whilst separated from his choral societies Mr. Hockey has organized or assisted at four hundred concerts for the entertainment of soldiers or the benefit of different war charities.

Miscellaneous.

A COSMOPOLITAN AUDIENCE.

Mr. Frederick Kitchener gave a pianoforte recital at Shepherd's Hotel, Cairo, on April 27, playing a Prelude and Fugue of Bach, Beethoven's C sharp minor Sonata, a selection from Schumann's 'Carnaval,' some studies of Chopin, and pieces by Moszkowski, Paderewski, Cyril Scott, and Liszt. The audience included Sir Edmund Allenby and Lady Allenby, and the French, American, and Spanish Ministers. The audience of 160 was made up of fifteen nationalities—English, Australian, American, French, Italian, Spanish, Greek, Russian, Danish, Egyptian, Turkish, Armenian, Albanian, Syrian, and Jewish. The programme was printed in French. What a chance for Esperanto!

It is announced by the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust that in connection with its music publication scheme sixty-four works were sent in this year as compared with seventy-five last year, and that the quality and variety of the works submitted are encouragingly good. The adjudicators unanimously recommend the following for publication: Three Rhapsodies for String Quartet, by George Dyson; 'The Hound of Heaven,' for solo baritone, chorus, and orchestra, by William H. Harris; 'The Hymn of Jesus,' for chorus and orchestra, by Gustav Holst; Sextet for Strings, in G minor, by P. H. Miles; and Sir C. V. Stanford's Symphony No. 5, 'L'Allegro ed il Pensieroso.'

The Pinner Choral Society need fear no comparisons in the matter of enterprise, for it 'has as one of its chief aims the production of rarely-heard works of native origin and the avoidance as far as possible of the beaten track.' On May 8 its programme included Walthew's Overture 'Friend Fritz' (not a happy title to set before a post-War audience), Ernest Walker's 'Ode to a Nightingale,' and his five songs from 'England's Helicon.'

In the advanced and intermediate grades of the Associated Board local centre examinations, held during March and April, medals were gained by Miss Amy Maynard, Oxford (gold medal), and Miss Madeleine Windsor, Bath (silver medal), in the advanced section, and by Mr. Leslie B. Taylor, Derby (gold medal), and Miss Camilla J. Lloyd, London (silver medal), in the intermediate section.

The School Music Review for June contains a short summary of good rules for singing, written by Mr. R. J. Pitcher, under the heading 'A vade-mecum for all would-be singers.'

Their Majesties the King and Queen and Her Majesty Queen Alexandra have graciously signified their willingness to accept a copy of 'A Westminster Pilgrim.'

The Beethoven Festival at Queen's Hall, on May 19-24, occurs too late for notice this month. An account will appear in our July number.

Congratulations to our contemporary, Musical Opinion, on the appearance, on May 1, of its five-hundredth number.

Answers to Correspondents.

'H. P. J.'—We do not recommend you to take up musical criticism, save as an extra. The work is not often well paid, and makes considerable demands on one's time. If you have the necessary qualifications—a good all-round knowledge of music and ability to express your judgments in a clear and interesting manner—you should try for a post on your local paper. You will probably have to begin as understudy, but if you can do the work well you will soon make your own position there or elsewhere.

A. V. CHRISTIE.—Try Cowen's 'Four English Dances in the Olden Style,' Handel's two Bourrées from the 'Water Music,' Rameau's Gavotte in D and 'Rigaudon de Dardanus' for pianoforte and various string combinations. (Novello & Co.)

'PENMAN.'—It is impossible to give an opinion regarding your loss of voice and laryngeal trouble without hearing you sing. Consult a good teacher, or doctor—perhaps both.

CONTENTS.

	Page
Our Seventy-fifth Anniversary	265
Modern British Composers—IV. Eugène Goossens.
By Edwin Evans	265
Igor Stravinsky. By Leigh Henry	268
Interludes	272
The Rules of Combined Counterpoint (concluded).
By George J. Bennett	275
Occasional Notes	277
A New Form of Choral Composition. By S. Royle
Shore	279
Elgar's New Chamber Music	282
Walt Whitman. By Sydney Grew	283
The 18th and the Early 19th Century in English
Music (continuea). By F. A. Hadland	285
The League of Arts	286
The Russians at the Alhambra. By Edwin Evans	286
Church and Organ Music	287
Church Music: The Use of Bands. By Ulric Daubney	287
Reviews	294
Letters to the Editor	295
Obituary	299
Sixty Years Ago	300
The Musicians' Y.M.C.A. Gift	300
Some Musical Signs. By C. Edgar Thomas	300
Music Libraries and Catalogues... ..	302
The Modern Spirit in Music	303
Restaurant Music. By Nicholas Gatty	304
Mr. Albert Coates	304
Royal Opera, Covent Garden	305
London Concerts	305
Music in the Provinces	306
The Feis Ceoil, 1919	311
Dieppe Musical Festival	311
British Music in Salonica	311
A Parry Work in Belgium	312
Country News	312
Miscellaneous	313
Answers to Correspondents	313

MUSIC:

'The Tide Rises, the Tide Falls. Part-Song for Four Voices. By ADAM CARSE 289

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this number:—

1. O thou Sword of the Lord. Introit for Chorus, Orchestra, and Organ. By Myles B. Foster.
2. Reproduction in facsimile of the first number of THE MUSICAL TIMES, June 1, 1844.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BRIDGE, SIR FREDERICK. — "A Westminster Pilgrim." Being a record of service in Church, Cathedral, and Abbey, College, University and Concert-Room, with a few Notes on Sport. Cloth, 16s. net.

CARSE, ADAM. — "The tide rises, the tide falls." Four-part Song (No. 916, The Musical Times). 1½d.

CUTTLE, W. — "The Grenadiers' Good-bye." Song. In D minor. 2s.

ELGAR, EDWARD. — Quartet. For Strings (Op 83). Score, 5s. ; Parts, 8s.

GRAY, ALAN. — "1914." By Rupert Brooke. Set to music for Chorus and Organ, or Orchestra. 1s.

—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in G. (No. 961, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 4d.

MACPHERSON, CHARLES. — "Sing unto God." An Anthem of Thanksgiving and Commemoration after the great War. Written for the 265th Annual Festival of the Sons of the Clergy. 1s.

OULD, S. GREGORY. — "Ave Maria." S.S.A. Unaccompanied. 3d.

PRESBYTER. — "Missa Brevis." 6d.

PUMFREY, FRANCES H. — Three Hymns. 21.

ROBINSON, W. E. — "Lord God of Hosts, to Thee we raise." Hymn of Peace. 1d. Words only, 5d. per dozen ; 1s. 6d. per 50.

ROBSON, R. WALKER. — Two Hymns. 2d.

ROSS, W. G. — "Gaudete." (No. 57, Original Compositions for the Organ, New Series.) 1s. 6d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 324) contains the following music in both notations:—"Over the Rocky hillside." Trio for S.S.A. Adapted from "Il Barbiere di Siviglia." Composed by ROSSINI. 1½d.

SMART, HENRY. — Te Deum laudamus, in F. Arranged for Boys' or Female voices (S.S.), by John E. West. (No. 65, Novello's Chorister Series.) 2d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:—

No. 2295.—"Rule, Britannia." (Arranged by W. P. Rivers.) DR. ARNE 1½d.

„ 2297.—"O God, our Help." Adapted by SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE 1½d.

„ 2298.—Recessional. J. B. DYKES 1½d.

VICTOR, ADELA. — "Reflections." For Pianoforte Solo. 2s. 6d.

WEST, JOHN E. — "I will extol my God." Anthem for Thanksgiving or General use. (No. 1068, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 3d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

ANDREWS, MARK (arranged by). — "The Waits." For T.T.B.B.

BERGH, ARTHUR. — Vesper Song. 60 cents (2s. 6d.).

DELAMARTER, ERIC. — "The Pipes of Pan." Part-song for eight voices. 25 cents (1s.).

LESTER, WILLIAM. — "With righteousness He judgeth all." Anthem for Soprano (or Tenor) Solo and Chorus. 12 cents (6d.).

— "The Haven of Rest for aye." Anthem for Baritone Solo and Chorus. 15 cents (8d.).

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(Continued).

LUTKIN, P. C. — A Hymn of Thanksgiving for Victory. 75 cents (3s. 6d.).

ROCKE, FREDERICK. — "In Flanders' Fields." 60 cents (2s. 6d.).

YARROLL, H. R. — "Come, ye disconsolate." Sacred Song. 60 cents (2s. 6d.).

THE ROYAL COLLEGE of MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (founded by Sir S. Ernest Palmer, Bt., for the encouragement of British composers and executive artists).

NOTICE TO BRITISH COMPOSERS.

A series of ten rehearsals will commence in the Autumn, at which works by British composers will be performed, thus affording the composers an opportunity of hearing their works played by a first-rate professional orchestra. This series will take place in the Concert Hall of the Royal College of Music.

Composers wishing to avail themselves of the opportunity offered are invited to send the score of any one work which they would like to submit to the Selection Committee, to the Registrar, not later than June 16, 1919.

The Selection Committee will give preference to works not requiring more than twenty minutes for performance.

Full particulars may be had on application to the Registrar, Royal College of Music, Prince Consort Road, South Kensington, S.W. 7.

QUINTET

IN G MINOR,

FOR PIANOFORTE AND STRINGS.

COMPOSED BY ARTHUR HINTON.

PRICE TEN SHILLINGS NET.

PRESS OPINIONS.

"Arthur Hinton's fine Pianoforte Quintet is a work that should be played far more frequently than is the case, in spite of the fact that it has attained to the somewhat rare dignity—for a native chamber composition—of print."—Daily Telegraph.

"Well worthy of a place in company with masterpieces such as Mozart's D minor and Haydn's 'Hornpipe' Quartet, which were set down."—Morning Post.

ELKIN & Co., Ltd., 8 & 10, Beak Street, Regent St., London, W. And all Musicsellers in the United Kingdom and Colonies.

WANTED, Second-hand Vocal Scores of Handel's DEBORAH, in good condition. State price and number to Ernest Harcourt, Corelli School of Music, 9, Cambridge St., Norwich.

THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SCALE OF TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Two Lines	..	..	..	..	..	£	s.	d.
Three Lines	..	..	..	..	..	0	3	0
For every additional Line	..	..	..	..	..	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	..	..	..	..	..	0	10	0
Half a Column	..	..	..	..	..	2	0	0
A Column	..	..	..	..	..	4	0	0
A Page	..	..	..	..	..	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.-1, not later than

THURSDAY, JUNE 19 (FIRST POST).

ANTHEMS FOR TRINITYTIDE.

COMPLETE LIST.

*Almighty and everlasting God	Gibbons	1½d.
Angel spirits ever blessed (Hymn to the Trinity, No. 3)
Ascribe unto the Lord	P. Tchaikovsky	2d.
Behold, God is great	S. S. Wesley	4d.
Beloved, if God so loved us	E. W. Naylor	4d.
Beloved, let us love one another	J. Barnby	1½d.
*Be ye all of one mind	Gerard F. Cobb	1½d.
*Blessed angel spirits (Hymn to the Trinity) ..	Arthur E. Godfrey	3d.
*Blessed is the man	P. Tchaikovsky	1½d.
*Blessing and glory	John Goss	4d.
*Blessing, glory	Boyce	1½d.
Come, ye children	Bach	6d.
*God came from Teman	Josiah Booth	3d.
*God so loved the world	C. Steggall	4d.
Grant, O Lord	Matthew Kingston	1½d.
*Hail, gladdening Light	Mozart	2d.
*Hail, gladdening Light	J. T. Field	1½d.
He in tears that soweth (s.s.a.), in Key of A	G. C. Martin	4d.
*He in tears that soweth (s.s.a.), in Key of A flat	F. Hiller	1½d.
*Holy, holy, holy	F. Hiller	1½d.
Holy, Lord God Almighty	Crotch	3d.
*How goodly are Thy tents	Thomas Bateson	4d.
*How lovely are Thy dwellings	F. Ouseley	1½d.
*Hymn to the Trinity (Blessed angel spirits) ..	Spohr	1½d.
Hymn to the Trinity, No. 3 (Angel spirits, ever blessed)	P. Tchaikovsky	1½d.
I am Alpha and Omega	P. Tchaikovsky	2d.
*I am Alpha and Omega	Ch. Gounod	3d.
I am Alpha and Omega	J. Stainer	1½d.
I beheld, and lo!	J. Varley Roberts	3d.
I know that the Lord is great	Blow	6d.
I saw the Lord	F. Ouseley	1½d.
I saw the Lord	Cuthbert Harris	3d.
I will magnify	J. Stainer	6d.
I will sing of Thy power	J. Shaw	3d.
*I will sing of Thy power	Greene	4d.
I will sing unto the Lord	A. Sullivan	1½d.
In humble faith	H. Wareing	3d.
*In Jewry is God known	G. Garrett	1½d.
In sweet consent	J. Clarke-Whitfield	1½d.
In the fear of the Lord	E. H. Thorne	3d.
Let the peace of God	J. Varley Roberts	3d.
*Light of the world	J. Stainer	4d.
*Lord of all power and might	E. Elgar	3d.
Lord of all power and might (Men's Voices) ..	William Mason	1½d.
Lord, we pray Thee	J. Barnby	2d.
*Lord, we pray Thee	H. A. Chambers	1½d.
O Father blest	J. Varley Roberts	1½d.
O joyful Light	J. Barnby	3d.
*O Lord, my trust	B. Tours	4d.
*O taste and see	King Hall	1½d.
*O taste and see	John Goss	3d.
O taste and see	A. Sullivan	1½d.
O where shall wisdom be found?	A. H. Mann	3d.
Ponder my words, O Lord	Boyce	6d.
*Praise His awful Name	Arnold D. Culley	1½d.
Rejoice in the Lord	Spohr	2d.
*See what love hath the Father	G. C. Martin	6d.
Sing to the Lord	Mendelssohn	1½d.
*Stand up and bless	Mendelssohn	8d.
Teach me Thy way	John Goss	4d.
*The Lord hath been mindful	W. H. Gladstone	1½d.
*The Lord is my Shepherd	S. S. Wesley	3d.
The Lord is my Shepherd	G. A. Macfarren	1½d.
The Lord will comfort Zion	J. Shaw	3d.
Thou shalt shew me the path of life	H. Hiles	6d.
*We give Thee thanks	Alan Gray	1½d.
We have heard with our ears	G. A. Macfarren	3d.
Whoever is born of God	H. Aldrich	1s.
Who can comprehend Thee	H. Oakeley	3d.
	Mozart	3d.

THE "LUTE" SERIES

124a Almighty God, Who hast promised	H. Elliot Button	1d.
124b Grant to us, Lord	H. Elliot Button	1d.
*7b Let Thy merciful ears	A. R. Gaul	1½d.
22 O God, Who hast prepared	A. R. Gaul	2d.
39 Teach me Thy way	Frank L. Moir	3d.
124c We humbly beseech Thee	H. Elliot Button	1d.

Antheims marked thus (*) may be had in Tonic Sol-fa, 1d. to ad. each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

Thanksgiving for Victory.

SELECTED LIST OF SETTINGS OF

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS.

EASY.

	s.	d.
Ambrosian (edited by Sir F. Bridge)	0	3
Barnby, J., in B ⁷ (Unison) (Sol-fa, 1d.)	0	3
Bennett, G. J., in D (Unison)	0	3
Cambridge, F., in E ⁷	0	3
Couldrey, H. R., in D	0	3
Dykes, J. B., in F (Sol-fa, 1½d.)	0	1½
Garrett, G. M., in F (Sol-fa, 1½d.)	0	3
Hopkins, E. J., in B ⁷ (Unison)	0	3
Hopkins, J. L., in G (Sol-fa, 1½d.)	0	3
Naylor, E. W., in E ⁷ (Unison)	0	3
Parry, C. H. H., in D (Partly Unison) (Sol-fa, 1d.)	0	3
Selby, B. Luard, in D (Unison)	0	3
*Smart, H., in F (Sol-fa, 1½d.)	0	3
Do. do. (arr. female or boys' voices) (do. 2d.)	0	2
Stainer, J., in C (Sol-fa, 1½d.)	0	3
Stearns, B., in F	0	3
Sullivan, A., in D (Sol-fa, 1d.)	0	1½
Tours, B., in F (four voices) (Sol-fa, 2d.)	0	4
Do. do. (Unison)	0	3
Tozer, F., in E ⁷	0	3
Woodward, H. H., in E ⁷ (Sol-fa, 1½d.)	0	3

Moderate.

Alcock, W. G., in B ⁷	0	4
Barnby, J., in E	0	4
Blair, H., in E ⁷	0	3
*Brewer, A. H., in B ⁷	0	3
* Do. in E ⁷	0	4
Bullivant, G., in E ⁷	0	4
Calkin, J. B., in B ⁷	0	4
Ireland, J., in F	0	3
Lloyd, C. H., in E ⁷ (Sol-fa, 2d.)	0	4
Macpherson, C., in E ⁷	0	4
*Martin, G. C., in A (Sol-fa, 2d.)	0	6
Naylor, E. W., in A	0	4
Pointer, J., in B ⁷	0	3
Pullein, J., in B ⁷	0	3
Ross, W. G., in A	0	3
Stainer, J., in A (Sol-fa, 2d.)	0	4
Do. in B ⁷ (Sol-fa, 2d.)	0	6
Do. in E ⁷ (Sol-fa, 2d.)	0	6
*Stanford, C. V., in B ⁷ (Sol-fa, 1½d.)	0	4
Steggall, C., in G (Sol-fa, 1½d.)	0	4
*Westbury, G. H., in A	0	3
*West, John E., in G (Sol-fa, 1½d.)	0	3

MORE ADVANCED.

Blair, H., in D	0	6
*Elgar, E., in F	1	0
Gadsby, H., in C	0	6
Goss, J., in D	0	6
King, O., in D	0	6
*Lemare, E. H., in E ⁷	0	6
Martin, G. C., in C	0	8
Parker, H. W., in E	0	6
*Parry, C. H. H. (Coronation, 1911)	1	0
Stanford, C. V., in A	0	4
*Sullivan, A. (Thanksgiving for Victory) (Sol-fa, 9d.)	1	0
* Do. (Festival) (Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.)	2	0
West, John E., in A	0	4
Do. in F	0	4
Williams, C. Lee, in A	0	6

* Orchestral Parts obtainable.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.

"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.

"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.

Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

HARVEST ANTHEMS.

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
Sing to the Lord of Harvest	3d.	2d.
While the earth remaineth	3d.	2d.
Blessed be the Name of the Lord	3d.	2d.

SERVICES.

SERVICE IN G	1/6	1s.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum	3d.	2d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	2d.	2d.
Benedictus	2d.	2d.
Jubilate	3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion	8d.	6d.
Pater Noster from the above	2d.	2d.
Amen ditto	1d.	1d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	3d.	2d.

SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	1s.	8d.
---------------------------------------	-----	-----

Or, separately:—

Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion	6d.	4d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	3d.	2d.
Te Deum in B flat	3d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	3d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	3d.	2d.

ORGAN.

Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	2s.	—
--	-----	---

CHURCH CANTATA.

Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for General use)	1/6	1s.
--	-----	-----

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

HARK! HARK! MY SOUL

SACRED SONG.

THE WORDS BY
F. W. FABER.

THE MUSIC BY
PERCY E. FLETCHER.

IN TWO KEYS.

Price 2s. each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

AFTER TUMULT, REST

TENOR SOLO

FROM

WAR AND PEACE

COMPOSED BY

C. H. H. PARRY.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSIC

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, MUS. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES.

Venite—Two settings in Chant Form—one in G } 2d.
and one in A	each.
Te Deum laudamus in A	4d.
Benedictus in A	3d.
Jubilate in A	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in A	4d.

ORGAN MUSIC.

Eight Organ Pieces in Four Sets:—	s. d.
No. 1. Air in C; Larghetto in F; and } 1 6
Andante in D... .. .
No. 2. Russian Air in G, varied. An Air } 1 6 from Pierson's "Jerusalem"... .. .
No. 3. Andante in E flat and Andante in F, } 1 6 from Concerto by Cramer
No. 4. Fantasia alla Marcia in C	2 0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

OLD

ENGLISH VIOLIN MUSIC

EDITED BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

ALTHOUGH considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Glee and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the eighteenth century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured bass for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

ALFRED MOFFAT.

No.		s. d.
1.	SONATA in G major JAMES LATES	2 0
2.	SONATA in D minor HENRY ECCLES	2 0
3.	SONATA in B flat major WILLIAM BABELL	2 0
4.	SONATA in G minor JOHN STANLEY	2 0
5.	SONATA in A major JOHN COLLETT	2 0
6.	TRIO-SONATA in E minor THOMAS AUGUSTINE ARNE	3 0
7.	SONATA in D major RICHARD JONES	2 0
8.	TRIO-SONATA in D minor WILLIAM BOYCE	3 0
9.	THREE PIECES WILLIAM BOYCE	2 0
10.	SONATA in E major CHARLES MACKLEAN	2 0
11.	SONATA in G minor WILLIAM CROFT	2 0
12.	SONATA in D minor JOSEPH GIBBS	2 0
13.	SONATA in D minor JOHN HUMPHRIES	2 0
14.	SONATA in A minor THOMAS VINCENT	2 0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

EIGHT EASY MELODIES

FOR YOUNG BEGINNERS

FOR

VIOLIN

With Pianoforte Accompaniment

COMPOSED BY

ERNEST NEWTON.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

The pieces are suitable for Solo or Ensemble playing.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

48 PRELUDES AND FUGUES

(THE WELL-TEMPERED CLAVICHORD)

A NEW EDITION, CAREFULLY REVISED AND FINGERED BY

HAROLD BROOKE.

IN TWO PARTS.

Price 2s. 6d. each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE MONTHS

TWELVE SKETCHES FOR THE PIANOFORTE

BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN

IN FOUR BOOKS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

CONTENTS:—

BOOK 1.

January. Lullaby for the New Year.
 February. (St. Valentine) Flirtations.
 March. Boreas.

BOOK 2.

April. In Springtime.
 May. Italian Serenade.
 June. Birds.

BOOK 3.

July. Butterflies.
 August. Mid-day Réverie.
 September. Harvest Hymn.

BOOK 4.

October. Autumn Evening Song.
 November. Civic Procession in the Olden Time.
 December. Christmas Morn.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA BY THE COMPOSER.

No. 2.	February.	String Parts (5)	—	4s. od.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	2s. 9d.
No. 5.	May.	String Parts (5)	...	1s. 6d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	1s. 6d.
No. 6.	June.	String Parts (4)	...	1s. od.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	2s. 6d.
No. 9.	September.	String Parts (5)	...	2s. 6d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	5s. od.
No. 12.	December.	String Parts (5)	...	2s. 3d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	4s. 6d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" consists of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on, and the appropriate pairs are now issued bound together in cloth (see Cloth Bindings below).

1A. TECHNICAL PRACTICE (1st Position)	2s. od.	1B. STUDIES (1st Position)	2s. od.
2A. DITTO (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. od.	2B. DITTO (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. 6d.
3A. DITTO ... (1st to 5th Position)	3s. od.	3B. DITTO ... (1st to 5th Position)	3s. od.
4A. DITTO ... (all Positions)	2s. 6d.	4B. DITTO ... (all Positions)	3s. od.
5A. DITTO ... Do.	2s. 6d.	5B. DITTO ... Do.	3s. od.
6A. DITTO ... Do.	3s. od.	6B. DITTO ... Do.	3s. od.

CLOTH BINDINGS.

Book 1. (1A and 1B, bound together) in Cloth	...	...	...	5s. od.
" 2. (2A and 2B, bound together)	Do.	...	...	5s. 6d.
" 3. (3A and 3B, bound together)	Do.	...	...	7s. od.
" 4. (4A and 4B, bound together)	Do.	...	...	6s. 6d.
" 5. (5A and 5B, bound together)	Do.	...	...	6s. 6d.
" 6. (6A and 6B, bound together)	Do.	...	...	7s. od.

PIECES.

In completion of the scheme of "A Modern School" a number of Pieces are published, in a form designed to fulfil the requirements of Violin Teachers and Students. In each number the Violin part is furnished with complete Fingerings and Bowings, besides remarks as to the methods of rendering, &c.

No. 13. TWELVE FOLK DANCES FROM DENMARK (1st Position)	2s. od.	No. 21. CONCERTO IN A MINOR. J. S. BACH (1st to 6th Position)	2s. od.
No. 14. SONATA IN G MINOR. G. TARTINI (All Positions)	2s. od.	No. 22. CONCERTO IN A MINOR. PIERRE RODE (Op. 9). (All Positions)	2s. 6d.
No. 15. OVERTURE TO SAMSON. G. F. HANDEL (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. od.	No. 23. TWELVE CAROLS (1st Position)	2s. od.
No. 16. SONATINA IN D. FRANZ SCHUBERT (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. od.	No. 24. SONATA IN A. W. A. MOZART (1st to 5th Position)	2s. od.
No. 17. EIGHT HYMN TUNES. VARIOUS COMPOSERS (1st Position)	1s. 6d.	No. 25. RÊVERIE. HENRI VIEUXTEMPS (Op. 22, No. 3). (Advanced)	2s. od.
No. 18. STYRIAN DANCES (LANDLER) (Op. 165). JOSEF LANNER (1st to 5th Position)	2s. od.	No. 26. FOUR LITTLE PIECES. (From Op. 8) IGNAZ PLEYEL (1st Position)	2s. od.
No. 19. PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN G MINOR. J. S. BACH (Advanced)	2s. od.	No. 27. SARABANDE AND TAMBOURIN. JEAN-MARIE LECLAIR (1st to 5th Position)	2s. od.
No. 20. SONATA IN G (No. 8). JOSEPH HAYDN (1st to 6th Position)	2s. od.	No. 28. BOURRÉE AND GIGUE. J. S. BACH (1st and 3rd Positions)	1s. 6d.
		No. 29. BALLADE AND POLONAISE. HENRI VIEUXTEMPS (Op. 38) (Advanced)	2s. od.

NOVELLO'S POPULAR PIANOFORTE ALBUMS FOR YOUNG PERFORMERS.

HUBERT BATH
DOLL'S-HOUSE SUITE

Price Two Shillings.

ERNEST NEWTON
WOODLAND DANCES

Price Two Shillings.

FRANCESCO BERGER
EIGHTEEN LITTLE PIECES

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

HUBERT G. OKE
THREE PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN
HAPPY THOUGHTS

Price Two Shillings.

SCHUMANN
PIECES FOR THE YOUNG

Part I., Price 1s ; Part II., Price 1s. 6d.

ARNOLD KRUG
TEN LITTLE PIECES

Op. 109.

In two Books. Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

SCHUMANN
THREE PIANOFORTE SONATAS

(Part III. of Pieces for the Young).

Price One Shilling.

ARNOLD KRUG
SCENES FROM FAIRY-LAND

In two Books. Price Two Shillings each.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING
SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

TH. KULLAK
TWENTY-FOUR PIECES

Op. 62 AND 81.

In four Books. Price One Shilling each.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING
OUR VILLAGE IN SUMMER

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

MAX MAYER
BAGATELLES

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

E. A. SYDENHAM
SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

MENDELSSOHN
SIX CHRISTMAS PIECES

Price One Shilling.

TSCHAIKOWSKY
CHRISTMAS ALBUM

In three Books. Price One Shilling each.

FRANCESCO BERGER
FIRST STEPS AT THE PIANOFORTE

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

A WESTMINSTER PILGRIM BY SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

Three-hundred-and-sixty pages, Large Demy 8vo, with a Frontispiece in Colour by Sir LESLIE WARD, numerous Illustrations, and a special Portrait of the Author by Sir WILLIAM RICHMOND, K.C.B., R.A.

CLOTH, GILT, SIXTEEN SHILLINGS NET.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

THE TIMES.

As his writing is full of illustrations of his own cheerful character, so the book is appropriately full of illustrations, drawings, and photographs, showing him at all ages, the Cathedral churches in which he has worked, his predecessors and successor at the Abbey, and all the persons and things who have "pleased him mightily."

MORNING POST.

There are many illustrations. One plate consists of portraits of the fourteen organists of Westminster Abbey since 1549, and there are numerous other pictures of interest. The whole is something more than a book of reminiscences; it can be read with interest by the non-musical, and can be turned to by the historian for light shed by an authority.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Under the happy title of "A Westminster Pilgrim" Sir Frederick Bridge has narrated in a vivacious manner many of the most outstanding events of his distinguished career. The volume has qualities which make it an important contribution to the history of music in England.

EVENING STANDARD.

The book must be read to be appreciated. Stories wrenched from their context do less than justice to the personality which pervades the volume.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

Sir Frederick Bridge's retirement from the organ-loft at Westminster Abbey has enabled him to complete a delightful volume of reminiscences. Is a most readable book—a big one, too. Every page bristles with good things, and it would take much space to do justice to them even in a general survey.

EVENING NEWS.

Sir Frederick Bridge's own story of his long life in the service of the Church and its music is told at length; and a very beautiful spirit of devotion to his life's task runs through the pages.

REFEREE.

The volume is exceptionally interesting reading, not only to musicians, but to all who trace social progress. It is also of considerable intimate historical value, and incidentally a useful reference book, as it is excellently indexed. I should add that it contains many artistic illustrations and portraits.

GRAPHIC.

This handsome autobiography . . . is a very readable and happy book.

PEOPLE.

Some good stories are told in his interesting volume of reminiscences. Sir Frederick gives one good way of landing a salmon when you have not got a gaff.

WEEKLY DISPATCH.

Will interest all readers of contemporary autobiography. It is a book of high spirits and not unduly concerned with the art of music. Rather, it is the record of a man who has enjoyed with great good-humour all the phases of life he has touched and the personages with whom he has come in contact.

ATHENÆUM.

A pleasant and amusing record of a peaceful, busy life . . . his reminiscences are told lightly and with humour.

CITY PRESS.

A more chatty autobiography has not been published for a long while . . . is deeply interesting.

CHURCH FAMILY NEWSPAPER.

A charming book. Readers will see that "A Westminster Pilgrim" is a very pleasant companion, whose gossip will cheer other pilgrims for many days to come.

GUARDIAN.

A singularly pleasant and companionable book.

HUNTLY EXPRESS.

Not for a long time have we read a more charming or delightful volume. It is a story once taken up cannot be laid down until it has been wholly gone through. From the first page to the last there is not a dull or uninteresting paragraph. As an autobiography it will rank amongst the best-known works of this kind which have ever been given to the reading public. As a reward book it should be kept in mind by all school authorities—educational or musical.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER.

This is indeed a notable book, and one which stands—probably will stand—somewhat by itself in the whole range of English autobiographical literature; . . . it is full of humour from cover to cover.

MUSICAL NEWS.

The reader of this delightful volume has the somewhat rare experience of perusing a life-story without wondering whether he has chanced to stray into some advertisement columns.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

Concerning the book itself, it ought in justice to be added that it is a very full record of an active musical life. It is admirably arranged, excellently printed, and copiously illustrated. The "get-up" generally is all that could be desired, and one handles it with infinite pleasure.

MUSIC TRADES REVIEW.

From first to last the book is of intense interest. It is of great historical value . . . and makes exceedingly pleasant reading . . . Music-lovers must not consider their libraries complete until this new volume has been added.

LADY'S PICTORIAL.

A volume of exceedingly chatty reminiscences.

CHATHAM OBSERVER.

To one and all we heartily commend Sir Frederick's profusely illustrated biography, for in it he has placed, with delightful humour, kindly criticism, thoughtful expression, and unbounded enthusiasm, the brightest gems from the mine of a rich memory.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY MAIL.

An entertaining volume . . . and altogether has an amiable charm which illumines even the technical record, whilst the many finely reproduced illustrations add to its interest.

ABERDEEN FREE PRESS.

Readers may be assured of finding in the book a wealth of intimate information regarding a little-known side of music and many things of interest to the non-musical. The excellent reproductions of the portraits of eminent musicians are a feature of the volume.

SHEFFIELD TELEGRAPH.

It is a portly volume, filled with good stories.

YORKSHIRE POST.

A very entertaining volume of reminiscences. More than a conventional word of praise is due to the publishers for the excellent appearance of the volume, which has no vestige of war economy about it, and has many appropriate illustrations, artistically reproduced.

FISHING GAZETTE.

Anglers who are musicians will find much to interest them in the very attractive reminiscences. For over thirty years Sir Frederick has gone to the Highlands for shooting and salmon fishing, some all too short references to which are given in his breezy, pleasant pages.

PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR.

Musicians and all interested in music should make a note of a capital book of reminiscences.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND

Singing Class Circular.

Published on the 1st of every Month.

No. 1.

JUNE 1, 1844.

Price 1½d.

THE MUSICAL TIMES is to be obtained by order of any Music Seller, Bookseller, or News-vendor; or Subscribers can have it sent regularly by Post on the day of publication, by sending their address written in full, and enclosing a post office order or penny stamps. Annual Subscription, postage free, 2s. 6d.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications of the progress of Singing Class Teaching, addressed to the Editor of the Musical Times, 69, Dean Street, Soho, will be interesting.

THE AMATEURS OF LONDON.

It is satisfactory to those who desire and have laboured for the general diffusion of a taste for music amongst all classes of the community, to observe the sure results of what has been doing for the last few years.

Some twenty years since, the execution of concerted and choral music in private was almost unknown; indeed it then required more than ordinary industry to organise such a performance. The libraries of the few, who possessed classical works then only in MS. had to be visited, much diligence used in multiplying sufficiently the copies, and then the small number of performers who could be got together, although "willing," were far from "able to take a part." Some zealous individuals, about the time mentioned, formed themselves into a society called the "Classical Harmonists," and such was the existing scarcity of able amateurs, that for several years their limited number of some twenty members, "willing and able to take a part," remained incomplete.

This society was the parent of many other associations, having for their object the performance of somewhat similar music; and the influence of this constant private performance of the highest classical works, and the production of good printed copies, on the taste and practical ability of the amateurs of London, that we find in 1834 that there was designed and effectively carried into execution, the Amateur Festival—a meeting which was highly creditable to all engaged, and was very beneficial to the excellent charity to which the surplus funds were dedicated. The taste for this rational and delightful manner of passing the evening, has so much increased since 1834, that the many important societies existing in London are more in number than the individual members required for the formation of the parent society, besides the numerous friendly meetings where the young people of neighbouring families join for the execution of concerted music.

With this growing feeling, it is not surprising, that when a few years ago, Mr. Mainzer, Mr. Hullah, and others, proposed to teach the rudiments of singing to large classes at a small individual cost, that great numbers should have been found willing to avail themselves of their assistance, and that their schools should have been crowded. It is to be regretted that the foes, and still more injudicious friends, should have done some damage to these systems, which pretended to teach no more than the rudiments, by ascribing results to them which they never proposed to achieve. The retirement from the classes of these self-deceived persons has given an appearance of falling off in the interest of these schools not warranted by fact. There is this comfort for the doubters, and answer to the sneerers, who are dissatisfied with the slow advance, that the aggregate of all the efforts made in the last twenty years, has created a body of amateurs in London capable of doing much themselves, and giving them a high appreciation of exalted talent in professors, and affording abundant promise of great future advancement for the cause of good music.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A VERY important contribution to the cause of good music has been made by the publication of several numbers of a series of "Cheap Classics." They are printed in vocal score with a separate accompaniment for the organ or piano-forte; great pains having been taken with the engraving and printing, so that they are emphatically "cheap" both in quantity and quality. For instance, Spohr's great oratorio of "The Last Judgment," is complete for 7s. 6d.; Mozart's Masses at 2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d. each; and Haydn's Masses from 4s. to 6s.

It is probable that this experiment to give the public music at a cheaper rate than usual, will be attended with better success than has hitherto been the case; because former reprints have usually consisted of non-copyright works already to be found in a great variety of shapes. But the present series consists of standard and much-sought-after works, only previously to be obtained at a high price.

The last month has also produced the concluding numbers of Boyce's collection of Cathedral Music printed in separate Vocal Parts. Choral Societies can now perform some of the services produced by the great English Cathedral writers, which previously to the present publication were sealed books. It will doubtless be one means of that great improvement so much to be desired, in the Cathedral and Church Service, as a very extensive choir can be supplied with sufficient copies at a trifling cost.

It is intended, that the valuable collection of cathedral music made by Dr. Arnold, be immediately published in the same manner in separate vocal parts.

It would surely be found, that in many parishes, a sufficient number of persons having voices, might be found, who, with proper instruction from their organist, and regular preliminary practice, might relieve the parochial service from the horrid infliction of the charity children's present mode of singing. At all events, one of the difficulties to the effective performance of the church service has been removed by these publications in separate vocal parts.

FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLODY.

THE greatest event of this almost unprecedentedly brilliant season is, undoubtedly, the arrival of Dr. Mendelssohn. At the last Philharmonic Concert the effect of his presence manifested itself in two ways. The densely crowded state of the room, and the admirable manner in which the orchestra performed its important part in the concert, were alike attributable to Dr. Mendelssohn. If the directors for 1844 had effected nothing else than the engagement of that great musician, they would still be entitled to the gratitude of the subscribers, for having done the wisest thing that has ever been done since the society came into existence.—Musical World.

BRIEF CHRONICLE OF THE LAST MONTH.

MADAME ANNA THILLON made a highly successful debut before an English audience at the Princess's theatre, on the 2nd, in Auber's opera "Les Diamans de la Couronne."

THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF FEMALE MUSICIANS gave their annual concert at the Hanover-square Rooms on the 3rd. The first part consisted of selections from the Creation, and Beethoven's Mass in C, with an effective chorus of one hundred voices. The object of this institution is to make a fund for the relief of its indigent members. Several first-rate professors lent their aid, most of the female portion of whom are members of this excellent society.

ABBEY GLEE CLUB.—A prize of ten guineas, offered by William Dixon, Esq., for the best madrigal, was awarded to Mr. James Coward. There were two other candidates, whose productions were greatly admired.

THE MESSIAH.—This great work of the immortal Handel was written in twenty-one days; it was commenced on the 22nd of August, 1741; its three parts being the work respectively of six, nine, and six days; and the last page of the original score intimates that it was finished on the 12th of September. The original was presented by Handel to the Foundling Hospital, where it has since remained, and where it is highly valued.—Dramatic and Musical Review.

ENCORES.—The York Choral Society gave a concert to a very numerous audience. The first part was Handel's Acis and Galatea; it passed off well and gave great satisfaction. The second part was a miscellaneous collection, which was not all performed, from the following circumstance:—the second song was Handel's "Sweet Bird," which elicited such immense applause, that the performers could not proceed with the next piece, and it being a standing rule with the committee to allow no encores, the concert broke up.—From a Correspondent of the Musical Examiner.

MADAME HASSELT BARTH (a German singer of some celebrity), has recently erected at her own expense a monument over the too long neglected grave of MOZART. It is a tablet of gray marble, surmounted by a medallion head of the great composer. It bears an inscription briefly characteristic of the talent of Mozart. "Jung, gross, spat erkannt, nie erreicht." ("Young, great, late acknowledged, never equalled.")—Foreign Quarterly Review.

WESTERN MADRIGAL SOCIETY.—This society met to award the prize of ten guineas given by — Evans, Esq., for the best madrigal in imitation of the ancient masters. It will be recollected that this prize was wrested from the hands of Professor Taylor, of Gresham College, it having been discovered that his madrigal to which the prize had been awarded, contained something more than the "imitation of the ancient masters," and that in fact, several bars had been "begged, borrowed, or stolen," from Lucca Marcenzio. The composition No. 11, "Wither away thou truant swain," was almost unanimously declared to be the best entitled to the prize; it was found to be the composition of Mr. Nethercliff.—Maestro.

MR. JOHN HULLAH is continuing his system of instruction in singing on the Wilhelm method, at the Apollonicon Rooms, with undiminished success.

In these delightful pleasant Groves.

PURCELL.

Moderato.

Soprano. In these de-light-ful plea-sant groves, In these de-light-ful plea-sant

Alto. In these de-light-ful plea-sant groves, In these de-light-ful plea-sant Tenore, (8^{va} lower.) In these de-light-ful plea-sant groves, In these de-light-ful plea-sant

Basso. In these de-light-ful plea-sant groves, In these de-light-ful plea-sant groves, Let us ce-le-brate, Let us ce-le-brate, Let us ce-le-brate our hap-py, hap-py

groves, Let us ce-le-brate, Let us ce-le-brate, Let us ce-le-brate our hap-py, hap-py

groves, Let us ce-le-brate, Let us ce-le-brate, Let us ce-le-brate our hap-py, hap-py

groves, Let us ce-le-brate, Let us ce-le-brate, Let us ce-le-brate our hap-py, hap-py loves. In these de-light-ful plea-sant groves, In these de-light-ful plea-sant loves. In these de-light-ful plea-sant groves, In these de-light-ful plea-sant loves. In these de-light-ful plea-sant groves, In these de-light-ful plea-sant loves. In these de-light-ful plea-sant groves, In these de-light-ful plea-sant

IN THESE DELIGHTFUL PLEASANT GROVES.—PURCELL.

groves, Let us ce-le-brate, Let us ce-le-brate, Let us ce-le-brate our hap-py, hap-py loves.

groves, Let us ce-le-brate, Let us ce-le-brate, Let us ce-le-brate our hap-py, hap-py loves.

groves, Let us ce-le-brate, Let us ce-le-brate, Let us ce-le-brate our hap-py, hap-py loves.

groves, Let us ce-le-brate, Let us ce-le-brate, Let us ce-le-brate our hap-py, hap-py loves.

Let's pipe, pipe and dance, Let's pipe, pipe and dance, dance and laugh - - -

Let's pipe, pipe and dance, Let's pipe, pipe and dance, dance, - - - laugh, - -

Let's pipe, pipe and dance, Let's pipe, pipe and dance, dance, - - laugh, - -

Let's pipe, pipe and dance, Let's pipe, pipe and dance, dance and laugh, - - - laugh, - - - laugh, - - - laugh and sing;

... laugh, - - - laugh, - - - and laugh, and laugh - - - and sing;

... laugh, - - - laugh, - - - and laugh, laugh - - - and sing;

laugh, - - - laugh, - - - laugh and sing;

IN THESE DELIGHTFUL PLEASANT GROVES.—PURCELL.

Thus, thus, thus ev' - ry hap - py, hap - py liv - ing thing, Re -

Re - - - - - vel in the cheer-ful spring. Soft.
 - - - - - vel in the spring. Soft.
 - - - - - vel in the cheer-ful spring. Soft.
 Re - - - - - vel in the cheer-ful spring.

Soft. Re - - - - - vel in the cheer-ful spring. Loud.
Loud. - - - - - vel in the cheer-ful spring. Loud.
Loud. - - - - - vel in the cheer-ful spring. Loud.
Soft. Re - - - - - vel in the cheer-ful spring. Loud.

J. ALFRED NOVELLO,

69, DEAN STREET, SOHO,

Is now the agent for the sale of the under-mentioned Valuable Works,
To be had also at Messrs. SIMPKIN & MARSHALL'S.

SINGING FOR THE MILLION. Part I, 88th thousand.
A Practical Course of Musical Instruction. 1s. 6d.

SINGING FOR THE MILLION. Part II—Containing numerous Exercises in Imitations, Fugues, and Canons. 2s. 6d.
MUSICAL GRAMMAR.—Cloth, 4s.; calf, 5s.

The above, in Two Parts, stitched, at 1s. 6d. each.

FIFTY MELODIES FOR CHILDREN. 6d.; stiff covers, 9d.

PSALM AND HYMN TUNE BOOK, for Use in Congregations and Classes, arranged for Three Voices. 4d.

A SELECTION OF PSALMS AND HYMNS, arranged for one or two Treble Voices, and additional Bass Voice, by the Chevalier Sigismund Neukomm. 6d.

BIBLIOTHEQUE ELEMENTAIRE DE CHANT: Two Volumes of Songs for Children, with Accompaniment for the Pianoforte, and ornamented with Engravings.

Vol. I. contains Songs for Two Voices. Vol. II. contains Songs for Three Voices. Price each, 5s.

MAINZER'S GUIDE FOR BEGINNERS IN PIANO-FORTE PLAYING, 5s.

SONATAS for the Pianoforte, by Beethoven, with the Fingering, 1s.

SONATAS, by Mozart, 2s.

ELEMENTARY STUDIES, or First Exercises, by Bartini, dedicated to his Daughter, Part I. 1s. 6d.

STUDIES, by Bertini, dedicated to the Royal Academy of Paris, Part I. 1s. 6d.

MAINZER'S CHORUSES, 1d. each.

PART. I.—1. Praise.—2. Psalm CVII.—3. The Cuckoo.—4. The Village Chimes.—5. Independence.—6. I've travelled among unknown Men.—7. God is every where.—8. Temperance.—9. Invitation to a Redbreast.—10. The Call to Prayer.—11. Stanzas to my Child.—12. Infant's Prayer.

PART II.—13. Blowing Bubbles.—14. Super Flumina Babylonis.—15. Prayer.—16. Shepherd Boy.—17. The Sea.—18. Contentment.—19. Fraternity.—20. Night Song.—21. Consolation.—22. Hymn.—23. The World we have not seen.—24. Psalm XV.

PART III.—25. The Mountaineer.—26. Man.—27. The Linnet.—28. Pull all together.—29. The Orphan's Prayer.—30. Peace, Hope, and Rest.—31. Psalm XIX.—32. Heaven.—33. Come, Soul of Song.—34. Sea Song.—35. Barcarole.—36. The Farewell.

The above Parts, 1s. each or the whole in cloth, 4s.

The following at 1d. each.

"Farewell, Scotia;" "My Own Green Isle;" "How beautiful upon the Mountains;" "Tyrolean Mountain Song, and Canon for Three Voices;" "Freedom;" "Gipsy Chorus," by C. M. von Weber; "Music;" "Thanksgiving;" "Rule Britannia;" Luther's Chorale and "Song is the Voice of Feeling;" "The Charm of Life," by Beethoven; "Forest Song," by Von Weber; "Sunrise," by P. Von Winter.

MAINZER'S MUSICAL TIMES. Old Series, 320 pages of Letter-press and 2 valuable Musical Compositions, wrappers, 3s. 6d.

Ditto, with the Second Series, 13 numbers, containing 16 additional Compositions, 4s. 6d.

THE PILGRIMS AT THE HOLY SEPULCHRE, of Metastasio, a religious Cantata for Five Solos and Chorus, with Accompaniment for the Harp or the Pianoforte, composed by Naumann. Price 5s.

Chorus parts of the above, for Three Voices, 4d.

Ditto, for Four Voices, 6d.

PRAYER OF THE ISRAELITES, from Rossini's Opera, Mosé in Egitto. 6d.

ROLAND'S MARCH OF THE PYRENEAN MOUNTAIN SINGERS, arranged for Four Voices and Pianoforte Accompaniment, by Jacob Mainzer. 6d.

ADDRESS on Singing, as a powerful auxiliary in the moral and religious education of the people. 3d.

ESSAY ON MUSIC. An Address to Mainzer on inviting him to Leven, with account of Demonstrations at Loch Lomond and Burns' Monument. 4d.

A SKETCH of the Life and Labours of Joseph Mainzer, translated from the French. 6d.

NOVELLO'S CHORAL HAND-BOOK. Sacred Series.

Book I. contains the whole of the Chorus Parts in Handel's Oratorio of the Messiah, each Part, 2s. 6d.

Any part or chorus may be had singly at 1½d. per page.

Book II. contains a selection of pieces from various authors.

I will arise	-	Creyghton
Sanctus	-	Child
O pray for the peace of Jerusalem	-	Child
Praise the Lord, O my soul	-	Child
Lord, for thy tender mercies	-	Farrant
Hide not thou thy face	-	Farrant

(To be continued.)

Price—Canto, 6d.; Alto, 6d.; Tenor, 6d.; Bass, 6d.

BOOK III. BAXTER'S HARMONIA SACRA.

PART I.—Collection of introductory sentences, chants, responses, sanctuses, &c. with Jubilate, Gloria in Excelsis, and Nunc Dimittis; selected by the Rev. J. Baxter, M.A.

PART II.—Containing 208 Psalm and Hymn Tunes (adapted to a selection of Psalms and Hymns compiled by the Rev. E. Davies and the Rev. J. A. Baxter, M.A.)

The whole carefully revised by V. Novello.

Price—Canto, 5s.; Alto, 5s.; Bass, 5s.

MENDELSSOHN'S CHORALS, from "ST. PAUL."

"Sleepers, awake, a voice is calling," (4 voices)

"To God on High be thanks" (4 voices).

"To Thee, O Lord, I yield my spirit" (4 voices).

Each Pianoforte score, 1s.; 4 vocal parts, 3d.

GREAT IMPROVEMENT IN

EOLIAN PITCH PIPES.

The Proprietors have the pleasure of announcing that they have succeeded in applying the Electro-plating Process to these much approved instruments, and are prepared to supply them plated with Pure Silver and Pure Gold; also, in superior German Silver, as usual. Any note in the octave may be had; also, Diatonic Sets of Eight Pipes, and Chromatic Sets of Thirteen Pipes. The tongues being made of a peculiar compound metal, which is highly elastic, and not liable to rust, are warranted to maintain their pitch. Sold by J. ALFRED NOVELLO.

BRIEF CHRONICLE,

Continued from page 2.

The Grand Musical Festival of the Lower Rhine will be this year held at Cologne, on the first and second days of Pentecost. The orchestra of more than 2,000 performers, under Henri Don, first chapel-master of the Cathedral.

THE SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY produced an oratorio, "The Death of Abel," by Mr. Perry, the leader of their society, on the 17th. The work was well received, but the room was far from full.

MR. MAINZER is still in Edinburg and is about to proceed to the Highlands for the formation of classes. The good folk of Scotland are in hopes to determine Mr. Mainzer to remain amongst them even should he not be a successful candidate for the Edinburg professorship of music.

There is a new oratorio, "The Deliverance of Israel from Babylon," which is being published in monthly parts. The music is by an Englishman, Mr. William Jackson, of Masham. This is a bold undertaking for a young musician, but judging from the works which he has formerly published, one which he will creditably complete.

At the ANCIENT CONCERTS during the last month, the following choral works have been produced.

Under the Direction of Earl Howe.

Chorus, "Gloria in Excelsis"..... Hummel.
Chorale, "O magnify the Lord," (1597)... Eccard.
Chorus, "Hark! the Angels' voice"..... Himmel.
" " "The dead shall live"..... Handel.
" " "Gird on thy sword" (Saul)..... Handel.

Under the Direction of Prince Albert.

Chorale, (1544)..... I. S. Bach.
Quartett and Chorus, "Qui fredda sta"... Graun.
Chorus, "He rebuked the Red Sea"..... Handel.
Motett, "Ave Verum"..... Mozart.
Selection from Twelfth Mass "Kyrie and Gloria"..... Mozart.

Under the Direction of Lord Cawdor.

Aria and Coro, "Qui presso al mio Gesù" I. S. Bach.
"Magnificat"..... Mozart.
Chorus, "Ye sons of Israel," (Joshua)..... Handel.
Coro, "Non sdegnare"..... Gluck.
Chorus, "How excellent," (Saul)..... Handel.

Under the Direction of the Duke of Cambridge.

Coronation anthem, "The King shall"... Handel.
Selection from Mass in C..... Cherubini.
Chorus, "Immortal Lord"..... Handel.
Chorus, "The many rend the skies"..... Handel.
Chorus, "O, sing praises"..... I. S. Bach.

THE HABITS OF PROFESSED MUSICIANS.—Most men who have been remarkable for longevity have been fond of music. Professed musicians, with all their eccentricities and their constant residence in great cities, free living and late hours, will be found to have the advantage over persons of every other profession. It is an exhilarating recreation, that always furnishes company in solitude, relieves weariness, and dispels gloomy thoughts. Instances of suicide amongst musicians are comparatively very rare: although some have met with sad reverses, yet scarcely can an instance be found of cruelty remaining in the breast of a real musician—his soul is all harmony. I could never bring myself to encourage a father to chide his son for losing his time at a musical instrument. I like the simplicity of Lavater's maxim—"Keep at least three paces from him who hates bread, music, and the voice of a child."—Musical World.

Mr. George Cooper, organist of St. Sepulchre's, has been appointed "organist and singing master" at Christ's Hospital.

CHORAL FUND.—The annual concert of this institution took place on the 24th. We understand that fourteen widows; independently of orphans, are now receiving support from its funds; pensions are also granted to many of its infirm and afflicted members.

ROME.—They are about to erect a monument in that city to Palestrina, the regenerator of the religious music of the sixteenth century.

HAYDN AND SHERIDAN.—During the peace of Amiens, Sheridan and Haydn were rival aspirants to the honour of a seat in the National Institute of France. Haydn being the successful candidate, Sheridan publicly expressed his indignation at the choice the Institute had made. Haydn, when he heard how ill the orator bore his disappointment, sent him a letter of consolation, in which he begged him to consider that it was no wonder a German composer should have made a more acceptable overture than a British senator.—Maestro.

OXFORD FESTIVAL.—Great exertions are being made to render the approaching musical festival at Oxford, a most imposing and brilliant one. Sir H. R. Bishop has engaged many of the most eminent vocal and instrumental performers now in England. Handel's Messiah will, we believe, be the only complete sacred composition performed.

THALBERG has announced a morning concert, for Tuesday, May 28th, at the Hanover Square Rooms.

SABILLA NOVELLO gives an operatic performance and concert at the Princess's Theatre, on the 30th of May, in which she will be assisted by Sivori and a host of talent.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—The Creation was performed on the 31st instant; principal vocalists, Madame Caradori Allan, Hobbs, and Staudigl.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.—Handel's Messiah will be performed for the benefit of this highly useful Society on Wednesday, June 5, by the eminent talent engaged at the Ancient Concerts.

DR. CALCOTT'S CELEBRATED TRIO.—Dr Callcott's well known trio to the beautiful words "Forgive, blest shade, the tributary tear," is said to have been composed while on a visit to the Isle of Wight. Certain it is that the words were taken from an epitaph on the tomb of Mrs. Berry, in Brading, in the same island, not far distant from St. John's, and may be seen in the churchyard to this day. The poet's name is entirely unknown. Dr. Callcott's music is admirably adapted to the words. He seems to have been sensibly alive to the pathos so happily expressed therein; and it is not too much to say, he hath conferred an immortality on the poet's verse by enshrining it in one of the emanations of his refined and creative genius.—Vide "Brettells' Hand-book to the Isle of Wight."

CONCERTS FOR THE CURRENT MONTH.

- May 30. Miss Sabilla Novello, Evening, Princess Theatre
M. Mühlenfeldts, Evening, Princess' Concert Room
Mrs. Anderson, Morning, Opera Concert Room
31. Creation, Evening, Exeter Hall
Miss Byfield, Evening, Marylebone Institution
- June 1. Moscheles and Ernst, Morning, Hanover-square
3. Messiah, Morning, Hanover-square
Fifth Societa Armonica, Evening, Hanover-sq.
4. Blagrove's 2nd, Evening, 18, Mortimer-st.
5. Messiah, Evening, Hanover-square
6. Alexander's Feast, Hanover-square
7. John Parry, Evening, Hanover-square
Macfarren and Davison's 3rd, Evening, Princess' Concert Room
10. Mme. Duleken, Morning, Opera Concert Room
Sixth Philharmonic, Evening, Hanover-square
11. Marras, Morning, Hanover-square
Miss Burfield, Evening, Hanover-square
12. Case and Blagrove, Evening, Hanover-square.
13. Cipriani Potter, Morning, Hanover-square
14. Benedict's, Morning, Opera House
18. Blagrove's 3rd, Evening, 18, Mortimer-street.
21. Sixth Societa Armonica, Evening, Hanover-sq.
24. Mr. and Mrs. Seguin, Morning, Hanover sq.
Seventh Philharmonic, Evening, Hanover-sq.
25. Sterndale Bennett, Evening
27. François Cramer, Morning, Hanover-square

NOW IN THE COURSE OF PUBLICATION,

NOVELLO'S CHEAP MUSICAL CLASSICS.

THE series will contain a variety of established Classical Works, engraved in the best style, in longway music quarto size, with a separate Accompaniment for the Organ or Pianoforte. The Alto and Tenor parts will be put into the G cleff, for the greater facility of the general reader, and each Volume will contain one work complete in itself. No curtailment has been made from the original Folio Editions, but of each Volume has been fixed on the anticipated sale of a very large number of copies, and it is hoped that the price, together with the beauty of the work, will ensure for it general patronage.

The extremely Low Price

Volumes 1 to 16 contain HAYDN'S MASSES, with the Accompaniment, by VINCENT NOVELLO.—No. 1, 6s.; 2, 5s.; 3, 4s. 6d.; 4, 5s.; 5, 6s.; 6, 5s. 6d.; 7, 3s. 6d.; 8, 2s.; 9, 6s. 6d.; 11, 2s. 6d.; 12, 4s. 6d.; 13, 4s.

Volumes 17 to 34 contain MOZART'S MASSES, with the Accompaniment, by VINCENT NOVELLO.—No. 1, 3s. 6d.; 2, 3s. 6d.; 3, 3s. 6d.; 4, 3s.; 5, 3s.; 6, 3s. 6d.; 7, 3s. 6d.; 8, 2s. 12, 8s. 6d.

Volume 35, SPOHR'S "LAST JUDGMENT," an Oratorio, the Accompaniment by VINCENT NOVELLO, price 7s. 6d.

Volume 36, WEBER'S ANTIPHONS AND MOTETS, (first published in 1792), with separate Accompaniment, by VINCENT NOVELLO, price 7s.

TO BE CONTINUED.

NOVELLO'S EDITION OF THE WORKS OF FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY.

A HYMN OF PRAISE.—(Lobgesang) First Symphonia Cantata for Voices and Instruments, arranged, with an Accompaniment for the Pianoforte, by the Author, 21s.—The separate Vocal Parts, 8s.; Orchestral Parts, 70s.; The full Score, ; Arranged as a Duet for Pianoforte, N.B. The Solos and Duets may be had detached.

"AS THE HART PANTS."—The 42nd Psalm for Soprano, Solo, and Chorus, arranged with an Accompaniment for the Pianoforte by the Author, Op. 42, 10s. The separate Vocal Parts, 5s.; Instrumental Parts, 15s.; the full Score, 18s.

"WHEN ISRAEL OUT OF EGYPT CAME."—The 114th Psalm, for Chorus, eight Voices and Instruments, arranged with an Accompaniment for the Piano by the Author, Op. 10s. The separate Vocal Parts, 8s.; Orchestral Parts, 10s.; the full score, 15s.

ST. PAUL, an Oratorio; the words selected from the Holy Scriptures, with an Accompaniment for the Pianoforte, arranged by the Author, Op. 36, 32s. The separate Vocal Parts, 20s. the separate Orchestral Parts, 70s.; the full Score, 80s.; the Choruses arranged as Duets for the Pianoforte, 18s.; in three Books, each, 6s.

The following Pieces may all be had singly.

1. The Overture, as a Duet, arranged by the Author - 4 0
2. T. God on high be thanks - - - - - 1 6
4. And the many that believed - - - - - 1 6
6. Men, brethren, and fathers (Stephen's Song) - 2 0
7. Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets - 1 6
8. Stone him to death (Chorus) - - - - - 2 0
11. Happy and blest are they - - - - - 2 0
12. Consume them all - - - - - 2 0
13. But the Lord is mindful of His own - - - 1 6
16. Sleepers, wake, a voice is calling (Chorale) - 1 0
18. O God, have mercy - - - - - 2 0

20. I praise thee, O Lord (Air and Chorus) - - - 2 6
25. Now we are ambassadors (Duet) - - - - - 1 0
26. How lovely are the messengers (Chorus) - - - 2 0
27. I will sing of thy great mercies - - - - - 1 6
29. O thou the true and only light (Chorale) - - 1 0
30. But Paul and Barnabas - - - - - } 2 0
31. For so hath the Lord (Duet) - - - - - }
35. Oh! be gracious, ye immortals (Chorus) - - 2 0
36. Know ye not that ye are His temple - - - 2 0
40. Be thou faithful unto death (with Violoncello Obligato) 1 6
43. See what love hath the Father - - - - - 1 6

THREE MOTETS for Treble Voices, Op. 39, THREE ANTHEMS for Treble Voices, composed for the Convent of Trinita da Monte, at Rome, with an Accompaniment for the Organ or Pianoforte:

1. Veni, Domine (G minor) three voices - - - 2 0
- The separate Vocal Parts of ditto - - - - - 1 0
2. Laudate Pueri (E flat) three voices and Chorus, trebles 3 0
- The separate Vocal Parts of ditto - - - - - 1 0
3. Surrexit pastor (G major) Duet and Quartet - 3 0
- The separate Vocal Parts of Ditto - - - - - 2 0

Adapted to the Psalms for the use of English Cathedral Services; by T. A. Valmsley,

1. Hear my prayer—Ps. 102, v. 1, 2 - - - - - 2 0
2. O praise the Lord—Ps. 103, v. 21; Ps. 113, v. 2 - 3 0
3. O Lord, thou hast searched—Ps. 139, v. 1, 6, 7, 8, 13 3 6

AVE MARIA, Op. 23, for eight voices, with Accompaniments for two Clarinets, two Bassoons, Double Bass, and Organ, full score, 5s.; the separate Parts of the same, 3s. 6d.

DA PACEM DOMINE, GRANT US THY PEACE, for four voices and Orchestra.—Pianoforte Score, 2s.; Separate Vocal and Orchestral parts, 3s. 6d.

O than

Sword of the Lord

COMPOSED BY

MYLES B. FOSTER.

73. Above all praise Mendelssohn 18d.
 53. Almighty and everlasting Smith 18d.
 145. Ditto A. M. Richardson 18d.
 122. Almighty God, Who hast Ford 18d.
 20. And I saw another Angel Stanford 2d.
 24. Arise, O Jerusalem Oliver King 18d.
 36. Arise, O Lord ... G. F. Cobb 18d.
 126. Ditto ... Hervey 18d.
 168. Arise, ye people ... W. Hayes 18d.
 60. Ave Maria Arcadelt 18d.
 48. Ave Verum J. White 18d.
 90. Awake up, my glory ... F. Iliffe 18d.
 177. Be not Thou far from me Hird 18d.
 193. Behold, God is my ... Stainer 18d.
 165. Behold, O God C. Macpherson 18d.
 117. Ditto G. C. Martin 2d.
 195. Behold the Lord ... Thorne 18d.
 30. Beloved, if God so loved Barnby 18d.
 35. Beloved, let us love G. F. Cobb 18d.
 10. Beloved, now are they E. H. Thorne 18d.
 204. Beside Thy cradle ... J. S. Bach 18d.
 160. Blessed are they S. S. Wesley 18d.
 185. Blessed be the Lord Ouseley 18d.
 125. Blessed be Thou, O Lord Lloyd 18d.
 143. Blessed is He ... A. H. Brewer 18d.
 9. Ditto ... B. Luard-Selby 18d.
 199. Ditto ... Verrinder 18d.
 26. Blessed is the man ... Oliver King 18d.
 194. Ditto ... J. Stainer 18d.
 207. Blessed Lord ... C. Lee Williams 18d.
 98. Bread of the world John E. West 2d.
 17. Break forth ... J. S. Bach 18d.
 59. Christ is not entered E. Fanning 18d.
 102. Come, let us worship Palestina 18d.
 40. Come unto Me ... H. Hiles 2d.
 10. Ditto ... M. Kingston 18d.
 173. Come, ye blessed ... Barnby 18d.
 108. Deliver me, O Lord J. Stainer 18d.
 127. Deliver us, O Lord ... Batten 18d.
 164. Except the Lord F. H. Cowen 18d.
 135. Father of all ... Tye 18d.
 81. For it became Him Oliver King 18d.
 179. For our offences Mendelssohn 18d.
 91. Fret not thyself ... F. Iliffe 18d.
 60. Give ear unto my prayer Arcadelt 18d.
 114. Give rest, O Christ ... Arranged 18d.
 38. God so loved the world Kingston 18d.
 227. I God, Who is rich in mercy Garrett 2d.
 223. Good King Wenceslas (arr.) Ross 2d.
 11. Grant, O Lord ... J. Booth 18d.
 205. Ditto C. Lee Williams 18d.
 141. Hark, hark my soul Oliver King 18d.
 147. Haste Thee, O God J. Hopkins 18d.
 47. Have mercy upon me J. White 18d.
 210. He that soweth ... J. B. Calkin 18d.
 130. Hide me under the shadow West 18d.
 123. Hidden not Thou Thy Face Farrant 18d.
 213. Ho! ye that thirst ... C. Tye 18d.
 107. Holy, Holy, Holy ... F. Cellier 18d.
 124. How dreadful is this place Monk 18d.
 163. How still and peaceful ... C. Tye 18d.
 111. I am not worthy C. Lee Williams 3d.
 170. I am Thine, O save me Wesley 18d.
 82. I heard a Voice G. M. Garrett 18d.
 86. Ditto ... A. A. Gray 18d.
 157. Ditto ... C. V. Stanford 18d.
 92. I look for the Lord ... F. Iliffe 18d.
 54. I will arise ... Ch. Wood 18d.
 42. I will go forth ... H. Blair 18d.
 189. I will go to the altar ... Reay 18d.
 131. I will go unto the altar H. Gadsby 2d.
 156. I will lay me down in Williams 18d.
 8. I will magnify Thee Luard-Selby 18d.
 37. I will wash my hands A. D. Culley 18d.
 93. If any man sin Thos. Adams 18d.
 21. Ditto ... H. Hiles 18d.
 21. If thou shalt confess C. V. Stanford 2d.
 215. In life's gay morn ... C. Tye 18d.
 155. In this was manifested C. H. Lloyd 3d.
 206. Is it nothing to you ... Ouseley 18d.
 22. It is high time ... Williams 18d.
 56. Jesu, Saviour, I am Thine Steane 18d.
 46. Jesu, Who from Thy F. C. Wood 3d.
 48. Jesu, Word of God J. White 18d.
 64. Jesus said unto the people Stainer 18d.
 186. Judge me, O God ... Ouseley 18d.
 208. Judge nothing before Williams 18d.
 61. Lead me, Lord ... S. S. Wesley 18d.
 116. Let my prayer beset forth Martin 18d.
 166. Ditto C. Macpherson 18d.
 118. Let my prayer come up Purcell 18d.
 80. Let our hearts be Mendelssohn 18d.
 139. Let the wicked forsake his way Goss 18d.
 32. Let the words of my mouth Blair 18d.
 117. Let Thy hand be ... G. C. Martin 18d.
 65. Let us come boldly C. H. Lloyd 18d.
 209. Let your moderation Williams 18d.
 137. Lift up the everlasting gates Tye 18d.
 224. Lighten our darkness J. Booth 18d.
 219. Like as the hart ... Novello 18d.
 161. Lo! from the hills ... Williams 18d.
 120. Lo, the day of rest Elliot Button 18d.
 19. Lo, the Winter is past H. Gadsby 3d.
 142. Lord God Almighty, hear Verdonck 18d.
 93. Lord, I call upon Thee F. Iliffe 18d.
 140. Lord, in thankful love Schubert 18d.
 79. Lord, on our offences Mendelssohn 18d.
 128. Lord, we beseech Thee Batten 18d.
 149. Lord, we pray Thee Chambers 18d.
 154. Love not the world Ouseley 18d.
 62. Master, what shall I do Bowes 18d.
 100. Mercy and truth A. Sullivan 2d.
 176. Mine eyes are ever Hamilton 18d.
 212. Mock not God's Name C. Tye 18d.
 94. My song shall be of mercy F. Iliffe 18d.
 73. O Day-spring ... J. Stainer 18d.
 145. O do well unto Thy servant West 18d.
 75. O Emmanuel ... J. Stainer 18d.
 146. O God, forasmuch as Richardson 18d.
 136. O God of Bethel ... Tye 18d.
 162. O God, our help C. Lee Williams 18d.
 23. O God, Whose nature ... A. Gray 18d.
 214. O happy is the man ... C. Tye 18d.
 119. O harken Thou ... A. Sullivan 18d.
 72. O Key of David ... J. Stainer 18d.
 74. O King and Desire ... J. Stainer 18d.
 70. O Lord and Ruler ... J. Stainer 18d.
 53. O Lord, correct me J. Coward 18d.
 67. O Lord, give ear W. H. Cummings 2d.
 133. O Lord, give Thy Holy Tallis 18d.
 113. O Lord, grant the King Child 2d.
 138. O Lord, increase my faith Gibbons 18d.
 159. O Lord, my God C. Lee Williams 2d.
 13. O Lord, my trust ... King Hall 18d.
 15. O Lord, rebuke me not H. Lahee 18d.
 132. O Lord, we beseech Thee Shaw 2d.
 57. O Lord, Who hast Iggulden 18d.
 188. O Lord, why sleepest Thou Reay 18d.
 33. O most merciful ... J. W. Elliott 18d.
 225. Ditto ... E. Bullock 18d.
 89. O Perfect Love H. Elliot Button 18d.
 112. Ditto ... C. L. Naylor 2d.
 43. O praise God ... H. Blair 18d.
 174. O praise the Lord, all ye Barnby 18d.
 203. O praise the Lord F. Champneys 18d.
 71. O Root of Jesse ... J. Stainer 18d.
 104. O Saving Victim ... J. Stainer 18d.
 218. Ditto A. W. Wilson 18d.
 171. O send out Thy light ... Armes 18d.
 84. Ditto ... J. B. Calkin 2d.
 69. O Wisdom ... J. Stainer 18d.
 95. O worship the Lord ... F. Iliffe 18d.
 196. Ditto E. H. Thorne 18d.
 178. O ye priests of the Lord Hird 18d.
 39. O ye that love the Lord Elliott 18d.
 44. Ditto G. Coleridge-Taylor 18d.
 217. Our Father which art ... Phillips 18d.
 7. Our soul on God G. M. Garrett 18d.
 45. Ponder my words, O Lord Culley 18d.
 105. Praised be the Lord daily Calkin 18d.
 14. Prevent us, O Lord A. H. Brewer 18d.
 175. Rejoice greatly ... Woodward 18d.
 187. Rejoice in the Lord ... Calkin 18d.
 76. Rejoice, O ye people Mendelssohn 18d.
 144. Rejoice ye with Jerusalem King 18d.
 200. Remember, Lord ... Verrinder 18d.
 153. Rend your heart ... Ouseley 18d.
 226. Save us, O Lord ... Hugh Blair 18d.
 129. Seek the Lord H. Elliot Button 18d.
 207. Seek ye the Lord ... Verrinder 18d.
 49. Shew me Thy ways J. V. Roberts 3d.
 115. Sing to the Lord ... Tye 18d.
 220. Spirit of mercy H. A. Chambers 18d.
 5. Teach me Thy way Gladstone 18d.
 55. The Angel of the Lord ... A. Gray 18d.
 190. The Gentiles shall come Reay 18d.
 4. The great day of the Lord Martin 18d.
 216. The Harvest truly ... Pearson 2d.
 111. The Heavenly Word Williams 3d.
 150. The joy of our heart ... Foster 18d.
 202. The Light hath shined Verrinder 18d.
 181. The Lord hath been Macfarren 18d.
 198. The Lord hath brought us Thorne 18d.
 27. The Lord is in His Holy Elliott 18d.
 197. Ditto E. H. Thorne 18d.
 96. The Lord is King ... F. Iliffe 18d.
 38. The Lord is nigh ... Cummings 18d.
 31. The Lord is the True God Barnby 3d.
 50. The Lord opened the doors ... F. C. Woods 18d.
 83. The Lord redeemeth J. B. Calkin 18d.
 191. The Love of God ... Reay 18d.
 184. The pains of hell ... Monk 18d.
 52. The path of the just J. V. Roberts 18d.
 101. The Peace of God J. Rheinberger 18d.
 12. The pillars of the earth Tours 18d.
 134. The righteous souls Skeats 18d.
 41. The Sacrifices of God ... H. Blair 18d.
 152. The Salvation of the ... Ouseley 18d.
 34. Ditto ... Vincent 18d.
 169. The Souls of the righteous Hall 18d.
 87. The steps of a good man ... F. Cambridge 3d.
 223. There is a green hill ... Gounod 3d.
 66. These are they which ... J. Goss 18d.
 180. These have left a name Hook 18d.
 192. This is the day ... Reay 18d.
 211. Thou didst turn Thy face Attwood 18d.
 77. Thou shalt shew me the A. Gray 18d.
 28. Thou shalt lift up my soul Hall 18d.
 16. Try me, O God ... C. Wood 18d.
 99. Turn Thee again ... A. Sullivan 18d.
 158. Turn Thy face C. Lee Williams 2d.
 51. Watch ye and pray G. R. Vicars 2d.
 172. We wait for Thy loving Armes 18d.
 182. Ditto ... Macfarren 18d.
 2. When my soul fainted J. F. Bridge 3d.
 63. Wherewith shall a ... Alcock 18d.
 183. While all things were Macfarren 18d.
 106. While we have time H. W. Parker 3d.
 68. Whom we have, O Lord C. H. Lloyd 18d.
 151. Whom have I in heaven Elvey 2d.
 110. Whom the Lord C. Macpherson 3d.
 121. Why art thou so heavy Gibbons 18d.
 109. Why art thou so C. Macpherson 2d.
 221. With all Thy Hosts A. W. Wilson 18d.
 97. Worship and praise ... F. Iliffe 18d.

(To be continued.)

O thou Sword of the Lord.

INTROIT FOR CHORUS, ORCHESTRA AND ORGAN.

Jeremiah xlvii. 6; Psalm xlv. 10.

Composed by MYLES B. FOSTER.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Andante maestoso. ♩ = 69.
f marcato.

ORGAN.
Gt., Sv. coupled.

SOPRANO. f marcato.
O thou sword of the Lord, thou sword of the

ALTO. f marcato.
O thou sword of the Lord, thou sword of the TENOR. f marcato.

O thou sword of the Lord, . . . thou sword of the

BASS. f marcato.
O thou sword of the Lord, . . . thou sword of the

f

Full Score and Orchestral Parts may be had on hire.

O THOU SWORD OF THE LORD.

mf

Lord! . . . put up thy-self . . . in - to thy

Lord! . . . put up thy-self in - to . . . thy

Lord! . . . put up thy-self in - to thy

Lord! . . . put up thy-self in - to thy

dim. mf

dim.

scab-bard, put up thy-self . . . in - to thy scab-bard;

scab-bard, put up thy-self in - to . . . thy scab-bard;

scab-bard, put up thy-self in - to thy scab-bard;

scab-bard, put up thy-self in - to thy scab-bard;

mf dim. mp

uncoupled.

mp p dim.

rest, . . . rest, . . . and be

rest, . . . rest, . . . and be rest, . . . rest, . . . and be rest, . . . rest, . . . and be rest, . . . rest, . . . and be

Sw. mp p dim.

O THOU SWORD OF THE LORD.

pp still, . . . mp cres. and know that I am God, know that f
pp still, . . . mp cres. and know that I am God, know that f
pp still, . . . mp cres. and know that I am God, know . . . that f
pp still, . . . mp cres. and know that I am God, know . . . that f pp Gt. (Sw. coupled.) mp cres. al f coupled.

ff rall. I, . . . I am God. . . . fff
ff rall. I, . . . I am God. . . . fff
ff rall. I, . . . I am God. . . . fff
ff rall. I, . . . I am God. . . . fff
ff rall. I, . . . I am God. . . . fff

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

FOUNDED IN 1844.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH.

No. 917.—Vol. 60.
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage.

JULY 1, 1919.

Price 4d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, Post-free, 5s.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.

(Season 1919—1920.)

There are now VACANCIES in the CHOIR for SOPRANOS, CONTRALTOS, TENORS, and BASSES. Applicants should have STRONG VOICES OF GOOD QUALITY, and should be prepared to pass an examination in SIGHT-READING. Address, The Secretary, Royal Choral Society, Royal Albert Hall, S.W. 7.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W. 1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

Chamber Concert, Duke's Hall, July 7, at 3.

Fortnightly Concert, Saturday, July 12, at 3.

Distribution of Prizes by H.R.H. The Duke of Connaught, K.G., will take place at the Central Hall, Westminster, on Friday, July 18, at 3.

L.R.A.M.—Last day for Entry for Summer Exam., with late fee of 5s., July 30.

SCHOLARSHIPS for Singing, Pianoforte, Violin, Violoncello, Composition, and Organ will be offered for Competition in September. Particulars as to date of Entry, &c., will be forwarded on application.

MICHAELMAS TERM begins Monday, September 22. Entrance Examination, September 18.

A Junior Department is now open.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W. 7.
(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams—"Initiative, Southkens," Telephone—"1160, Western." London.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: PROFESSOR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.

The CHRISTMAS TERM commences on Monday, September 22nd. ENTRANCE EXAMINATION, Thursday, September 18th. A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age. Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from The Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (Founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC,

VICTORIA EMEANKUN, E.C. 4.

PRINCIPAL LONDON RONALD.

HALF-TERM BEGAN TUESDAY, JUNE 10TH.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £7 17s. 6d. and £10 10s. per term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects, Harmony, Sight-Singing, and / or Orchestra.

Weekly Orchestral Practices.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local Schools Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Tel.: Cent. 4459.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £30. Special fee for Organ Course, £20, and for Wind Instrument Course, £15.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY OF DURHAM.

Examinations for degrees in Music are held as follows: Matriculation, January, July, and October; First Mus. B., March and September; Mus. B. and Mus. D., September only.

For particulars, apply Secretary of Examinations, University Offices, Durham. Copies of former Examination Papers, 1s. 6d. per set.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Sec.

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE.

SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A.

SESSION 1918-1919.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 23 to December 21); WINTER TERM (January 20 to April 5); SUMMER TERM (April 7 to June 28).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

THE BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY.

Offices: 19, Berners Street, W.-1.

FOR THE FOSTERING OF BRITISH MUSIC.

Membership open to all music-lovers.

Patron: The Rt. Hon. A. J. BALFOUR.

President: THE LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.

Director: A. EAGLEFIELD HULL, Mus. Doc. Oxon.

Committee of Management:

Mr. Adrian C. Boulton	Rev. E. H. Fellowes, Mus. Doc.
Mr. W. W. Cobbett	Col. W. Johnson Galloway
Mr. Alvin Langdon Coburn	Mr. H. Cart de Lafontaine
Sir Edward E. Cooper	Mrs. W. Lee Mathews
Mr. W. R. Davies	Mr. G. Bernard Shaw
Mr. Edward J. Dent	Major Geoffrey Toye
	W. R. DAVIES, Treasurer.

Officers, from the Acting-Secretary, A. Eaglefield Hull, Mus. Doc. Oxon., 19, Berners Street, W. 1.

ADVANCE IN PRICES.

The prices of certain of the Novello publications were again advanced on April 1, but the charges are still unaltered in the advertisement columns.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Lessons.
Full Orchestral Class, Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras,
Opera, Ensemble, Elocution, Choral, and Harmony, &c., Classes.
Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.
The Summer Orchestral Concert will take place in the Houldsworth Hall on July 5. The programme will include Edward German's New Orchestral Work, "Theme and Six Diversions" and Percy Pitt's
"Serenade," Op. 39.

THE INCORPORATED
LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

22, Princes St., Cavendish Square, W. 1.

Branches; Hampstead Conservatoire, N.W. 3, and

117, Seven Sisters Road, N. 7.

Principal: T. H. YORK-TROTTER, M.A., Mus. Doc. (Oxon.).

Rhythmic Method of Music Teaching. Special Classes for Teachers.
Special Training in Music and Elocution. Private and Class Lessons
in every subject by the best Teachers.

ORCHESTRAL AND CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES WEEKLY

Frequent Students' Concerts. Examinations in Music and Elocution,
July and December. Spong Rhythmic Dancing. For Prospectus and
Examination Syllabus apply to the CENTRAL ACADEMY, 22, PRINCES
STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W. 1.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, Blomfield Crescent, Paddington, W. 2.

Founder: MR. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone Paddington, 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH MUSICIANS.

Founded 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI.
Victoria, Cap. cxxxii., § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.D.,
DEAN OF DURHAM.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.), LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.), FELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London and at approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

Sept. 11th, 1919, 3.30 p.m.—Lecture, "The Ethics of Criticism," by
Dr. Churchill Sibley.

Chairman, J. Haworth Roberts, Esq., M.A. Cantab.

COMPETITIONS, 1919.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best ANDANTE for the ORGAN, and a SHORT ANTHEM with Treble Solo.

BRONZE MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, DOUBLE CHANT
and KVRIE.

Organists (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Vacant
Appointments.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of DR. LEWIS, Warden
158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

THE TECHNIQUER

For all Instrumentalists. Patented in Great Britain and U.S.A.

Invented by MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

COPY OF TESTIMONIAL from AMBROSE COVIELLO, Esq., A.R.A.M., D.C.M. Professor and Examiner of the Pianoforte, R.A.M., and Principal of the Balham School of Music:—

"February, 1919. One of my most pressing 'reconstruction problems' was how to regain the hand flexibility that three years in the trenches had completely destroyed. I was advised to try 'The Techniquer,' and I am glad that I followed that advice, for I am sure that it has saved me hours of hard technical practice. A few minutes with it made an extraordinary difference to me, rendering my hand free and supple—the best possible condition for Pianoforte-playing. I shall strongly recommend this valuable invention, particularly in cases where small or closely-knit hands are the main impediments to fluent technique.

"AMBROSE COVIELLO."

Send for particulars and testimonials. "Hand Development," 7d.

The Secretary, 33, Orchard Street, W. 1.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W. 1

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION.

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.A.M.
DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.
G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Violin,
Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held in London and at the various Local Centres in the Provinces in DECEMBER (last day of entry, November 15th).

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, on application to the Secretary.

Silver and Bronze Medals and Book Prizes are awarded at the Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate
(A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, July,
and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A. Mus.
L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L. Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship
(F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented, either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date. For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.

Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 3870.

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC,
LONDON

(Under the direction of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.).

INCORPORATED 1891.

158, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W.-11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc., Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.

Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.M.

Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.

Rev. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. Oxon.

Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects, including the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M. F.V.C.M., also for the Teachers'
Professional Diploma in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and December.

Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition.

Local Secretaries required for towns not represented.

Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint; and all other Subjects connected with the culture of Music.

SPECIAL CINEMA COURSES in Orchestral, Piano, and Organ-
Playing.

All communications to be addressed to The Secretary, Registered
Office, 11, Burelgh Street, Strand, W.C. 2.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal
Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique:
How it feels to Sing," 3s. 6d. each, post 3s. 6d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y.

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—Gentlewoman.

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—Eastern Morning News.

"Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald.

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury.

"Is an acknowledged authority."—Western Morning News.

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H.
Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

WANTED.—COPIES OF VOL. 1 AND VOL. 2 OF THE MANNHEIMER COURSE (Henne's Method for the Pianoforte). English Text. Reply to Parker, 35, Temple Street, Birmingham.

39 VOLUMES PIANO SCORES, OPERAS,
31 VOLUMES VARIOUS MUSIC, all bound leather.
Can be seen in City between 10 and 5 by appointment. Write, "A," c/o Street's, 30 Cornhill, E.C. 3.

How to play difficult music with ease. . . .

Pianists who wish to play the music which affords the greatest enjoyment and relaxation—the compositions of the world's greatest musicians—and who are averse to the drudgery and wearisome keyboard practising in order to obtain the necessary technical proficiency, will find the "Brain to Keyboard" method of the greatest possible help.

Practice on this system, much of it away from the keyboard, is never wearisome, and after some weeks of it, spending quite a short time every day, a degree of technical proficiency is obtained which would be otherwise impossible, even after years of keyboard practising for several hours daily.

Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 10,000 successful students add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard" Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C.1.

FAILURE A policy of drift.

SUCCESS ... A definite programme.

MUS. BAC. SEP., 1920.

EXERCISE

1st M.B.

MATRIC. OCT., 1919.

MY POSTAL COURSE WILL ENABLE YOU TO PASS MATRIC.

A. McALISTER, B.A.,

209, CASTLE BOULEVARD, NOTTINGHAM.

MR. CHARLES TREE.

Grantham Journal, May 15, 1919: "A return visit of the renowned baritone would, under any musical circumstances, be eagerly welcomed. As it was, it afforded an opportunity of not only listening to the famous vocalist again, but also of learning how 'easy' it is if only the right methods are practised. Through this Recital-Lecture (highly interesting, educative, and witty) he presented to a full hall an entertainment as enjoyable as it was unique, demonstrating the different phases of articulation, enunciation, expression, and tone."

MR. TREE'S BOOK ON VOICE-PRODUCTION. Publisher, Joseph Williams. Concerts, Lectures, &c. 29, King's Road, Chelsea, S.W. 3.

Important to British Composers.

PRIZE COMPETITION.

Messrs. HAWKES & SON have the pleasure to announce a Competition for

FOUR CASH PRIZES

of £50, £30, £20, and £15 respectively, for the FOUR BEST MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS sent in by BRITISH COMPOSERS.

Full particulars of this Competition, giving qualification, together with rules and instructions, will be sent free by return post to all intending competitors.

The Competition closes on November 1, 1919. Send at once for prospectus.

HAWKES & SON,

DENMAN STREET, PICCADILLY CIRCUS, LONDON, W.1

FOR SALE.

Two-Manual Pipe and Pedal Organ

By SQUIRE. REBUILT BY HICKIES.

The Action, which is Tracker, is very quiet and light.

GREAT.

Open Diapason (Tenor C).
Dulciana.
Clarabella.
Stop Diapason Bass.
Principal.
Fifteenth.

SWELL.

Stop Diapason.
Viol de Gamba.
Lieblich Flute.
Coupler to Great Organ Bass.

PEDAL.

Bourdon (Full Compass, C to F).
Couplers: Swell to Great.
Great to Pedal.
Swell Sub-Octave.

Total number of Pipes, 418.

Dimensions: Front, 5-ft. 6-in.; Height, 11-ft.; Depth, 6-ft.

PRICE 150 GUINEAS.

HICKIES, LTD., Pianoforte and Organ Merchants, 153, FRIAR STREET, READING. 'Phone 1148.

A FESTIVAL "TE DEUM"

(FOR CONGREGATIONAL USE)

On SIX OLD HYMN TUNES. Specially written to commemorate

The Proclamation of Peace, 1919,

By CUTHBERT H. CRONK.

PRICE 6d. NET.

J. & W. CHESTER, 11, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, W.1

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MR. ERNEST A. FLAMBE (BASS).

Oratorio, Concerts, Receptions, &c. For vacant dates, address
67, Ashbourne Avenue, Mitcham Surrey.MR. SAMUEL MASTERS
(TENOR).

Address—164, Bank Buildings, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

MR. AMBROSE COVIELLO

Associate and Professor of the Royal Academy of Music, is now demobilised, and arranging times for Private Tuition in Pianoforte Playing and Teaching, at his studio (Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W. 1.

MUS. BAC. DEGREE.

COMPLETE POSTAL PREPARATION.

Latest Successes: 3 First Mus. Bac.

4 Final Mus. Bac. 2 Final Mus. Doc.

THESE STUDENTS PASSED AT FIRST ATTEMPT.

DR. N. SPRANKLING, Mus. Doc. (Lond.),
48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-FOUR YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING.

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W. 2.

*The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear,
along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Prof. H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.B.
at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities,
Diplomas of F.L.C.M., L.Mus.L.C.M., A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916),
and L.R.A.M. Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes,
"Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the College of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition by Post,
to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.
Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments,
Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-19 .. 136 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-19 .. 33 " " "MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.DR. CROSSLEY.—SINGING, PIANO, COM-POSITION. Special coach for Degrees, &c. Lessons at Forsyth Bros., Deansgate, Manchester; also by Correspondence.
Terms, &c., Radcliffe, Manchester.ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.
(formerly Mangelsdorff), of the British Expeditionary Force, France. Pianist and Teacher of Piano-forte, Cole Bank School of Music, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION. 362 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and
A.R.C.O., &c. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey. 'Phone, Burgh
Heath, 346.DR. HARRIS REVISES AND PREPARES MSS.
FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written and Works Scored for Orchestra. Address as above.MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM-INATIONS in MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.-11ENGAGEMENTS ACCEPTED AND POSTAL LESSONS given by Mr. C. T. HEAVISIDE, SOLO PIANIST, Cellist, &c., 27, Torwood Street Torquay.MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Professor of Singing, R. A. Music. Private Pupils received at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.-1.DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc.
Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations.
Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.

Address, 106 Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.-3

DR. LEWIS, Mus. Doc., F.E.I.S., Warden, Incorporated Guild of Church Musicians, gives LESSONS, Personally or by Post, in HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT. 158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W.-11.

DR. LEWIS' TEXT-BOOKS:

HARMONY. (2 vols.) 5s. each, net.
COUNTERPOINT. 5s. net.
DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT AND CANON. 5s. net.
FUGUE. 1s. 6d. net.
ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. 2s. 6d. net.
DEVELOPMENT OF ANGLICAN CHURCH MUSIC. 2s. net.
PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
MATERIAL OF MELODY. 3d. net.
IMPROVISATION. 1s. 6d. net.

The above, complete, will be forwarded (carriage paid) or £1 5s.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for
L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony,
'Form and Teaching,' &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes, L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd. West Kensington.DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.T.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 40, Berners Street, W.-1.L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING
Exams. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition.
Complete preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, and my singing work has greatly improved, thanks to yr. tuition.—A.F."
Mr. W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), 22, Lucknow Avenue, Nottingham.WANTED, early in September, a SOLO BOY, age 11 or 12, for Choir School in the country. Board, lodging, and education free. Evelyn Countess of Craven, Ashdown Park, Shrivenham.CHOIR LEADERS AND SOLOISTS (S.A.T.B.)
REQUIRED, commencing October, for North London Non-conformist Church. Write, stating experience and qualifications, also salary required, Box T 298, Smiths' Agency Ltd., 100, Fleet St., E.C. 4.SOPRANO.—A.R.C.M. wants post as LEADER OF PROFESSIONAL QUARTET in a Church for Winter months, on the Continent. Miss Everts, 7, Beechcroft Road, Oxford.CHRIST CHURCH, EALING, W.—WANTED, ALTO, TENOR, TWO BASSES. Salary, £20 per ann.
Good voices and good readers. Apply, Stanley Winter, 152, Hamlet Gardens, W. 6ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL—There is a VACANCY for a TENOR SINGER in the Choir of St. Paul's Cathedral.
Intending applicants for the position should write for full particulars to
The Rev. The Succentor, St. Paul's Cathedral. E.C. 4, not later than July 25.ARMAGH CATHEDRAL.—TENOR WANTED.
Salary £100. Candidates under 30 years of age. Applications and testimonials (copies) to be sent without delay to the Chapter Clerk, Cathedral Close, Armagh.BARITONE-PIANIST REQUIRED for Male
Quartet now forming. Good, light voice; young, enthusiastic.
Living W. District preferred. Write, Box 857, c/o Smith's, 62, High Street, Kensington, W. 8.ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Dunnottar Church, Stonehaven. Salary, £70. Three-manual organ. Apply, with testimonials, to Rev. D. G. Barron, Dunnottar Manse, Stonehaven.ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER of experience
WANTED for Walton Parish Church, Liverpool. Churchman; Communicant. Must be first-class Accompanist, Soloist, and Trainer of Men and Boys. Choral Eucharist. High Salary. Magnificent 3-manual up-to-date Willis organ. Good teaching connection; other positions open. Apply, stating age, experience qualifications, copies of testimonials, with references, to "Archdeacon," Walton Rectory, Liverpool.WANTED.—ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER for Presbyterian Church. Good, new organ, two manuals.
Salary not less than £60. Apply, with testimonials, to Rev. Edward Clarke, Strabane, Ireland.WANTED.—LADY ORGANIST OPEN to GIVE LESSONS in the London Western District. Send full particulars of capabilities to Miss Doreen Crowe, 5, Gilston Road, South Kensington, S.W. 10.

THE QUEEN'S COLLEGE, OXFORD.—The College will shortly proceed to the APPOINTMENT OF AN ORGANIST, to begin his duties on Michaelmas Day, 1919. Particulars and a form of application may be obtained from the Bursar The Queen's College, Oxford.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED for the Thurso Parish Church. Salary, £55. Apply, James Grant, Session Clerk, Thurso. (Organ, Norman & Beard, 1915.)

HOLIDAYS.—Organist-Choirmaster, fully qualified, accustomed to High Mass (C. of E.), offers to take duty, August. Seaside preferred. "F. H.," Novello & Co., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

M. R. STEPHEN SANGSTER (late of Eastbourne), having completed his engagement at St. Paul's, Camden Square, London, is OPEN TO DEPUTISE at the ORGAN during Summer months, in London. Address, 2, Burgess Hill, Hampstead, N.W. 2.

ORGANIST, Church of Engla d, WILLING TO DEPUTISE during AUGUST. North of England or Scotland preferred. "A. A.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W. 1.

M. R. CHARLES S. KNIGHT (late Organist and Choirmaster of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Kensington Gore) is at liberty to DEPUTISE or to train Choirs, &c. Address Belle-vue, Mayfield.

EXPERIENCED ORGANIST (used to Choral Eucharist) would DEPUTISE during AUGUST. Seaside, West of England preferred. Highest references. "C. B. E.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

STANDARDISED ORGANS (Pipe).—TWO-MANUALS and Pedals, as built to order, by Richardson's, specially to meet the requirements of the times. 100 to 500 guineas; in nine sizes. Entirely new introduction. These Organs are voiced and toned and adapted according to size, &c., of Church. Specifications and Estimates, W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

MODERN ORGAN, by BISHOP; nearly new. Three Manuals; Thirteen Stops; Five Composition Pedals; usual Couplers. Choir enclosed. Electric blowing. Price standing, Five-hundred guineas. The Owner, Earlywood Lodge, Ascot.

WANTED FOR SOUTH AFRICA, Two thoroughly experienced PIANO TUNERS, unmarried. With knowledge of Players preferred. Not over 40 years of age. Salary, £20 per month. Apply "S.A.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

TO PIANO HOUSES.—London merchant requires position for his son (20), demobilised Cadet, enabling him to obtain good experience. Educational qualifications: Oxford Senior Exam., also R.A.M. Higher Music Exam. Address: "G. L. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

WANTED. SECOND-HAND COPY OF PIANO CONCERTO No. 2, in C minor, by RACHMANINOW. Good price given. Mrs. Allen Brown, "Sunnyside," Bickley, Kent.

TO MUSIC DEALERS AND OTHERS.—Wanted, D'ALBERT'S EDITION OF BACH'S "48," Volume 1 only (Cotta). State price to "S. W.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

WANTED, RESIDENT MUSIC MISTRESS (PIANOFORTE), FOR LARGE SCHOOL IN BELFAST.

Salary, £120, rising to £150. Only candidates who are capable performers and who have had experience of modern methods of teaching will be considered.

Apply, with copies of testimonials, to HEAD MASTER, METHODIST COLLEGE, BELFAST.

BARITONES & BASSES should buy Descriptive Scenes: "THE BULL FIGHT" (Oakley). Compass, A to E. Price 1s. 6d. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W. 1.

PIANO PEDALS with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supercedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

"Orrisdale," 418, Chorley Old Road, Bolton.

DEAR SIRS.—I have opened many organs by various builders, but I wish to say this: That I have never played on a finer Pedal Board than the one which you make.

ARTHUR E. JONES, F.R.C.O., L.T.C.L.

Terms: Cash, or instalments of 20s. per month.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

Works—Hanley, Staffs.

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

THE ART OF VOICE-TRAINING.

In response to a desire expressed by Members of the last Vacation Course,

MR. FIELD HYDE

(Lecturer at the R.A.M., &c., Author of "The Art of Voice-Training," "The Singing-Class Teacher," &c.)

WILL AGAIN CONDUCT A

HOLIDAY COURSE IN LIVERPOOL

FROM TUESDAY, JULY 29TH,
TO WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 6TH.

THE COURSE WILL INCLUDE, AMONGST OTHER THINGS,

1. A Complete Exposition of the ART OF VOICE-TRAINING.
2. Comparisons of the VARIOUS SYSTEMS which are founded on OPPOSED THEORIES.
3. PRACTICAL DEMONSTRATIONS in Voice-Training and the ART OF TEACHING.
4. CHOIR-TRAINING AND CONDUCTING.

Mr. FIELD HYDE's method and the Course of Lecture-Demonstrations have had the recommendation of many of the best Authorities, Musical and Medical, Cathedral and University Organists, Conductors, Principals and Professors of some of the largest Musical Institutions, the Editors of the chief Musical Journals, and of EVERY Teacher and Student who has attended the Course.

The following are selected from amongst hundreds of similar expressions of opinion:—

"The Course afforded me one of the MOST ENJOYABLE WEEKS I ever spent, the educational value of which I can never forget."

"I wish to say how much I enjoyed your Holiday Course. You score where others fail, in that you back up all you say or teach by demonstrations with your own or pupils' voices. I have attended a good many courses, but I can honestly say that yours beats them all, and easily too."

"You solved, I might say, ALL MY DIFFICULTIES, and I don't regret having travelled the thousand miles, which I did, as the Course was worth it."

"Your hints on the ART OF TEACHING were alone worth coming my four hundred miles for."

"I have found TREMENDOUS IMPROVEMENT in all my singing pupils through the use of your methods. Please enrol me again for your forthcoming course."

FOR FULL PARTICULARS, ADDRESS:—

MR. F. C. FIELD HYDE,

4, WIGMORE STUDIOS, 40, WIGMORE ST., LONDON, W. 1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SONATA

FOR

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

Op. 82.

Price Six Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S POPULAR PIANOFORTE ALBUMS FOR YOUNG PERFORMERS.

HUBERT BATH

DOLL'S-HOUSE SUITE

Price Two Shillings.

FRANCESCO BERGER

EIGHTEEN LITTLE PIECES

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN

HAPPY THOUGHTS

Price Two Shillings.

ARNOLD KRUG

TEN LITTLE PIECES

Op. 109.

In two Books. Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

ARNOLD KRUG

SCENES FROM FAIRY-LAND

In two Books. Price Two Shillings each.

TH. KULLAK

TWENTY-FOUR PIECES

Op. 62 AND 81.

In four Books. Price One Shilling each.

MAX MAYER

BAGATELLES

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

MENDELSSOHN

SIX CHRISTMAS PIECES

Price One Shilling.

ERNEST NEWTON

WOODLAND DANCES

Price Two Shillings.

HUBERT G. OKE

THREE PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

SCHUMANN

PIECES FOR THE YOUNG

Part I., Price 1s. ; Part II., Price 1s. 6d.

SCHUMANN

THREE PIANOFORTE SONATAS

(Part III. of Pieces for the Young).

Price One Shilling.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING

SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING

OUR VILLAGE IN SUMMER

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

E. A. SYDENHAM

SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

TSCHAIKOWSKY

CHRISTMAS ALBUM

In three Books. Price One Shilling each.

FRANCESCO BERGER

FIRST STEPS AT THE PIANOFORTE

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

A WESTMINSTER PILGRIM BY SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

Three-hundred-and-sixty pages, Large Demy 8vo, with a Frontispiece in Colour by Sir LESLIE WARD, numerous Illustrations, and a special Portrait of the Author by Sir WILLIAM RICHMOND, K.C.B., R.A.

CLOTH, GILT, SIXTEEN SHILLINGS NET.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

THE TIMES.

As his writing is full of illustrations of his own cheerful character, so the book is appropriately full of illustrations, drawings, and photographs, showing him at all ages, the Cathedral churches in which he has worked, his predecessors and successor at the Abbey, and all the persons and things who have "pleased him mightily."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

This cheery book . . . is playfully anecdotal . . . The author of these pleasantly written recollections . . . has much of interest to unfold.

MORNING POST.

There are many illustrations. One plate consists of portraits of the fourteen organists of Westminster Abbey since 1549, and there are numerous other pictures of interest. The whole is something more than a book of reminiscences; it can be read with interest by the non-musical, and can be turned to by the historian for light shed by an authority.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Under the happy title of "A Westminster Pilgrim" Sir Frederick Bridge has narrated in a vivacious manner many of the most outstanding events of his distinguished career. The volume has qualities which make it an important contribution to the history of music in England.

EVENING STANDARD

The book must be read to be appreciated. Stories wrenched from their context do less than justice to the personality which pervades the volume.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

Sir Frederick Bridge's retirement from the organ-loft at Westminster Abbey has enabled him to complete a delightful volume of reminiscences. Is a most readable book—a big one, too. Every page bristles with good things, and it would take much space to do justice to them even in a general survey.

EVENING NEWS.

Sir Fredrick Bridge's own story of his long life in the service of the Church and its music is told at length; and a very beautiful spirit of devotion to his life's task runs through the pages.

SATURDAY REVIEW.

An autobiography of the chatty, gossip order. . . . It deals now and again with serious musical topics, more particularly, of course, those which have come within the orbit of the author's own wide professional experience; and when it does so it is not only interesting, but instructive and valuable.

SPECTATOR.

Makes excellent reading . . . there are many pleasant and humorous stories.

REFEREE.

The volume is exceptionally interesting reading, not only to musicians, but to all who trace social progress. It is also of considerable intimate historical value, and incidentally a useful reference book, as it is excellently indexed. I should add that it contains many artistic illustrations and portraits.

GRAPHIC.

This handsome autobiography . . . is a very readable and happy book.

WEEKLY DISPATCH.

Will interest all readers of contemporary autobiography. It is a book of high spirits and not unduly concerned with the art of music. Rather, it is the record of a man who has enjoyed with great good-humour all the phases of life he has touched and the personages with whom he has come in contact.

ATHENÆUM.

A pleasant and amusing record of a peaceful, busy life . . . his reminiscences are told lightly and with humour.

CITY PRESS.

A more chatty autobiography has not been published for a long while . . . is deeply interesting.

HUNTLY EXPRESS.

Not for a long time have we read a more charming or delightful volume. It is a story once taken up cannot be laid down until it has been wholly gone through. From the first page to the last there is not a dull or uninteresting paragraph. As an autobiography it will rank amongst the best-known works of this kind which have ever been given to the reading public. As a reward book it should be kept in mind by all school authorities—educational or musical.

CHURCH FAMILY NEWSPAPER.

A charming book. Readers will see that "A Westminster Pilgrim" is a very pleasant companion, whose gossip will cheer other pilgrims for many days to come.

GUARDIAN.

A singularly pleasant and companionable book.

MUSICAL HERALD.

So long in preparation, has been worth waiting for. One would not recommend a protracted reading at one sitting; the scenes change too rapidly. But that is just the charm of the book for a busy musician. Pick it up and read a few pages at random, and you will want to repeat such pleasure again and again.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER.

This is indeed a notable book, and one which stands—and probably will stand—somewhat by itself in the whole range of English autobiographical literature; . . . it is full of humour from cover to cover.

MUSICAL NEWS.

The reader of this delightful volume has the somewhat rare experience of perusing a life-story without wonder! whether he has chanced to stray into some advertisement columns.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

Concerning the book itself, it ought in justice to be added that it is a very full record of an active musical life. It is admirably arranged, excellently printed, and copiously illustrated. The "get-up" generally is all that could be desired, and one handles it with infinite pleasure.

MUSIC TRADES REVIEW

From first to last the book is of intense interest. It is of great historical value . . . and makes exceedingly pleasant reading . . . Music-lovers must not consider their libraries complete until this new volume has been added.

LADY'S PICTORIAL.

A volume of exceedingly chatty reminiscences.

THE QUEEN.

Nothing could be more sprightly—genial.

ABERDEEN FREE PRESS.

Readers may be assured of finding in the book a wealth of intimate information regarding a little-known side of music and many things of interest to the non-musical. The excellent reproductions of the portraits of eminent musicians are a feature of the volume.

NOTTINGHAM GUARDIAN.

Within its 349 pages he has packed an infinite variety of reminiscence, told with a raciness of style and a command of expression which impart great effect to the extremely interesting events of which the volume treats, and which all types of readers will find of absorbing interest.

SHEFFIELD TELEGRAPH.

It is a portly volume, filled with good stories.

YORKSHIRE POST.

A very entertaining volume of reminiscences. More than a conventional work of praise is due to the publishers for the excellent appearance of the volume, which has no vestige of war economy about it, and has many appropriate illustrations, artistically reproduced.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

[July 9th.—Organ Recital by Mr. J. Charles Long, Mus. B., F.R.C.O.
 July 10th.—Elocution, Chamber Music, and Choir Concert at the Steinway Hall.

July 10th.—Last day of Entry for next Open Competition for Scholarships.

July 10th.—Special Invitation Students' Recital.

July 10th.—Orchestral Concert at the Central Hall, Westminster.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Any number of subjects—from one to the Full Course—may be entered for. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student.

Approved complete Courses for the University of London Degrees in Music under recognised Teachers of the University.

Students are prepared for the Degrees in Music of the London and other Universities, the Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, Trinity College of Music, &c.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College students for other subjects.

All modern systems of Technique (whether for the Pianoforte, Violin, or other instrument) and of Vocal Training are taught by qualified professors.

The Class for Training Boys for Cathedral Choirs is held on Saturday mornings.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

Students not older than 16 years are admitted to the JUNIOR SCHOOL at reduced fees.

There are Thirty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Bambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music of the London University and are open only to Students who have satisfied the Matriculation requirements of that University.

Concert tickets, particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, on application to the undersigned,

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1

GRANVILLE BANTOCK.

SONGS FROM THE CHINESE.

A Feast of Lanterns.

B flat, C (E to G), and D.

From the Tomb of an Unknown Woman.

G, A (B to F), and B.

Adrift.

A, B (F sharp to G), and C.

Yung Yang.

D (D to F) and E.

Price, each, 2s. net.

"... In FOUR SONGS FROM THE CHINESE Mr. Bantock has produced four numbers which are 'art songs' in the best sense of the term. They are delightful things, and they have the inestimable advantage of being well within the compass of the intelligent amateur who has imagination and a fair knowledge of music. The series can be confidently recommended to those who have a soul above the ballad cult. Indeed it is songs like these that make the reviewer's task a joy."—Daily Express.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

And of all Musicsellers in the United Kingdom and Colonies.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.

NEW

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

FOR

SMALL ORCHESTRA, PIANOFORTE, AND ORGAN AD LIB.

1s. 9d. each.

A Good-bye, Intermezzo	Huyts
Symphonie Pathétique, 1st and 2nd extract	Tschaikowsky
Zizica	Byford
My Dream	Bonheur
Valse Masquerade	Sullivan
Passing Serenade	Provinsky
A Watteau Picture	Sturdy
Hearts and Flowers	Czibulka
Till Death	Mascheroni
For Remembrance	Byford
Napoli	Ison
Joy Minuet	Ison
Valse Nebula	Lewis
New Moving Picture Book for Pianoforte Solo ...	Ketélbey

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods:

BERINGER'S TUTOR. WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR. HEMY'S TUTOR.
 WICKINS'S RAPID TUTOR. GRAHAM P. MOORE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES.

Publishers of Sevcik's Violin Method, Beringer's Daily Technical Studies. Macfarren's The Child's First Music Lesson.

JUST PUBLISHED.

QUARTET

FOR

STRINGS

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR

(Op. 83).

Score, Price 5s.; Parts, 8s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

JULY 1, 1919.

MODERN BRITISH COMPOSERS.

By EDWIN EVANS.

IV.—EUGÈNE GOOSSENS.

(Continued from June number, page 268.)

When a composer is as versatile, both in method and in mood, as is Eugène Goossens, it is not easy to decide upon the order in which his compositions are to be placed. It would not be difficult to group them under the usual headings, but in doing so one would miss the fine thread of personal evolution which runs through them from start to finish. On the other hand, there are two such groups to which his contributions have so far been few in number, and which therefore lend themselves to preliminary removal from the path of the larger task. These are his orchestral music and his songs. The first composition with which he came before the public was an orchestral work, consisting of variations on 'A Chinese Theme,' which was first performed at the Royal College of Music on June 20, 1912, and repeated at the Promenade Concerts on September 6, 1913. It has remained unpublished, as has also a Symphonic-poem, 'Perseus,' introduced at the Promenade Concerts on October 13, 1914. The composer would scarcely regard either of these works as representative to-day, although the Symphonic-poem is of such quality that only the unobservant can have failed to note its importance, if only as a portent for the future. It belongs to the period before he had succeeded in shaking himself free from the extraneous influences referred to in the introductory portion of this article. The emancipation became more visible in a Symphonic Prelude to a poem of Ossian, which was performed at Queen's Hall in the spring of 1915. None of these works being available for study, we will pass on to those of recent date.

The Scherzo, 'Tam o' Shanter,' which was introduced at the Hallé concerts in the autumn of 1917, was a brilliant and exhilarating piece of work, which had only the one fault of over-elaboration in the development and in the scoring. It was recently performed at a Philharmonic concert in London in a considerably-condensed version, which is to be its definite form. Goossens seems to have realised meanwhile that brevity—at all times a valuable quality—is indispensable to a good joke. In this he has been more perspicacious than the poet, for the ballad which has provided him with a subject is somewhat overgrown. In his treatment of the subject he has been compared to Dukas, but the resemblance is a very superficial one, for the French composer in 'L'Apprenti Sorcier' combines an exquisite sense of humour with a grave sense of responsibility towards his musical material, whereas Goossens indulges in fun of a more rollicking kind. This was followed by an Overture and incidental music for a performance of Verhaeren's 'Philip II.' at the Court Theatre. The circumstances did not favour an adequate hearing, but the music has since been remodelled as a Suite, and will be heard again.

Since then his only orchestral composition has been the version of 'Four Conceits,' introduced as a symphonic interlude in the programmes of the Russian Ballet at the Alhambra. These being originally pianoforte pieces, we shall have occasion to refer to them later. Suffice it for the present to say that they display a more finished orchestral virtuosity than any score to which he has so far put his name. To speak of the instrumentation is not sufficient, for apart from their vividness of colour they derive perhaps their main attractiveness from a wholly personal finesse in the selection of combined sonorities. This is important, because herein lies the whole difference between the old scoring and the new. Modern composers have revolutionised the process of distributing musical material among the instruments of an orchestra. They no longer group them homogeneously, but they make one timbre impinge upon another with the effect of a delicate pointillage, which demands the most scrupulous care in performance, but rewards it liberally both in variety and in suggestiveness of effect. It is this method, of which this work proves Goossens a master, which endows the orchestra with a picturesqueness rarely attained in the past, and his remarkable command of it is doubtless due to many years of orchestral experience as performer and conductor. Such proficiency is not to be attained by the study either of text-books, which rarely touch upon it, or of the standard scores, which fail to reach it. It is a new field, only to be explored by the light of practical experience.

Goossens's songs are not numerous—excluding arrangements of folk-songs there are only ten published—but they include some of his most characteristic work. The two De Musset songs, 'Chanson de Fortunio' and 'Chanson de Barberine,' are metrical lyrics, set melodically against harmonies which, thoroughly modern, yet have a quaint suggestion of archaism. Then followed a number of songs for which I must share the responsibility, as I contributed the texts. It was a mere coincidence that I happened to have made a few attempts at prose cisellée, both in French and English, at the very time when Goossens was a little impatient of the restraint imposed by metre. He saw my two 'Proses lyriques,' and, somewhat to my own surprise, found in them the starting-point for a type of song that was new to him, a declamatory cantilena making a sparse use of melodic curves, but following, not too slavishly, the cadence of the words, against an accompaniment which formed a kind of harmonic 'backcloth,' sometimes realistically suggestive, sometimes purely decorative. It was said at the time they were first heard that the idiom was French. Were it so it would be no reproach, since they are settings of French lines, but it is a mistake to regard as French devices in common use merely because they reached us first through French channels. As it happens, there is nothing specifically French in the way the songs are set. If any outside influence is discernible it is at most in the outline of the pianoforte figuration of the first song, 'Hier dans le jardin ensoleillé,' which is faintly Straussian. The second, 'Mon chemin s'était assombri,' contains some interesting examples of picturesque comment in the accompaniment, as when, after the singer has referred to 'arabesques' the pianoforte follows with:

'MON CHEMIN S'ÉTAIT ASSOMBRI'

(Deux Proses Lyriques).

Andante tranquillo.

Andante tranquillo.
Sua

mf

Ped. Ped.

mf stringendo.

Des diss - o - nan - ces de la vie . . .

p

rall.

elle fai - sait des ac - cords vi - brants,

rall.

Ped.

in which the dissonances furnish a second theme for illustration.

Then followed two 'Persian Idylls,' in which the same musical treatment is meted out to English prose. Despite the subject there is no simulated Orientalism, least of all of the conventional kind, but some illustration, notably in the first song, the subject of which is the ney, a kind of Persian flute. These songs are even more richly harmonized than their predecessors—perhaps it is a concession to Eastern exuberance—but their method is the same, save that each new work necessarily brings wider experience with it. An example follows:

'HEART OF KALYAN,' OP. 17, NO. 2

(Persian Idylls).

Tranquillo.

mp mf

Think-est thou my heart is dead.. because it mourns a mp mf

Ped. Ped. Ped. Ped.

pp cres.

lov - er? See! The ka-ly-an glows no lon - ger, una corda.

pp sub.

Ped. Ped. Ped. Ped.

animando.

Its cov - er - let of pearl grey ash is like un - to a shroud.

cres. animando.

f

The remaining songs are 'Epigram,' a clever piece of irony at the expense of the purveyor of drawing-room ballads; two settings of poems by G. Jean-Aubry, and one, 'The Curse,' by Barbor. Of these the most attractive is 'Tea-time,' with its amusing suggestion of a persistent piano-organ whose clatter interrupts a pleasant tête-à-tête. The flight of the seagulls in 'Afternoon,' the scene of which is laid at Westminster, is more subtle but less convincing. The poems are French, but M. Jean-Aubry has followed an example frequently set by Verlaine, in recording by means of English titles the country in which they were written. Apart from these ten songs Goossens has harmonized two Scottish folk-tunes for Mlle. Raymonde Collignon's répertoire, and contributed three verses to her amusing variations on 'Cadet-Rousselle,' the others being by Frank Bridge, Arnold Bax, and John Ireland.

Having disposed of Goossens's orchestral music and his songs, we find that what remains before us—chamber music and pianoforte pieces—represents an unusually sane and consistent evolution of personality. It divides itself readily into groups, which are separated by his rare excursions into pianoforte literature. The Concert-Study separates his early chamber music from a new and more characteristic vein, and the short, playful pieces assembled in the 'Kaleidoscope' and 'Conceits' herald another phase in which is felt a deeper and more thoughtful emotion, of which the only earlier inkling is given in the 'Cello Rhapsody.

Four works are comprised in the first group: a Phantasy for an octet of strings, wind, and harp; four Sketches for flute, violin, and pianoforte; a Suite for flute, violin, and harp; and 'Five Impressions of a Holiday,' for pianoforte, flute, and 'cello. It will be noticed at once that the flute is a feature common to them all. Perhaps it is merely a coincidence, but I like to think that the nature of Goossens's musical ideas made him seek, consciously or not, for an element to counteract the all too soulful expression of the strings, of which, as a string player himself, he was certainly conscious. Many modern composers are clamouring for the integrity of the note, its preservation from what the player may seek to put into it for the sake of effect. In music which is picturesque rather than sentimental this over-zealous search for expression is fatal, and as these early works of Goossens's, however else they may be described, were certainly not intended sentimentally, the selection of the dispassionate timbre of the flute has contributed considerably to the realisation of their style. The first two have not been published. The third and fourth are not only available in print, but relatively familiar in the concert-room, where their refreshing charm soon made many friends. The Suite comprises a rich-hued Impromptu, a pleasant Serenade, and a Divertissement in which the composer indulges the taste for chinoiserie to which he was addicted at this time. The 'Five Impressions of a Holiday' are frankly pictorial, and, apart from their musical charm, it is a great tribute to them to be able to say that, in spite of the triteness of such themes as 'The Water Wheel,' 'The Village Church,' and other titles which have done duty for generations, the composer's poetical instinct has permitted him to place them in new aspects. Some of the figuration is very ingenious, and the composition closes with a scene of infectious merriment, 'At the Fair.'

The Concert Study for Pianoforte which followed is one of those pieces of jugglery in which the modern spirit likes to disport itself in the absence of more serious themes. One would not claim for it that it is rich in poetic content, nor is that the effect aimed at, but the pianoforte with its dulcimer-like effects of chromatic percussion is an arch tempter to the making of ingeniously-amiable rattles, and it would be a great mistake to decry their musical value, for they almost invariably result in happy harmonic trouvailles. Such is the case here. The study is full of little discoveries which hold the ear intrigued without the aid of musical eloquence. Its place in the list of Goossens's works encourages me to believe that it represents almost a conscious leave-taking of his earlier manner, for everything which followed it gives an impression of increased reflection and greater maturity.

